

ARTICLE I.

MINNEAPOLIS POLICE OFFICERS FIRED AFTER DEATH OF BLACK MAN. 'I CAN'T BREATHE,' HE SAID ON VIDEO.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 26, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1280 words

Byline: Amy Forliti, Jeff Baenen

Highlight: George Floyd's death is under investigation by the FBI and state law enforcement authorities.

Body

Four Minneapolis officers involved in the arrest of a black man who died in police custody were fired Tuesday, hours after a bystander's video showed an officer kneeling on the handcuffed man's neck, even after he pleaded that he could not breathe and stopped moving.

Mayor Jacob Frey announced the firings on Twitter, saying "This is the right call."

The man's death Monday night was under investigation by the FBI and state law enforcement authorities. It immediately drew comparisons to the case of Eric Garner, an unarmed black man who died in 2014 in New York after he was placed in a chokehold by police and pleaded for his life, saying he could not breathe.

In a post on his Facebook page, Frey apologized Tuesday to the black community for the officer's treatment of the man, who was later identified as 46-year-old George Floyd, who worked security at a restaurant.

"Being Black in America should not be a death sentence. For five minutes, we watched a white officer press his knee into a Black man's neck. Five minutes. When you hear someone calling for help, you're supposed to help. This officer failed in the most basic, human sense," Frey posted.

Police said the man matched the description of a suspect in a forgery case at a grocery store, and that he resisted arrest.

The video starts with the man on the ground, and does not show what happened in the moments prior. The unidentified officer is kneeling on his neck, ignoring his pleas. "Please, please, please, I can't breathe. Please, man," said Floyd, who has his face against the pavement.

Floyd also moans. One of the officers tells him to "relax." The man calls for his mother and says: "My stomach hurts, my neck hurts, everything hurts ... I can't breathe." As bystanders shout their concern, one officer says, "He's talking, so he's breathing."

Minneapolis police officers fired after death of black man. 'I can't breathe,' he said on video

But Floyd stops talking and slowly becomes motionless under the officer's restraint. The officer does not remove his knee until the man is loaded onto a gurney by paramedics.

Several witnesses had gathered on a nearby sidewalk, some recording the scene on their phones. The bystanders become increasingly agitated. One man yells repeatedly. "He's not responsive right now!" Two witnesses, including one woman who said she was a Minneapolis firefighter, yell at the officers to check the man's pulse. "Check his pulse right now and tell me what it is!" she said.

At one point, an officer says: "Don't do drugs, guys." And one man yells, "Don't do drugs, bro? What is that? What do you think this is?"

The Hennepin County medical examiner identified Floyd but said the cause of death was pending.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee Floyd had worked security for five years at a restaurant called Conga Latin Bistro and rented a home from the restaurant owner, Jovanni Thunstrom.

He was "a good friend, person and a good tenant," the restaurateur told the Star Tribune. "He was family. His co-workers and friends loved him."

Ben Crump, a prominent civil rights and personal injury attorney, said he had been hired by Floyd's family.

"We all watched the horrific death of George Floyd on video as witnesses begged the police officer to take him into the police car and get off his neck," Crump said in a statement. "This abusive, excessive and inhumane use of force cost the life of a man who was being detained by the police for questioning about a non-violent charge."

Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo said the department would conduct a full internal investigation. Police did not identify the officers, but attorney Tom Kelly confirmed he is representing Derek Chauvin, the officer seen with his knee on Floyd's neck. Kelly declined to comment further.

Police did not immediately respond to a request for Chauvin's service record. News accounts show he was one of six officers who fired their weapons in the 2006 death of Wayne Reyes, whom police said pointed a sawed-off shotgun at officers after stabbing two people. Chauvin also shot and wounded a man in 2008 in a struggle after Chauvin and his partner responded to a reported domestic assault. Several hundred protesters gathered Tuesday evening in the street where Floyd died, chanting and carrying banners that read, "I can't breathe" and "Jail killer KKKops." They eventually marched about 2 1/2 miles to a city police precinct, with some protesters damaging windows, a squad car and spraying graffiti on the building. A line of police in riot gear eventually confronted the protesters, firing tear gas.

Experts on police use of force told The Associated Press that the officer clearly restrained the man too long. They noted the man was under control and no longer fighting. Andrew Scott, a former Boca Raton, Florida, police chief who now testifies as an expert witness in use-of-force cases, called Floyd's death "a combination of not being trained properly or disregarding their training."

Minneapolis police officers fired after death of black man. 'I can't breathe,' he said on video

"He couldn't move. He was telling them he couldn't breathe, and they ignored him," Scott said. "I can't even describe it. It was difficult to watch."

The New York City officer in the Garner case said he was using a legal maneuver called "the seatbelt" to bring down Garner, whom police said had been resisting arrest. But the medical examiner referred to it as a chokehold in the autopsy report and said it contributed to his death. Chokehold maneuvers are banned under New York police policy.

A grand jury later decided against indicting the officers involved in Garner's death, sparking protests around the country. The New York Police Department ultimately fired the officer who restrained Garner, but it was five years later, after a federal investigation, a city prosecutor's investigation and an internal misconduct trial.

In Minneapolis, kneeling on a suspect's neck is allowed under the department's use-of-force policy for officers who have received training in how to compress a neck without applying direct pressure to the airway. It is considered a "non-deadly force option," according to the department's policy handbook.

A chokehold is considered a deadly force option and involves someone obstructing the airway. According to the department's use-of-force policy, officers are to use only an amount of force necessary that would be objectively reasonable.

Before the officers were fired, the police union asked the public to wait for the investigation to take its course and not to "rush to judgment and immediately condemn our officers." Messages left with the union after the firings were not returned.

The Hennepin County Attorney's Office, which would handle any prosecution of police on state criminal charges, said in a statement that it was "shocked and saddened" by the video and pledged to handle the case fairly. The FBI is investigating whether the officers willfully deprived Floyd of his rights. If those federal civil rights charges are brought, they would be handled by the U.S. Attorney's Office in Minnesota, which declined comment.

The death came amid outrage over the death of Ahmaud Arbery, who was fatally shot Feb. 23 in Georgia after a white father and son pursued the 25-year-old black man they had spotted running in their subdivision. More than two months passed before charges were brought. Crump also represents Arbery's father.

Associated Press writers Gretchen Ehlke in Milwaukee and Todd Richmond in Madison, Wisconsin, contributed to this report.

Graphic

A Minneapolis officer kneels on the neck of a handcuffed man who was pleading that he could not breathe in Minneapolis. (Courtesy of Darnella Frazier via AP)

'Shocked and horrified': Walz, Ellison, Flanagan pledge justice for George Floyd, man killed under officer's knee

ARTICLE II. 'SHOCKED AND HORRIFIED': WALZ, ELLISON, FLANAGAN PLEDGE JUSTICE FOR GEORGE FLOYD, MAN KILLED UNDER OFFICER'S KNEE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 27, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 547 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: Minnesota's top elected and law enforcement officials Wednesday pledged justice for George Floyd. Floyd is the black man whose death Monday sparked raw emotions after a video showed him being held under the knee of a white Minneapolis police officer, snapping a metropolis from the fixation of a pandemic back to the vexing and violent [...]

Body

Minnesota's top elected and law enforcement officials Wednesday pledged justice for George Floyd.

Floyd is the black man whose death Monday sparked raw emotions after a video showed him being held under the knee of a white Minneapolis police officer, snapping a metropolis from the fixation of a pandemic back to the vexing and violent realities of race relations.

"Like so many Minnesotans, and so many people now across the country and the world, I was shocked and horrified by the video of George Floyd's death," Gov. Tim Walz said during an afternoon news conference. "It's very clear to anyone that what happened to George Floyd is wrong. The lack of humanity in the video, as I said, made me physically ill, and even more difficult to understand."

Wednesday's news briefing was the first to be dominated by non-pandemic news since the coronavirus outbreak spawned the regular briefings and it included several people of color in senior roles, who could direct or influence potential outcomes.

Here's what the state's leaders had to say Wednesday:

KEITH ELLISON than the rest."

TOEING THE LINE

All four officials sought to emphasize they would not prejudge the outcome of the various investigations and, despite their clear sentiments of finding the situation unacceptable, they trod lightly on statements that could be construed as overtly criticizing the officers involved. They neither criticized nor endorsed

'Shocked and horrified': Walz, Ellison, Flanagan pledge justice for George Floyd, man killed under officer's knee

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey's call for Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman to charge the officer who knelt on Floyd's neck.

As they spoke, groups of demonstrators gathered outside a Minneapolis police station near where Floyd died, prompting Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo, who is black, to issue a statement: "Today a group of individuals have convened at the 3rd Precinct who have participated in assaultive behavior and destruction of property. Their actions are placing people at great risk of being seriously injured. ... Criminal behavior will not be tolerated."

No such missives came from the Emergency Operations Center in St. Paul, where Walz, Ellison and Harrington convened, and Flanagan joined via video call. Tuesday evening, violence erupted outside the precinct headquarters as factions of demonstrators vandalized the station and police vehicles, and police fired non-lethal projectiles and chemical irritants into crowds.

But the four officials generally praised the demonstrators, most of whom appeared to be wearing masks and attempting to social distance, and only spoke of the violence when a reporter repeatedly questioned Walz about it.

"We're not condoning that," Walz said.

"I would urge law enforcement to exercise restraint," Ellison said, adding later: "I would urge protesters to remember that they're there to lift up what happened to Mr. Floyd. ... Letting your emotions override you in a way that will lead the conversation to shift to crowd behavior is not the way to do this." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Keith Ellison

John Harrington

Peggy Flanagan

A damaged police vehicle is removed from the Minneapolis Police Department's 3rd Precinct headquarters in Minneapolis Wednesday morning, May 27, 2020. Police and protesters clashed at the precinct Tuesday night during a protest over the death of George Floyd on Monday evening. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE III. METRO AREA LAW ENFORCEMENT LEADERS CONDEMN MINNEAPOLIS POLICE OFFICERS' CONDUCT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 27, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1059 words

Byline: Sarah Horner

Highlight: The St. Paul Police Chief Wednesday instructed his officers to watch the video that by now has been viewed hundreds of thousands of times across the country. He asked them to imagine what it would have been like to be George Floyd in the scenario, struggling to breath under the weight of the Minneapolis police [...]

Body

The St. Paul Police Chief Wednesday instructed his officers to watch the video that by now has been viewed hundreds of thousands of times across the country.

He asked them to imagine what it would have been like to be George Floyd in the scenario, struggling to breath under the weight of the Minneapolis police officer's knee, begging for relief.

Then he asked them to put themselves in the shoes of the police officer, urging them to think if they would have responded differently.

"If the answer is no, I want you to reconsider your career choice," Todd Axtell told them, according to an email he circulated to staff.

'NO GRAY AREA'

Axtell indicated he wanted to make it clear where he stands on the Minneapolis police officer's conduct, which he said he could not justify and called "deeply disturbing. He added that the rank and file officers he talked to about it felt the same.

"In my mind, in this situation, there is no gray area, and we simply can't afford gray areas in matters so important to our community," he said.

In addition to sending an email to staff, Axtell posted his views on Floyd's death on Facebook.

The 46-year-old black man died Monday shortly after being pinned face-down by the neck under white Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin's knee for several minutes while handcuffed and repeatedly telling the officer he couldn't breathe.

Metro area law enforcement leaders condemn Minneapolis police officers' conduct

Floyd was a suspect in a forgery incident, and had allegedly resisted arrest. A bystander captured several minutes of the interaction on cell phone video, though the footage doesn't start until Floyd is on the ground.

Axtell joined a number of law enforcement leaders from across the metro area who spoke out about Chauvin's actions Wednesday, as well as the actions of Chauvin's fellow officers who failed to intervene.

All four officers were fired Tuesday as both the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension and Federal Bureau of Investigations investigate what happened.

METRO AREA LAW ENFORCEMENT LEADERS SPEAK OUT

While often reluctant to weigh in on the actions of fellow brothers and sisters in blue, law enforcement leaders from both the Ramsey and Dakota county sheriff's offices, as well as the the Mendota Heights, Woodbury and St. Paul police departments expressed anger, and in many cases condemnation, over the officers' actions.

Ramsey County Sheriff Bob Fletcher said he's never seen anything "more disturbing" in his 43 years in law enforcement.

"Once a person is in cuffs and laying in a prone position, any additional force such as the kind that occurred in this case is more closely identified as torture," Fletcher said. He added that officers are trained to cease force after a party is in handcuffs unless the person continues to thrash his or her legs, in which case additional pressure could be applied to the individual's back.

"No force to the neck is ever justified on a handcuffed person," he said.

CONDUCT VIOLATES MANY AGENCY POLICIES

Compressing the neck is not allowable under St. Paul police's use-of-force policy, for example, nor are choke-holds of any kind, said St. Paul police spokesman Mike Ernster.

Ernster added that while the department does permit an officer to deploy a "control technique" to the back, the control must be released once a person is restrained.

The Minnesota Board of Peace Officer Standards and Training also called out the Minneapolis officer's actions caught on video, saying in a statement Wednesday it did "not appear to reflect the training that students receive when attending any of the institutions that make up our Minnesota Professional Peace Officer Education System."

Kelly McCarthy chairs the POST board, and also serves as the chief of police in Mendota Heights.

Even accounting for the possibility of briefly engaging a suspect's head or neck during rapidly evolving scenarios police officer can find themselves, she said standard training is to move away from the area as soon as possible.

She said she could think of no reason why an officer would need to keep a handcuffed man on the ground pinned face-down with a knee to the neck.

Metro area law enforcement leaders condemn Minneapolis police officers' conduct

"Mr. Floyd is dead. I just, I have no words. It didn't need to happen," McCarthy said. "We are trained professionals and I want to know why, and I know that all over the state chiefs and supervisors are having these conversations with their cops and saying why? What is the reason? What could be the reason?"

DUTY TO INTERCEDE

Equally troubling were the actions of Chauvin's fellow officers who failed to intervene at the scene, McCarthy said.

She said police are subject to human emotions just like everybody else and that it's critical for a partner to step in when his or her colleagues appear to be engaging in conduct that violates policy or the law.

While acknowledging all the facts are not yet known about what happened, McCarthy urged law enforcement leaders across the state to take a stand on Floyd's death, insisting that they need to "demonstrate the courage that we ask officers to show."

LEADERS STOP SHORT OF ADDRESSING RACISM AS MOTIVATION

Those interviewed also acknowledged the history between people of color and law enforcement and the role racism and implicit bias plays in sectors across the country, including policing.

None of the law enforcement officials the Pioneer Press spoke with wanted to speculate as to whether it played a role in the Minneapolis' officers conduct.

"I can't get in the mind of the individual," Fletcher said, adding that it will be the work of the FBI agents tasked with conducting a civil rights investigation to determine that.

He did say that the familiarity Chauvin appeared to have with the tactic deployed in the video was concerning.

"It leads me to think its been used on a regular basis and that is something (Minneapolis Police) Chief (Medaria) Arradondo needs to get to the bottom of to find out if other officers are using that as well," Fletcher said.

And if an autopsy proves that the maneuver contributed to Floyd's death, Fletcher said the officers should be charged criminally. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Graphic

St. Paul Police Chief Todd Axtell. (John Autey / Pioneer Press)

Ramsey County Sheriff Bob Fletcher introduces his staff to the Ramsey County Board of Commissioners at the St. Paul City Hall/ Ramsey County Courthouse on Tuesday, Jan. 8, 2019. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Metro area law enforcement leaders condemn Minneapolis police officers' conduct

Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin kneels on the neck of George Floyd who was pleading that he could not breathe in Minneapolis on Monday. (Courtesy of Darnella Frazier via AP)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE IV. POLICE, PROTESTERS CLASH AFTER DEATH OF MAN IN CUSTODY; 4 COPS ARE FIRED

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 27, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 420 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

Four Minneapolis police officers were fired Tuesday in connection with the weekend death of a St. Louis Park man after video surfaced of one of the officers kneeling on the man's neck for minutes while he pleaded with them to stop, saying, "I can't breathe."

Minnesota Public Radio has a report on the incident, which began Monday when police, responding to a forgery report, said they detained and handcuffed George Floyd, who was in his car on the 3700 block of Chicago Avenue. Floyd later died.

Initial police reports mentioned only that the man was "suffering medical distress," but a bystander video later showed that one of the officers is shown with his knee on Floyd's neck while another officer looks away. Minnesota's Bureau of Criminal Apprehension is investigating the case; the FBI has also been called to investigate.

The video drew swift protest from political and business leaders. "This man should not have died." said Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey on Facebook. "What we saw is horrible. Completely and utterly messed up."

Jonathan Weinhagen, CEO of the Minneapolis Regional Chamber of Commerce, said, "George Floyd was a beloved employee at a small business in our city. Residents, business leaders and community leaders are speaking with one voice to demand justice."

Police, protesters clash after death of man in custody; 4 cops are fired

Floyd worked security roles at Conga Latin Bistro in Northeast Minneapolis. Jovanni Thunstrom, who owns the restaurant and was also Floyd's landlord, tells the Star Tribune that he was "a good friend, person and a good tenant. ... He was family. His co-workers and friends loved him."

On Tuesday afternoon, thousands of people later marched through the streets of Minneapolis to the Police Department's Third Precinct for an hours-long protest where tensions mounted. Precinct windows were smashed and police launched tear gas and rubber bullets at the crowds. The Star Tribune has a report on the clash; you can see more photos on the Twitter feeds of some of its reporters, including Andy Mannix, who was hit with this 40mm foam round, presumably fired by the police.

Bloomberg has video of the protests as they progressed throughout the afternoon and evening, persisting even as heavy rains began.

The case has quickly become national news. The New York Times has its own report, as well as a story on how the use of bystander videos are increasingly changing the official police narratives of such incidents.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 27, 2020

Frey: Officer who put knee on George Floyd's neck should be charged

ARTICLE V. FREY: OFFICER WHO PUT KNEE ON GEORGE FLOYD'S NECK SHOULD BE CHARGED

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 27, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1268 words

Byline: Amy Forliti, Colleen Long

Highlight: The mayor of Minneapolis called Wednesday for criminal charges against the officer seen on video kneeling on the neck of George Floyd.

Body

The mayor of Minneapolis called Wednesday for criminal charges against the white police officer seen on video kneeling against the neck of a handcuffed black man who complained that he could not breathe and died in police custody.

Based on the video, Mayor Jacob Frey said officer Derek Chauvin should be charged in the death of George Floyd. The footage recorded by a bystander shows Chauvin with his knee on Floyd's neck as Floyd gasps for breath on the ground with his face against the pavement. The officer does not move for at least eight minutes, even after Floyd stops speaking and moving.

"I've wrestled with, more than anything else over the last 36 hours, one fundamental question: Why is the man who killed George Floyd not in jail?" said Frey, who is white.

He later added: "I saw no threat. I saw nothing that would signal that this kind of force was necessary."

The day after Floyd died, Chauvin and three other officers were fired - an act that did not stem the flood of anger that followed the widely seen video shot on Memorial Day outside a convenience store.

Protesters marched more than 2 miles Tuesday to the police precinct in that part of the city, with some damaging property and skirmishing with officers in riot gear who fired tear gas. Conflict erupted again Wednesday at the same precinct, with some protesters throwing rocks and bottles at police. News helicopter video appeared to show looting of nearby stores, including a Target, a Cub Foods and an auto parts store, with no evident police intervention.

Another demonstration unfolded on the street outside Chauvin's suburban home. An officer told protesters that Chauvin was not there. Red cans of paint were earlier spilled on his driveway, and someone wrote "murderer" in chalk at the end of his driveway. No one answered when an Associated Press reporter knocked on the door.

Frey: Officer who put knee on George Floyd's neck should be charged

Many activists, citizens and celebrities called for criminal charges before Frey did. But Floyd's family and the community may have to wait months, if not years, before investigations are complete.

Floyd family attorney Benjamin Crump, a prominent civil rights lawyer, called for peaceful protests.

"We cannot sink to the level of our oppressors, and we must not endanger others during this pandemic," Crump said in a statement. "We will demand and ultimately force lasting change by shining a light on treatment that is horrific and unacceptable and by winning justice."

Police Chief Medaria Arradondo, who rose to the top job after his predecessor was forced out following the 2017 shooting of an unarmed white woman by a black Minneapolis officer, urged protesters to "be respectful." He said he was working to change the department's culture.

"One incident can significantly bring people to doubt that," he said.

The chief defended the department's use of tear gas to break up Tuesday night's protests, saying officers used it only after some people broke into a secure area that gave them access to squad cars and weapons.

Gov. Tim Walz and Minnesota's two top law enforcement officials - Attorney General Keith Ellison and Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington, both black - promised a thorough, transparent investigation. But Walz and Ellison didn't endorse the mayor's call to immediately charge the officer, saying the legal process needs to play out.

"I understand the emotions are running high, and I think it's important for the mayor to channel the emotion of the people who he represents. But I think it is critical that we adhere very closely to the facts and the law and the normal process," Ellison said.

The Hennepin County Attorney's Office, which would prosecute any state charges, issued a statement saying that Floyd's death had "outraged us and people across the country" and that the case "deserves the best we can give."

The FBI was investigating whether officers willfully deprived Floyd of his civil rights.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Dozens of homeless people evicted from Minneapolis hotel Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots Suspect charged, sought in fiery Minneapolis crash that killed Coon Rapids motorist Floyd's death and that of Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia have reopened the divide between minority communities and police that grew to a national uproar following the 2014 killings of Eric Garner and Michael Brown, the 2015 killing of Freddie Gray and others.

Speaking to reporters at Cape Canaveral, Florida, President Donald Trump called the death in Minneapolis "a very, very sad event" and said his administration was going to "look at it." Later, he tweeted that he had asked for the federal investigation be expedited.

Democrat Joe Biden said Floyd's death was "part of an ingrained, systemic cycle of injustice that still exists in this country" and "cuts at the very heart of our sacred belief that all Americans are equal in rights."

Frey: Officer who put knee on George Floyd's neck should be charged

It also "sends a very clear message to the black community and black lives that are under threat every single day," Biden added, saying he was glad the mayor and the police department fired the officers, "but I don't think that's enough."

A 2017 Pew Research Center study found that police think the public does not understand the risks they face. A more recent study from September showed police were considered more trustworthy than Congress, but only 33% of black adults and half of Hispanics say they believe officers treat racial and ethnic groups equally.

Shocking videos of black men dying continue to emerge during the pandemic, which is hitting communities of color harder than white communities. Floyd himself had been laid off from his nightclub security job in the pandemic, a friend told the AP. Police say Floyd matched the description of someone who tried to pay with a counterfeit bill at the convenience store.

It was unclear why Floyd was arrested in such a physical way for what would have been a low-level crime. Police in most large cities have backed away from certain arrests to guard against further spread of the virus. The officers in the video were not wearing masks.

A Minneapolis Fire Department report shows that paramedics moved Floyd from the scene, and two fire crew members got into the ambulance to help. Medics were doing chest compressions and other lifesaving measures on an "unresponsive, pulseless male," the report said. Floyd was pronounced dead at a hospital.

An autopsy will be performed to determine if the neck compression led to his death.

News accounts show Chauvin was one of six officers who fired their weapons in the 2006 death of Wayne Reyes, who police said pointed a sawed-off shotgun at officers after stabbing two people. Chauvin also shot and wounded a man in 2008 during a struggle after Chauvin and his partner responded to a reported domestic assault. Police did not immediately respond to a request for Chauvin's service record.

In calling for charges, the mayor contrasted Floyd's death with others involving police that turned on split-second decisions by officers.

"We are not talking about a split-second decision that was made incorrectly," Frey said. "There's somewhere around 300 seconds in those five minutes - every one of which that officer could have turned back, every second of which he could have removed his knee from George Floyd's neck."

Long reported from Washington. Associated Press writers Jeff Baenen and Steve Karnowski in Minneapolis, Todd Richmond in Madison, Wisconsin, and Kevin Freking in Cape Canaveral, Florida, contributed to this report.

Graphic

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey calls on Hennepin County attorney Mike Freeman to charge the arresting officer in the death of George Floyd as he speaks during a news conference Wednesday, May 27, 2020 at City Hall in Minneapolis. (Evan Frost/Minnesota Public Radio via AP)

Frey: Officer who put knee on George Floyd's neck should be charged

George Floyd (Courtesy of Christopher Harris via AP)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE VI. GEORGE FLOYD HAD STARTED NEW LIFE IN MINNESOTA

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 27, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 749 wordsByline: Todd RichmondHighlight: Before he died after being pinned for minutes beneath a Minneapolis police officer's knee, George Floyd was suffering the same fate as millions of Americans during the coronavirus pandemic: out of work and looking for a new job.Body

Before he died after being pinned for minutes beneath a Minneapolis police officer's knee, George Floyd was suffering the same fate as millions of Americans during the coronavirus pandemic: out of work and looking for a new job.

Floyd moved to Minneapolis from his native Houston several years ago in hopes of finding work and starting a new life, said Christopher Harris, Floyd's lifelong friend. But he lost his job as a bouncer at a restaurant when Minnesota's governor issued a stay-at-home order.

On Monday night, an employee at a Minneapolis grocery store called police after Floyd allegedly tried to pass a counterfeit $20 bill.

In widely circulated cellphone video of the subsequent arrest, Floyd, who was black, can be seen on the ground with his hands cuffed behind his back while Officer Derek Chauvin presses him to the pavement with his knee on Floyd's neck. The video shows Chauvin, who is white, holding Floyd down for minutes as Floyd complains he can't breathe. The video ends with paramedics lifting a limp Floyd onto a stretcher and placing him in an ambulance.

Four officers were fired Tuesday; on Wednesday, Mayor Jacob Frey called for Chauvin to be criminally charged. Frey made no mention of the other three officers, who were also at the scene.

Police say Floyd was resisting arrest, but Chauvin's lawyer has declined to comment and the other officers have not been publicly identified.

Floyd, 46, grew up in Houston's Third Ward, one of the city's predominantly black neighborhoods, where he and Harris met in middle school. At 6 feet, 6 inches, Floyd emerged as a star tight end for Jack Yates High School and played in the 1992 state championship game in the Houston Astrodome. Yates lost to Temple, 38-20.

George Floyd had started new life in Minnesota

Donnell Cooper, one of Floyd's former classmates, said he remembered watching Floyd score touchdowns. Floyd towered over everyone and earned the nickname "gentle giant."

"Quiet personality but a beautiful spirit," Cooper said. His death "definitely caught me by surprise. It's just so sad, the world we're living in now."

Floyd was charged in 2007 with armed robbery in a home invasion in Houston and in 2009 was sentenced to five years in prison as part of a plea deal, according to court documents.

Harris, Floyd's childhood friend, said he and some of their mutual friends had moved to Minneapolis in search of jobs around 2014. Harris said he talked Floyd into moving there as well after he got out of prison.

"He was looking to start over fresh, a new beginning," Harris said. "He was happy with the change he was making."

Floyd landed a job working security at a Salvation Army store in downtown Minneapolis. He later started working two jobs, one driving trucks and another as a bouncer at Conga Latin Bistro, where he was known as "Big Floyd."

"Always cheerful," Giovanni Tunstrom, the bistro's owner, said. "He had a good attitude. He would dance badly to make people laugh. I tried to teach him how to dance because he loved Latin music, but I couldn't because he was too tall for me. He always called me 'Bossman.' I said, 'Floyd, don't call me Bossman. I'm your friend.'"

Harris said Floyd was laid off when Minnesota shut down restaurants as part of a stay-at-home order. He said he spoke with Floyd on Sunday night and gave him some information for contacting a temporary jobs agency.

"He was doing whatever it takes to maintain going forward with his life," Harris said, adding he couldn't believe that Floyd would resort to forgery. "I've never known him to do anything like that."

Floyd leaves behind a 6-year-old daughter who still lives in Houston with her mother, Roxie Washington, the Houston Chronicle reported. Efforts to reach Washington on Wednesday were unsuccessful.

"The way he died was senseless," Harris said. "He begged for his life. He pleaded for his life. When you try so hard to put faith in this system, a system that you know isn't designed for you, when you constantly seek justice by lawful means and you can't get it, you begin to take the law into your own hands."

Associated Press writers Carrie Antlfinger and Juan Lozano and news researcher Rhonda Shafner contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

George Floyd had started new life in Minnesota

Christopher Harris, left, and George Floyd in Minneapolis. (Courtesy of Christopher Harris via AP)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Minneapolis officer's work, personal background detailed; had nearly 20 complaints and two letters of reprimand

ARTICLE VII. BLACK BUSINESS OWNERS REACT TO THE KILLING OF GEORGE FLOYD

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 27, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 685 words

Byline: Carrigan Miller

Body

Minnesota's black business owners are mourning Wednesday the death of George Floyd, who died on Monday after he was arrested by police in South Minneapolis.

In a viral video, a Minneapolis police officer is shown kneeling on Floyd's neck for several minutes while Floyd complains that he can't breathe. Media accounts cite the city in identifying the officer as Derek Chauvin.

George Floyd worked at Conga Latin Bistro in Minneapolis' St. Anthony neighborhood and lived in St. Louis Park. He grew up in Houston's Third Ward, where he was a football and basketball standout for Jack Yates High School, and was a rapper in the 1990s and early 2000s under the name "Big Floyd."

The death has set off protests across the city and gained national attention. It has also led some of the Twin Cities' Black business leaders to speak out.

Sharon Smith-Akinsanya is the founder and CEO of Rae Mackenzie Group, a diversity, equity and inclusion-focused consulting firm; she's also the owner of the People of Color Career Fair. The news of Floyd's death hit her hard.

"I just slumped in my chair," she said.

Floyd's death also brought back painful memories of the deaths of Jamar Clark and Philando Castile, both Black men killed by Minnesota police in the past decade.

"It's racism, pure and simple. You don't change that in four years," she said.

Smith-Akinsanya said that she wants to see more voices and new faces added to the crowd that normally speak up when tragedy strikes.

"I would like powerful, influential white people to speak up and speak out," she said. "I need to hear their voices. We all live here in Minnesota. Where are your voices? Where is your outrage? Where are your phone calls to the attorney general's office? Where's your LinkedIn post? Where's your Twitter post? What are you going to do to help make sure that Minnesota is a great place for all of us? Silence doesn't work any longer."

Minneapolis officer's work, personal background detailed; had nearly 20 complaints and two letters of reprimand

For business leaders, that communication shouldn't just be external. It should also be to employees, especially employees of color, who can feel isolated and alienated by the news. Leaders should reach out to those employees, she said.

"This is a major thing that happened in our city that's national news. As a leader, you acknowledge that," Smith-Akinsanya said.

Other leaders tried to focus on the man Floyd was before his death.

"This is hard to digest. It hits harder as we learn more about Floyd's character and life. He was a good man who we watched beg for his life, his mother and his last breath," said Justin Sutherland, the managing partner at Madison Restaurant Group and an executive chef at multiple Twin Cities restaurants, in an email to the Business Journal.

Sutherland said that he has been treated unfairly by the police multiple times in the past, though he didn't elaborate. That experience informed his lack of shock when he heard the news.

"This is not something new. This is something that has happened before and keeps happening," Sutherland said.

That feeling of weariness isn't unique to Sutherland. Thompson Aderinkomi is the co-founder and CEO of growing startup Nice Healthcare, but being a successful entrepreneur isn't a guarantee of safety, he said.

"On the street I'm just a black man with locked hair and a beard. My title will not change the outcome for me if I find myself in a position like Mr. Floyd," Aderinkomi said.

He's fond of jogging each morning before the sun rises, but said that his wife has tried to steer him away from the habit because she's afraid for his safety. In February, Ahmaud Arbery was shot dead while jogging in Glynn County, Georgia, in another case that has garnered national attention.

Fear, Aderinkomi said, is at the forefront of his mind right now.

"I am scared for my sons, for my employees, my siblings and my parents. I am scared for young black men and women," he said in the email.

However, Aderinkomi has not lost hope that Minnesota can become a better place for black people to live.

"I have hope that things will get better," he said.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 28, 2020

Minneapolis officer's work, personal background detailed; had nearly 20 complaints and two letters of reprimand

ARTICLE VIII. MINNEAPOLIS OFFICER'S WORK, PERSONAL BACKGROUND DETAILED; HAD NEARLY 20 COMPLAINTS AND TWO LETTERS OF REPRIMAND

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 805 words

Byline: Todd Richmond

Highlight: A white Minneapolis police officer who knelt on George Floyd's neck opened fire on two people during his 19-year career and had nearly 20 complaints and two letters of reprimand filed against him. Derek Chauvin, 44, became the focus of angry street protests and a federal investigation after he was seen in cellphone video kneeling [...]

Body

A white Minneapolis police officer who knelt on George Floyd's neck opened fire on two people during his 19-year career and had nearly 20 complaints and two letters of reprimand filed against him.

Derek Chauvin, 44, became the focus of angry street protests and a federal investigation after he was seen in cellphone video kneeling on the neck of 46-year-old Floyd, a black man, for almost eight minutes Monday night during his South Minneapolis arrest on a suspicion of passing a counterfeit bill. Floyd, who was handcuffed and heard saying he couldn't breathe, was pronounced dead later that night at Hennepin County Medical Center.

Chauvin, whose Oakdale driveway was splattered with red paint and the graffiti "murderer," has not spoken publicly since Floyd's death and his attorney did not respond to calls seeking comment. He and the other three officers involved in Floyd's arrest were fired Tuesday.

Minneapolis City Council records show that Chauvin moonlighted as a bouncer at a downtown Latin nightclub. He was among a group of six officers who opened fire on a stabbing suspect in 2006 after a chase that ended when the suspect pointed a sawed-off shotgun at them. The suspect, Wayne Reyes, was hit multiple times and died. A grand jury decided the use of force was justified.

Two years later, Chauvin shot Ira Latrell Toles as he was responding to a domestic dispute.

According to a Pioneer Press account of the incident, a 911 operator received a call from an apartment and heard a woman yelling for someone to stop hitting her. Chauvin and another officer arrived just as Toles locked himself in the bathroom. Chauvin forced his way into the bathroom. Toles went for Chauvin's gun and Chauvin shot him twice in the stomach. Toles survived and was charged with two counts of felony obstruction.

Toles told the Daily Beast that the mother of his child called police that night and he fled into the bathroom after officers broke down the apartment door. Chauvin then broke down the bathroom door and started to hit him without warning. He said he fought back in self-defense and was too disoriented to go for Chauvin's gun.

Minneapolis officer's work, personal background detailed; had nearly 20 complaints and two letters of reprimand

Toles said he ultimately pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge and still feels pain from the shooting.

"He tried to kill me in that bathroom," Toles said.

Online city records also show that 17 complaints have been filed against Chauvin. Sixteen complaints were closed with no discipline. The remaining complaint generated two letters of reprimand, with one apparently related to the use of a squad car dashboard camera. The records don't include any details on the substance of the complaints.

Chauvin also was among a group of five officers in 2011 who chased down an American Indian, Leroy Martinez, in a housing complex after they spotted him running with a pistol. One of the officers, Terry Nutter, shot Martinez in the torso. Martinez survived. All the officers were placed on leave but absolved of any wrongdoing, with Police Chief Timothy Dolan saying they acted "appropriately and courageously."

A much different side of Chauvin was portrayed in a 2018 newspaper profile of his wife, Kellie, a Laotian refugee who became the first Hmong Mrs. Minnesota. She told the Pioneer Press that they met when he dropped off a suspect at a Minneapolis hospital where she worked.

"Under that uniform, he's just a softie," she said. "He's such a gentleman. He still opens the door for me, still puts my coat on for me. After my divorce, I had a list of must-haves if I were ever to be in a relationship, and he fit all of them."

Less is known about the other three officers involved in Floyd's arrest.

Online court records indicate that the officer who stood guard at the scene, Tou Thao, was sued in federal court in 2017 for alleged excessive force. According to the lawsuit, Lamar Ferguson claimed Thao and his partner stopped him as he was walking to his girlfriend's house in 2014 for no reason and beat him up. The city ultimately settled the lawsuit for $25,000.

City records show six complaints have been filed against Thao. Five were closed with no discipline. One remains open. The records didn't include any further details.

Thomas Lane joined the force as a cadet in March 2019, according to online city records. No information about J. Alexander Kueng's service history was immediately available. City records show no complaints against either of them. Attorneys for Thao and Kueng didn't return messages. Lane's attorney, Earl Gray, declined comment.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE IX.

MN LEGISLATOR IN WAKE OF GEORGE FLOYD DEATH: NEW LAWS NEEDED TO REDUCE POLICE VIOLENCE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 701 wordsByline: Bill Salisbury

Highlight: The state senator who represents the Minneapolis district where a black man died in police custody says the Legislature should quickly pass new laws to reduce police violence. Assistant Senate DFL Minority Leader Jeff Hayden said Thursday that, in response to the death of George Floyd, he and other members of the Legislature's People of Color [...]

Body

The state senator who represents the Minneapolis district where a black man died in police custody says the Legislature should quickly pass new laws to reduce police violence.

Assistant Senate DFL Minority Leader Jeff Hayden said Thursday that, in response to the death of George Floyd, he and other members of the Legislature's People of Color and Indigenous Peoples Caucus will "introduce and fiercely support legislation that saves lives of our neighbors, community members and fellow Minnesotans."

Hayden told reporters during a teleconference he would support Gov. Tim Walz calling lawmakers back into special session to pass that legislation or include it on the agenda of a session Walz is expected to order in June to respond to the coronavirus pandemic.

Members of the caucus have previously introduced or currently are drafting bills, Hayden said, that would set higher standards of conduct for police officers, authorize the attorney general to step in when "county attorneys are waffling or wringing their hands" in cases involving law enforcement misconduct, encourage more police officers to live in the cities they serve and make officers liable for wrongdoing "so if they do things like this, it comes out of their pocket," among other steps.

"We believe we ought to do it now. We are tired of being at the back of the line," Hayden said, referring to the Legislature's failure to act on caucus members' proposals.

He said he had not discussed his ideas with Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake. But in a statement later Thursday, the GOP leader said, "I deeply appreciate the conversations and insight provided by my colleagues from the urban core. We want to help in whatever way we can."

Gazelka called for a "comprehensive investigation into the actions and policies" that led to Floyd's death.

MN legislator in wake of George Floyd death: New laws needed to reduce police violence

Cellphone video showed Floyd on the ground with his hands cuffed behind his back while Minneapolis Officer Derek Chauvin pressed him to the pavement with his knee on Floyd's neck.

"We all deserve to feel safe in our communities, and I trust the investigation will be the first step in bringing justice to George," Gazelka said. "The peaceful protests remind us that our free speech and assembly matter now more than ever. The violent riots, looting and destruction have caused further division and pain."

Hayden joined Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey in calling for the arrest of the four police officers involved in the incident. He also said, "It is time for us to ... get the bad actors out of the police force," adding that the Minneapolis police union, which has defended white officers accused of brutality, is "an absolute problem."

In response to the violent protests that erupted in the aftermath of Floyd's death, U.S. Rep. Ilhan Omar, a Minneapolis Democrat, said in a statement: "There is extreme frustration ... anger really is boiling over because justice still seems out of reach. I believe today we will get the opportunity to push for more peaceful protests, to remind people that violence only begets violence.

"More force is only going to lead to more lives lost and more devastation. The community needs to focus on protecting one another. I think a community-centered focus on de-escalation is going to need to be a priority for all of us."

Democratic Congresswoman Betty McCollum of St. Paul said in a statement that the officers involved in Floyd's death must be held "fully accountable" by the justice system.

"As Minnesotans, we must demand justice, and we must demand it in a manner that is strong and peaceful," McCollum said. "Peaceful civil disobedience is a way our democracy helps ensure accountability.

"But Mr. Floyd's tragic death does not justify lawlessness. Violence, burning and looting will not bring justice for George Floyd or for innocent neighbors whose lives and livelihoods have been destroyed." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Minnesota state Sen. Jeff Hayden, D-Minneapolis, introduced a bill Monday, Feb. 20, 2017, to ban discount coupons for tobacco products. Maureen McMullen / Forum News Service

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

500+ MN National Guard soldiers activated amid protests, looting after death of George Floyd

ARTICLE X. 500+ MN NATIONAL GUARD SOLDIERS ACTIVATED AMID PROTESTS, LOOTING AFTER DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 318 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: Gov. Tim Walz signed an executive order Thursday, activating the Minnesota National Guard as Minneapolis, St. Paul and Oakdale have been beset by protests in the wake of the death of George Floyd in police custody. The National Guard announced Thursday night that more than 500 soldiers have been activated to St. Paul, Minneapolis and [...]

Body

Gov. Tim Walz signed an executive order Thursday, activating the Minnesota National Guard as Minneapolis, St. Paul and Oakdale have been beset by protests in the wake of the death of George Floyd in police custody.

The National Guard announced Thursday night that more than 500 soldiers have been activated to St. Paul, Minneapolis and surrounding communities.

"Our mission is to protect life, preserve property and the right to peacefully demonstrate," the National Guard said in a tweet. "A key objective is to ensure fire departments are able to respond to calls."

Looting has erupted at various locations in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

"Local leaders have requested National Guard resources after extensive damage to private property occurred and peaceful protests evolved into a dangerous situation for protesters and first responders," Walz's office said in a statement Thursday.

The National Guard will work with local government agencies to provide personnel, equipment and facilities.

"It is time to rebuild," Walz said in a statement. "Rebuild the city, rebuild our justice system, and rebuild the relationship between law enforcement and those they're charged to protect. George Floyd's death should lead to justice and systemic change, not more death and destruction. As George Floyd's family has said, 'Floyd would not want people to get hurt. He lived his life protecting people.' Let's come together to rebuild, remember, and seek justice for George Floyd."

About 200 Minnesota State Patrol troopers will also be assisting for the next several days. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells

500+ MN National Guard soldiers activated amid protests, looting after death of George Floyd

Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books `He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Protests erupt in Twin Cities over death of George Floyd

ARTICLE XI. PROTESTS ERUPT IN TWIN CITIES OVER DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 998 wordsByline: Nick WoltmanHighlight: Anger and grief erupted in a violent protest outside the Minneapolis police third precinct headquarters, while a more peaceful demonstration took place in Oakdale.Body

Expand

Anger and grief over the death of George Floyd erupted Wednesday night in a violent protest outside the third precinct headquarters of the Minneapolis Police Department, while more peaceful demonstrations took place elsewhere in Minneapolis and in Oakdale.

One man was shot to death in the area of the third precinct protest, and a suspect was taken into custody, police said.

It was the second night of clashes between protesters and law enforcement following Floyd's death Monday evening, shortly after being pinned to the ground beneath the knee of Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin until he lost consciousness. In a viral video that captured much of the incident, a handcuffed Floyd lying prone on the ground can be heard telling Chauvin that he can't breathe.

Chauvin and three other officers involved in the incident were fired by the department on Tuesday. At a Wednesday afternoon press conference, Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey called on Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman .

Wednesday evening, demonstrators at the third precinct hurled rocks and bottles at the building and officers assembled outside, while the police fired tear gas, stun grenades and less-lethal projectiles at the crowd.

The unrest escalated as the night wore on. By midnight, dozens of stores and restaurants for blocks around the third precinct were looted and vandalized, including the Minnehaha Center strip mall, which comprises Target, Cub Foods, Dollar Tree and other businesses. Through broken windows, security alarms blared unanswered until dawn.

UPDATE:

Protests erupt in Twin Cities over death of George Floyd

Frey appealed to Gov. Tim Walz to activate the National Guard. Information from Walz's office wasn't immediately available Thursday morning.

Some businesses displaying spray-painted "Minority Owned" signs appeared to have been spared.

Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo urged calm in a late-night interview with KMSP-TV, imploring the public to allow the processes of the criminal justice system "to play out."

"Justice historically has never come to fruition through some of the acts we're seeing tonight, whether it's the looting, the damage to property or other things," he said.

A handful of protesters remained outside the third precinct early into the morning where they faced down a wall of Minnesota State Patrol troopers in riot gear, chanting and shouting epithets.

Just across the street, looters carried out armloads of beer, wine and liquor from Minnehaha Lake Wine & Spirits. On the other side of Lake Street, thick black smoke billowed out of the burning AutoZone store, which was reduced to rubble by dawn. It was just one of many fires started overnight in the neighborhood.

On that same block, what began as a small fire in a six-story building under construction at 29th Street and 26th Avenue had fully engulfed the structure by 2 a.m., causing the building to collapse into itself. The heat from the blaze could be felt more than 100 yards away and was sufficient to warp the tower of a nearby construction crane.

The fire then jumped across 26th Street to the building that houses 7-Sigma, a plastic fabrication firm.

About 9:25 p.m., Minneapolis police officers responding to a report of a stabbing found a man lying on the sidewalk in grave condition at Bloomington Avenue and Lake Street, about a mile west of the third precinct.

The officers provided first aid and paramedics took the wounded man to Hennepin County Medical Center, where he was pronounced dead, Minneapolis police spokesman John Elder said. His injury was later determined to be a gunshot wound. Police have one person in custody in connection with the homicide.

Elder did not directly link the incident to the protests and said the shooting was under investigation. He said there had been no other reports of serious injuries to officers or protesters.

"Tonight was a different night of protesting than it was the night before," Elder said, noting the "widespread civil disobedience" in the area around the third precinct.

"It's sad," he added.

There were three arrests for burglary and looting Tuesday, Elder said. He was not aware of any arrests as of shortly after midnight Thursday.

About 40 St. Paul police officers were dispatched to support the Minneapolis Fire Department as they put out fires and to "work to keep people and property safe" at the protest in South Minneapolis, according to Steve Linders, a St. Paul police spokesman.

In addition to St. Paul police, Minneapolis officers were assisted by Metro Transit police and Minnesota State Patrol troopers.

Protests erupt in Twin Cities over death of George Floyd

Less than two miles away from the third precinct, a more subdued vigil at the site of Floyd's death at 38th Street and Chicago Avenue continued for a third day.

Meanwhile, a rally outside the Oakdale home of Derek Chauvin also drew nearly 200 protesters from across the Twin Cities. An officer told protesters that Chauvin was not there, and no one answered when an Associated Press reporter knocked on the door.

Red cans of paint were earlier spilled on his driveway, and someone wrote "A murderer lives here" in chalk in the street in front of the house.

Among the protesters in Oakdale was 25-year-old Delyla Doshie of St. Paul, who said Chauvin must be arrested and prosecuted for murder in Floyd's death.

"We want justice," Doshie said. "People have been arrested for less. There's no reason why he shouldn't be in jail right now."

The protesters faced off against a line of helmeted officers from the Washington County Mobile Field Force, who prevented the protesters from moving deeper into the neighborhood. The demonstration remained peaceful as of 9 p.m.

"We understand we're in a residential neighborhood," Doshie said. "We just want people to know who lives here."

In California, hundreds of people protesting Floyd's death blocked a Los Angeles freeway and shattered windows of California Highway Patrol cruisers on Wednesday.to charge Chauvin in Floyd's death Minneapolis firefighters respond to about 30 fires during George Floyd protests; businesses deal with aftermath

Graphic

A six-story building under construction across from Minnehaha Center in Minneapolis burns out of control early Thursday, May 28, 2020. (Nick Woltman / Pioneer Press)

Protesters confront police outside the home of former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin in Oakdale on Wednesday evening. (Nick Woltman / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XII. AL SHARPTON, ERIC GARNER'S MOTHER VISIT GEORGE FLOYD SITE, CALL FOR NATIONAL 'WE CAN'T BREATHE' MOVEMENT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 729 words

Byline: Sarah Horner

Highlight: The Rev. Al Sharpton, Eric Garner's mother and City Council President Andrea Jenkins told a crowd gathered Thursday near the site where George Floyd died in Minneapolis that they stand with community members demanding justice and prosecution of the police involved. That should start with the immediate arrest of the four officers, Sharpton said. "In [...]"

Body

The Rev. Al Sharpton, Eric Garner's mother and City Council President Andrea Jenkins told a crowd gathered Thursday near the site where George Floyd died in Minneapolis that they stand with community members demanding justice and prosecution of the police involved.

That should start with the immediate arrest of the four officers, Sharpton said.

"In order to get an arrest, all you need is probable cause. ... Then a grand jury decides if there is an indictment," Sharpton said. "You don't need anything more than you have now to arrest those folks ... You have a deceased person ... You have a tape showing how he (became) deceased. ... They should tell those four police what they tell all the people in the hood: 'Tell it to the judge.'"

Sharpton went on to say that while he is nonviolent, he did not come to Minneapolis to address riots or any violence that broke out in response to Floyd's death.

"The violence I am addressing is how a man could hold a man down with his knee on his neck for nine minutes. ... The violence started on this corner when (Floyd) was choking and begging for his life," Sharpton said. "We are not asking for a favor. We are asking for what is right."

Sharpton said he planned to stay in town to attend Floyd's funeral services at the request of his family and called on people across the country to come together to be part of a national "We Can't Breathe movement" that would kick off Saturday.

Floyd, a black man, repeatedly told Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, who is white, that he couldn't breathe while the officer kept his knee pinned against Floyd's neck as Floyd lay handcuffed and face-down on the ground on Monday.

Al Sharpton, Eric Garner's mother visit George Floyd site, call for national 'We Can't Breathe' movement

The incident - which took place after Floyd allegedly attempted to pass a counterfeit $20 bill at a gas station and resisted arrest - was caught on video by a bystander.

"I Can't Breathe" became a rallying cry after another black man, Eric Garner, was put in a chokehold by a New York City police officer while Garner was resisting arrest for selling single cigarettes from packs in 2014.

The medical examiner ruled Garner's death a homicide, but a grand jury decided not to indict the officer.

Garner's family eventually received a $5.9 million settlement from the city, and the officer was subsequently fired in 2019, five years after Garner died.

His mother, Gwen Carr, recalled the persistence it took to secure the officer's termination while speaking in Minneapolis on Thursday, saying she was told by several people along the way that the time had come to give up.

"I (said) 'You may not go forward, but I am,' and that is what you must do because this is not going to be an easy fight," she told the crowd.

While Minneapolis has "everyone with you now," she warned that "a lonely road" is ahead.

"Don't let this (just) be another news story. ... We all have to get out and stand together and we don't have to do it violently. We can do it politically," Carr said. "Don't sit around and say, 'My vote don't count.' We put these politicians in and we can take them out."

Jenkins joined Sharpton and Carr at the gathering hours after speaking with Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey and Police Chief Medaria Arradondo at a press conference.

She opened her remarks at the earlier press conference by singing "Amazing Grace" as an offering of grace to Floyd's family before telling media gathered that Floyd's death felt for the black community "as if there was a knee on all of our collective necks that says black life does not matter to the institutions that dictate what happens in this culture and society."

While understanding and supporting the collective grief and outrage that people felt about his death, and the persistent "disease" of racism, she said looting, arson and violence were not acceptable means to express those emotions.

She alluded to those sentiments again when she spoke to the crowd gathered at 38th Street and Chicago Avenue on Thursday afternoon.

"We are going to fight for our streets and we are going to fight for justice for George," she said.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Al Sharpton, Eric Garner's mother visit George Floyd site, call for national 'We Can't Breathe' movement

A group of artists paint a mural of George Floyd on the wall outside of Cup Foods, where Floyd was killed in police custody, on May 28, 2020 in Minneapolis, Minnesota. People have gathered at the site since Floyd was killed earlier this week. (Stephen Maturen/Getty Images)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Six George Floyd protesters arrested at fired Minneapolis police officer's Oakdale home

ARTICLE XIII. SIX GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTERS ARRESTED AT FIRED
MINNEAPOLIS POLICE OFFICER'S OAKDALE HOME

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 495 words

Byline: Mary Divine

Highlight: Monique Cullars-Doty, whose nephew was fatally shot by St. Paul police officers five years ago, was one of six protesters arrested Wednesday night in Oakdale near a house belonging to Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin. Chauvin, the officer who was seen kneeling on George Floyd's neck before he died, owns a house in the 7500 block [...]

Body

Monique Cullars-Doty, whose nephew was fatally shot by St. Paul police officers five years ago, was one of six protesters arrested Wednesday night in Oakdale near a house belonging to Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin.

Chauvin, the officer who was seen kneeling on George Floyd's neck before he died, owns a house in the 7500 block of 17th Avenue North. Cullars-Doty was arrested about a block away near the intersection of 16th Street and Helmo Avenue on suspicion of unlawful assembly.

Dozens of law-enforcement officers from multiple agencies responded to the area; an Oakdale police spokeswoman declined to give exact numbers or agency names for "tactical and safety reasons."

The spokeswoman, Michelle Stark, said the officers were called to the area around 3:30 p.m. to "to keep peace during the active protests." City streets in the area were blocked off and a "Code Red" alert was sent to nearby residents "requesting no unnecessary vehicle traffic near Helmo Ave/17th Street."

At 11:10 p.m., officers issued a "dispersal order for an unlawful assembly," and "multiple warnings were given," Stark said in a statement. "While many left the area, a large crowd did not respond." Officers then deployed tear gas, she said. No injuries were reported.

Erik Sykes, 24, of Oakdale, was arrested for unlawful assembly and obstruction of legal process and was transported to the Washington County Jail in Stillwater.

Five adults, including Cullars-Doty, 53, of Woodbury, were arrested for unlawful assembly and released at the scene, pending citations, Stark said.

The others were: Jaysin Hodges, 38, of Ham Lake; Kathryn Newhouse, 22, of Hancock; Chrystal Immonen, 45, Bemidji; and Chloe Sherrill, 21, of St. Paul.

Six George Floyd protesters arrested at fired Minneapolis police officer's Oakdale home

Cullars-Doty, who is a member of Twin Cities Coalition 4 Justice 4 Jamar, Black Lives Matter Minnesota and other groups, is the aunt of Marcus Golden, who was 24 when he was shot by St. Paul police on Jan. 14, 2015.

A grand jury cleared two St. Paul police officers in the shooting. Police said a loaded handgun was found within Golden's reach in the SUV, though Golden's family disputes that and other information in police reports, including that Golden was trying to run over an officer in the parking lot of the Valley Hi-Rise apartments at 261 E. University Ave., near Regions Hospital.

Protesters continued to gather in the area on Thursday.

"While much of the protests have been peaceful, a continued law enforcement presence and traffic disruptions to the neighbor should be expected," she said. "Again, we are requesting no unnecessary motor vehicle traffic in the area of Helmo Avenue and 17th Street." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Leaders plead for calm as disorder spreads to St. Paul and suburbs; Walz calls in National Guard

ARTICLE XIV. LEADERS PLEAD FOR CALM AS DISORDER SPREADS TO ST. PAUL AND SUBURBS; WALZ CALLS IN NATIONAL GUARD

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 607 words

Byline: Carrigan Miller

Body

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey on Thursday called for calm, following a night of violent outbursts that left dozens of businesses looted or burned and at least one person dead in the aftermath of a man's death while in custody of Minneapolis police. Even as he spoke, however, additional unrest was springing up far from the street where George Floyd died.

"We must restore the peace so that we can do this hard work together," Frey said.

Governor Tim Walz activated the National Guard Thursday at Frey's request. Around 200 guard troopers will provide support to local police until the unrest has settled. State patrol helicopters and aircraft have been made available to law enforcement.

"As Governor, I will always defend the right to protest," Walz said in a statement. "It is how we express pain, process tragedy, and create change. That is why I am answering our local leaders' request for

Leaders plead for calm as disorder spreads to St. Paul and suburbs; Walz calls in National Guard

Minnesota National Guard assistance to protect peaceful demonstrators, neighbors, and small businesses in Minnesota."

Frey has also authorized Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo to pull and command police from other jurisdictions, he said, and state troopers have also been helping to restore calm.

The conference came after days of increasing tension between protesters and the Minneapolis Police Department following Floyd's death. The department initially said only that Floyd was "suffering medical distress;" video later showed a police officer kneeling on the man's neck before he lost consciousness. Floyd was later pronounced dead. Frey has called for the arrest of Derek Chauvin, the Minneapolis police officer shown kneeling on Floyd's neck.

Protests against the police evolved into clashes on Tuesday. On Wednesday night violence grew worse, with multiple businesses damaged, looted or burned.

"There was a different tenor last night," Arradondo said of Wednesday night's events. He blamed a small group of protestors who set out to cause property damage and loot while emphasizing that the majority of protestors were peaceful.

It's not clear if some of the people causing damage were even related to the police protests. Many of those who were damaging property, Arradondo said, were not from Minneapolis.

Disruption continued on Thursday. In St. Paul, police and state troopers faced off for hours against dozens of people reportedly trying to loot a Target store on Snelling Avenue. The Target on Lake Street in South Minneapolis was ransacked the previous day.

"Officers attempted to stop the thefts from occurring, and the would-be thieves dropped the stolen merchandise and fled on foot," St. Paul Police Department public information coordinator Steve Linders said in an email to the Business Journal. A group of people still remains in the area causing property damage, Linders said.

In Roseville, a spokeswoman for Rosedale Center said the mall had been asked to close by local authorities. And the Maplewood Police Department warned of the potential for "flash looting," told residents to stay away from retail areas.

The Mall of America has also closed for the rest of Thursday.

Twin Cities Metro Transit announced this afternoon that it would be suspending its service starting from 4 p.m. through at least the rest of Thursday. The transit agency said it would be providing an update later tonight.

And in Minneapolis' Uptown, Calhoun Square took the step of boarding up all of its first-story windows. Some of those windows were broken during Wednesday night's protests; other stores, however, had not yet been damaged.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 29, 2020

Leaders plead for calm as disorder spreads to St. Paul and suburbs; Walz calls in National Guard

End of Document

Protesters stop LA freeway traffic, smash patrol car windows

ARTICLE XV. PROTESTERS STOP LA FREEWAY TRAFFIC, SMASH PATROL CAR WINDOWS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 432 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: LOS ANGELES (AP) - Hundreds of people protesting the death of a black man in Minneapolis police custody blocked a Los Angeles freeway and shattered windows of California Highway Patrol cruisers on Wednesday.Body

By CHRISTOPHER WEBER

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Hundreds of people protesting the death of a black man in Minneapolis police custody blocked a Los Angeles freeway and shattered windows of California Highway Patrol cruisers on Wednesday.

One demonstrator who jumped from another police vehicle was possibly injured in the rally by Black Lives Matter and other protesters. Hundreds of demonstrators gathered in the late afternoon on downtown streets and eventually moved towards U.S. 101. Dozens walked into lanes despite police efforts to keep them away.

When a CHP patrol car arrived, demonstrators surrounded it. The car's back window was smashed by a skateboard and it jerked forward and moved away with several protesters who had jumped onto the hood. Television news footage showed one man finally hopping or jumping from the side of the moving car and then flopping onto the ground.

A second CHP car arrived and was attacked, with one demonstrator hurling what appeared to be a board through the back window before it moved off.

It wasn't immediately clear whether the man on the ground was seriously injured but protesters surrounded him and others formed a line across the lanes to prevent traffic from moving forward.

Firefighters then arrived and took the man away on a gurney. He was upright and raised one hand in a salute or protest. He was expected to be evaluated at a hospital.

After about 20 minutes, the crowd then began streaming away from the freeway.

Protesters stop LA freeway traffic, smash patrol car windows

Traffic was blocked but appeared to be lighter than during a normal rush hour because of coronavirus restrictions. Most demonstrators weren't wearing masks or following social distancing suggestions aimed at preventing the spread of COVID-19.

The protest was organized by the group Black Lives Matter-LA. At its peak, hundreds of people gathered outside the Los Angeles County Hall of Justice.

The demonstration lasted for several hours and was mostly peaceful. No arrests were immediately made, Los Angeles police Officer Mike Lopez said.

The gathering coincides with a large protest in Minneapolis after a white police officer there was seen on video with a knee against the neck of a handcuffed black man who complained that he could not breathe.

Based on the video, Mayor Jacob Frey said officer Derek Chauvin should be charged in the death of George Floyd, who died in police custody.

In a statement, Los Angeles Police Chief Michel Moore said the actions in the video were "incredibly disturbing and go against the basic law enforcement principle of preservation of life." He said they showed lack of compassion and use of excessive force.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Soucheray: Nothing we didn't see in Floyd video can change the conclusion we reached at what we did see

ARTICLE XVI. SOUCHERAY: NOTHING WE DIDN'T SEE IN FLOYD VIDEO CAN CHANGE THE CONCLUSION WE REACHED AT WHAT WE DID SEE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 612 words

Byline: Joe Soucheray

Highlight: The timing is bad. The world needs peace and it gets an unimaginably horrific death. Citizens, essentially bound up for two months against a mysterious virus, bust loose and start to burn and loot the town. Police officers with rifles in their hands are on the roof of their precinct building at Lake Street and [...]

Body

The timing is bad. The world needs peace and it gets an unimaginably horrific death. Citizens, essentially bound up for two months against a mysterious virus, bust loose and start to burn and loot the town. Police officers with rifles in their hands are on the roof of their precinct building at Lake Street and Minnehaha Ave.

The timing is off the rails. The center at long last is not holding. W.B. Yeats wrote that as part of his poem "The Second Coming." He wrote that in 1919.

How did we make it this far? Or, more accurately, have we reached the point where the abuse of humanity has reached its tipping point and degradation spills across the land? It feels like a knee on the neck.

On the night of Memorial Day, a fellow named George Floyd was taken into police custody outside a convenience store at 38th and Chicago in Minneapolis. He allegedly had tried to use a forged $20 bill. He didn't resist arrest. In fact, it looked like he needed help getting out of his car. He was handcuffed. All of this is seen on surveillance video that surfaced on the second day, after the video that broke the spirit, like a knee on the neck.

After being cuffed, Floyd appeared to be sitting on the sidewalk with his back against a building. Then he was up again. We will need police body cameras for this part; now he was in the street, face down, his hands cuffed.

Nothing we didn't see can change the conclusion we reached at what we did see. A veteran officer, Derek Chauvin, had his knee on Floyd's neck for three, four, five minutes. The video taken by a bystander is 10 minutes and eight seconds long. Floyd is begging for his life. He can't breathe. The bystanders are begging for Floyd's life, begging Chauvin to get up. Chauvin's partner, Tou Thao, whose own humanity also vanished, did nothing.

Soucheray: Nothing we didn't see in Floyd video can change the conclusion we reached at what we did see

Two other officers on the scene did nothing. The four officers have been fired. Are we supposed to believe that this is some sort of brotherly code, that you don't interfere with your partner's play? Then it's a hell of a lousy code.

It felt like springs and coils and hinges and neurons were snapping. Humanity flapped its wings but they were dark wings and humanity flew away, painfully, slowly and lumbering, leaving Chauvin to occasionally look up blankly at the crowd begging him to stop.

But he didn't.

What were you thinking, man? You had him down, and we don't even know why that was necessary. He offered no resistance and might very well have been incapable of offering resistance. You guys keep that cliché in your shirt pocket, like a calling card.

Chauvin finally got up, but it was too long after Floyd stopped talking, at one point calling out to his mother. Maybe we all do at the end. Maybe it's a reflex that comes with death, the yearning for the peace and comfort of your mother's arms. But that was minutes ago, before he lost his pulse and fell silent.

Yeats:

"Turning and turning in the widening gyre

The falcon cannot hear the falconer;

Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold;

Mere anarchy is loosed on the world,

The blood-dimmed tide is loosed, and everywhere

The ceremony of innocence is drowned;

The best lack all conviction, while the worst

Are full of passionate intensity."

Joe Soucheray can be reached at jsoucheray@pioneerpress.com. Soucheray's "Garage Logic" podcast can be head at garagelogic.com.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world!': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Target closes dozens of Twin Cities stores (again); Frey declares local emergency

ARTICLE XVII. TARGET CLOSES DOZENS OF TWIN CITIES STORES (AGAIN); FREY DECLARES LOCAL EMERGENCY

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 824 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey declared a local emergency and Gov. Tim Walz activated the Minnesota National Guard to help quell looting and violent unrest that spread throughout the Twin Cities on Thursday in the wake of the death of George Floyd in the custody of Minneapolis police earlier this week.

Meanwhile, Target Corp. (NYSE: TGT) said late Thursday that it would close 29 Twin Cities stores - virtually its entire retail footprint in the metro - until further notice, following looting incidents by mobs at at least two of its locations. Dozens of other businesses were damaged or destroyed overnight, and the Minneapolis Police Department evacuated its Third Precinct building, located in a commercial district of the Longfellow neighborhood, as protesters set it ablaze.

UPDATE: Target opened all but a half-dozen of the stores Friday morning, then closed at least 20 of them again Friday afternoon, the Star Tribune notes.

Target closes dozens of Twin Cities stores (again); Frey declares local emergency

"We are heartbroken by the death of George Floyd and the pain it is causing our community," the Minneapolis-based retailer said in a statement. "Our focus will remain on our team members' safety and helping our community heal."

Target's move came after days of increasing disorder following the death of Floyd, a bouncer at a Minneapolis restaurant and nightclub who died Monday in an incident with police officers. The department initially said only that Floyd was "suffering medical distress," but video later showed a police officer kneeling on the man's neck for several minutes while Floyd pleaded with him to stop and said he couldn't breathe.

RELATED: Black business owners react to the killing of George Floyd

Four officers were fired following the incident, and Frey on Wednesday said the officer captured on the video should be arrested.

So far, no arrests have been made. State and federal authorities on Thursday promised a "thorough and expeditious" probe into Floyd's death. In a press conference that began nearly two hours late, U.S. Attorney Erica McDonald said, "We thought we would have another development we could tell you about, but unfortunately we don't at this point." Instead, McDonald, FBI special agent Rainer Drolshagen and Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman asked the public for patience and to send in any evidence or eyewitness accounts of Floyd's encounter with the police.

Of the video the authorities had already seen, Freeman called it "graphic and horrific," but also said that there was evidence "that does not support a criminal charge." He did not elaborate.

RELATED: 'It's a death blow': Lake Street small businesses clean up, prepare for another night

Those statements came as violence, which developed Wednesday evening after initially peaceful protests at the Minneapolis Police Department's Third Precinct, grew worse and spread beyond the city. Crowds that had looted and burned dozens of small businesses along Lake Street - as well as some large ones, like Target's Lake Street store and a nearby Cub Foods - appeared at retail locations in St. Paul. Target's Midway store was struck by looters, leading to an hours-long standoff with police and Minnesota state troopers. Police reported fires at NAPA Auto Parts, T.J. Maxx, The UPS Store and Furniture Barn, the Pioneer Press reported.

When police managed to block entrance to the Midway Target, crowds ran to the nearby T.J. Maxx store instead and broke windows there, the Star Tribune reports. Police, warning of other "flash looting" incidents, warned people to stay away from retail areas. Rosedale Shopping Center closed its doors and will stay closed at least for Friday.

RELATED: Leaders plead for calm as disorder spreads to St. Paul and suburbs

Walz's move lets National Guard units support local authorities with personnel, facilities and equipment. Additionally, 200 state troopers, along with State Patrol helicopters and other aircraft will "assist in public safety efforts for the next several days," the governor's office said.

"As governor, I will always defend the right to protest," Walz said. "It is how we express pain, process tragedy and create change. That is why I am answering our local leaders' request for Minnesota National Guard assistance to protect peaceful demonstrators, neighbors and small businesses in Minnesota."

Target closes dozens of Twin Cities stores (again); Frey declares local emergency

The Star Tribune reports that Frey and Police Chief Medaria Arradondo also pledged to work with local community leaders to encourage peaceful protest.

"There was a different tenor last night," Arradondo said of Wednesday night's events. He blamed a small group of protestors who set out to cause property damage and loot while emphasizing that the majority of protestors were peaceful.

It's not clear if some of the people causing damage were even related to the police protests. Many of those who were damaging property, Arradondo said, were not from Minneapolis.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 29, 2020

End of Document

Minneapolis firefighters battle fires after George Floyd protests turn violent; businesses deal with aftermath

ARTICLE XVIII. MINNEAPOLIS FIREFIGHTERS BATTLE FIRES AFTER GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS TURN VIOLENT; BUSINESSES DEAL WITH AFTERMATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 771 words

Byline: Andy Rathbun, Frederick Melo

Highlight: The fires were intentionally set, according to the fire department.

Body

Smoke hung over East Lake Street Thursday following a night of protest that turned to rioting, looting and numerous fires authorities say were intentionally set in area buildings. The path of damage stretched for miles.

Minneapolis braced for more violence as protests and looting continued through the day.

Fire crews responded to about 30 incidents along East Lake Street, including at least 16 structure fires, since Wednesday during the protests over the death of George Floyd while he was in custody of Minneapolis police.

Also, a man was found shot Wednesday night at Bloomington Avenue and Lake Street, about a mile west of the Minneapolis Police Department's third precinct, where protests had been centered.

He died at the hospital. Police have arrested a suspect.

BUSINESS OWNERS PROTECT STORES FROM LOOTERS

At about 6:30 a.m. on Thursday, armed with a handgun and AR-15 rifle, Tory Bremer stood beside friend Matthew Lerner outside East Lake Liquor Store to survey damage to the store that Lerner owns.

The glass front door had been smashed and metal gate cut through the night before. Lerner had yet to account for what had been stolen.

"I was surprised it made it this far down (Lake Street)," said Lerner, whose store is about a mile east from the city's third precinct.

After Bremer heard of the damage to his friend's store, he and several others headed over there at about 1:30 a.m. to protect the business from further looting.

"Over the course of four hours, we probably chased 30 to 40 people away," Bremer said. "You start walking at someone with an AR-15 and they immediately turn around."

Minneapolis firefighters battle fires after George Floyd protests turn violent; businesses deal with aftermath

'IT LOOKS LIKE A BOMB WENT OFF'

Bremer, who has lived in the neighborhood since 1995, was shocked by the scene on Lake Street Thursday morning. At the nearby Target parking lot, it "looks like a bomb went off," he said.

"This is by far the craziest thing I have literally seen in my entire life, let alone in my neighborhood," he said.

Further west down Lake Street, dozens of business had been vandalized with graffiti and had windows smashed. Security alarms still sounded at about 7 a.m. and people continued taking items from stores. Firefighters worked to put out fires and smoke filled the air as onlookers surveyed the damage.

At Town Talk Diner, sprinklers continued to drop water on tables and chairs in the dining area. The floors were filled with water and littered with liquor bottles and broken glass.

"They looted all the booze," said co-owner Charles Stotts, carefully walking into the building.

He said the restaurant had been open Wednesday night doing take-out service when people told them to close down and leave the area. He described the scene on Lake Street as like a "war zone."

"We have our whole lives tied into this restaurant," he said with his hands on his head as he and his wife watched water pour into the street.

'THIS ISN'T PROTESTING'

Mary Wattley is the director of transportation and family liaison at Minnesota Transitions Charter School near Hiawatha Avenue and East Lake Street next door to the Target store hit by looters Wednesday night.

Wattley said 300 students from seventh to 12th grade attended school at the site. The school facility has been all but destroyed and flooded.

Meanwhile, residents of Hiawatha Commons nearby said Thursday that they did what they could overnight to protect their building and calm down rioters.

"Is this safe? It's totally unsafe. There's no police. There's no rules or regulations," said Abdikafi Mohamud. "There's a lot of kids here, a lot of older people."

Kiumars Ehtiatkar said 14 cars were stolen from his seven-year-old business, A Auto Mall, and the store window and glass from the front door were smashed overnight.

"They smashed and broke all the windows, everything," he said, adding that he thinks police should have done more to protect the area from rioting and looters.

Outside the GM Tobacco store Thursday morning looters were still taking products. They tried to break open the store's ATM machine and passed around items from inside the store.

"It's a free-for-all. This isn't protesting," said former area resident Steve Edwards. "It's the worst destruction I've ever seen."

Mara H. Gottfried contributed to this report.

This story contains information from the Associated Press.

Minneapolis firefighters battle fires after George Floyd protests turn violent; businesses deal with aftermath

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Dozens of homeless people evicted from Minneapolis hotel Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots Suspect charged, sought in fiery Minneapolis crash that killed Coon Rapids motorist

Graphic

Firefighters work to put out a fire that had gutted a building on Lake Street in Minneapolis by the morning of Thursday, May 28, 2020. A protest over the death of George Floyd turned violent the previous night. (Andy Rathbun / Pioneer Press)

Matthew Lerner, left, owner of East Lake Liquor Store, and friend Tory Bremer discuss how to secure the building Thursday, May 28, 2020, after looters broke into the building the night before. (Andy Rathbun / Pioneer Press)

Sprinklers pour water onto the dining area of Town Talk Diner on Lake Street in Minneapolis on Thursday, May 28, 2020. The building had been looted the night before. (Andy Rathbun / Pioneer Press)

Charles Stotts and wife Kacey White, owners of Town Talk Diner on Lake Street in Minneapolis, watch as water pours out of the restaurant on Thursday, May 28, 2020. The building had been looted the night before. "We have our whole lives tied into this restaurant," said Stotts. (Andy Rathbun / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XIX. GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS IN MINNEAPOLIS: THE LATEST ON WHAT WE KNOW SO FAR

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 248 words

Byline: Pioneer Press

Highlight: George Floyd, a 46-year-old black man, died while in police custody Monday. A video of officer Derek Chauvin kneeling on Floyd's neck as Floyd said repeatedly that he couldn't breathe was widely circulated on social media. All four officers at the scene were fired. Protests Wednesday night along East Lake Street near the Minneapolis police [...]

Body

George Floyd, a 46-year-old black man, died while in police custody Monday. A video of officer Derek Chauvin kneeling on Floyd's neck as Floyd said repeatedly that he couldn't breathe was widely circulated on social media. All four officers at the scene were fired. Protests Wednesday night along East Lake Street near the Minneapolis police Third Precinct grew violent overnight.

Here's what we know as of Thursday about the situation:

One person died Wednesday night after Minneapolis police say he was shot by a store owner. Authorities are investigating the shooting as a homicide. Firefighters responded to 30 fires overnight in Minneapolis. Numerous businesses were broken into and looted, and some were burned. Metro Transit is suspending service Thursday afternoon out of concerns for safety. Rosedale Center has shut down as a precaution. Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey asked Gov. Tim Walz to bring in the Minnesota National Guard to assist police in responding to rioting. Walz said he is activating the National Guard. Federal authorities are investigating the death of George Floyd and will consider federal charges if necessary. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XX.

GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS: THE LATEST ON MINNEAPOLIS RIOTS, DEATH INVESTIGATION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 81 wordsByline: Pioneer PressHighlight: George Floyd, a 46-year-old black man, died while in police custody Monday. A video of officer Derek Chauvin kneeling on Floyd's neck as Floyd said repeatedly that he couldn't breathe was widely circulated on social media. All four officers at the scene were fired. Protests Wednesday night along East Lake Street near the Minneapolis police [...]Body

George Floyd, a 46-year-old black man, died while in police custody Monday. A video of officer Derek Chauvin kneeling on Floyd's neck as Floyd said repeatedly that he couldn't breathe was widely circulated on social media. All four officers at the scene were fired. Protests Wednesday night along East Lake Street near the Minneapolis police Third Precinct grew violent overnight.

Here's what we know as of Thursday morning about the situation: <https://www.twincities.com/tag/george-floyd/>

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XXI. POLICE, NATIONAL EXPERTS CONDEMN KNEE RESTRAINT USED ON GEORGE FLOYD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 958 words

Byline: Lisa Marie Pane

Highlight: Police around the nation and law enforcement experts on Thursday broadly condemned the way George Floyd, who died in Minneapolis police custody this week, was restrained by an officer who dug his knee into the man's neck, saying no circumstances warrant such a dangerous technique.

Body

Police around the nation and law enforcement experts on Thursday broadly condemned the way George Floyd, who died in Minneapolis police custody this week, was restrained by an officer who dug his knee into the man's neck, saying no circumstances warrant such a dangerous technique.

Deeply disturbing video shot by a bystander shows Floyd handcuffed, lying on his stomach and seemingly subdued as the officer trying to arrest him pressed his knee down on Floyd's neck for nearly eight minutes.

Some police officials and experts said equally shocking was something not seen in the video: Other officers on the scene apparently did not try to intervene even as Floyd repeatedly cried out that he couldn't breathe and moaned in pain.

"Any officer who abuses their power or stands by and allows it to happen does not deserve to wear the badge, period," Chicago Police Superintendent David O. Brown said.

Floyd, 46, was arrested Monday after an employee at a grocery store called police to accuse him of trying to pass a counterfeit $20 bill. The cellphone video shows Floyd, who is black, face-down on the ground with his hands cuffed behind his back, as officer Derek Chauvin, who is white, uses the knee restraint on his neck.

Floyd's head is turned to the side and he does not appear to be resisting. As the minutes tick by and Chauvin continues to hold him down, Floyd's complaints about not being able to breathe stop as he falls silent and motionless. Toward the end of the video, paramedics arrive, lift a limp Floyd onto a stretcher and place him in an ambulance.

"He wasn't actively resisting, and he was saying he couldn't breathe," said Charles P. Stephenson, a former police officer and FBI agent with expertise in use-of-force tactics. "You have to understand that possibility is there (that Floyd couldn't breathe), and you release any kind of restriction you might have on an airway immediately."

Police, national experts condemn knee restraint used on George Floyd

Chauvin and the three other responding officers have been fired, and the FBI is investigating whether they willfully deprived Floyd of his civil rights. Chauvin has not spoken publicly, and his attorney has not responded to calls seeking comment.

Police recruits learn a variety of use-of-force techniques at the academy, all with the idea that any force employed may equal but not exceed the physical resistance offered by a suspect.

One technique is to restrain someone on the ground face-down, but officers are taught to press a part of the lower leg, such as the shin or top of the ankle, across the shoulders or the back. In some cases officers will "hog-tie" suspects' legs to prevent flight or violent resistance.

But "no police academy that we know of teaches a police officer to use their knee, to put it on their neck," said Chuck Wexler, executive director of the Police Executive Research Forum, which researches and advises on police practices. "That's just not taught because that can impact their breathing and their carotid artery (a crucial vessel that supplies blood to the brain). So when police look at that video, they are shocked that those tactics were used."

What's more, officers are taught to get a suspect up from the ground as soon as possible, either sitting or standing, since lying on one's stomach can cause breathing problems, especially for larger people.

"If what we saw was a continuing, ongoing fight, I could see how a leg, for example, could slip to the back of the neck. But this is not what I'm seeing," said John Bostain, a former officer and president of Command Presence, which trains police around the country. "I'm seeing a fight that appears to be over."

Floyd's case and the recent shooting death of Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia have once again laid bare the divide between minority communities and law enforcement that grew to a nationwide uproar following the officer killings of Eric Garner and Michael Brown in 2014 and the death of Freddie Gray in police custody in 2015, among others. Videos from bystanders and police cameras have helped elevate such cases to national scrutiny.

Law enforcement officials often ask that people reserve judgment in such cases until all facts - what transpired before or after what a video shows - are known. But the Floyd case has drawn swift and widespread condemnation.

The Fraternal Order of Police, for example, issued a statement saying in part: "The fact that he was a suspect in custody is immaterial - police officers should at all times render aid to those who need it. Police officers need to treat all of our citizens with respect and understanding and should be held to the very highest standards for their conduct."

Law enforcement experts say tempers can flare when a suspect resists arrest, but it's incumbent upon fellow officers with cooler heads to defuse the situation and put a stop to excessive force.

But there's no sign from the video that any of the officers at the scene with Chauvin tried to intervene. For some that had chilling echoes of the police beating of Rodney King in Los Angeles in 1991 despite the presence of a supervising officer.

Police, national experts condemn knee restraint used on George Floyd

"That bothered me greatly," said Stephenson, the use-of-force expert. "They all have an affirmative duty and obligation to uphold the law and uphold the procedures and to stop any violation of law or excessive use of force that they're a witness to. ... It didn't look like those officers were making any effort to go over or say something or do anything." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE XXII. CORONAVIRUS THURSDAY UPDATE: 35 MORE MINNESOTANS DIE FROM COVID-19

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 549 words

Byline: Christopher Magan

Highlight: Minnesota's coronavirus outbreak marked two daily record highs Thursday for both the number of COVID-19 deaths and test results. The deaths of 35 patients were reported Thursday by the Minnesota Department of Health. The previous daily high of 33 fatalities was set last week and tied on Wednesday. The state's COVID-19 death toll is now [...]

Body

Minnesota's coronavirus outbreak marked two daily record highs Thursday for both the number of COVID-19 deaths and test results.

The deaths of 35 patients were reported Thursday by the Minnesota Department of Health. The previous daily high of 33 fatalities was set last week and tied on Wednesday.

The state's COVID-19 death toll is now at 967 people. Those whose deaths were reported Thursday ranged in age from their 30s to more than 100 years old.

State Health Commissioner Jan Malcolm said the two youngest patients whose deaths were announced Thursday - one in their early 30s and another in their early 40s - did not have immediate evidence of underlying health conditions.

The state Department of Health also reported the results of 8,676 coronavirus tests. That's 54 more than the previous record; health officials hope to soon have the capacity to screen 10,000 samples per day.

In a call with reporters Thursday, Malcolm noted the demonstrations and unrest in both Minneapolis and St. Paul after the death of George Floyd, a 46-year-old black man who died after a white Minneapolis police officer pinned Floyd to the ground with a knee pressed on his neck for several minutes.

In a video circulated online, Floyd can be seen pleading with the officer and saying: "I can't breathe."

Malcolm urged protesters to do anything they could to protect themselves from the coronavirus while participating in demonstrations.

Coronavirus Thursday update: 35 more Minnesotans die from COVID-19

"As we know, large gatherings do pose a risk in any epidemic, but certainly where we stand today," Malcolm said. "Please be mindful of the risk and that the risk can be reduced, not eliminated but reduced, with social distancing and wearing a mask."

The state Department of Health reported 483 new coronavirus infections on Thursday, bringing the state total to 22,947 laboratory-confirmed cases. Stevens County recorded its first case Thursday leaving only two of Minnesota's 87 counties, Cook and Lake of the Woods, without confirmed cases.

Minnesota's most serious coronavirus cases have been in residents who are older or have underlying health conditions. The average age of those who've died is 83.

Yet most of the state's confirmed cases are in residents between the ages of 20 and 60. About 67 percent of the state's infections fall into that group.

Seventy-three percent of people with confirmed cases in the state have recovered enough they no longer need to be isolated.

Since the outbreak began, 2,880 patients have required hospitalization. The latest information from state health officials showed 606 patients hospitalized with 242 in critical condition.

Malcolm said Thursday that health officials were making progress controlling coronavirus infections in congregate care facilities around the state. More than 80 percent of the state's deaths have been residents of such facilities, which include nursing homes, assisted living and rehabilitation centers.

Coronavirus: 8 things we got wrong - at first - about the deadly pandemic Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

State, federal authorities continue investigation into George Floyd's death but no charges as of Thursday

ARTICLE XXIII. STATE, FEDERAL AUTHORITIES CONTINUE INVESTIGATION INTO GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH BUT NO CHARGES AS OF THURSDAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 636 words

Byline: Sarah Horner

Highlight: State and federal authorities are continuing to investigate the death of George Floyd while he was in the custody of Minneapolis police. However, authorities did not announce decisions on charges in the case as of Thursday. The Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension and the FBI continue to review the facts surrounding Floyd's death during his [...]

Body

State and federal authorities are continuing to investigate the death of George Floyd while he was in the custody of Minneapolis police. However, authorities did not announce decisions on charges in the case as of Thursday.

The Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension and the FBI continue to review the facts surrounding Floyd's death during his arrest Monday for allegedly trying to pass counterfeit money at a convenience store. Video taken by a bystander and shared on social media shows officer Derek Chauvin pressing his knee into Floyd's neck, as Floyd was handcuffed and lying face-down on the ground.

Floyd is heard on the video saying he couldn't breathe and died a short time later. His death has sparked days of protest that reached a boiling point Wednesday night when rioting and looting broke out on East Lake Street and several buildings burned. Further looting was reported across the metro area Thursday and more protests are planned.

Chauvin and three other officers at the scene have since been fired and Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey has called for the arrest and charging of Chauvin.

Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman said his office has been deluged with communications urging him to charge the four officers. Freeman said he is working as quickly as possible.

"We have to do this right," he said. "We have to prove it in a court of law ... I will not rush justice."

He also said at one point that while the officer's conduct depicted in the video "is graphic and horrific and terrible and no person should do that," it was his job "to prove that (the officer) violated criminal statute, and there is other evidence that does not support a criminal charge," adding "we need to wade through all that evidence to make a meaningful determination."

State, federal authorities continue investigation into George Floyd's death but no charges as of Thursday

His office issued a clarification later Thursday, saying his remarks had been misinterpreted and that he intended to make it clear that all evidence, including unfavorable evidence, needed to be considered.

"Evidence not favorable to our case needs to be carefully examined to understand the full picture of what actually happened," the statement read. "This happens in every case. This statement does not indicate in any way the horror that we all feel when viewing the video. As in any case, it is simply a matter of adequately preparing for trial."

Meanwhile, the state investigation is accompanied by a federal one.

The U.S. Attorney's Office and FBI will determine whether there are grounds to bring federal charges in connection with Floyd's death.

"It is a violation of federal law for an individual acting under color of law to willfully deprive another person of any right protected by the Constitution or laws of the United States," according to the statement from U.S. Attorney Erica MacDonald and FBI Special Agent In Charge Rainer Drolshagen.

MacDonald said Thursday that the investigation has been given top priority by the U.S. Department of Justice and that she has been in touch with Attorney General William Barr about the case.

"We are working round the clock," MacDonald said. "We have been for the last 72 hours and will continue to do (so) until justice is (done)."

Both state and federal authorities urge anyone with additional information about the incident to come forward. They asked the community to try and remain calm as they continue the investigation so that they can do their job right.

Anyone with information can call the FBI at 1-800-CALLFBI (800-225-5324). Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Dozens of homeless people evicted from Minneapolis hotel Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots Suspect charged, sought in fiery Minneapolis crash that killed Coon Rapids motorist

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Metro Transit suspending service through weekend because of safety concerns

ARTICLE XXIV. [METRO TRANSIT SUSPENDING SERVICE THROUGH WEEKEND
BECAUSE OF SAFETY CONCERNS](#)

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 171 words

Byline: Andy Rathbun

Highlight: Metro Transit announced Thursday afternoon that it will be suspending service "out of concern for the safety of riders and employees." Bus and rail service was suspended beginning 4 p.m. Thursday with a potential of restarting on Friday. Later, however, Metro Transit said it would suspend service through the weekend. Airport shuttle and Northstar trips [...]

Body

Metro Transit announced Thursday afternoon that it will be suspending service "out of concern for the safety of riders and employees."

Bus and rail service was suspended beginning 4 p.m. Thursday with a potential of restarting on Friday. Later, however, Metro Transit said it would suspend service through the weekend.

Airport shuttle and Northstar trips will continue to operate.

The service suspension follows protests over the death of George Floyd that turned violent in Minneapolis Wednesday night and in St. Paul on Thursday.

Metro Transit said it would provide an update about next week's service no later than 8 p.m. Sunday via social media or its rider alerts service. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

More than 170 St. Paul businesses looted or damaged Thursday night-Friday morning, police say

ARTICLE XXV. MORE THAN 170 ST. PAUL BUSINESSES LOOTED OR DAMAGED THURSDAY NIGHT-FRIDAY MORNING, POLICE SAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1554 words

Byline: Dave Orrick, Nick Ferraro

Highlight: The unrest continued into the morning.

Body

What appeared to start as impromptu demonstrations for George Floyd, the man who died in Minneapolis police custody, turned into a day of scattered arson, looting and significant destruction of retail shops in St. Paul's Midway and elsewhere in the capital city on Thursday.

The unrest continued into the evening - more than 170 businesses were damaged or looted, and dozens of fires were set, according to police. There were no reports of serious injuries in St. Paul.

Just after 1 a.m. Friday, a fire broke out at Lloyd's Pharmacy, which dates back to 1918, at Snelling and Minnehaha avenues. A large crowd gathered, many visibly upset the neighborhood business was targeted. By 1:30 a.m., the two-story building was fully engulfed, with several fire crews fighting to contain the flames.

Gov. Tim Walz announced he was calling up the National Guard Thursday afternoon after receiving requests from St. Paul and Minneapolis.

St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter and Police Chief Todd Axtell said groups of young people were traveling around the city in groups of up to 20 vehicles - many without license plates in an attempt to go undetected - and breaking into businesses and looting.

Carter said Thursday the "anguish, the anger, the anguish, the sadness, the rage that we're seeing in the community, it's understandable. And I think it's shared by a whole lot of people throughout humanity right now who have looked at that video (of Floyd) and just said, 'That doesn't feel like the kind of community, the kind of state, the kind of city, the kind of country, the kind of world that I want to live in.'"

But Carter said his plea was that people channel their energy toward honoring Floyd and preventing something similar from happening again.

Floyd, 46, died Monday after a Minneapolis officer knelt on his neck when Floyd was handcuffed on the ground. Protests erupted in Minneapolis, and people began looting and setting fires on Wednesday night.

More than 170 St. Paul businesses looted or damaged Thursday night-Friday morning, police say

On Thursday, people's anger also overflowed into St. Paul and other places braced for the potential for unrest.

pic.twitter.com/CSanXlqfx6

- Dave Orrick (@DaveOrrick) May 28, 2020

Rosedale Center and Maplewood Mall shut down as a precaution on Thursday, and the Roseville mall will remain closed Friday. Roseville police said several businesses had been impacted by attempted theft and burglaries. And Target announced that 24 of its stores in the Twin Cities are closed until further notice.

The Mall of America was set to officially reopen Monday, after it has been closed because of the coronavirus pandemic, but tenants were told Thursday that the date will be pushed out and will be announced when it's finalized.

On St. Paul's Grand Avenue, where a liquor store had its windows broken out, people boarded up windows on restaurants near Lexington Parkway, also as a precaution. A pawn shop in the Payne-Phalen neighborhood had a window smashed.

Metro Transit suspended bus and rail service in the Twin Cities through the weekend.

All state agencies that operate out of the Capitol complex in St. Paul are closed Friday, state employees have been told.

As the day wore on, all sense of law and order had completely broken down on the commercial stretch of University Avenue east of Snelling Avenue in the Midway neighborhood.

It appears to have started around 11:30 a.m., when St. Paul police were initially called to the Target on University Avenue. They found 50 to 60 people running into the store, grabbing merchandise and running out, said Steve Linders, a police spokesman.

When police arrived, people dropped merchandise and ran away, Linders said, a pattern that would repeat itself countless times throughout the afternoon.

Soon after, some people in the Target parking lot chanted, "No justice, no peace," and a few held signs. While numerous people said they were there for justice for Floyd, there was no evidence of organized demonstrators. People said they heard on social media and traditional media about people gathering and those present were mostly teens and young adults.

"Can you please put in the paper that people like us are here being peaceful?" pleaded Rhianna Lindsey, who stayed in her vehicle with her son, Jayden, uncomfortable with the situation. "There's no reason for more violence."

An officer estimated there were at least 200 people in the University Avenue Target parking lot shortly after 2 p.m., and they described the crowd as increasingly hostile. After police gave orders for people to leave, police used a chemical irritant to disperse the group.

The activity worsened as the day went on, with groups of officers in riot gear responding as people were seen breaking store windows, going inside and taking things, and setting fires. Young drivers sped around parking lots, often with a passenger seated on the passenger door, hanging out the open window, his or her cell phone apparently recording or streaming the scene.

More than 170 St. Paul businesses looted or damaged Thursday night-Friday morning, police say

A pattern developed: A store with no police nearby would be looted, starting with teenage or young adult males smashing windows and culminating with a rush of people running in and running out, arms full of merchandise. In one instance, a man repeatedly backed his car into a garage door of Discount Tire, eventually breaking it.

Then the police would come, often dispersing the crowd with gas or projectiles. As they secured the location, looters would hit a different stretch of stores. Once the police left an area, looters would return.

Once inside, some would set fires. There were fires at NAPA Auto Parts, T.J. Maxx, The UPS Store, Furniture Barn and other Midway businesses. The NAPA building collapsed Thursday night.

NAPA collapsed, firefighters trying to save that deli next door pic.twitter.com/9OImZILpes

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress) May 29, 2020

A "significant number of businesses were damaged and also looted," Linders said. The Midway area was hardest hit, but the Sun Ray Shopping Center and Target on Suburban Avenue were also affected, according to police.

In areas where police congregated, a different type of crowd congregated - those with an anti-police message. Some merely hurled insults. But others threw bottles, bricks and flashlight batteries at officers and squad cars. Some cursed at police and said, "You killed him," presumably referring to Floyd.

Officers released tear gas, less-lethal munitions and mace, Axtell said, "because, again, we have to send a strong message - if you decide that you're going to take that brick and launch it at an officer, you're not going to do that without some type of consequence."

In one instance witnessed by a Pioneer Press reporter, store operators - who had been guarding a tobacco shop earlier - returned as it was being looted. One of the men fired a shotgun in the air, dispersing the looters. No one was hit.

Century-old Lloyd's Pharmacy is fully engulfed pic.twitter.com/R13x9OqMuq

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress) May 29, 2020

At New Asia Express on Lexington Parkway, near University Avenue, current and former employees stood guard outside the long-time restaurant on Thursday night.

Jake Nitzschke, 27, went to the restaurant after hearing about the nearby UnBank being looted and came to help his former employer.

"I'm holding down the fort," he said.

City Council President Amy Brendmoen said people are "focused first on preventing loss of life and secondarily preventing loss of property to fire," according to a Thursday night Facebook post. "They have been trying to make space to allow and accommodate peaceful protests. The hope is to keep crowds calm and not contribute to the escalating tension in the city."

More than 170 St. Paul businesses looted or damaged Thursday night-Friday morning, police say

Earlier in the day, Axtell spoke with Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan and Walz and requested support from the National Guard. Mutual aid from neighboring cities and up to 75 Minnesota State Patrol troopers were also on the way, Axtell said Thursday.

The National Guard announced Thursday night that more than 500 soldiers have been activated to St. Paul, Minneapolis and surrounding communities.

"Our mission is to protect life, preserve property and the right to peacefully demonstrate," the National Guard said in a tweet. "A key objective is to ensure fire departments are able to respond to calls."

The Hamline Midway Coalition and are planning community clean-ups along University Avenue on Friday.

St. Paul Chamber of Commerce President B Kyle said Thursday that the organization's "first consideration is the tragic loss and collective grief experienced as a result of the killing of George Floyd. In this context we want safety for all in our community."

Kyle noted that Minnesota has one of the largest economic disparity gaps in the country.

"This reality, in combination with blatant disregard for life has caused much distress and the St. Paul Area Chamber of Commerce maintains our commitment to building a prosperous East Metro region that works for all of us," she said in a statement.

Mara H. Gottfried and Nick Woltman contributed to this report. Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest Union Park District Council Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

'It's a death blow': Lake Street small businesses clean up, prepare for another night (gallery)

ARTICLE XXVI. 'IT'S A DEATH BLOW': LAKE STREET SMALL BUSINESSES CLEAN UP, PREPARE FOR ANOTHER NIGHT (GALLERY)

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 633 words

Byline: Nick Halter

Body

While a burned AutoZone shop and a looted Target store were two of the more visibly damaged businesses following a night of protests in South Minneapolis, dozens of small businesses on Thursday morning were sweeping up broken glass, assessing the damage, and bracing for what could be another difficult night.

"All of those businesses that were up and running in supporting families and putting the wealth back into the community - it's like we just got put back 30 years because it's either on fire, broken or looted," said Chris Montana, owner of Du Nord Craft Spirits, a distillery just a block from the Third Precinct. "For some of these small businesses along the street, that's a death blow. And if you add Covid on top of that - they didn't have deep pockets anyway, because most of us are burning cash. It's a death blow."

'It's a death blow': Lake Street small businesses clean up, prepare for another night (gallery)

The Lake Street Council said at least 80 businesses were damaged on East Lake Street. The damage has occurred in the wake of the death of George Floyd, who died Monday after a Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck for several minutes in an incident caught on cellphone video.

"I understand the anger and frustration around the death of George Floyd, but I wish that response didn't include damage to small-business owners that make up the community," said Allison Sharkey, head of the business association. "The livelihoods of owners and employees have been impacted."

The Lake Street Council has launched a crowdfunding campaign to help those businesses rebuild their storefronts. Liquor stores, banks, retailers and restaurants suffered smashed windows, graffiti and looting.

Du Nord's staff posted "Black Owned" signs on the building and Montana's distillery was spared on Wednesday night. Montana grew up in the neighborhood and was saddened at what happened to all of the businesses along Lake Street. But as a black man, he said he also understood the pain and anger.

"I know that people are going to look at this and say, 'Why would people do these things? Why would they do it to their own community? Doesn't this just hurt your own community?' And the answer is yes, it does. People are angry, people are depressed, people are sad. They're emotional. And there's no place for it to go, because all of the traditional channels don't get anything changed."

He added, "I don't condone looting, but I understand it."

Looting went well beyond Lake Street. A small group broke into Ken & Norm's Liquors at 4801 Chicago Ave. around 4:50 a.m. and stole the most expensive liquors in the locked cabinets, said Arpad Nagy.

Nagy called the police. At first, he said, no one answered for 15 to 20 minutes. Then the dispatcher told him the police wouldn't be coming and to take pictures of the damage. Nagy immigrated from the former Soviet Union 19 years ago and has owned the store for 10 years.

"Never did I expect the day to come that I would call 911 and they would tell me no one is coming," he said.

Nagy had a crew installing metal barricades over his windows and was considering hiring security as he prepared for another night, though he wondered how effective it would be.

"You just can't stop 10 or 15 people," he said. "You just can't do much."

Montana had cleared out any patio furniture or large objects that could be thrown through his windows. But he wasn't planning on sticking around all night.

"I love this business. I love what it's become. I love that it is a community asset. I love my kids more," he said. "And so I'm not going to stay here overnight to defend it. I leave it to the hands of South Minneapolis. And if she chooses to keep it intact, then we will reopen it when we can. And we'll go back to business as usual as it can be."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 29, 2020

'It's a death blow': Lake Street small businesses clean up, prepare for another night (gallery)

End of Document

Mobs ransack stores, torch buildings as police protests turn violent; 1 person killed

ARTICLE XXVII. MOBS RANSACK STORES, TORCH BUILDINGS AS POLICE PROTESTS TURN VIOLENT; 1 PERSON KILLED

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 558 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

Protests that began in the wake of George Floyd's death in police custody turned violent Wednesday night, as crowds looted or vandalized dozens of stores and set fires in the neighborhood around Hiawatha Avenue and Lake Street.

The Star Tribune has a report on the violence, which included a fatal shooting at a Lake Street pawn shop. Police said early Thursday that shots had been fired by the store's owner; one person is in custody.

Stores, including the Target and Cub Foods at the Minnehaha Center strip mall and several smaller shops in the neighborhood, were broken into and ransacked. A Target Corp. (NYSE: TGT) spokesperson told Business Insider that employees were safe but the store will remain closed until further notice.

Looting apparently continued this morning at the Target store according to MPR reporter Jon Collins, who is walking the Lake Street area.

Mobs ransack stores, torch buildings as police protests turn violent; 1 person killed

Stores were also damaged in the Uptown neighborhood, miles away from the scenes of the worst violence. Several storefronts, including Timberland, Urban Outfitters and See Eyewear had windows smashed and merchandise taken or damaged; windows at the Apple store on Hennepin Avenue were damaged but didn't shatter.

RELATED: Minneapolis police, long accused of racism, face wrath of wounded city

Multiple fires were set, including one at the Cub Foods and another that engulfed an AutoZone supply store, KMSB reports. The Star Tribune also has video of a blaze at an under-construction affordable housing project. The Pioneer Press reports that the heat of the blaze "could be felt more than 100 yards away and was sufficient to warp the tower of a nearby construction crane," and neighbors used garden hoses to try to keep the fire from spreading to their homes.

EARLIER: 190 apartments units announced for former Lake Street Rainbow site

Some of the fires are still smoking this morning. Tony Webster is going around the neighborhood this morning and has video of the aftermath in his Twitter feed.

The violence followed two days of steadily increasing tensions in Minneapolis over the death of Floyd, following the release of video of a police officer kneeling on the man's neck while a handcuffed Floyd pleaded that he couldn't breathe. Police had confronted Floyd following a complaint over counterfeit money, and initially said only that he was "suffering medical distress."

RELATED: Black business owners react to the killing of George Floyd

Four officers were fired following the incident, and Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey on Wednesday said the officer captured on the video should be arrested. MPR has more on Frey's statements.

A first day of demonstrations ended with clashes between police and thousands of protesters. Crowds were largely peaceful but after some precinct windows were smashed, police launched tear gas and rubber bullets at the protesters. Some critics, including City Council members, said the police reaction to those initial protests made violence more likely.

Frey, late Wednesday, asked for calm. KMSB also reports he's also asked Gov. Tim Walz for state assistance in helping control the area, including possibly using the National Guard. Currently, the state has deployed several dozen state troopers to the scene.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 28, 2020

Affordable apartment project destroyed during night of protests

ARTICLE XXVIII. AFFORDABLE APARTMENT PROJECT DESTROYED DURING NIGHT OF PROTESTS

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 217 words

Byline: Carrigan Miller

Body

Fires continued to smoulder Thursday morning at the site of Midtown Corner, a partially built apartment building in Minneapolis that burned down during a night of protests over the killing of George Floyd.

The project was run by developer Wellington Management; Executive Vice President David Wellington confirmed that the building was his and that all members of his team were safe.

The project broke ground in the summer of 2019, and was expected to finish later this year. The exterior of all six floors was already finished but only the first floor, designated for retail use - and, unlike the stick-built upper levels, made of concrete - was left standing.

RELATED: Mobs ransack stores, torch buildings as protests turn violent

Midtown Corner's upper five stories were planned affordable housing. The building would have had 190 units, with rent keyed to households making between 60 and 80 percent of the area's median income.

Affordable apartment project destroyed during night of protests

The apartments were the final piece in Wellington's development of the former Rainbow Foods space on East Lake Street. It had already finished adding an Aldi and a charter school called Universal Academy. Both of those buildings were also damaged in the protests.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 28, 2020

End of Document

Banks near riot suffer damage; close until further notice

ARTICLE XXIX. BANKS NEAR RIOT SUFFER DAMAGE; CLOSE UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 356 words

Byline: Patrick Rehkamp

Body

Bank branches in South Minneapolis near where the riots took place last night and into Thursday morning suffered damages and are closed until further notice.

Protests began in the wake of George Floyd's death while he was in police custody earlier this week. They turned violent Wednesday night around Minnehaha Avenue and Lake Street, and now nearby banks are closing due to the destruction and to ensure employees' safety.

A BMO Harris branch, located at 320 Lake St. E, was damaged and bank employees have been shifted to another location, said bank spokesman Patrick O'Herlihy.

"No employees or customers were injured as a result of the incident," he said in an email to the Business Journal. "The branch is secured, and we are in the process of assessing the damage. We're directing customers to the drive-up at our Richfield location at 6625 Lyndale Ave. S."

Banks near riot suffer damage; close until further notice

Two TCF Bank branches suffered damages, as well, said spokesman Tom Wennerberg. A branch located at 3801 Minnehaha Ave. was damaged and is now closed until further notice.

Another branch, located inside a Cub Foods at 2850 26th Ave. S, was also damaged; however, that branch was already closed due to Covid-19, Wennerberg said.

"Extensive property damage at both locations currently due to the situation," he said. "Employees contacted last night to not enter the area today. We are currently securing both locations and will determine a reopen date soon."

Wells Fargo also said it has closed several branches around the riot location, although spokesman Steve Carlson couldn't immediately provide details on which locations. At the very least, the branch at 2218 E. Lake St. is closed because of civil unrest, according to the bank's website.

"We've temporarily closed several branches and offices as a result of ongoing protest activity in Minneapolis," Carlson said. "When we determine it is safe for our employees and customers, we will resume operations at those locations. Customers can check Wells Fargo's branch locator for the current status of branches."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 28, 2020

ARTICLE XXX. FIRM LOSES LEASE AFTER ALLEGED RACIAL PROFILING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

May 28, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1DLength: 713 wordsByline: KAVITA KUMAR; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Venture capitalist said he would call 911 on black entrepreneurs using co-working space's gym.Body

A Minneapolis venture capitalist's office lease has been terminated after a video went viral showing him asking a group of black entrepreneurs if they were tenants of the building and thus allowed to use its gym.

In the video posted Tuesday night, Tom Austin, who is white, said he was going to call 911 on the group. (He ended up calling the building's property manager instead.)

On Wednesday afternoon, Austin said he messed up. He had an office at the Mozaic East building in Uptown for his company, F2 Group. The office building is owned by the Ackerberg Group.

"Should have handled it differently," he said in an e-mail. "Not my job to have done anything."

Top Figure, a Minneapolis-based social media and branding agency, posted the video to its Instagram account saying that it showed racial profiling in action. The company is a member of the WeWork co-working space in the building. The men were working out in the gym in the building when Austin confronted them.

"I'm Tom Austin," the man says in the video. "I'm a tenant in the building - are you?"

The men in the group, who are black, respond that they are all tenants. Austin demands to know which office they work in. They respond that they don't have to tell him. He says he's going to call 911.

"As you guys can see, we're dealing with racism here," one of the voices says in the video.

The men who work at Top Figure could not be reached for comment.

Austin, who was a vocal critic of renaming Lake Calhoun to Bde Maka Ska, said in an interview Wednesday that he regretted saying anything to the men and insisted he was not being racist.

Firm loses lease after alleged racial profiling

He said the building had recently sent out an e-mail reminding them that only tenants were allowed to use the gym and other amenities in the building. He said he was suspicious that the men were not all tenants because he saw one person in the group of five men using his key fob to let others into the bathroom and other doors.

He said they became "aggressive" when he confronted them.

"There's a whole bunch of people who don't appear to be" part of the building using the gym, he is heard saying on the phone in the video.

He said a maintenance person ended up coming and talking to the group and then left.

In its social media post, Top Figure noted that it pays rent to work in the building. It also said the entrepreneurs do not often speak out about the racial profiling and age discrimination they face.

"We are sick and tired of tolerating this type of behavior on a day-to-day basis, and we feel that we had to bring light onto this situation," they wrote.

The social post generated more than 3,000 comments and more than 20,000 likes by Wednesday afternoon and also was being widely shared on Twitter.

It comes in the same week of two other racially charged viral videos, one of which showed a white woman in New York City calling the police on a black man who asked her to follow the rules and leash her dog in Central Park. She was subsequently fired from her job.

The other showed a white police officer in Minneapolis kneeling on the neck of George Floyd, who is black, and who died shortly after, sparking protests in the city on Tuesday night.

Stuart Ackerberg, CEO of Ackerberg Group, which owns the Mozaic East building, said he was already feeling heartbroken upon seeing the Floyd video when he saw the video of the confrontation at the gym in his own building.

"My heart hurts," he said. "This is not how we do business. ... I'm alarmed by what I saw."

He said that two WeWork members had used their key fobs to access the gym on Tuesday night. And he assumes the other people in the Top Figure group also were employees.

"It appears they had every right to be there and to use that amenity," he said.

Ackerberg said he spoke to Austin on Wednesday and expressed his dismay.

"I shared with him that I did not think it was handled well and there are other ways to go about this," he said. "It's unfortunate. Our goal is to create a safe and inviting experience for everybody."

Austin said he and the other men continued to work out after the confrontation.

"By the end of the night, we were on talking terms," he said. "I said, 'I'm sorry you thought I was being racist, but I was not. If you were a bunch of women, I would have done the same thing.' "

Firm loses lease after alleged racial profiling

Load-Date: May 28, 2020

End of Document

Gophers football program tapping Illinois for talent

Rosedale Center, Maplewood Mall shut down amid Thursday's continued protests; MOA delays reopening

ARTICLE XXXI. ROSEDALE CENTER, MAPLEWOOD MALL SHUT DOWN AMID THURSDAY'S CONTINUED PROTESTS; MOA DELAYS REOPENING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 28, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 410 words

Byline: Nick Ferraro

Highlight: Rosedale Center, Maplewood Mall and stores in the Mall of America shut down Thursday afternoon as a precaution amid the looting that has happened in St. Paul and Minneapolis. Roseville police were also monitoring the Target store across from the mall on Snelling Avenue and the Walmart off Interstate 35W, according to a city spokesman. [...]

Body

Rosedale Center, Maplewood Mall and stores in the Mall of America shut down Thursday afternoon as a precaution amid the looting that has happened in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Roseville police were also monitoring the Target store across from the mall on Snelling Avenue and the Walmart off Interstate 35W, according to a city spokesman.

Protests have been underway since the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody. On Thursday, people gathered at the Target store in St. Paul's Midway neighborhood and damaged squad car windows as officers stood in front of the University Avenue store to prevent them from entering.

A group of people also gathered in the parking lot of the Target on Snelling Avenue in Roseville, according to police and social media reports. The store had already closed down.

Rosedale spokeswoman Lisa Crain released a statement around 1:45 p.m. that said local authorities asked the Roseville mall to close. The mall will remain closed Friday.

The Mall of America was set to officially reopen Monday, after it has been closed because of the coronavirus pandemic, but tenants were told Thursday that the date will be pushed out and will be announced when it's finalized. Tenant and employees, who have been preparing for reopening, aren't being allowed into the Bloomington mall through at least Sunday.

Some MOA businesses have had curbside pickup, but those are also being suspended through the weekend.

"We continue to monitor the news - with the uncertainty and unrest in Minneapolis and surrounding communities - and out of an abundance of caution we have made the decision to close Mall of America at 2:00 today," the MOA said in a Thursday message to tenants. "All tenants are required to secure their spaces and leave the building no later than 2:00 this afternoon. Any tenants with exterior entrances must make sure they are locked securely."

Rosedale Center, Maplewood Mall shut down amid Thursday's continued protests; MOA delays reopening

Pictures on social media showed a large police presence outside Maplewood Mall Thursday afternoon.

Local authorities have asked us to close Rosedale Center. Please watch social media for notice on re-opening.

- Rosedale Center (@RosedaleCenter) May 28, 2020

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin The Athletic lays off 8 percent of staff 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus A

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XXXII. UMN CUTS TIES WITH MINNEAPOLIS POLICE IN LIGHT OF GEORGE FLOYD CASE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 346 words

Byline: Matthew Guerry

Highlight: The University of Minnesota will no longer contract with the Minneapolis Police Department for support services following the death of George Floyd. City and university police forces in the past would work together during large-scale events like football games, concerts and ceremonies. But the university will no longer look to the department for help in [...]

Body

The University of Minnesota will no longer contract with the Minneapolis Police Department for support services following the death of George Floyd.

City and university police forces in the past would work together during large-scale events like football games, concerts and ceremonies. But the university will no longer look to the department for help in those cases, President Joan Gabel said in a letter published online late Wednesday.

Instead, Gabel wrote, university police at the Twin Cities campus will limit their involvement with Minneapolis police to joint patrols and investigations that "directly enhance the safety of our community or that allow us to investigate and apprehend those who put our students, faculty and staff at risk."

Also scrapped are agreements with the Minneapolis police for specialized services such as K-9 explosive detection.

"Our hearts are broken after watching the appalling video capturing the actions of Minneapolis Police Department officers against (Floyd) leading to his tragic death," Gabel said in a letter posted to Twitter.

"University students, staff, and faculty are day-to-day participants in the life of every community in this state, and we must act when our neighbors are in pain," she continued.

The decision comes days after a video circulated online of a Minneapolis police officer kneeling on the black man's neck as he lay prone on the ground. The footage has triggered investigations into Floyd's eventual death Monday night and sparked demonstrations that in some cases turned violent.

Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin and three other officers involved in the incident - Thomas Lane, Tou Thao and J. Alexander Kueng - were fired as the investigations continue.

UMN cuts ties with Minneapolis police in light of George Floyd case

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Former Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin charged with murder in death of George Floyd, arrested by BCA

ARTICLE XXXIII. FORMER MINNEAPOLIS OFFICER DEREK CHAUVIN CHARGED WITH MURDER IN DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD, ARRESTED BY BCA

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1951 words

Byline: Sarah Horner

Highlight: Charges have been filed against Derek Chauvin, who was arrested earlier Friday by the BCA.

Body

The Minneapolis police officer involved in the death of George Floyd was charged Friday by the Hennepin County attorney with third-degree murder and manslaughter.

The charging decision came after days of protests and violent rioting across the Twin Cities. Much of the destruction centered around the police department's third precinct on East Lake Street in Minneapolis. Protesters also camped out in front of Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman's house clamoring for justice and prosecution of the officers involved.

Speaking Friday, Freeman said he was not "insensitive" to the protests and riots across the Twin Cities in the days since Floyd's death. He said he and investigators worked as quickly as they could to reach the decision. Additional and more severe charges could follow, he said.

"We have now been able to put together the evidence we need. Even as late as yesterday afternoon we didn't have all we needed. We have now found it and we felt the responsibility to charge it as soon (as we could)," Freeman said.

FREEMAN: MORE CHARGES MAY COME

The other three Minneapolis officers at the scene Monday when Floyd died have not been charged. But Freeman said he expected criminal complaints against them to be forthcoming. He would not say what those charges might be.

All four officers were fired from the Minneapolis Police Department earlier this week.

Officer Derek Chauvin was seen on video taken by a bystander pinning Floyd to the ground with his knee to Floyd's neck for several minutes. Floyd is seen handcuffed and lying face-down while he pleads: "Please. I can't breathe."

SAME CHARGES AS THOSE BROUGHT AGAINST NOOR

Former Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin charged with murder in death of George Floyd, arrested by BCA

The charges against Chauvin are the same as those brought against former Minneapolis police officer Mohamed Noor in the death of Justine Damond in 2017. Though in that case, it took several months for a charging decisions to arrive.

That case lacked the bystander's video of the incident, Freeman said, which this one has, as well as other evidence. Besides the video, there is evidence includes body-camera footage worn by officers at the scene, statements from witnesses and preliminary findings produced by the Hennepin County Medical Examiner on Floyd's death.

Those findings indicate that the officers' restraints, as well as a pre-existing medical condition Floyd apparently had and "potential intoxicants" in his system all appear to have contributed to his death.

The charging document also notably states that Chauvin kept his knee pinned to Floyd's neck for nearly three minutes after he became unresponsive, even after a fellow officer, who was restraining Floyd elsewhere, suggested they roll Floyd to his side.

CRIMINAL COMPLAINT GIVES ACCOUNT OF WHAT LED TO ARREST

According to the criminal complaint, on Monday police were called to Cups Food convenience store at Chicago Avenue and E. 38th Street after a report of someone trying to pass a counterfeit bill. They found Floyd and two others parked nearby in a car.

Two officers - identified in the charges as Officer Lane and J.A. Kueng - approached the vehicle. Lane pulled out a gun, pointed it at Floyd, who was in the driver's seat, and told him to show his hands. When Floyd put his hands on the steering wheel, the officer returned his gun to his holster, according to the complaint.

[Floyd was then pulled out of the car and arrested, at which time he "actively resisted being handcuffed," the complaint said.

But then he became "compliant" and walked with the two officers to a nearby sidewalk, where they sat him down, asked for his name and ID as well as whether he was "on anything," and told him why he was being arrested.

The tone shifted when they stood up and began walking him to a squad car, the complaint said. Floyd apparently "stiffened up, fell to the ground and told the officers he was claustrophobic."

MORE: Read the criminal complaint filed against former Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin

CHAUVIN, PARTNER ARRIVE AT SCENE

That's when Chauvin and his partner, Tou Cha, arrived in a separate squad car.

The officers reportedly continued to make "several attempts" to get Floyd into the squad car but he wouldn't cooperate, according to the complaint. Instead he repeatedly fell down, said he wouldn't get in the car and refused to stand still.

At that time - while Floyd was standing near the car - Floyd began saying he couldn't breathe, prompting Chauvin to go around to the passenger side of the squad to try and get him inside, according to the complaint.

Former Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin charged with murder in death of George Floyd, arrested by BCA

Chauvin then pulled Floyd out of the squad at about 8:18 p.m. Floyd went down to the ground "face-down and still hand-cuffed." The complaint did not clarify whether Chauvin took him down or he went down on his own.

Lane and Kueng then held down his back and legs while Chauvin placed his left knee into Floyd's head and neck as Floyd continually said "I can't breathe," "please" and "mama."

None of the officers moved from their positions while Floyd pleaded, the complaint said.

'NO. STAYING PUT WHERE WE GOT HIM.'

At one point, Lane asked "Should we roll him on his side," but Chauvin said: "No, staying put where we got him," the complaint said.

Lane expressed concern about "excited delirium," but Chauvin was resolute, saying, "that's why we have him on his stomach," the complaint said.

At 8:24 p.m. Floyd reportedly stopped moving, according to video footage, the complaint said. A minute later he stopped breathing or speaking.

That's when Lane said again he wanted to roll Floyd to his side to check for a pulse, which couldn't be found, according to the complaint. Nearly three more minutes passed until emergency responders arrived and Chauvin removed his knee from Floyd's neck.

Floyd was pronounced dead at Hennepin County Medical Center a short time later.

MEDICAL EXAMINER: OFFICER CONDUCT, MEDICAL CONDITION, POSSIBLE 'INTOXICANTS' CONTRIBUTORS IN DEATH

The medical examiner still has to conduct a complete autopsy. But preliminary findings indicate it was a combination of the police restraint, Floyd's pre-existing medical condition, and "potential intoxicants" in his system that contributed to his death, the complaint said.

Floyd's health conditions include coronary artery disease and hypertensive heart disease. The findings do not indicate traumatic asphyxia or strangulation caused his death, according to the complaint.

Chauvin had his knee of Floyd's neck for eight minutes and 46 seconds, nearly three minutes of which were after Floyd had gone unresponsive, the complaint said.

"Police are trained that this kind of a restraint with a subject in a prone position is inherently dangerous," the complaint said.

CHAUVIN TAKEN INTO CUSTODY BY BCA

Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington announced Chauvin's arrest on Friday following a news conference with Gov. Tim Walz. Chauvin was booked into the Ramsey County jail.

Harrington said he learned of the arrest as he was walking out of the earlier media briefing. Reporters were asked to return and Harrington made a brief statement.

Former Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin charged with murder in death of George Floyd, arrested by BCA

During the news conference, Harrington, a former officer and St. Paul police chief, described Floyd's death as "murder."

"We'll call it a murder," he said. "That's what it looked like to me."

OTHER HIGH PROFILE POLICE-INVOLVED FATAL INCIDENTS

There have been several high profile fatal incidents involving police in the Twin Cities in recent years.

On Nov. 15, 2015, Jamar Clark, 24, a black man, was shot in the head after an encounter with Minneapolis police officers Mark Ringgenberg and Dustin Schwarze on the city's North Side, sparking weeks of protest. Clark was unarmed. No charges were brought against the officers. According to the investigation, Ringgenberg felt Clark's hand on his gun after he took him to the ground and told Schwarze, his partner, to shoot. Schwarze told investigators he warned Clark to let go of Ringgenberg's gun before he fired at him.

Minnesota lawmakers pressed to make changes after Floyd Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest On July 6, 2016 Philando Castile, a black man, was shot during a traffic stop in Falcon Heights by Jeronimo Yanez, a St. Anthony police officer. Yanez was charged by Ramsey County Attorney John Choi with second-degree manslaughter and two counts of dangerous discharge of a firearm. A jury found Yanez not guilty of the charges.

And, on July 15, 2017, Damond, a white Australian native was fatally shot by Minneapolis police officer Noor after she'd called 911, reporting an assault. Noor was convicted of second-degree manslaughter and third-degree murder. Noor is currently serving a 12-year prison sentence.

RAMSEY COUNTY ATTORNEY: CASE WILL COME DOWN TO CAUSATION

Choi commended his colleague across the river for reaching the "lightning speed" decision, saying it was what the community needed. He added that, in contrast to other officer-involved fatalities, which took months to charge, this case lent itself to a faster decision.

That's because those cases involved scenarios where officers claimed justification for their actions based on the law that allows officers to use deadly force when they fear for their life or someone else's, he said.

"The person who stands accused here can't really use those defenses because you can't argue, in my opinion, that (Chauvin's) or the life of others or harm or substantial harm to him or others was present based upon the video," he said.

That leaves the most likely defense as that of causation, Choi said. The argument may be that other factors - Floyd's medical condition, medical drugs or alcohol, maybe something else - caused his death, not the officer's actions.

Further, Choi said he trusted that Freeman's office charged the case as aggressively as it could for the time-being, noting that more serious charges - such as second-degree murder - could come later if the investigation warrants.

Former Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin charged with murder in death of George Floyd, arrested by BCA

He acknowledged that there are "lots of different opinions" about third-degree murder, an unusual charge that in this case would likely involve proving Chauvin had a "depraved mind" at the time, but advised people to remember that Hennepin County has proven success with it from Noor's case.

He added that he felt personally relieved that a charging decision of any kind came Friday, but that much work remains ahead for the community.

"My hopes is the violence and a lot of the things that have come as a result of the anger will stop and that all of us in our community can now try to better understand why the civil rest unfolded," Choi said. "I am sure there are people in our community who are very upset about the civil unrest, and rightfully so, but I think we need to work harder and ... reach deeper ... to understand and comprehend what is going on and why there is so much deep-seated frustration and try to see this from a history context about racism and the way institutions have been built and designed to negatively impact, especially African Americans, and other communities of color.

"I think we all need to reflect on that, and then we need to start rebuilding," Choi said.

Dave Orrick contributed to this story.

MORE: Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin's background detailed; had nearly 20 complaints and two letters of reprimand

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Derek Chauvin

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XXXIV. TRUMP TRIES A NEW RESPONSE AFTER GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1155 wordsByline: Jill Colvin, Colleen LongHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - It was the kind of personal statement expected from a president in response to the disturbing video of a black man gasping for help as a white policeman pinned him to the street by the neck. But it was a very different tone for President Donald Trump, who has often been silent in the face of white-on-black violence and has a long history of defending police.Body

WASHINGTON - It was the kind of personal statement expected from a president in response to the disturbing video of a black man gasping for help as a white policeman pinned him to the street by the neck. But it was a very different tone for President Donald Trump, who has often been silent in the face of white-on-black violence and has a long history of defending police.

"I feel very, very badly," Trump said Thursday of George Floyd's death while handcuffed and in the custody of Minneapolis police. "That's a very shocking sight."

Once more likely to hew to the "blue lives matter" mantra, Trump and his allies are questioning an officer's conduct and calling for justice for Floyd. But some activists doubt that Trump has suddenly evolved on the issue of police brutality and instead see election-year political calculations.

"This is the first race-tinged case that I've ever heard him address" as president, said the Rev. Al Sharpton, a civil rights activist and Trump critic who has known the president for decades. "So therefore he cannot be upset when people feel that it's empty words because it is so out of character."

White House spokesman Judd Deere said Trump was taking the death seriously.

"This has nothing to do with politics and is only about making sure justice is done, and anyone who suggests otherwise is only seeking to sow division and ignore the President's unwavering support for the African-American community," Deere said, citing Trump's support for criminal justice reform legislation, Opportunity Zones and historically black colleges and universities.

Trump has been silent on a number of high-profile police-involved killings, including that of Stephon Clark, a black man shot by Sacramento police in 2018.

Trump tries a new response after George Floyd's death

"This is something that is a local matter and that's something that we feel should be left up to the local authorities," then-White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said at the time.

He has never addressed the 2014 death of Eric Garner, who was placed in a chokehold by police trying to arrest him for selling loose cigarettes. Video of the encounter was viewed millions of times online and Garner's dying words, "I can't breathe," became a rallying cry for the Black Lives Matter movement. Trump has, however, invoked those words on several occasions to mock political rivals, even bringing his hands to his neck for dramatic effect.

Trump has a long history of injecting himself into racially sensitive cases. In 1989, he took out full-page newspaper ads calling for the death penalty for the Central Park Five, five young men of color who were wrongly convicted of a brutal assault on a jogger. Trump has never apologized, telling reporters last year: "You have people on both sides of that."

Trump also spent years railing against NFL quarterback Colin Kaepernick for kneeling during the national anthem to protest racial injustice and police brutality. And he has even appeared to advocate for the rougher treatment of people in police custody, speaking dismissively of the police practice of shielding the heads of handcuffed suspects as they are being placed in patrol cars.

But Trump's tone has changed in recent weeks as he has repeatedly expressed dismay at footage of the killing of Ahmaud Arbery, the 25-year-old black man fatally shot in February in Georgia while jogging.

"You know, my heart goes out to the parents and the family and the friends," he told reporters this month. "It's a heartbreaking thing."

The president has notably left open the possibility of some other explanation, saying: "it could be something that we didn't see on tape."

Trump and his allies have been even clearer on the death of Floyd, who can be heard and seen on tape pleading that he couldn't breathe before he slowly stops talking and moving.

Trump "was very upset when he saw that video," White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany said Thursday. "He wants justice to be served."

Trump's conservative allies also rallied to the cause.

Fox News host Sean Hannity said he is "a big supporter of law enforcement," but expressed outrage Wednesday night, telling his audience: "The lack of training here is breathtaking."

"It defies common sense. It defies training. It defies arrest policies and procedures. There was no resistance," echoed Bernie Kerik, the former New York police commissioner pardoned by Trump.

"We got to get to the very bottom of how this poor individual was treated, and the death of him on the video itself is shocking from what I saw," said Republican House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy.

Even conservative radio host Rush Limbaugh, who once called Black Lives Matter a "terrorist group," said Thursday that Floyd's death was totally "unjustified" and he was "so mad."

The outpouring comes as the Trump campaign has sought to chip into the advantage Democrats have with black voters. The campaign hopes either to win enough black support to keep pivotal states such as

Trump tries a new response after George Floyd's death

Pennsylvania, Michigan and Wisconsin in play or minimize enthusiasm for Democratic rival Joe Biden. There could be a small window after Biden last week told a prominent black radio host that African Americans who back Trump "ain't black," a gaffe he later said he regretted.

Trump and his allies have seized on that and other Biden statements, even though Biden, who served as vice president under the nation's first black president, remains deeply popular among black voters, who helped him secure the Democratic nomination.

Indeed, a recent Fox News poll found that just 14% of African Americans who are registered to vote have a favorable opinion of Trump, versus 75% who have a favorable view of Biden.

Chris White, the longtime director of the Detroit Coalition Against Police Brutality, questioned the sincerity of Republicans' response to the deaths of Arbery and Floyd. The White House and Department of Justice have long had the power to address these issues.

"Any time we hear politicians speaking about dealing with police brutality in the middle of election year, it's just meaningless rhetoric that has a hollow promise," he said.

Sharpton credited both the magnitude of outrage in response to Floyd's death as well as the upcoming election for the changed approach. But he doubted many black voters will be swayed with an approach they may see as too little, too late.

"It's like a father that misses a kid's graduation of high school, graduation of college," he said. "He can't be upset when the kid looks at him suspiciously when he's there when he graduates with his Ph.D."

Associated Press writer Kat Stafford in Detroit contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE XXXV. POLICE ACROSS US SPEAK OUT AGAINST GEORGE FLOYD CUSTODY DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 937 words

Byline: Stefanie Dazio

Highlight: LOS ANGELES (AP) - Murder. Brutality. Reprehensible. Indefensible. Police nationwide, in unequivocal and unprecedented language, have condemned the actions of Minneapolis police in the custody death of a handcuffed black man who cried for help as an officer knelt on his neck, pinning him to the pavement for at least eight minutes.

Body

LOS ANGELES - Murder. Brutality. Reprehensible. Indefensible. Police nationwide, in unequivocal and unprecedented language, have condemned the actions of Minneapolis police in the custody death of a handcuffed black man who cried for help as an officer knelt on his neck, pinning him to the pavement for at least eight minutes.

But some civil rights advocates say their denunciations are empty words without meaningful reform behind them.

Authorities say George Floyd was detained Monday because he matched the description of someone who tried to pay with a counterfeit bill at a convenience store, and the 46-year-old resisted arrest. A bystander's disturbing video shows Officer Derek Chauvin, who is white, kneeling on Floyd's neck, even as Floyd begs for air and slowly stops talking and moving.

"There is no need to see more video," Chattanooga, Tennessee, Police Chief David Roddy tweeted Wednesday. "There no need to wait to see how 'it plays out'. There is no need to put a knee on someone's neck for NINE minutes. There IS a need to DO something. If you wear a badge and you don't have an issue with this ... turn it in."

The reaction from some law enforcement stands in stark contrast to their muted response or support for police after other in-custody fatalities. Sheriffs and police chiefs have strongly criticized the Minneapolis officer on social media and praised the city's police chief for his quick dismissal of four officers at the scene. Some even called for them to be criminally charged.

"I am deeply disturbed by the video of Mr. Floyd being murdered in the street with other officers there letting it go on," Polk County, Georgia, Sheriff Johnny Moats wrote on Facebook. "I can assure everyone, me or any of my deputies will never treat anyone like that as long as I'm Sheriff. This kind of brutality is terrible and it needs to stop. All Officers involved need to be arrested and charged immediately. Praying for the family."

Police across US speak out against George Floyd custody death

Typically, police call for patience and calm in the wake of a use of force. They are reluctant to weigh in on episodes involving another agency, often citing ongoing investigations or due process.

"Not going hide behind 'not being there,'" tweeted San Jose Police, California, Chief Eddie Garcia. "I'd be one of the first to condemn anyone had I seen similar happen to one of my brother/ sister officers. What I saw happen to George Floyd disturbed me and is not consistent with the goal of our mission. The act of one, impacts us all."

But Gloria Browne-Marshall, a civil rights attorney and professor at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice, said she wouldn't be a "cheerleader" for a "handful" of chiefs who harshly decried the officers' behavior.

"Any minute progress is seen as miraculous because so little has been done for so long," she said. "It's nothing close to progress or what outrage would be taking place if it was a white man as the victim of this assault."

Melina Abdullah, co-founder of Black Lives Matter in Los Angeles, said she wasn't "particularly moved" by the relatively few police who voiced outrage.

Abdullah said the three other officers who witnessed Chauvin's actions and did not intervene contributed to a long-standing system of police racism and oppression against people of color.

"We've got to remember that it was not just Officer Chauvin who was sitting on George Floyd's neck," she said.

Abdullah and hundreds of others protested what she called Floyd's lynching on Wednesday night. Some blocked lanes of a freeway and shattered windows of California Highway Patrol cruisers.

Minneapolis is bracing for more violence after days of civil unrest, with burned buildings, looted stores and angry graffiti demanding justice. The governor on Thursday called in the National Guard. On Thursday night, protesters torched a Minneapolis police station that the department was forced to abandon.

The heads of the Los Angeles and Chicago departments - both of which have been rocked before by police brutality scandals - addressed Floyd's death and its potential effect on race relations between law enforcement and communities of color.

Even the New York Police Department weighed in. Eric Garner died in the city in 2014 after he was placed in a chokehold by police and uttered the same words Floyd did: "I can't breathe."

It took city officials five years to fire the officer, and no criminal or federal charges were brought.

"What we saw in Minnesota was deeply disturbing. It was wrong," NYPD Commissioner Dermot Shea wrote Thursday. "We must take a stand and address it. We must come together, condemn these actions and reinforce who we are as members of the NYPD. This is not acceptable ANYWHERE."

Police across US speak out against George Floyd custody death

Before he was commissioner, Shea spearheaded the NYPD's shift to community policing that moved away from a more confrontational style favored by other commissioners after Garner's death.

Harris County, Texas, Sheriff Ed Gonzalez, who also spoke out online, told The Associated Press that law enforcement agencies keep promising reforms in the wake of fatalities, but they are "not delivering it on a consistent basis."

"When bad things happen in our profession, we need to be able to call it like it is," he said. "We keep thinking that the last one will be the last one, and then another one surfaces." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

In George Floyd's death, a police technique leads to a too-familiar tragedy

ARTICLE XXXVI. IN GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH, A POLICE TECHNIQUE LEADS TO A TOO-FAMILIAR TRAGEDY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1290 words

Byline: Neil MacFarquhar

Highlight: In George Floyd's Death, a Police Technique Leads to a Too-Familiar Tragedy

Body

In the cellphone video of George Floyd's death, the arresting officer, Derek Chauvin, keeps a knee pressed on the back of his neck for about eight minutes until Floyd stops speaking or moving.

"You don't have to sit there with your knee on his neck," exclaimed a bystander off-camera, addressing the officer in language salted with expletives. "He is enjoying that. You are. You are enjoying that. You could have put him in the car by now."

For police trainers and criminologists, the episode appears to be a textbook case of why many police departments around the country have sought to ban outright or at least limit the use of chokeholds or other neck restraints in recent years: The practices have led too often to high-profile deaths.

"It is a technique that we don't use as much anymore because of the vulnerability," said Mylan Masson, a former police officer who ran a training program for the Minneapolis police for 15 years until 2016. "We try to stay away from the neck as much as possible."

The full details of what happened have yet to emerge, in particular what police body cameras might show about any altercation between Floyd and Chauvin, 44, a 19-year veteran of the department who has since been fired. Department records indicate, however, that the Minneapolis police have not entirely abandoned the use of neck restraints, even if the method used by Chauvin is no longer part of police training.

The manual of the Minneapolis Police Department states that neck restraints and chokeholds are basically reserved for when an officer feels caught in a life-or-death situation. There was no apparent threat of that nature in Floyd's detention.

Experts viewing the footage suggest that it was more likely a case of "street justice," when a police officer seeks to punish a suspect by inflicting pain for something done to the officer during the arrest.

In George Floyd's death, a police technique leads to a too-familiar tragedy

Criminologists viewing the video said the knee restraint not only put dangerous pressure on the back of the neck but also kept Floyd lying on his stomach for too long. Both positions - the knee on the neck and lying face down - run the risk of cutting off someone's oxygen supply.

"Keeping Mr. Floyd in the face down position with his hands cuffed behind his back is probably what killed him," said Seth Stoughton, a former police officer who studies policing and is a professor at the University of South Carolina School of Law. Police training started emphasizing avoiding that prone position about 20 years ago, he said.

In terms of chokeholds, those departments that still allow them usually stress using a kind of wrestling hold, in which the officer wraps his arm around the person's neck and applies pressure, he said. The idea is to subdue them as quickly as possible in order to get them into a squad car, not to leave them in that possibly deadly position for minute after minute as happened with Floyd.

In addition, applying the knee to the back of the neck rather than to the sides risks killing or seriously injuring someone by cutting off the air supply or damaging the cervical spine and other delicate bones in the neck, Stoughton said. No department permits such a technique in ordinary circumstances, he and others said.

The manual for the Minneapolis police calls a chokehold a "deadly force option" and neck restraints a "non-deadly force option." Neck restraints involve compressing one or both sides of a person's neck with an arm or a leg without cutting off the air flow through the trachea. A chokehold is meant to cut off someone's air supply if the officer feels his life is threatened, the manual says.

The manual further explains that the conscious neck restraint may be used against a subject who is "actively resisting," while rendering the person unconscious should be limited to someone who is aggressive or "for lifesaving purposes."

John Elder, a spokesman for the Minneapolis Police Department, did not respond to a query about whether the knee restraint used by Chauvin corresponded to those guidelines.

Many police departments, including the one in Minneapolis, stopped teaching the knee restraint technique and also sought to limit the use of chokeholds after the highly publicized death of Eric Garner in 2014 at the hands of the New York Police Department.

Garner famously gasped "I can't breathe" 11 times while lying face down on the sidewalk, a sentence that Floyd also said several times. In the case of Garner, investigators determined that the officer who wrestled him to the ground was using a banned chokehold.

The medical examiner ruled Garner's death a homicide caused by the compression of his neck from a "chokehold" and the compression of his chest held on the ground in a prone position. Officer Daniel Pantaleo, who held Garner in a chokehold, was fired but not charged, inciting protests nationwide.

In Minneapolis, the law enforcement training course that Masson directed at Hennepin Technical College stopped teaching the knee restraint technique to aspiring police officers after the Garner case, she said, adding that veteran officers should also have learned of the change.

In George Floyd's death, a police technique leads to a too-familiar tragedy

Students in the two-year degree program required of all prospective officers, she said, were instead taught to apply pressure across the upper back. "As soon as the threat is gone, you stop the force, whatever it might be," she said.

Department records, however, show that such restraint techniques have continued to be used in Minneapolis, although they are sometimes called by different names. In 2012, there were 79 occurrences and in 2013, there were 69. That dropped to 40 in 2018 and was back up to 56 last year. The technique was used against African Americans far more than other other groups, the records show.

Carl Takei, a senior staff lawyer at the American Civil Liberties Union who focuses on police practices, said departments that still allowed chokeholds try to differentiate between cutting off the flow of blood, which renders someone unconscious, and cutting off the flow of oxygen, which is deadly.

"There is still a significant risk that attempting to cut off the flow of blood will also cut off the flow of air," he said, which was why the ACLU opposed the technique. "Chokeholds should be banned across the board."

Restraint techniques have led to various officers being sent to prison around the country in recent years after being convicted of using excessive force.

The fact that Chauvin kept applying pressure when Floyd was no longer struggling made it appear to be a case of an officer trying to punish a suspect for doing something that the police did not like - which could include resisting arrest, spitting or insulting an officer, experts said. If it was a form of "street justice," that is considered a form of bullying that police academies also instruct against.

"It is teaching someone a lesson, next time you will think twice about what you do," said Philip Stinson, a former police officer turned criminal justice professor at Bowling Green State University.

Andy Skoogman, the executive director of the Minnesota Chiefs of Police Association, said the group's 300 members were appalled by the tactic the officer used in the Floyd case and the "lack of empathy" he showed.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest "Bottom line: Any type of use-of-force technique must stop when compliance is achieved," he said, adding that he did not know of any police department in the state that trained in that technique.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Derek Chauvin, former Minneapolis officer, charged with murder in death of George Floyd

ARTICLE XXXVII. DEREK CHAUVIN, FORMER MINNEAPOLIS OFFICER, CHARGED WITH MURDER IN DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 185 words

Byline: Sarah Horner

Highlight: The Minneapolis police officer involved in the death of George Floyd was charged Friday with third-degree murder and manslaughter. The Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman said his office made the charging decision as fast as possible, and that additional or more severe charges could be coming as the investigation continues. The former officer, Derek Chauvin, [...]

Body

The Minneapolis police officer involved in the death of George Floyd was charged Friday with third-degree murder and manslaughter.

The Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman said his office made the charging decision as fast as possible, and that additional or more severe charges could be coming as the investigation continues. The former officer, Derek Chauvin, was arrested earlier Friday by the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension.

The other three Minneapolis officers who were at the scene Monday when Floyd died have not yet been charged, but Freeman said he expects those charges yet to come. He did not say what kind of charges are being considered for those officers. All four were fired from the Minneapolis Police Department earlier this week.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XXXVIII. TWIN CITIES ATHLETES, COACHES, TEAMS WEIGH IN ON GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH, AFTERMATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 949 wordsByline: Betsy Helfand

Highlight: Community leaders, activists and friends of George Floyd gathered Friday afternoon at Minneapolis City Hall to pay tribute and demand justice after Floyd died in police custody earlier this week in Minneapolis. Among them was Timberwolves star Karl-Anthony Towns wearing a "Black Lives Matter," hat as he showed his support. Towns is one of many [...]

Body

Community leaders, activists and friends of George Floyd gathered Friday afternoon at Minneapolis City Hall to pay tribute and demand justice after Floyd died in police custody earlier this week in Minneapolis.

Among them was Timberwolves star Karl-Anthony Towns wearing a "Black Lives Matter," hat as he showed his support. Towns is one of many athletes in the Twin Cities who has been visible in the days after Floyd's death. Many athletes, coaches and teams have spoken up as riots and protests have engulfed the Twin Cities in the days following Floyd's death on Monday.

Floyd, a black man, died after a white Minneapolis police officer, Derek Chauvin - who has since been fired and arrested - knelt on his neck while Floyd repeatedly told him that he could not breathe. Video of the encounter has circulated widely on both the news and social media and has sparked anger and sadness around the country.

Towns' teammate Josh Okogie, who has been vocal on his social media platforms in recent days, also reportedly was in attendance at Friday's press conference.

"I'm a big believer in being proactive, not reactive. It's cool to have justice for people after they die, and it's cool to punish cops accordingly. But instead of reacting to each situation, we need to look the real problem in the eye and stop any further unnecessary killings," Okogie tweeted this week. "Regardless of your race, background, and your upbringing ... no human's life is more precious than the next. These killings should not be normalized."

Regardless of your race, background, and your upbringing.. no human's life is more precious than the next. These killings should not be normalized...

- Josh Okogie (@CallMe_NonStop) May 27, 2020

Twin Cities athletes, coaches, teams weigh in on George Floyd's death, aftermath

The Timberwolves and Lynx released a statement on Thursday, sharing their "deepest sympathy" with Floyd's family and vowing to "work tirelessly to influence change, encourage healing, and promote thoughtful action as we move forward."

Timberwolves coach Ryan Saunders posted a transcript of some of Floyd's last words with an impassioned plea on Instagram for people to look within themselves to "confront explicit or implicit biases."

"We must change how we view this horrific death, change the way we interact with people and change the way we let comments slide," Saunders wrote on Instagram. "Enough is enough. Silence and complacency only add fuel to the fire. We must be better. George Floyd deserved better."

Gophers wide receiver Rashod Bateman also posted a powerful tribute on Twitter along with a black-and-white photo of himself, head buried in his hand.

"My name is Rashod Bateman. I am an African Male from South Georgia. I never thought in a million years I would be scared to walk outside," the caption read. "I pray that we all wake up and start loving each other the correct way and stop taking each other (sic) lives. No matter the color, we are all one."

My name is Rashod Bateman. I'm an African Male from South Georgia. I never thought in a million years I would be scared to walk outside. I pray that we all wake up and start loving each other the correct way and stop taking each other lives. No matter the color, we are all one. pic.twitter.com/KaW3AWpNJP

- Rashod Bateman (@R_bateman2) May 26, 2020

Multiple Minnesota United players have spoken up on social media, too, with defender Michael Boxall tweeting Tuesday that "Unemployment doesn't seem like a fitting punishment for murder" in a quote-tweet of Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey announcing that all four officers involved in Floyd's death had been terminated. Only Chauvin has since been taken into custody. Midfielder Marlon Hairston tweeted it was "hard to sleep" through everything that had been going on while wishing safety for everyone. Teammate Ike Opara also sent out a tweet this week, telling people they could choose to be blind about injustices, broken systems and privileges or choose to educate themselves and overcome biases.

My heart breaks for our city, but especially for my African American brothers and sisters, who I know feel this on a level I can't possibly understand. Please know I am with you. I hurt with and for you. WE must do better. WE must be better. May God pour out His mercy and grace such that we are better.

A post shared by Kirk Cousins (@kirkcousins) on May 29, 2020 at 1:09pm PDT

And Vikings quarterback Kirk Cousins also chimed in on social media, posting an Instagram with a photo of him hand in hand with his teammates.

"My heart breaks for our city, but especially for my African American brothers and sisters, who I know feel this on a level I can't possibly understand. Please know I am with you. I hurt with and for you. WE must do better. WE must be better. May God pour out His mercy and grace such that we are better," Cousins wrote.

The Vikings, in a statement, said the organization was "deeply saddened by the loss of life" that occurred Monday near U.S. Bank Stadium, and the Wild's statement struck a similar tone, expressing sadness and the importance of everybody in the community feeling safe and protected, as did the Twins, who vowed to keep working with partners in the community to "move forward with courage, free of hate and thoughtful in our path, to create the change we want to see on the world - one, all-inclusive Twins Territory, where everyone is protected, safe and welcome."

Twin Cities athletes, coaches, teams weigh in on George Floyd's death, aftermath

George Floyd should be breathing right now. We have a lot of progress to make. A lot. Remember his name. Remember what happened.

- Rocco Baldelli (@roccodbaldelli) May 27, 2020

"George Floyd should be breathing right now," Twins manager Rocco Baldelli tweeted earlier in the week. "We have a lot of progress to make. A lot. Remember his name. Remember what happened."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Minneapolis police precinct abandoned, torched; on Twitter, Trump threatens 'thugs'

ARTICLE XXXIX. MINNEAPOLIS POLICE PRECINCT ABANDONED, TORCHED; ON TWITTER, TRUMP THREATENS 'THUGS'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1557 words

Byline: Nick Woltman

Highlight: Protesters overran and set aflame the 3rd Precinct headquarters of the Minneapolis Police Department late Thursday night. Officers appeared to abandon the building at Lake Street and Minnehaha Avenue about 10 p.m., after protesters pulled down a wire fence that surrounded the precinct. Flames overtook the building's front entrance about half an hour later. Minnehaha [...]

Body

Protesters overran and set aflame the 3rd Precinct headquarters of the Minneapolis Police Department late Thursday night.

Officers appeared to abandon the building at Lake Street and Minnehaha Avenue about 10 p.m., after protesters pulled down a wire fence that surrounded the precinct.

Flames overtook the building's front entrance about half an hour later. Minnehaha Lake Wine & Spirits across the street was also burning, after being looted of most of its contents over the past 24 hours.

The third precinct and Minnehaha Lake Wine & Spirits in Minneapolis are now on fire. pic.twitter.com/UIM1U6ZkO8

- Nick Woltman (@nickwoltman) May 29, 2020

There appeared to be no remaining police presence in the area as protesters celebrated with fireworks in the intersection of Minnehaha and Lake.

A police spokesman confirmed late Thursday that staff had evacuated the 3rd Precinct station, the focus of many of the protests, "in the interest of the safety of our personnel" shortly after 10 p.m.

The protesters are demanding change after the death of George Floyd, a handcuffed black man who died while in police custody two miles from the 3rd Precinct headquarters. Four officers have been fired, including one seen on video with his knee of Floyd's neck as he gasped for breath, and state and federal investigations are underway.

Hundreds of demonstrators returned Thursday to the South Minneapolis neighborhood at the center of the violence, where the evening scene veered between an angry protest and a street party. At one point, a band playing in a parking lot across from the 3rd Precinct broke into a punk version of Bob Marley's "Redemption Song." Nearby, demonstrators carried clothing mannequins from a looted Target and threw them onto a burning car.

Minneapolis police precinct abandoned, torched; on Twitter, Trump threatens 'thugs'

As night fell, a handful of demonstrators began tearing down the wire fence around the precinct, which that had been erected overnight to keep the crowd at bay.

They then broke through the boards that covered the broken windows of the building's front entrance. This drew a swift response from the officers inside, who fired tear gas and less-lethal projectiles at the crowd from the roof.

Undeterred, some in the group continued to dismantle the fence until only a few sections around the parking lot remained standing.

About 10 p.m., officers in riot gear could be seen loading onto squad vehicles and fleeing the building.

Elsewhere in Minneapolis, thousands of peaceful demonstrators spent the afternoon marching through the streets calling for justice.

Floyd's death has deeply shaken Minneapolis and sparked protests in cities across the U.S. Local leaders have repeatedly urged demonstrators to avoid violence.

"Please stay home. Please do not come here to protest. Please keep the focus on George Floyd, on advancing our movement and on preventing this from ever happening again," tweeted St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter, who is black.

Erika Atson, 20, was among thousands of people who gathered outside government offices in downtown Minneapolis, where organizers had called a peaceful protest. Many protesters wore masks because of the coronavirus pandemic, but there were few attempts at social distancing.

Atson, who is black, described seeing her 14- and 11-year-old brothers tackled by Minneapolis police years ago because officers mistakenly presumed the boys had guns. She said she had been at "every single protest" since Floyd's death and worried about raising children who could be vulnerable in police encounters.

"We don't want to be here fighting against anyone. We don't want anyone to be hurt. We don't want to cause any damages," she said. "We just want the police officer to be held accountable."

Hennepin County Sheriff David Hutchinson said the rally had been peaceful and there had been no arrests by late evening.

Much of the Minneapolis violence occurred in the Longfellow neighborhood, where protesters converged on the precinct station of the police who arrested Floyd. In a strip mall across the street from the 3rd Precinct, the windows in nearly every business had been smashed, from the large Target store at one end to the Planet Fitness gym at the other. Only the 24-hour laundromat appeared to have escaped unscathed.

"WHY US?" demanded a large expanse of red graffiti scrawled on the wall of the Target. A Wendy's restaurant across the street was charred almost beyond recognition.

Minneapolis police precinct abandoned, torched; on Twitter, Trump threatens 'thugs'

Among the casualties of the overnight fires: a six-story building under construction that was to provide nearly 200 apartments of affordable housing.

Same view, roughly 18 hours apart. This was a six-story affordable housing complex under construction at 29th Street and 26th Avenue in Minneapolis, about a block from the third precinct. At its peak, the fire was twice as tall as the building itself. <pic.twitter.com/SS0fXdIvjQ>

- Nick Woltman (@nickwoltman) May 29, 2020

"We're burning our own neighborhood," said a distraught Deona Brown, a 24-year-old woman standing with a friend outside the precinct station, where a small group of protesters were shouting at a dozen or so stone-faced police officers in riot gear. "This is where we live, where we shop, and they destroyed it." No officers could be seen beyond the station.

"What that cop did was wrong, but I'm scared now," Brown said.

Others in the crowd saw something different in the wreckage.

Protesters destroyed property "because the system is broken," said a young man who identified himself only by his nickname, Cash, and who said he had been in the streets during the violence. He dismissed the idea that the destruction would hurt residents of the largely black neighborhood.

"They're making money off of us," he said angrily of the owners of the destroyed stores. He laughed when asked if he had joined in the looting or violence. "I didn't break anything."

The protests that began Wednesday night and extended into Thursday were more violent than Tuesday's, which included skirmishes between officers and protesters but no widespread property damage.

Mayor Jacob Frey appealed for calm but the city's response to the protests was quickly questioned as things started spiraling into violence.

"If the strategy was to keep residents safe - it failed," City Council Member Jeremiah Ellison, who is black, tweeted. "Prevent property damage - it failed." On Thursday, he urged police to leave the scene of the overnight violence, saying their presence brings people into the streets.

President Donald Trump weighed in shortly before midnight, tweeting, "I can't stand back & watch this happen to a great American City, Minneapolis." He also called the protesters "THUGS" and said either the "weak Radical Left Mayor" should bring the city under control "or I will send in the National Guard & get the job done right."

"Just spoke to Governor Tim Walz and told him that the Military is with him all the way. Any difficulty and we will assume control but, when the looting starts, the shooting starts," he added on Twitter.

UPDATE: Twitter adds 'glorifying violence' warning to Trump tweet about Minneapolis

But Eric Kowalczyk, a police captain in Baltimore during the Freddie Gray riots in 2015, generally supported the Minneapolis police strategy to avoid confrontations with protesters when possible, saying heavy-handed police responses are only met with more violence.

Minneapolis police precinct abandoned, torched; on Twitter, Trump threatens 'thugs'

"Nobody wants to see their city on fire, but at the same time, you don't want to see citizens injured by the very police department they are protesting," he said.

Protests have also spread to other U.S. cities. In New York City, protesters defied New York's coronavirus prohibition on public gatherings Thursday, clashing with police, while demonstrators blocked traffic in downtown Denver. A day earlier, demonstrators had taken to the streets in Los Angeles and Memphis.

In Louisville, Ky., police confirmed that at least seven people had been shot Thursday night as protesters demanded justice for Breonna Taylor, a black woman who was fatally shot by police in her home in March.

Amid the violence in Minneapolis, a man was found fatally shot Wednesday night near a pawnshop, possibly by the owner, authorities said.

Fire crews responded to about 30 intentionally set blazes, and multiple fire trucks were damaged by rocks and other projectiles, the fire department said. No one was hurt by the blazes.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest The city on Thursday released a transcript of the 911 call that brought police to the grocery store where Floyd was arrested. The caller described someone paying with a counterfeit bill, with workers rushing outside to find the man sitting on a van. The caller described the man as "awfully drunk and he's not in control of himself." Asked by the 911 operator whether the man was "under the influence of something," the caller said: "Something like that, yes. He is not acting right." Police said Floyd matched the caller's description of the suspect.

Associated Press writers Amy Forliti, Tim Sullivan, Steve Karnowski and Jeff Baenen in Minneapolis, and Gretchen Ehlke in Milwaukee contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XL. SHOTS FIRED DURING DENVER PROTEST OF GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 655 words

Byline: Thomas Peipert

Highlight: DENVER (AP) - Protesters swarmed Denver on Thursday, blocking traffic and smashing vehicles while running from gunfire and police tear gas after a demonstration against the death of a black man in Minneapolis police custody turned violent.

Body

DENVER - Protesters swarmed Denver on Thursday, blocking traffic and smashing vehicles while running from gunfire and police tear gas after a demonstration against the death of a black man in Minneapolis police custody turned violent.

Hundreds of demonstrators stood in the downtown streets and chanted as darkness fell outside the Colorado State Capitol, where protesters spray-painted graffiti and broke car windows. In other areas of downtown Denver, police in riot gear fired gas canisters, used rubber bullets and walked in a phalanx through the streets to drive protesters away. The protest briefly spilled over onto Interstate 25, blocking all lanes of traffic until police used tear gas to disperse the crowd.

The protests continued into the night, despite Denver Mayor Michael Hancock pleading for calm.

"I certainly understand everyone's frustration and sense of pain and disgust following the murder of George Floyd in Minneapolis," he said in a video posted on Twitter. "But I want to plead to everyone. Let's demonstrate, but let's demonstrate peacefully. Leave the weapons home."

Earlier in the protest, gunfire outside the state Capitol sent people running for cover. Gary Cutler, a spokesman for the Colorado State Patrol, said the shots were fired in a park across the street. Most of the protesters already had left the area and were marching downtown.

Cutler said the Capitol building was locked down, and everyone inside was safe. No injuries have been reported from the shots.

State Rep. Leslie Herod, who was protesting at the Capitol, tweeted, "We just got shot at." She later said, "We will not be deterred by this unspeakable act of violence."

Police spokesman Kurt Barnes said it's unclear if the protesters were being targeted, and no one has been arrested.

Shots fired during Denver protest of George Floyd's death

About six or seven shots were fired, he said.

Several hundred protesters had gathered to call for justice following the death of Floyd, who died in police custody in Minneapolis on Monday after an officer knelt on his neck for almost eight minutes. In footage recorded by a bystander, Floyd pleaded that he couldn't breathe.

Some among the Denver protesters carried signs reading "Black Lives Matter" and chanted, "Hey, hey. Ho, ho. Racist police got to go."

Aerial footage showed several protesters smashing the windows out of at least two vehicles parked outside the Capitol, and others spray-painted graffiti on the Capitol steps.

A cellphone video shot by protester Anabel Escobar, 29, showed a man on the hood of an SUV making its way through the crowd in front of the Capitol. The video showed the driver speeding up and then apparently trying to run the man over after he fell off the hood. The vehicle sped away as other protesters chased it. It was unclear if the man on the hood was injured.

Gov. Jared Polis said Thursday night he was "absolutely shocked" by the video.

"Coloradans are better than this," he said. "I share the immense anguish we all feel about the unjust murder of George Floyd. But let me be clear, senseless violence will never be healed by more violence."

As the protest started, The Denver Police Department tweeted a message from Chief Paul Pazen sending condolences to Floyd's family and saying the city's officers do not use the tactics employed by the Minneapolis officers.

He called that type of force "inexcusable."

Four Minneapolis police officers have been fired, and the mayor has called for the officer who knelt on Floyd's neck to be criminally charged.

The death has led to violent protests in Minneapolis and demonstrations in other cities, including Los Angeles. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Former Minneapolis nightclub owner saw 'overkill' in Derek Chauvin's reaction to black clientele

ARTICLE XLI. FORMER MINNEAPOLIS NIGHTCLUB OWNER SAW 'OVERKILL' IN DEREK CHAUVIN'S REACTION TO BLACK CLIENTELE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 610 words

Byline: Bernard Condon

Highlight: A white Minneapolis police officer and the black man he's charged with killing both worked as security guards at the same Latin nightclub as recently as last year, but its former owner says she's not sure if they knew each other. What she is certain of is how aggressive Officer Derek Chauvin became when the [...]

Body

A white Minneapolis police officer and the black man he's charged with killing both worked as security guards at the same Latin nightclub as recently as last year, but its former owner says she's not sure if they knew each other.

What she is certain of is how aggressive Officer Derek Chauvin became when the club hosted events that drew a mainly black clientele, responding to fights by taking out his mace and spraying the crowd, a tactic she told him was unjustified "overkill."

"He would mace everyone instead of apprehending the people who were fighting," said Maya Santamaria, former owner of El Nuevo Rodeo club on East Lake Street in Minneapolis. "He would call backup. The next thing you would know, there would five or six squad cars."

Chauvin became the focus of outrage and four days of street protests across the nation this week after he was seen on cellphone video kneeling on the neck of George Floyd for more than eight minutes during his arrest on suspicion of passing a counterfeit bill. Floyd died in custody and Chauvin was fired Tuesday and arrested Friday on charges of third-degree murder and manslaughter. The three other officers who took part in the arrest were also fired, and they remain under investigation.

While Chauvin's off-duty job at the El Nuevo Rodeo club stretched over 17 years until a few months ago, Floyd only started working there recently as a bouncer and only worked about a dozen events put on by "African American promoters."

Santamaria, who sold the venue within the past two months, said she doesn't believe the two men knew each other prior to their fateful encounter Monday night. If Chauvin had recognized Floyd, she said, "he might have given him a little more mercy."

Former Minneapolis nightclub owner saw 'overkill' in Derek Chauvin's reaction to black clientele

She said Chauvin got along well with the club's Latino regulars, but his tactics toward unruly customers on what she referred to as "African American" nights led her to speak to him about it.

"I told him I thought this is unnecessary to be pepper-sprayed. The knee-jerk reaction of being afraid, it seemed overkill," Santamaria said. "It was a concern and I did voice my opinion, but police officers have a way of justifying what they do."

She said she was shocked to see the video of Chauvin pinning Floyd to the ground with his knee, even as Floyd complained that he couldn't breathe.

"I thought he would have more of a conscience," she said. "Even if he is a bit of racist, he's a human being. ... At what point does your humanity overpower your racial bias?"

Thomas Kelly, a lawyer for Chauvin, didn't immediately reply to messages left Friday seeking comment.

Outside Chauvin's home in Oakdale on Thursday, a message of anger aimed at the former officer was painted in red on his driveway: "murderer."

On Friday, protesters gathered in front of another Chauvin home in Windemere, Fla., which he has owned since 2011 with his wife, Kellie, a Laotian refugee, real estate agent and former Mrs. Minnesota pageant winner.

Both Chauvin and his wife have registered to vote there, rather than in Minnesota, records show. Chauvin last cast a ballot in Florida in November 2018. His wife's registration is listed as inactive. Both are Republicans.

"I don't mind peaceful protests at all," said Oscar Reyes who lives across the street in the quiet neighborhood near Orlando. "I hope everything stays safe."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Demonstrators gathered outside a home owned by former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin in Oakdale on Wednesday, May 27, 2020. (Nick Woltman / Pioneer Press)

A can of red paint and protest signs stand with the trash bins outside Derek Chauvin's house in Oakdale on Wednesday, 27, 2020. (Nick Woltman / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Letters: Address the ways we deny people their human dignity and rights

ARTICLE XLII. LETTERS: ADDRESS THE WAYS WE DENY PEOPLE THEIR HUMAN DIGNITY AND RIGHTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 490 words

Byline: Letter Writers

Highlight: Sadness, frustration and anger are but a few of the disquieting emotions resulting from the egregious fatal arrest of George Floyd of Minneapolis. "Whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly," wrote Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Again we feel the pain that the use of violent force is wreaking. We urge elected officials and the [...]

Body

Sadness, frustration and anger are but a few of the disquieting emotions resulting from the egregious fatal arrest of George Floyd of Minneapolis. "Whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly," wrote Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Again we feel the pain that the use of violent force is wreaking.

We urge elected officials and the entire community to boldly address ways in which we demean or deny people their human dignity and rights. We implore our law enforcement agencies to pursue realistic alternatives to the use of deadly force. We support police training that places, as its overarching principle, respect for every individual in order to reduce the dangerous fear experienced by and of law enforcement. Let us act in ways that demonstrate that all lives, indeed Black lives, matter.

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet pray for the family of George Floyd, for all those struggling with his senseless death, the officers who must live with the results of their actions, and for the entire community. As a women's religious community, we are impelled also to seek greater awareness of Whiteness and ways in which we contribute to the systems of oppression and division. We want to see all systems honestly and boldly address root causes of injustices. We are "caught in an inescapable network of mutuality," again revealing systemic injustice causing indescribable suffering to all and disproportionately to our Black brothers and sisters.

Cathy Steffens, CSJ Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet Leadership Team, St. Paul Province

George Floyd died at the knee of a police officer and it is beyond wrong. There are no two ways about it. His murder exemplifies a continued pattern of racism and above-the-law actions by people in power. We have a pervasive problem that allows taking lives in the name of "community safety" to happen again and again and again. Situations that don't end in death, but add to injustice and in equality, happen all day, every day.

Letters: Address the ways we deny people their human dignity and rights

The system we have is not working. We know it's not working because we see the same terrible things happen over and over and over. We need culture change. We need oversight. We need justice. We need healing. We need police officers demanding change. We need all people demanding change.

You might ask: Who is this talking to me about change? I am no one special. I am a white suburbanite who can easily ignore a lot of terrible things and my life goes on. My life goes on because this society was built for people like me. But it is exactly me, us, who need to stand up and say "no more."

Madeline Kastler, Lake Elmo Letters: Progressives have controlled Minneapolis for 40 years. Hold them accountable Tainted: Hey, bicyclists, what's wrong with your special bikeway? Letters: You own this, Minneapolis and Minnesota Democrats Letters: SPPD should extend its purview Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates?

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Read the criminal complaint filed against former Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin

ARTICLE XLIII. READ THE CRIMINAL COMPLAINT FILED AGAINST FORMER MINNEAPOLIS OFFICER DEREK CHAUVIN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 113 words

Byline: Pioneer Press

Highlight: The Minneapolis police officer involved in the death of George Floyd was charged Friday with third-degree murder and manslaughter. Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman said additional or more severe charges could be filed against Derek Chauvin as the investigation continues. Here's the criminal complaint detailing the charges:

Body

The Minneapolis police officer involved in the death of George Floyd was charged Friday with third-degree murder and manslaughter.

Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman said additional or more severe charges could be filed against Derek Chauvin as the investigation continues. Here's the criminal complaint detailing the charges:

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

More George Floyd protesters arrested in Oakdale; chief says police must 'protect life and property' in city

ARTICLE XLIV. MORE GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTERS ARRESTED IN OAKDALE; CHIEF SAYS POLICE MUST 'PROTECT LIFE AND PROPERTY' IN CITY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 250 words

Byline: Mary Divine

Highlight: Officers in Oakdale on Friday continued to patrol the neighborhood where Derek Chauvin, the Minneapolis officer who was seen kneeling on George Floyd's neck before he died, owns a house. Six protesters were arrested Thursday night near Chauvin's house in the 7500 block of 17th Avenue North; six others were arrested Wednesday night, police said. [...]

Body

Officers in Oakdale on Friday continued to patrol the neighborhood where Derek Chauvin, the Minneapolis officer who was seen kneeling on George Floyd's neck before he died, owns a house.

Six protesters were arrested Thursday night near Chauvin's house in the 7500 block of 17th Avenue North; six others were arrested Wednesday night, police said.

"Our job is to protect life and property in the city, and we owe it to all of our residents to meet that expectation to the best of our ability," said Police Chief Bill Sullivan.

Chauvin's house was vacated early in the week, prior to any protest activity, Sullivan said. Floyd was killed on Memorial Day.

"We are not defending or condoning the behavior of the officer in the Minneapolis incident," Sullivan said. "What happened to Mr. Floyd is horrible, and we extend our deepest condolences to his family and friends. Nonetheless, our job is to uphold the rule of law even in times of distress and sadness. We ask for the Twin Cities community to assist law enforcement by demonstrating passionately, but peacefully."

Chauvin was arrested and charged on Friday with third-degree murder and manslaughter. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

More George Floyd protesters arrested in Oakdale; chief says police must 'protect life and property' in city

End of Document

Walz says Minneapolis knew police station that was overrun might fall hours earlier

ARTICLE XLV.

WALZ SAYS MINNEAPOLIS KNEW POLICE STATION THAT WAS OVERRUN MIGHT FALL HOURS EARLIER

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1269 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: As fires still smoldered in St. Paul and Minneapolis following a night of chaos, Gov. Tim Walz Friday asserted himself in charge of restoring order while also facing bruising criticism and questions as to how it came to this days after a black man died after a white policeman knelt on his neck for more [...]

Body

As fires still smoldered in St. Paul and Minneapolis following a night of chaos, Gov. Tim Walz Friday asserted himself in charge of restoring order while also facing bruising criticism and questions as to how it came to this days after a black man died after a white policeman knelt on his neck for more than 8 minutes.

He owned some of the blame and deflected some of it to local officials, and he enacted strong measures, including authorizing mandatory Friday and Saturday night curfews in St. Paul and Minneapolis to be enforced, in part, by forces under his control: the Minnesota National Guard, the State Patrol and other state resources.

Walz and other state law enforcement and military officials Friday morning attempted to explain what he acknowledged was an "abject failure" of the previous day and evening, which began with unchecked looting in St. Paul and culminated in an astonishing scene in Minneapolis, as a mob of people and set it ablaze - an outcome, Walz confirmed, that Minneapolis officials had conceded as a possibility earlier in the day.

Thursday's mayhem - quelled only after the state took over the scene in Minneapolis - was the evolution of days of growing unrest following the death Monday of George Floyd. The 46-year-old African American died after Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin was recorded on video kneeling on Floyd's neck as Floyd pleaded with him before appearing to lose consciousness. Chauvin, who was fired soon after the video surfaced,

All this as the state's death toll neared 1,000 in the coronavirus pandemic overran the police department's 3rd Precinct headquarters was arrested Friday morning.

Walz says Minneapolis knew police station that was overrun might fall hours earlier

In an hour-and-a-half news conference Friday, Walz ranged from somber to animated as he and key leaders - including Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington, State Patrol chief Col. Matt Langer, and Maj. Gen Jon Jensen, adjutant general of the Minnesota National Guard - discussed the matters.

WHAT HAPPENED LAST NIGHT?

Walz, Harrington and Jensen painted a picture of a previous day that was beset by confusion, inaction and even disagreements that was not flattering for Minneapolis and, perhaps, St. Paul.

To be clear, the three stopped short of singling out either Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey or St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter for pointed criticism, but Walz did seem to lay some blame on Frey.

Jensen said that while guardsmen under his command had been mustered and were awaiting orders, no orders to keep the peace in Minneapolis ever came. That order should have come from Frey, he said. Harrington echoed the sentiment. Minneapolis did task the guard with protecting firefighters, but that's as far as Minneapolis ever went, they said.

A spokesman for Frey didn't respond to a request for response Friday.

In St. Paul, Walz ordered the Guard to protect the state Capitol, and Police Chief Todd Axtell provided the Guard a mission to protect the county jail and police law enforcement complex, as well as the state Bureau of Criminal Apprehension building.

Axtell and Carter said Friday they decided not ask the Guard for assistance in the streets, but rather utilize cops familiar with the area. Those officers, they said, could be freed up by guardsman guarding buildings.

MINNEAPOLIS SURRENDER

One of the largest questions looming was why parts of Minneapolis were allowed to descend into such chaos - a spectacle that drew criticism from many quarters, including prominent Republicans ranging from President Donald Trump to state Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake.

"I lay responsibility fully on the Governor," Gazelka said Friday. "Not just from today moving forward, but from the beginning. To watch our cities burning, there's no excuse for that."

Walz appeared to blame Minneapolis officials for much of it.

Walz confirmed that Minneapolis leaders had told him - before noon Thursday - that the 3rd Precinct might fall. Walz didn't like it, he said.

"I think that the commitment to (not) hold the 3rd was not one that I felt comfortable with, and it's one that we discussed during the day," he said in response to reporters' questions.

A spokesman for Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo did not return a request for comment Friday.

But ultimately, Walz said, he deferred to local officials, acknowledging that he respected a sentiment of some that the specter of the Guard - soldiers with Humvees in combat fatigues - might inflame the situation worse. And no one knew whether the crowds would really attempt to overrun the place.

Walz says Minneapolis knew police station that was overrun might fall hours earlier

So he watched on TV - scenes that would soon be broadcast internationally. He said he felt it became clear by around 8:30 p.m. that the situation was dire, and he ordered Harrington and Jensen to begin to assemble a force of personnel from the National Guard and State Patrol.

"But it took time to build that force," Walz said. Police officers remained in the building, he said, adding that he didn't know if in fact they would surrender.

Around 10 p.m., police pulled out. Walz didn't explain why he didn't assume control at that moment, but he did say that it wasn't until around midnight that the city of Minneapolis finally requested the specific help of the state and National Guard for that scene.

Why so long?

"I think that's a question you'll have to ask Mayor Frey," Walz said.

He called it a "turning point."

"We did not believe that the 3rd should be given up, and that's why it's not, and that area was taken back by the force that we put together," he said.

STATE MOVES IN

Shortly after midnight, the state formally assumed control, Walz and Harrington said, and forces began to enter the city. Still, the contingent of several hundred from the State Patrol and National Guard didn't actually begin to re-take ground until around 3 a.m.

Harrington said by and large, the operation went smoothly. "We did it the old-fashioned way," said Harrington, who served as St. Paul police chief during street unrest during the 2008 Republican National Convention. He said little, if any, chemical irritants were used.

However, it was that force, under Walz's ultimate command, that created a scene of embarrassment: Around 5:15 a.m., State Patrol officers arrested an entire CNN crew, including reporter Omar Jimenez, on live TV. They were later released without charges.

On Friday, Walz publicly apologized for the blunder.

PROBLEM OF TRUST

Walz noted that "the very same tools" that will be needed to restore order - uniformed officers with guns - are also, generally speaking, the symbol of oppression that the African-American community associates with historical violence embodied most recently in Floyd's death.

Walz said the problems needing to be addressed after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody cannot be tackled "if anarchy reigns on the street," adding: "We have to restore order to our society before we can start addressing the issues."

"This has obviously been ... the most difficult week in Minnesota in recent history and maybe our entire history," Walz said. "Our community, especially our black community, is hurting beyond words. Minneapolis and St. Paul are on fire. The fires still smolder in our streets. The ashes are symbolic of decades and generations of pain, of anguish."

Walz says Minneapolis knew police station that was overrun might fall hours earlier

Mara H. Gottfried contributed to this report.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington announces that Minneapolis Police Officer Derek Chauvin has been taken into custody by the BCA in the death of George Floyd during a news conference in St. Paul on Friday, May 29, 2020 (Glen Stubbe/Star Tribune via AP, Pool)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE XLVI. TWIN CITIES SUBURBS REPORT DAMAGE AMID PROTESTS FOR GEORGE FLOYD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 491 wordsByline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: As protests over George Floyd's death continued Thursday night, various suburbs have reported damage. Most of the unrest was contained to the Twin Cities with more than 170 businesses damaged in St. Paul alone, according to police, and the Midway neighborhood along University Avenue hit the hardest. Additionally, St. Paul firefighters responded to 55 fires, [...]

Body

As protests over George Floyd's death continued Thursday night, various suburbs have reported damage.

Most of the unrest was contained to the Twin Cities with more than 170 businesses damaged in St. Paul alone, according to police, and the Midway neighborhood along University Avenue hit the hardest. Additionally, St. Paul firefighters responded to , not all of which were structural.

That said, there was damage sustained on the outskirts of the Twin Cities before former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin was charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter on Friday.

Here's a look at various suburbs and what they experienced Thursday night and Friday morning:

APPLE VALLEY

Apple Valley police responded to an alarm at the Dakota County Western Service Center around 1:30 a.m.

Sheriff Tim Leslie credited Apple Valley police officers with acting quickly, saying they arrived to find multiple broken windows and a fire inside. There was about $10,000 in fire and water damage due to the sprinkler system.

Two people were arrested on probable cause arson. No other damages were reported in Apple Valley, according to a police spokesperson.

While the city took precautions by closing down the Maplewood Mall as protests continued throughout the Twin Cities, a police spokesperson estimated that approximately two dozen local businesses were damaged Thursday night with a half dozen of those businesses experiencing a loss of property.

Twin Cities suburbs report damage amid protests for George Floyd

ROSEVILLE

There were 40 incidents involving criminal damage, burglaries, and/or looting in a 24-hour period, and police responded to more than 170 calls, Deputy Chief Erika Scheider said Friday. She suspected that those numbers were actually much higher since many of the reports had not yet been completed as of Friday morning.

WEST ST. PAUL

There were approximately 20 to 25 businesses damaged Thursday night, according to a police spokesperson, and the city is working with Dakota County to be prepared for the weekend ahead.

A local jewelry store sustained broken windows and forced entry Thursday night, but nothing was stolen, according to a police spokesperson. That was the only report of damage to a local business, though a public works facility was also vandalized.

There were at least five burglaries overnights of local businesses, according to Capt. Ryan George, and a total of six people were in custody in response. He said he has increased staffing ahead of this weekend.

"We are preparing for the worst and hoping for the best," George said. "Our goal is to make sure we're protecting the people and property in our city."

Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 55 fires Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Graphic

Multiple broken windows and a fire inside were found at the Dakota County Western Service Center in Apple Valley early Friday, May 29, 2020. (Courtesy of the Dakota County Sheriff's Office)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE XLVII. CURFEW ORDERED IN ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS, OTHER COMMUNITIES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 650 wordsByline: Dave OrrickHighlight: St. Paul, Minneapolis and Dakota County residents will be under mandatory curfew starting at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Roseville, Bloomington and Anoka County and other places are also instituting curfews. Gov. Tim Walz, St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter, Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey and other leaders announced the curfews Friday. The St. Paul, Minneapolis and [...]Body

St. Paul, Minneapolis and Dakota County residents will be under mandatory curfew starting at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Roseville, Bloomington and Anoka County and other places are also instituting curfews.

Gov. Tim Walz, St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter, Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey and other leaders announced the curfews Friday.

The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Dakota County curfews will extend from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. on Friday and Saturday.

Carter encouraged residents to begin Friday night's curfew with an hour of prayer in their chosen faith.

"During the hours of curfew, all persons must not travel on any public street or in any public place," according to both the St. Paul order and the . That includes driving, it says, although it makes an exception for people going to and from work.

The unprecedented crackdown, which will be enforced by a host of authorities - including the Minnesota National Guard and State Patrol - comes after looting and arson began to run amok in Minneapolis on Wednesday night, started in St. Paul on Thursday and continued in both cities into Friday morning. Police struggled to maintain - or completely lost - control.

Here's how it came to this: What began as protests following the death Monday of George Floyd, a black man who was videotaped pinned under the knee of a white police officer, steadily grew more violent for several days. The officer, Derek Chauvin, was swiftly fired; .

Curfew ordered in St. Paul, Minneapolis, other communities

On Thursday afternoon, rampant looting broke out in several areas of St. Paul Minneapolis order Chauvin was arrested Friday morning, especially in a commercial strip along University Avenue in the city's Midway neighborhood. Carter said 200 businesses in the city were damaged.

The events reached a crescendo later in the evening, when Minneapolis police essentially surrendered their 3rd Precinct headquarters to a mob, who overran the building and set it ablaze.

Around midnight, the state assumed control of the scene, and the State Patrol and National Guard cleared the area and have held it since.

A militarized presence could already be felt by Friday morning, as armed guardsman and Humvees were posted around that scene, as well as other sites around the cities, including the state Capitol complex in St. Paul.

Various suburbs have also reported businesses and other property being damaged.

CURFEWS EXPLAINED

Roseville and will each be under three-day curfews, and Edina and have two-day curfews - all beginning Friday.

Bloomington's and Richfield's two-day curfews start at 9 p.m. Friday and 8 p.m. Saturday.

Maplewood announced Saturday that curfews would be in effect from 8 p.m. Saturday and Sunday until 6 a.m. the following morning.

The curfews are expansive.

According to the St. Paul and Minneapolis orders, which are nearly identical:

"No travel" means nothing, not on foot, bike, car, public transit, or even "skateboard." "Public place" appears to cover everywhere you might go except your own yard, if you have one, according to a list of prohibited spaces, which includes vacant lots and parks. A violation is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of up to $1,000 and up 90 days in jail.

Walz said that mayors across the state are free to issue their own curfews.

EXCEPTIONS

Law enforcement, fire and medical personnel are exempt.

Also exempt are people going to and from work, journalists, people in need of medical assistance, and those "fleeing dangerous circumstances, or experiencing homelessness." The mayors of each city also appear to have the ability to exempt other individuals as they see fit.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Anoka County Maple Grove 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Curfew ordered in St. Paul, Minneapolis, other communities

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

St. Paul's University Avenue cleans up after fires, looting (gallery)

ARTICLE XLVIII. ST. PAUL'S UNIVERSITY AVENUE CLEANS UP AFTER FIRES, LOOTING \(GALLERY\)

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 377 words

Byline: Nick Halter

Body

Riots following the death of George Floyd reached St. Paul on Thursday night and Friday morning as businesses along University Avenue were burned, looted and vandalized.

A Napa Auto Parts store was burned to the ground. The store shared a building with Bole Ethiopian Cuisine, which was also destroyed. Bole owner Solomon Hailie was going to open his new quick-serve Bole Express on Saturday, said Chad Kulas, executive director of the Midway Chamber of Commerce.

"That one hurt me the most," Kulas said.

RELATED: What businesses need to know about insurance coverage - especially this year

Nearly 200 St. Paul businesses were damaged in St. Paul, according to the Associated Press. The riots in Minneapolis and St. Paul have followed the Monday night death of George Floyd. During an arrest, Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin knelt on Floyd's neck for 8 minutes and 46 seconds,

St. Paul's University Avenue cleans up after fires, looting (gallery)

according to a criminal complaint. Chauvin on Friday afternoon was charged with third degree homicide and second degree manslaughter.

In St. Paul, rioters on University Avenue also burned the Big Top Liquors store, Lloyd's Pharmacy and the Foot Locker and looted several more.

"It's going to be tough because businesses were hurting already because of Covid-19," Kulas said. "But the Midway community has been going strong for well over 100 years. It went through the 1918 pandemic and the Great Depression and it's going to bounce back from this because the community has a lot of pride."

That pride was seen in the hundreds of volunteers who were sweeping up broken glass and cleaning businesses.

Both the Hamline-Midway Coalition and Union Park District Council organized a volunteer effort on Friday morning.

The Union Park District Council saw what was happening on Thursday night and quickly sent out email and Facebook blasts to call for volunteers, said Ellen Fee, a board member who was handing out water and supplies with Mike Robertson. Robertson is also a board member and works for Habitat for Humanity. He supplied plywood to businesses to board up their storefronts.

"We are just trying to help folks put stuff back together," Robertson said.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 29, 2020

Chauvin arrested, charged; Walz says more enforcement Friday night; cities enact curfew

ARTICLE XLIX. CHAUVIN ARRESTED, CHARGED; WALZ SAYS MORE ENFORCEMENT FRIDAY NIGHT; CITIES ENACT CURFEW

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 537 words

Byline: Carrigan Miller

Body

State leaders hope that Friday night won't see a repeat of the looting and arson that has spread across the Twin Cities after announcing the arrest of the ex-police officer linked to the death of George Floyd, the deployment of about 500 soldiers from the National Guard and an 8 p.m. curfew in both Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The violence arose in the wake of protests to the killing of Floyd, whose death was captured on video as Derek Chauvin, a Minneapolis police officer, kneeled on Floyd's neck for minutes during an arrest while Floyd complained that he couldn't breathe. Chauvin and three other police officers were fired after the incident.

John Harrington, the commissioner of the Minnesota Department of Public Safety, confirmed that Chauvin had been arrested. Chauvin has been charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter, said Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman.

Chauvin arrested, charged; Walz says more enforcement Friday night; cities enact curfew

RELATED: Protesters overrun Minneapolis Police building, set it aflame as officers retreat \(gallery\)

Earlier, at a press conference with Governor Tim Walz, Harrington described Floyd's death as a murder, though that was a personal judgement and not a criminal one, Harrington said.

In Minneapolis, Mayor Jacob Frey declared a curfew for Friday and Saturday nights stretching from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. Violators of the curfew can be fined up to $1,000 and 90 days in jail. St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter followed suit shortly afterward.

Walz said that the state had taken on a larger role in coordinating the police and National Guard throughout the cities, and that they would have a larger presence on Friday night than they did on previous nights. The option of instituting measures like a curfew are still in play, Walz said

"This has obviously been the most difficult week in Minnesota in recent history, and maybe in our entire history. My top priority now is the immediate security to make sure what happened the last 48 hours doesn't happen tonight. The state of Minnesota has assumed that responsibility," he said.

RELATED: Minneapolis police, long accused of racism, face wrath of wounded city

In assuming that responsibility, Walz also offered a criticism to the response of the mayors and police leaders of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

"If this would have been executed correctly, the state would not lead on this. The state would have supported those [actions] and would have moved forward. That did not happen," he said.

The St. Paul Police Department had forces in reserve that were not deployed to the significant looting on University Avenue and the city didn't request the presence of the National Guard until about 5 p.m, Walz said.

Representatives from both mayor's offices couldn't be reached at press time.

Walz did take responsibility for the arrest of a CNN reporter this morning at Minneapolis' besieged Third Precinct. The reporter, and his crew, were arrested during a state-led push to retake the precinct from protestors who had set it on fire.

Walz apologized to CNN President Jeff Zucker in a phone call this morning.

"I take full responsibility. There is absolutely no reason something like that should happen," he said.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 1, 2020

ARTICLE L. [MISSISSIPPI MAYOR FLOUTS CALLS TO RESIGN OVER FLOYD
COMMENTS](#)

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 587 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: PETAL, Miss. (AP) - A Mississippi mayor whose remarks about the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody sparked outrage is resisting calls to resign, including from his own town's board of aldermen.

Body

PETAL, Miss. - A Mississippi mayor whose remarks about the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody sparked outrage is resisting calls to resign, including from his own town's board of aldermen.

"Why in the world would anyone choose to become a police officer in our society today?" Petal Mayor Hal Marx tweeted Tuesday, the day four Minneapolis police officers were fired. The 46-year-old Floyd, a black man, was handcuffed and pleading for air as a white police officer kneeled on his neck Monday.

In a follow-up tweet, the Republican directly referenced the Floyd case, saying he "didn't see anything unreasonable": "If you can say you can't breathe, you're breathing. Most likely that man died of overdose or heart attack. Video doesn't show his resistance that got him in that position. Police being crucified."

Javon Patterson, an offensive lineman with the Indianapolis Colts, and Toronto Blue Jays outfielder Anthony Alford both criticized Marx on social media.

"You know as a former resident of Petal ... this is truly disturbing to see," Patterson tweeted, attaching a screenshot of a Facebook post where Marx again said, "If you can talk you can breathe."

"How could you watch this disturbing video and make such an idiotic comment. But this guy is supposed to be the leader of 'the friendly city,'" Alford, a Petal High School alumnus, wrote on Facebook. "This is why it's important to vote people. You don't want people like Mayor Hal Marx in charge."

Marx's Twitter account no longer exists.

The Petal Board of Aldermen held a special meeting Thursday, voting unanimously to ask for Marx's resignation, the Clarion Ledger reported.

Mississippi mayor flouts calls to resign over Floyd comments

"Recently, Mayor Hal Marx has taken to social media and repeatedly made comments that have isolated, enraged and belittled individuals in a way that is unbecoming to our city," Aldermen Clint Moore read from a statement.

Residents also called for his resignation, and protests are planned for the coming days. As Marx addressed the meeting, audience members shouted over him.

"You already have your minds made up about me," he said.

Marx, who was first elected mayor in 2009 and entertained a run for governor in 2019, told the Hattiesburg American earlier this week that his remarks were misconstrued as racist, and that he was trying to caution people "to get all the facts before they judge" the police.

At Thursday's meeting, he said he and his family had received death threats and called people asking for resignation bullies.

"I will never surrender to the mob mentality," he said. In Mississippi, elected officials can only be removed from office if they've committed felonies, the Clarion Ledger reported.

Myla Cox grew up in Petal, a town of a little more than 10,000 people just east of Hattiesburg. She said she's been judged at her college, Brown University, because of her hometown

"Everybody looked down on me because they saw the type of people that run my city, specially you," the newspaper quoted her as addressing Marx. "For you to come here today and say that we are bullies, and you to not hold accountability for your statements that we clearly do no agree with already shows what type of person you are." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Target temporarily closes 24 Twin Cities stores during unrest

ARTICLE LI.

TARGET TEMPORARILY CLOSES 24 TWIN CITIES STORES DURING UNREST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 210 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: Target temporarily closed 24 stores in the Twin Cities as protests and looting have been underway in the wake of the death of a man in Minneapolis police custody. "We are heartbroken by the death of George Floyd and the pain it is causing our community," the Minneapolis-based company said in a Thursday statement. "At [...]"

Body

Target temporarily closed 24 stores in the Twin Cities as protests and looting have been underway in the wake of the death of a man in Minneapolis police custody.

"We are heartbroken by the death of George Floyd and the pain it is causing our community," the Minneapolis-based company said in a Thursday statement. "At this time, we have made the decision to close a number of our stores until further notice. Our focus will remain on our team members' safety and helping our community heal."

The stores currently closed are: North St. Paul, West St. Paul, East St. Paul, St. Paul Highland Park, St. Paul Midway, Minneapolis Northeast, Minneapolis Nicollet Mall, Minneapolis Lake Street, Minneapolis Dinkytown, Minneapolis Uptown, Oakdale, Roseville, Brooklyn Park, Knollwood, St. Louis Park, Crystal, Eden Prairie, Shoreview, Fridley, Richfield, Burnsville, Bloomington, Apple Valley and Apple Valley South. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE LII. TWITTER OBSCURES, WARNS ON TRUMP TWEET 'GLORIFYING VIOLENCE'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1206 wordsByline: Barbara Ortutay, Matt O'BrienHighlight: Twitter escalated tensions with President Donald Trump on Friday, adding a warning to one of his tweets for the first time and saying he violated the platform's rules by glorifying violence when he suggested protesters in Minneapolis could be shot.Body

Twitter escalated tensions with President Donald Trump on Friday, adding a warning to one of his tweets for the first time and saying he violated the platform's rules by glorifying violence when he suggested protesters in Minneapolis could be shot.

Trump has been railing against the company since earlier this week, when it for the first time applied fact checks to two of his tweets. Those were about mail-in ballots.

The flap comes at a fraught moment for Twitter and social media more generally. Debate is heating up about when and how much these companies should police the content on their platforms as coronavirus misinformation swirls and the 2020 U.S. presidential election looms.

For Trump, the feud with Twitter serves as a convenient distraction from major challenges he faces heading into November, such as controlling a pandemic and dealing with soaring unemployment.

The Trump tweet that was flagged Friday came amid days of violent protests over the death of George Floyd, a handcuffed black man who pleaded for air as a white police officer kneeled on his neck.

"These THUGS are dishonoring the memory of George Floyd, and I won't let that happen," Trump tweeted about the protesters. "Just spoke to Governor Tim Walz and told him that the Military is with him all the way. Any difficulty and we will assume control but, when the looting starts, the shooting starts. Thank you!"

The comment evoked the civil-rights era by borrowing a phrase used in 1967 by Miami's police chief to warn of an aggressive police response to unrest in black neighborhoods.

Twitter did not remove the tweet, saying it had determined it might be in the public interest to have it remain accessible. But the tweet was hidden so that a user looking at Trump's timeline would have to click on the warning to see the original tweet. Hiding it also effectively demotes the tweet by limiting how users can retweet it and ensuring that Twitter algorithms don't recommend it.

Twitter obscures, warns on Trump tweet 'glorifying violence'

Twitter said Friday it posted the warning label on Trump's tweet "based on the historical context of the last line, its connection to violence, and the risk it could inspire similar actions today," but left it up "given its relevance to ongoing matters of public importance."

A tweet using the same language as Trump's was later posted on the official White House Twitter account, and Twitter eventually put a warning on that too. It was also posted on Facebook, which hasn't taken any visible action on it.

Twitter taking a harder line than Facebook on Trump's posts likely has something to do with Twitter's decision last year to stop taking political ads, said Melissa Ryan, CEO of consultancy group Card Strategies, which researches online disinformation and right-wing extremism.

She said the coronavirus pandemic has also led Twitter to inch toward stronger enforcement of its policies at the same time that Trump's tweets have "amped up in terms of crazy and intensity and disinformation."

"Twitter and Trump have been playing a game of chicken," Ryan said. "It feels like they've both been moving toward this for a while."

Trump took to Twitter to complain, calling multiple times for the revocation of Section 230, part of a 1996 law overhauling telecommunications. That section generally protects social media platforms from liability for material users post on their platforms. Trump on Thursday signed an executive order challenging those protections.

The order directs executive branch agencies to ask independent rule-making agencies including the Federal Communications Commission and the Federal Trade Commission to study whether they can place new regulations on the companies, though experts express doubts much can be done without an act of Congress.

The president and fellow conservatives have claimed for years that Silicon Valley tech companies are biased against them. But there is no evidence for this, and while the executives and many employees of Twitter, Facebook and Google may lean liberal, the companies have stressed they have no business interest in favoring one political party over the other.

Twitter first outlined in early 2018 that it wouldn't block world leaders from the platform or remove their controversial tweets. But it announced nearly a year ago that it could apply warning labels and obscure the tweets of world leaders if they used their accounts to threaten or abuse others. That followed complaints from Trump critics that the president has gotten a free pass from Twitter to post hateful messages and attack his enemies in ways they say could lead to violence.

Twitter further clarified its rules in October, saying it will enforce its policies against any user who makes clear and direct threats of violence against a person, but carving out an exception for government officials' "foreign policy saber-rattling on economic or military issues."

The earlier tweets that Twitter flagged were not hidden but did come with an option to "get the facts about mail-in ballots," a link that led to fact checks and news stories by media organizations. Those tweets called mail-in ballots "fraudulent" and predicted that "mail boxes will be robbed," among other things.

Twitter obscures, warns on Trump tweet 'glorifying violence'

Twitter's decision to flag Trump's tweets came as the president continued to use the platform to push a debunked conspiracy theory accusing MSNBC host and former congressman Joe Scarborough of killing a staffer in his Florida congressional office in 2001. Medical officials determined the staffer had an undiagnosed heart condition, passed out and hit her head as she fell.

Scarborough, who was in Washington, not Florida, at the time, has urged the president to stop his baseless attacks. The staffer's husband also recently demanded that Twitter remove the tweets. The company issued a statement expressing its regret to the husband but so far has taken no other action.

Twitter's decision also likely will be seized upon outside the U.S. to scrutinize the social media behavior of other world leaders. Israel has been waging its own pressure campaign on the company over it allowing Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei to have an account.

In a letter dated Sunday, an Israeli official wrote to Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey complaining about Khamenei tweets that repeated comments he made in a recent speech in support of Palestinians that called Israel a "cancerous growth" that will be "uprooted and destroyed."

On the other hand, the company has removed tweets related to the coronavirus from the leaders of Brazil and Venezuela, and says it will remove content that has a call to action that poses a threat to people's health or well being.

It has also previously used the warning label for an elected official, Brazilian politician Osmar Terra, who tweeted that quarantine increases the spread of the virus.

--

AP writers Tali Arbel in New York and Jon Gambrell in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE LIII.

MN NATIONAL GUARD LEADER SAYS THEY DIDN'T GET CLEAR DIRECTION ON RESPONDING TO PROTESTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 717 wordsByline: Bill SalisburyHighlight: When Gov. Tim Walz activated the Minnesota National Guard on Thursday to respond to rioting and looting in Minneapolis and St. Paul, around 500 soldiers and airmen rushed to the Twin Cities to report for duty, but their leader said they didn't get clear directions on what they were expected to do when they arrived. [...]Body

When Gov. Tim Walz activated the Minnesota National Guard on Thursday to respond to rioting and looting in Minneapolis and St. Paul, around 500 soldiers and airmen rushed to the Twin Cities to report for duty, but their leader said they didn't get clear directions on what they were expected to do when they arrived.

As a result, many of the troops did not move into action until late that night when fires raged and looters ransacked businesses across the cities in disturbances sparked by the death of George Floyd, an unarmed black man who died Monday when a white Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck for several minutes.

During a news conference Friday with Walz and other state officials, Maj. Gen. Jon Jensen, Minnesota National Guard adjutant general, said he wanted to deploy troops before dark Thursday "so my soldiers and airmen could become familiar with their terrain and their mission. We never got such a mission description."

Who was responsible for that "lack of clarity?" Jensen didn't say. But he noted that the Guard acts "in support of local civilian leadership," not on its own initiative.

Jensen and other state officials seemed to suggest that Minneapolis city leaders failed to tell Guard commanders what they wanted soldiers to do until late Thursday night when it was too late to prevent much of the damage. A spokesman for Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey couldn't be reached for comment on Friday afternoon.

In response to a request from Frey, Walz signed an order at 4 p.m. Thursday activating the Guard to, in Jensen's words, "protect life, preserve property and ensure people's right to peacefully demonstrate" during the disorder.

MN National Guard leader says they didn't get clear direction on responding to protests

"After checking in yesterday, we had our first group of soldiers out in the community around 6 p.m.," Minnesota National Guard spokesman Blair Heusdens wrote in an email to the Pioneer Press. Officers continued processing members into active duty through the night.

The troops came from units based in Stillwater, Monticello, Montevideo, Brooklyn Park, Faribault and the 133rd Airlift Wing in St. Paul.

Jensen said he had four missions for the troops. With Walz's consent, they and Minnesota State Patrol troopers first secured the Capitol complex in St. Paul. Armed soldiers and military vehicles surrounded the vacated building on Friday.

At the request of St. Paul law enforcement officials, the adjutant general said, his next two missions were to provide security at the Ramsey County Law Enforcement Center and the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension headquarters on the East Side, so St. Paul police officers could respond to other needs.

Their fourth mission, when it was finally clarified, was to escort Minneapolis firefighters to sites and provide security for them as they put out fires. The soldiers also "form lines between protesters and sites that are at risk of being harmed," Heusdens wrote.

Walz authorized the soldiers to be armed after the FBI reported a "credible threat" to the Guard, Jensen said. "Soldiers retain the right to self defense."

But they do not have the right to "arrest and detain civilians," Jensen said.

Attorney General Keith Ellison said he hopes protesters don't see the soldiers as "another occupation by another military force. It really isn't. They're here to restore calm and peace."

Guard troops will continue to support local authorities "as long as directed in order to ensure the safety of people and property," according to a National Guard statement.

The last time the Minnesota National Guard was activated in response to civil unrest was in 2008 when the St. Paul Police Department asked the governor to send in troops during a riot outside the Republican National Convention at the Xcel Energy Center.

Since its formation in 1856, the state Guard has been called to support local law enforcement agencies more than 91 times in response to a variety of racial, labor and other civil disturbances, according to Guard historian Daniel Ewer. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

St. Paul mayor says law enforcement help, curfew should help stem tide of rioting

ARTICLE LIV.

ST. PAUL MAYOR SAYS LAW ENFORCEMENT HELP, CURFEW SHOULD HELP STEM TIDE OF RIOTING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 653 words

Byline: Bob Shaw, Frederick Melo

Highlight: St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter on Friday called for as many as 400 additional law enforcement officers and two nights of city-wide curfew to help quell the wave of destructive rioting. During a Zoom conference call earlier in the day, Carter said assistance is expected from the National Guard, the University of Minnesota police and [...]

Body

St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter on Friday called for as many as 400 additional law enforcement officers and two nights of city-wide curfew to help quell the wave of destructive rioting.

During a Zoom conference call earlier in the day, Carter said assistance is expected from the National Guard, the University of Minnesota police and other area police departments if necessary. The State Patrol has also been requested to help.

During a discussion with the media later Friday, he and Police Chief Todd Axtell said the decision had been made Thursday to use the National Guard to protect sites such as the Minnesota Capitol building, rather than deploy them on the streets.

Police Chief Axtell: "this has never happened before." From Dakota to Washington Co, police had hands full all at once, impacting mutual aid. National Guard protected specific sites like MN Capitol, freeing up police for streets. Tonight Guard, State Patrol will be more visible. pic.twitter.com/00Dk2R3Lpf

- Frederick Melo, Reporter (@FrederickMelo) May 29, 2020

The goal at the time was to free up city officers to focus on policing familiar corners, but the city was quickly overwhelmed with calls for help. Many looters returned to shops multiple times after police had left an area, only to scatter when police came back and then later return again.

Gov. Tim Walz and others appeared frustrated Friday that the Guard had not been used more extensively to protect private properties.

During the morning Zoom call, Carter, visibly upset, told 225 attendees that 200 St. Paul businesses were damaged overnight - including buildings burned, windows smashed, items stolen. Carter and Axtell said

St. Paul mayor says law enforcement help, curfew should help stem tide of rioting

Friday afternoon they were still determining where best to deploy the National Guard, but they expected them to be more visible than they had been the night before.

The riots were sparked after George Floyd, an unarmed black man, died while in custody of the Minneapolis police. Video of the incident shows Floyd, handcuffed on the ground, with a policeman kneeling on his neck.

Carter said he feels the same outrage that the protesters do. But while he supports protesters, he said he despises anyone using that death as an excuse to break laws - looting, setting fires, breaking windows.

Thursday night, he said, was like a game of Whack-a-Mole for police and firefighters. Police were not available to answer calls for help because they had to protect firefighters battling the intentionally-set fires.

"That's one reason you didn't see mass arrests," said Carter.

The damage to businesses hurt the entire city, he said. Many businesses were already shut down because of the coronavirus.

"They were already fighting for their lives," said Carter.

St. Paul police reported only ten arrests, including two juveniles ages 13 and 14 who were released after being detained on suspicion of burglary at Sun Foods grocery on University Avenue.

The city received 1,189 emergency calls for police service through 911 from noon Thursday through 8 a.m. Friday. Of those calls, 89 were for shots fired. On top of that, there were 126 fire calls and 182 EMS calls.

Carter said that even though many looters may not have been arrested Thursday, video of their crimes would lead to arrests later. He addressed those law-breakers directly, saying: "You may think you are getting away with something, but you are not."

The coronavirus pandemic is making the urban mayhem worse, he said.

In times of crisis, he said, "my instinct always is to bring people together. I have not figured out how to do that and maintain social distance." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

55 fires, looting overnight leave extensive damage in St. Paul; Midway neighborhood hardest hit

ARTICLE LV. 55 FIRES, LOOTING OVERNIGHT LEAVE EXTENSIVE DAMAGE IN ST. PAUL; MIDWAY NEIGHBORHOOD HARDEST HIT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1172 words

Byline: Frederick Melo, Sarah Horner

Highlight: After a night of looting and arson, the morning light revealed extensive damage to businesses and properties in St. Paul.

Body

Looting and arson Thursday evening and early Friday morning left a wake of burned out buildings and broken glass across St. Paul.

St. Paul firefighters responded to 55 fires, not all involving buildings, as they tried to keep on top of blazes breaking out as riots and protests over George Floyd's death in Minneapolis spread to St. Paul. But as Friday night began, the Midway area was quiet.

The worst area hit in St. Paul on Thursday and Friday morning was the Midway along University Avenue between Snelling Avenue and Lexington Parkway, according to Deputy Chief Roy Mokosso.

"There were a multitude of fires so many businesses were damaged," Mokosso said, adding "we are working on compiling all that information."

FIRES CONTINUED TO SMOLDER OVERNIGHT

Crews deployed across the city to assess the extent of damage to determine "safety, habitancy and occupancy," Mokosso said He noted officials planned to visit more than 100 locations that reported damage.

Some smaller fires were still smoldering Friday morning as firefighters were not able to enter all the structures Thursday night due to safety concerns. So they sometimes had to do their best to contain them from the exterior and move on.

"Because of some of the compromised structures, interior firefighting wasn't able to be done, so there were potential pockets of activity where fires continue to smolder overnight," Mokosso said.

'THEY WERE JUST INSIDE AND STARTED DESTROYING'

55 fires, looting overnight leave extensive damage in St. Paul; Midway neighborhood hardest hit

Firefighters were still trying on Friday morning to put out the remains of a blaze at the Sports Dome sports apparel shop near Snelling and University avenues. The storefront was blackened and debris crumbled onto the sidewalk.

Workers inside Culver's Restaurant nearby cleaned up broken glass. "It's pretty bad," a worker said. "We locked all our food up. They were just inside and started destroying."

At 7-Mile Sportswear in the Uni-Dale Male, 25-year-old Jin Lim, the owner, had a simple assessment of damage to the store he bought last year: "Completely destroyed."

Lim, his wife and six employees fled through the back door Thursday night as looters broke glass and overwhelmed the store. At least one fire was lit in his storage room, he said.

His business specialized in hair extensions, wigs, hair braiding, jewelry, hair products as well as sports jerseys. Lim estimates more than $1 million in inventory alone is gone and there's property damage on top of that. His business was probably the worst hit at Uni-Dale, though other shops were also damaged.

Many gas stations and other stores throughout St. Paul, from the East Side to West Seventh, remained boarded up Friday.

As night fell on University Avenue, people were still cleaning up businesses and boarding up doors. Some onlookers filmed the damage on their phones, but it was distinctively quieter than the day before.

SHUTTING OFF GAS LINES, POWER, MAKING ARRESTS

Firefighters were working with gas and electric companies Friday to shut off power and disconnect gas lines and certain locations to ensure safety.

St. Paul police reported 10 arrests, which included five individuals who were booked into the Ramsey County Jail and two juveniles who were released after they were arrested for burglary at Sun Foods.

A spokesman noted that "the ability to make arrests was affected by the need to protect our partners with the St. Paul Fire Department, who were being assaulted as they worked."

The department received 1,189 calls for service between noon Thursday and 8 a.m. Friday morning.

VOLUNTEERS ARRIVE TO HELP CLEAN UP

Despite the destruction on view Friday morning, volunteers are already out to help with the long cleanup ahead. Megan Henning and Mark Larson of Blair Avenue were among a group of neighbors volunteering.

The Union Park District Council and the Grand Avenue Business Association were among the groups getting volunteers to work.

The executive director of the Hamline Midway Coalition, Kate Mudge, said more than 1,000 people showed up at Gordon Parks High School Friday morning to help with clean-up efforts in the area.

The show of support was "amazing," and a small but important dose of good news amid all the bad, Mudge said.

The damage to the area was extensive, especially between Griggs and Snelling Avenue, Mudge said.

55 fires, looting overnight leave extensive damage in St. Paul; Midway neighborhood hardest hit

"There wasn't much in that (stretch) spared," she said.

Some places that were, though, appeared to be minority and immigrant-owned businesses, Mudge continued, saying she wasn't sure if that was because those businesses had staged a presence outside of their establishments overnight or posted something about their ownership on social media.

Other businesses that placed signs out indicating they were community or black-owned also found some success with those methods, Mudge added.

LIQUOR STORES, PHARMACIES, GAS STATIONS HIT HARD

Establishments that allowed easy access for quick grab-and-go looting jobs were targeted heavily, including liquor stores, gas stations and pharmacies, Mudge said.

They included two Speedways in the area, a Holiday Station, Lloyd's Pharmacy - which she said burned to the ground - Turf Club, Ax Man, Furniture Barn, the Midway Target, where much of the St. Paul looting began, Verizon, Noodles and Co., the Vitamin Store, and TJ Maxx.

NAPA Auto Parts also was set ablaze.

Mudge said she wasn't sure about damage to the neighborhood's Cub Foods, noting that early efforts had been made there to board up the store.

Residents and businesses are "nervous about tonight," but for now, the abundant "show of support" that has been seen from neighborhood residents "and beyond" has been encouraging and uplifting, Mudge said Friday.

INFO STILL COMING IN ABOUT DAMAGE ELSEWHERE

Meanwhile, along Grand Avenue, businesses also sustained damage, though not nearly as widespread.

Grand Avenue Business Association president, Bob Lawrence, said the Speedway at Cleveland and Grand Avenue appeared "a total loss" from a fire. Additionally, Golden Treasures, a jewelry store, as well as CVS and First Grand Avenue Liquor had been looted, and an ATM at Bank Cherokee drive-thru was busted open.

Lawrence was working to get an order of plywood delivered to businesses that hadn't already boarded up. He noted that several others, including his own State Farm insurance location, were open for business Friday.

Elsewhere, R.F. Moeller in Highland Park was badly looted.

The Neighbors United Funding Collaborative is helping Midway and Union Park small business and nonprofit communities rebuild their storefronts. People can make contributions at givemn.org/story/Nufc or send them to the Hamline Midway Coalition, 1558 Minnehaha Ave., St. Paul, MN 55104.

Nick Ferraro contributed to this report.

Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the

55 fires, looting overnight leave extensive damage in St. Paul; Midway neighborhood hardest hit

extent of destruction from riots Price tag to call up National Guard for Twin Cities disturbances: Nearly \$13M Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Watch: CNN crew arrested in Minneapolis live on the air

ARTICLE LVI. WATCH: CNN CREW ARRESTED IN MINNEAPOLIS LIVE ON THE AIR

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 295 words

Byline: Andy Rathbun

Highlight: CNN reporter Omar Jimenez and three colleagues were arrested live on the air Friday morning while covering protests in Minneapolis. Minnesota police arrest CNN reporter and camera crew as they report from protests in Minneapolis <https://t.co/oZdqBti776> pic.twitter.com/3QbeTjD5ed - CNN (@CNN) May 29, 2020 CNN said in a statement that the team was arrested "for doing [...]"

Body

CNN reporter Omar Jimenez and three colleagues were arrested live on the air Friday morning while covering protests in Minneapolis.

Minnesota police arrest CNN reporter and camera crew as they report from protests in Minneapolis <https://t.co/oZdqBti776>

- CNN (@CNN)

CNN said in a statement that the team was arrested "for doing their jobs, despite identifying themselves - a clear violation of their First Amendment rights. The authorities in Minnesota, incl. the Governor, must release the 3 CNN employees immediately."

CNN later said Gov. Tim Walz apologized for the arrests and quoted Walz as saying he was "working to have the CNN team released immediately."

The team was later released and returned to air shortly afterward, recounting what had happened.

CNN's @OmarJimenez pic.twitter.com/3QbeTjD5ed May 29, 2020 and his crew have been released from police custody. He recounts getting arrested and what happened while they were in custody. <https://t.co/v3kMq77Oro>

- CNN (@CNN)

The Minnesota State Patrol stated that the team was part of four arrests troopers made at scene Friday morning.

Watch: CNN crew arrested in Minneapolis live on the air

"In the course of clearing the streets and restoring order at Lake Street and Snelling Avenue, four people were arrested by State Patrol troopers, including three members of a CNN crew," the State Patrol said. "The three were released once they were confirmed to be members of the media." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform pic.twitter.com/Joqmw1Tc5i May 29, 2020 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Man dies after being shot in St. Paul's Highland Park area

ARTICLE LVII. MAN DIES AFTER BEING SHOT IN ST. PAUL'S HIGHLAND PARK AREA

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 217 wordsByline: Mara H. GottfriedHighlight: A man was fatally shot in St. Paul early Friday and police are looking for the suspect. It happened in Highland Park, in the area of Lexington Parkway and Otto Avenue west of Interstate 35E, about 12:20 a.m. Police said there was no indication on Friday morning that the killing was connected to unrest that [...]Body

A man was fatally shot in St. Paul early Friday and police are looking for the suspect.

It happened in Highland Park, in the area of Lexington Parkway and Otto Avenue west of Interstate 35E, about 12:20 a.m.

Police said there was no indication on Friday morning that the killing was connected to unrest that was happening at the time in the city - people were looting and setting fires, particularly in the Midway area.

Officers found the man after being called to the 700 block of South Lexington on a report of a person in distress. Paramedics took him to the hospital, where he died soon after.

Police identified possible witnesses and collected evidence. No arrests had been made as of Friday morning and police asked anyone with information to call them at 651-266-5650.

The man's name will be released after his identity is confirmed by the Ramsey County medical examiner's office. The death is the 14th homicide of the year in St. Paul. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE LVIII. ST. PAUL FARMERS' MARKET LOWERTOWN TO CLOSE FOR THE WEEKEND

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 253 words

Byline: Nancy Ngo

Highlight: The St. Paul Farmers' Market in Lowertown announced it would close temporarily over the weekend following days of protests and looting that have occurred since the Memorial Day death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody. The farmers' market will be closed Saturday and Sunday "in response to the civil unrest taking place across the [...]"

Body

The St. Paul Farmers' Market in Lowertown announced it would close temporarily over the weekend following days of protests and looting that have occurred since the Memorial Day death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

The farmers' market will be closed Saturday and Sunday "in response to the civil unrest taking place across the Twin Cities," said a news release from the market.

Regular hours will resume next week at neighborhood markets including:

Roseville: Tuesday, June 2 from 8 a.m. to noon Andover: Tuesday, June 2 from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. Maplewood: Wednesday, June 3 from 8 a.m. to noon Burnsville: Thursday, June 4 from 11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. St. Thomas More in Saint Paul: Friday, June 5 from 1:15 p.m. to 5 p.m. Downtown location: Saturday, June 6 from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m. and Sunday, June 7 from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

"During this difficult time, we continue our commitment to the safety and well-being of our community, growers, customers and staff," said David Kotsonas, director of the St. Paul Farmers' Market. "We believe this is the right thing to do."

For more information, visit stpaulfarmersmarket.com.

Restaurant News: Amid closings, say hello to restaurant openings in the time of the coronavirus Pandemic, protests and ice cream. 2 Scoops Ice Cream Eatery seeks to heal us. W.A. Frost preps to reopen patio with new philosophy Watch: Walz announces opening of indoor dining, gyms, movie theaters, bowling alleys Midtown Global Market evicts Holy Land over employee's past social media posts

St. Paul Farmers' Market Lowertown to close for the weekend

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

St. Paul fire department: Midway neighborhood endured worst of fire damage in overnight riots

ARTICLE LIX. ST. PAUL FIRE DEPARTMENT: MIDWAY NEIGHBORHOOD ENDURED WORST OF FIRE DAMAGE IN OVERNIGHT RIOTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 204 words

Byline: Sarah Horner

Highlight: St. Paul firefighters responded to 55 fires in the city last night, not all of which were structural, as they tried to keep on top of blazes breaking out across the city as riots and protests over George Floyd's death continued into a third night. The worst area hit was the Frogtown/Midway neighborhood along University [...]

Body

St. Paul firefighters responded to 55 fires in the city last night, not all of which were structural, as they tried to keep on top of blazes breaking out across the city as riots and protests over George Floyd's death continued into a third night.

The worst area hit was the Frogtown/Midway neighborhood along University Avenue between Snelling Avenue and Lexington Parkway, according to the department's spokesman, Deputy Chief Roy Mokosso.

"There were a multitude of fires so many businesses were damaged," Mokosso said, adding "we are working on compiling all that information."

Crews have been deployed across the city to assess the extent of damage to determine "safety, habitancy and occupancy, Mokosso continued, noting that planned to visit over 100 locations that had reported damage.

Some smaller fires were still smoldering Friday morning as firefighters were not able to enter all the structures Thursday night due to safety concerns, so they sometimes had to do their best to contain them from the exterior and move on.

"Because of some of the compromised structures, interior firefighting wasn't able to be done, so there were potential pockets of activity where fires continue to smolder overnight," Mokosso said.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

St. Paul fire department: Midway neighborhood endured worst of fire damage in overnight riots

End of Document

Update: Target temporary closures expand; some Walgreens and CVS locations also closed

ARTICLE LX. UPDATE: TARGET TEMPORARY CLOSURES EXPAND; SOME WALGREENS AND CVS LOCATIONS ALSO CLOSED

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 834 words

Byline: Molly Guthrey

Highlight: A number of Target stores in the metro remain temporarily closed - including locations in St. Paul. In addition, some locations of CVS Pharmacy and Walgreens are closed, and Rosedale Center announced it will remain closed on Saturday. Target temporarily closed 24 stores in the Twin Cities on Thursday as looting, violence, fires and other [...]

Body

A number of Target stores in the metro remain temporarily closed - including locations in St. Paul.

In addition, some locations of CVS Pharmacy and Walgreens are closed, and Rosedale Center announced it will remain closed on Saturday.

Target temporarily closed 24 stores in the Twin Cities on Thursday as looting, violence, fires and other unrest spread and intensified after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody on Monday.

On Thursday, Target issued a statement about the crisis: "We are heartbroken by the death of George Floyd and the pain it is causing our community. At this time, we have made the decision to close a number of our stores until further notice. Our focus will remain on our team members' safety and helping our community heal."

Among the initial closures was the Midway Target, where police said people entered and took merchandise on Thursday, at 1300 University Ave., and the location that was heavily damaged and looted.

Target's closures fluctuated on Friday; at 3:30 p.m., the list of its temporarily closed stores was expanded to 32, including locations in Apple Valley, Woodbury, Stillwater, Edina and even beyond the metro in St. Cloud. For current closures in this fluid situation, go to .

OTHER STORES

Other retailers have also been affected by the unrest, including all seven CVS Pharmacy stores in the city of St. Paul.

Update: Target temporary closures expand; some Walgreens and CVS locations also closed

Amy Lanctot Thibault, a spokeswoman for CVS Health, said in an email, "Sixteen of our pharmacies have been damaged during the unrest in Minneapolis and St. Paul area throughout the week. None of our employees were hurt and the impacted locations will remain closed for the time being so we can assess the damage and ensure employee safety. Three additional CVS Pharmacy locations are closed at this time out of an abundance of caution and to ensure our store teams remain safe."

The CVS locations temporarily closed include the St. Paul stores on Grand Avenue, Snelling Avenue, Fairview Avenue and Maryland Avenue. Other closed stores are in Little Canada, Maplewood and Minneapolis.

"Some will open as soon as it is safe," Lanctot Thibault said. "Others need to be repaired. And these are changing frequently, as the situation unfolds."

For now, though, Lanctot Thibault says customers can still get help with their prescriptions.

"Each closed pharmacy's phone system has been rerouted to a nearby store that is open so our patients will continue to have access to pharmacy care," she said.

Walgreens has also closed some of its locations in the metro, including the store at 734 Grand Ave. Lake Street <http://pipr.es/Wp02xaf> in St. Paul.

"We recommend customers use the store locator feature for current information on store status on Walgreens.com or our mobile app before traveling to a location," a spokesman, Phil Caruso, said in an email to the Pioneer Press on Friday afternoon. "At this time we have select locations open and will be following curfew orders to close at 7 p.m. tonight (in advance of the 8 p.m. curfew start time in both St. Paul and Minneapolis)."

Also this weekend, Rosedale Center announced that the Roseville mall will remain closed on Saturday.

"We will continue to monitor the situation and work with local authorities to determine when it is safe for the mall to reopen," according to the statement issued on Friday afternoon. "No people or vehicles are allowed on Rosedale Center property. This includes tenants. We have secured the entrances so no one can enter."

HELP FOR SENIORS

With a number of stores closed, and Metro Transit service mostly suspended through the weekend, it might be challenging for some people to fill prescriptions, buy groceries or just get around.

Ann Bailey, president of DARTS - a nonprofit serving seniors and their families in Dakota County - says while most of the organization's clients use mail-order pharmacies, other routines have been affected by the recent unrest.

"We've been placing and delivering grocery orders to people during COVID-19," she said Friday. "Today Walmart canceled all the online orders, so we are having to figure out how to do those purchases."

Because DARTS is an essential service, the organization has been assisting clients throughout the stay-at-home order with services such as cleaning, yard work and transportation.

Still, the house-bound have been isolated, and now many people are even more afraid.

Update: Target temporary closures expand; some Walgreens and CVS locations also closed

"Everyone's stress level is high," Bailey says.

While the nonprofit focuses on Dakota County, Bailey says that people can call DARTS if they need assistance finding senior services in other areas. Call DARTS at 651-455-1560 or Dartsconnects.org. Another option is the Senior LinkAge Line at or 800-333-2433.

1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin Seniorlinkageline.com Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform The Athletic lays off 8 percent of staff 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE LXI.

CORONAVIRUS FRIDAY UPDATE: 29 MORE MINNESOTANS DIE AS DEATH TOLL APPROACHES 1,000

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 406 wordsByline: Christopher Magan

Highlight: Minnesota's coronavirus-related deaths neared 1,000 people Friday when 29 more COVID-19 fatalities were reported. It's been a little more than two months since Minnesota's first COVID-19 death was announced by the state Department of Health on March 21. The death toll related to the coronavirus now stands at 996 people, ranging in age from 30 [...]

Body

Minnesota's coronavirus-related deaths neared 1,000 people Friday when 29 more COVID-19 fatalities were reported.

It's been a little more than two months since Minnesota's first COVID-19 death was announced by the state Department of Health on March 21. The death toll related to the coronavirus now stands at 996 people, ranging in age from 30 to 104 years old.

Those whose deaths were reported Friday ranged in age from their 40s to more than 100 years old. Twenty-six of those who died were residents of congregate care facilities.

There are nearly 250 long-term care facilities with coronavirus outbreaks. Health officials classify a facility as having an outbreak when one or more residents or staff test positive for the coronavirus.

Jan Malcolm, state health commissioner, again noted the unrest happening across the Twin Cities after the death of George Floyd in police custody. She encouraged protesters to do their best to take precautions to protect one another from the ongoing coronavirus epidemic.

"These are hard days. In times of pain and grief, we want to come together - both to comfort each other and to demand a better future," Malcolm said in a statement. "The ongoing COVID-19 pandemic makes this more difficult. As Minnesotans find peaceful ways to express themselves and speak their truths, please help us protect our most vulnerable neighbors from additional suffering and pain."

The Minnesota Department of Health also reported another 584 infections Friday, bringing the state total to 23,531 laboratory-confirmed cases.

There are 592 patients hospitalized and 259 in critical condition. Another 16,930 patients have recovered enough that they no longer need to be isolated.

Coronavirus Friday update: 29 more Minnesotans die as death toll approaches 1,000

The state continues to see testing for the coronavirus increase with the results of 8,665 tests released Friday. State leaders hope to soon be able to test 10,000 samples per day.

Since local testing became available, Minnesota has a cumulative positive test rate of 10 percent. Some private labs only report positive test results.

Coronavirus: 8 things we got wrong - at first - about the deadly pandemic Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE LXII. DOWNTOWN MINNEAPOLIS PREPARES FOR WEEKEND PROTESTS

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 332 wordsByline: Carter JonesBody

Downtown Minneapolis office workers only just recently started trickling back to work after staying away for weeks during the state's stay-at-home order. Restaurants on Nicollet Mall were preparing their patios for outdoor service to begin next week.

But on Friday, crews were boarding up storefronts, restaurants and office towers to protect from looting and vandalism that has erupted across the Twin Cities since the death of George Floyd, who died Monday after a Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck for several minutes in an incident caught on cellphone video.

After initially peaceful protests, recent days have seen increasingly violent unrest erupt around the city. Protesters overran and burned the Police Department's Third Precinct building, as well as several small businesses around it and on Lake Street. On Thursday the mayhem spread to St Paul, where more than 170 businesses were damaged.

Downtown Minneapolis prepares for weekend protests

So far, protests downtown have been relatively quiet, though Nordstrom Rack and the Xcel Energy Inc. headquarters on Nicollet Mall had significant damage, but further intrusion was prevented by having security on-site, said Minneapolis Downtown Council CEO Steve Cramer.

Preparations for possible trouble started early Thursday, with a safety briefing that involved over 300 people.

"Folks were ready for what they knew was going to be a challenging evening," Cramer said. "There was a lot of property damage, but it doesn't compare to Lake Street."

Going into the weekend, Cramer advised downtown businesses to take precautions and be as prepared as possible for vandalism and wanton disregard of property.

"Having supplies on hand to quickly repair stops groups from coming back," Cramer said.

"Wells Fargo and large downtown corporations have resources to deal with damages. It's different in magnitude and companies being affected from Lake Street and University Avenue."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 29, 2020

ARTICLE LXIII. TWIN CITIES CEOS, VCS SPEAK OUT AFTER WEEK OF RACIAL STRIFE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 697 wordsByline: Carrigan MillerBody

More than two dozen of Minnesota's most recognizable CEOs are signatories of a letter mourning the killing of George Floyd and calling for change at their respective businesses.

Venture capitalists, meanwhile, have released a letter of their own condemning the actions of Tom Austin, an investor who threatened to call the police on a group of black entrepreneurs who were using the gym in their shared building.

The CEO letter, released by health system Children's Minnesota, is signed by 28 local CEOs, including the leaders of corporations like Best Buy Co. Inc. Cargill Inc., General Mills Inc and US Bancorp. It addresses the death of Floyd earlier this week during an altercation with Minneapolis police officers, including one who kept his knee on Floyd's neck for several minutes while the man said he was having trouble breathing. The incident triggered days of protests that spun into violence, with hundreds of storefronts damaged or looted.

Twin Cities CEOs, VCs speak out after week of racial strife

"His death while being restrained by Minneapolis police officers is yet another senseless loss of life - one that reflects deeply ingrained, long-standing injustice within our society," the letter reads. "It is hard to watch the video of the event as it is clearly evident Mr. Floyd was not treated with the dignity and respect he was due as a human being. These acts are painful and traumatic for our entire community, especially our communities of color. "

The signatories committed to making "substantive change" in their organizations, though they didn't specify what those changes would be.

Click here to read the full version of Children's Minnesota's letter

Startup coalition Forge North also put out a letter signed by 18 venture capitalists and angel investors in response to what the letter describes as "racial profiling" by Austin at the gym in the Mozaic East building in Uptown Minneapolis. Austin believed that members of the social media agency Top Figure were in the building without permission, even though Top Figure is a tenant of the WeWork in the same building.

"We, the Minnesota Venture Capital community, reject Tom Austin's actions," the letter reads. "We are committed to broadening and demystifying the closed networks that usually accompany venture capital. Our doors are open, and to our communities of color and all underrepresented entrepreneurs - we stand by you.'

Click here to read the full version of Forge North's letter

The list of signatories to the Children's Minnesota letter:

- Dr. Penny Wheeler - Allina Health
- Jay Lund - Andersen Corp.
- Corie Barry - Best Buy Co Inc.
- Dr. Craig E. Samitt - Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota
- David MacLennan - Cargill Inc.
- Dr. Marc Gorelick - Children's Minnesota
- Bob Biesterfeld - C.H. Robinson Worldwide Inc.
- Doug Baker - Ecolab Inc.
- Michael J. O'Leary - Ernst & Young
- Jeff Harmening - General Mills Inc.
- Peter Frosch - Greater MSP
- Andrea Walsh - HealthPartners
- Beth E. Ford - Land O'Lakes Inc.
- Geoff Martha - Medtronic
- Charlie Weaver - Minnesota Business Partnership
- Craig Leipold - Minnesota Wild
- Daniel L. Johnson - Mortenson Construction

Twin Cities CEOs, VCs speak out after week of racial strife

- David C. Mortenson - Mortenson Construction
- Chad Abraham - Piper Sandler Cos.
- Mark Urdahl - Red Wing Shoes
- Brian C. Murray - Ryan Cos. US, Inc.
- Lisa Brezonik - Salo
- Christopher M. Hilger - Securian Financial Group Inc.
- Archie Black - SPS Commerce Inc.
- Julie Sullivan - University of St. Thomas
- Andrew Cecere - US Bancorp
- Laurie Nordquist - Wells Fargo MN
- Ben Fowke - Xcel Energy Inc.

And the full list of signatories to the Forge North letter:

- Greg Beaufait - Dundee VC
- Brett Brohl - The Syndicate Fund
- Ryan Broshar - Matchstick Ventures
- Brittany Clements - Allianz Life Ventures
- Cathy Connett - Sofia Fund
- Lisa Crump - Sofia Fund/Cairn Ventures
- David Dalvey - Brightstone Venture Capital
- Andrew Felbinger - Urban Innovation Fund
- Mary Grove
- Joy Lindsay - Sofia Fund/StarTec Investments
- Kevin McArdle - SureSwift Capital, Tech.MN
- Andrew Murphy - Loup Ventures
- Mike Proman
- Matthew Risley - QED Investors
- David Russick - Gopher Angels
- Dee Thibodeau - Sofia Fund
- Rob Weber - Great North Labs
- Ryan Weber - Great North Labs

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 1, 2020

End of Document

Unrest may scramble reopening plans for patios

ARTICLE LXIV. UNREST MAY SCRAMBLE REOPENING PLANS FOR PATIOS

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 29, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 405 wordsByline: Dylan ThomasBody

With their businesses stifled by the pandemic, many bar, restaurant and taproom owners were looking forward to reopening their patios June 1. Community unrest following the death of George Floyd may be rewriting those plans.

That's the case for Minneapolis-based Surly Brewing Co., whose beer garden is the largest patio in the Twin Cities. On May 28, after two days of protests both peaceful and destructive, the company posted a message to social media announcing a delay to the June 1 reopening of its outdoor dining and drinking areas.

"As a Minneapolis brewery, we're living through the news about our community," wrote Tiffany Jackson, Surly's senior communications manager, in an email.

Jackson said the brewery had also paused takeout and delivery operations, which are the only way many hospitality businesses have been able to reach customers since Gov. Tim Walz ordered dining rooms closed March 17 to slow the spread of Covid-19. Surly plans to resume those operations Tuesday, and Jackson said an announcement on the patio would follow.

Unrest may scramble reopening plans for patios

In the meantime, Surly planned an emergency food drive 12:30 p.m.-3 p.m. at its brewery, 520 Malcolm Ave. SE. Donated items will be sent to residents of Minnehaha Commons, a residential facility run by Minneapolis nonprofit Touchstone Mental Health and located on a stretch of East Lake Street where grocery stores and other businesses were burned and looted.

Finnegan's Brew Co. was also evaluating its June 1 reopening plan as of Friday, a spokesperson for the downtown Minneapolis brewery and taproom said. Finnegan's donates all of its profits to hunger relief, and CEO Jacquie Berglund said she was eager to keep that mission on track.

"I'm trying to keep the wheels on the wagon," Berglund said.

Minneapolis-based Blue Plate Restaurant Co. announced via social media on Thursday that it was closing all of its Minneapolis restaurant locations "due to the current unrest in the community." A follow-up post about the Longfellow Grill, its East Lake Street restaurant with a large patio scheduled to open June 2, stated that all restaurant operations were suspended "until we feel like our communities are stable enough for us to open our patios and bring our teams safely into work to serve you."

Spokesperson Blois Olson said the company was taking things "day-by-day."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: May 29, 2020

Majority of those arrested in George Floyd protests and riots gave Minnesota addresses

ARTICLE LXV. MAJORITY OF THOSE ARRESTED IN GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS AND RIOTS GAVE MINNESOTA ADDRESSES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 851 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: State officials said Saturday that a number of outsiders are fueling the destruction and rioting in the Twin Cities, though most of those arrested so far appear to have Minnesota addresses. Gov. Tim Walz estimated on Saturday morning that about 80 percent of the people causing problems Friday night were from outside Minnesota. Later Saturday, [...]

Body

State officials said Saturday that a number of outsiders are fueling the destruction and rioting in the Twin Cities, though most of those arrested so far appear to have Minnesota addresses.

Gov. Tim Walz estimated on Saturday morning that about 80 percent of the people causing problems Friday night were from outside Minnesota. Later Saturday, he said, "We'll find out when this is over. We'll have a much bigger data set after tonight and we'll be able to see what's happening."

Hennepin County jail records and arrest records in St. Paul show the majority of those in custody gave Minnesota addresses.

Four of 18 people arrested in St. Paul between Thursday and Saturday at 6 a.m. were from out of state - from Fort Worth, Texas, La Crosse, Wis., Grand Forks and Fargo. Two did not have addresses listed.

The rest of the arrests in St. Paul were people from Minnesota:

Five from St. Paul Three from Woodbury Two from Minneapolis One from St. Louis Park One from Mankato

"The number of arrests we've made is a very, very small percent of the people who are out there causing problems," Steve Linders, a St. Paul police spokesman, said Saturday. "We've been focused on protecting people and firefighters so they can protect property. I don't think you can look at 18 people and say it reflects the total number of people out there causing problems."

Protests have been underway since George Floyd died in Minneapolis police custody on Monday and unrest has been growing, with rioting, looting and arson being seen. Derek Chauvin, who has been fired from the Minneapolis police department, was charged Friday with third-degree murder and manslaughter.

Majority of those arrested in George Floyd protests and riots gave Minnesota addresses

Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said Saturday that as officials make arrests, they are investigating who those individuals are and whether they are associated with any groups.

"We have seen things like white supremacist organizers posting on platforms about coming to Minnesota," Harrington said. He added that officials are also looking into connections with organized crime.

The Hennepin County Sheriff's Office provided the following details about arrests from 12:20 a.m. Friday to 11:21 a.m. Saturday, saying 42 of 57 people booked into the jail in connected to protesting gave a Minnesota address:

32 were from Minneapolis or St. Paul 13 were from other metro cities 2 were from non metro cities 10 were from other states/information not provided

A Pioneer Press analysis of Hennepin County jail records revealed details about eight arrested who gave addresses from other states. They were:

A Miramar, Fla., man, 22 , for burglary A Temperance, Mich., man, 27, for riot A Chicago man, 19, for burglary A Chicago man, 22, for burglary A Sutton, Ark., man, 21, for burglary A Matteson, Ill., man, 47, for possession of burglary tools A Kansas City, Mo., man, 29, for riot An Ames, Iowa, man, 22, was being held on a weapons charge.

The rest of those in the jail after protest-related arrests were from other Minnesota cities, including Brooklyn Park, Hastings, Blaine, Burnsville, Lakeville, Big Lake, New Brighton and Inver Grove Heights.

Attorney General William P. Barr said in a Saturday statement that while the outrage about Floyd's death was real and legitimate, it is also being exploited by agitators.

"Unfortunately, with the rioting that is occurring in many of our cities around the country, the voices of peaceful protest are being hijacked by violent radical elements," his statement said.

"Groups of outside radicals and agitators are exploiting the situation to pursue their own separate and violent agenda," Barr continued. "In many places, it appears the violence is planned, organized, and driven by anarchistic and far left extremists, using Antifa-like tactics, many of whom travel from out of state to promote the violence. We must have law and order on our streets and in our communities, and it is the responsibility of the local and state leadership, in the first instance, to halt this violence."

Barr also noted that it was a federal crime to "cross state lines or to use interstate facilities to incite or participate in violent rioting. We will enforce these laws."

Meanwhile, the St. Paul Branch of the NAACP released a statement on Saturday condemning the violence that accompanied protests as a "mockery of our long-standing efforts to create a peaceful society built on mutual respect, justice, and equality for all."

The NAACP said while it supports protesting "as a legitimate way of expressing the community's sadness, anger, and frustration at the continued and systematic oppression of people of color in Minnesota and throughout our country" it condemns the violence that accompanied the protests.

Majority of those arrested in George Floyd protests and riots gave Minnesota addresses

Mara H. Gottfried and Mary Divine contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Photos: Friday night protests around the nation sparked by George Floyd death

ARTICLE LXVI. PHOTOS: FRIDAY NIGHT PROTESTS AROUND THE NATION SPARKED BY GEORGE FLOYD DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1245 words

Byline: Sudhin Thanawala

Highlight: ATLANTA - Protesters burned businesses in Minneapolis. They smashed police cars and windows in Atlanta, broke into police headquarters in Portland, Oregon, and chanted curses at President Donald Trump outside the White House. Thousands also demonstrated peacefully, demanding justice for George Floyd, a black man who died after a white officer pressed a knee into [...]

Body

ATLANTA - Protesters burned businesses in Minneapolis. They smashed police cars and windows in Atlanta, broke into police headquarters in Portland, Oregon, and chanted curses at President Donald Trump outside the White House. Thousands also demonstrated peacefully, demanding justice for George Floyd, a black man who died after a white officer pressed a knee into his neck.

As anger over Floyd's killing spread to cities nationwide, local leaders increasingly said they could need help from National Guardsmen or even military police to contain the unrest.

Georgia's governor declared a state of emergency early Saturday to activate the state National Guard as violence flared in Atlanta. Portland Mayor Ted Wheeler also declared an emergency and ordered a nighttime curfew for the city.

Another 500 Guard soldiers were mobilized in and around Minneapolis, where Floyd died and an officer faced charges Friday in his death. But after another night of watching fires burn and businesses ransacked, Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz said early Saturday that he was moving to activate more than 1,000 more and was considering federal help.

The Guard was also on standby in the District of Columbia, where a crowd grew outside the White House and chanted curses at President Donald Trump. Some protesters tried to push through barriers set up by the U.S. Secret Service along Pennsylvania Avenue, and threw bottles and other objects at officers wearing riot gear, who responded with pepper spray.

"I just feel like he's just one of many names that we've had to create hashtags and T-shirts and campaigns for and I feel like nothing has changed," district resident Abe Neri said of Floyd. "And so that's why I'm out here. Yeah, when you say nothing you're taking the side of the oppressor."

Photos: Friday night protests around the nation sparked by George Floyd death

A person was killed in downtown Detroit just before midnight after someone in an SUV fired shots into a crowd of protesters near the Greektown entertainment district, police said. In Portland, Oregon, protesters broke into police headquarters and authorities said they lit a fire inside. In Virginia's capital, a police cruiser was set on fire outside Richmond police headquarters, and a city transit spokeswoman said a bus set ablaze was "a total loss," news outlets reported.

Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp tweeted that up to 500 members of the Guard would deploy immediately "to protect people & property in Atlanta." He said he acted at the request of Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms, who earlier appealed in vain for calm.

In scenes both peaceful and violent across the nation, thousands of protesters chanted "No justice, no peace" and "Say his name. George Floyd." They hoisted signs reading: "He said I can't breathe. Justice for George."

Some demonstrators smashed police cars and spray-painted the iconic logo sign at CNN headquarters in downtown Atlanta. At least three officers were hurt and there were multiple arrests, Atlanta police spokesman Carlos Campos said, as protesters shot at officers with BB guns and threw bricks, bottles and knives.

Atlanta officials said crews were temporarily unable to reach a fire at Del Frisco's restaurant in the Buckhead neighborhood several miles north because of protesters there.

"This is not in the spirit of Martin Luther King, Jr.," Bottoms said. "You are disgracing the life of George Floyd and every other person who has been killed in this country."

Bottoms was flanked by King's daughter, Bernice King, and rappers T.I. and Killer Mike.

"We have to be better than burning down our own homes. Because if we lose Atlanta what have we got?" said Killer Mike, crying as he spoke.

Video posted to social media showed New York City officers using batons and shoving protesters down as they took people into custody and cleared streets. One video showed an officer slam a woman to the ground as he walked past her in the street.

Demonstrators rocked a police van, set it ablaze, scrawled graffiti across its charred body and set it aflame again as officers retreated. Blocks away, protesters used a club to batter another police vehicle.

"There will be a full review of what happened tonight," Mayor Bill de Blasio tweeted, referring to the Brooklyn protest. "We don't ever want to see another night like this."

The police department said numerous officers were injured, including one whose tooth was knocked out.

The names of black people killed by police, including Floyd and Eric Garner, who died on Staten Island in 2014, were on signs and in chants.

"Our country has a sickness. We have to be out here," said Brianna Petrisko, among those at lower Manhattan's Foley Square, where most were wearing masks amid the coronavirus pandemic. "This is the only way we're going to be heard."

Photos: Friday night protests around the nation sparked by George Floyd death

Protesters in Houston, where Floyd grew up, included 19-year-old Jimmy Ohaz from the nearby city of Richmond, Texas: "My question is how many more, how many more? I just want to live in a future where we all live in harmony and we're not oppressed."

Demonstrators on the West Coast blocked highways in Los Angeles and Oakland, California.

About 1,000 protesters in Oakland smashed windows, sprayed buildings with "Kill Cops" graffiti and were met with chemical spray from police, who said several officers were injured by projectiles.

One Los Angeles officer received medical treatment, police said. An LAPD vehicle had its windows smashed, and at least one city bus was vandalized. Police declared an unlawful assembly throughout downtown, where aerial footage from KTLA-TV showed scores of people corralled by police.

An LAPD spokesman told The Associated Press they were still tallying arrests.

"I believe in our city. L.A. is strong enough to stand for justice and walk in love," Mayor Eric Garcetti tweeted, cautioning "violence and vandalism hurts all."

San Jose, California, police said that Santa Clara County sheriff's deputies shot at a fleeing SUV that was shown on video striking protesters, the San Jose Mercury News reported.

Protesters repeatedly clashed with police in San Jose, said Mayor Sam Liccardo, and police responded with flash-bang grenades and rubber bullets. One officer was hospitalized with a non-life-threatening injury, officials said.

Liccardo said his city's officers shared the community's outrage over Floyd's death.

"It was a horrible injustice," he told the AP.

Portland, Oregon, police said at least one shooting was tied to the protest, although details weren't immediately released. Two people were arrested during overnight riots in which protesters set fires throughout downtown and smashed storefront windows, police said, but arrest details were immediately available.

Police, who declared the protest a riot, said they deployed gas after people threw projectiles at them.

Mayor Wheeler tweeted a plea to protesters to remain peaceful and said that, while he had left the city to attend to his dying mother, he was heading back. He later declared a state of emergency.

"Portland, this is not us," he wrote. "When you destroy our city, you are destroying our community. When you act in violence against each other, you are hurting all of us. How does this honor the legacy of George Floyd?" Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Photos: Friday night protests around the nation sparked by George Floyd death

End of Document

Watch: Tim Walz speaks at 2 a.m. as thousands ignore Minneapolis curfew in George Floyd protests

ARTICLE LXVII. WATCH: TIM WALZ SPEAKS AT 2 A.M. AS THOUSANDS IGNORE MINNEAPOLIS CURFEW IN GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1229 words

Byline: Aaron Morrison, Tim Sullivan

Highlight: Thousands of protesters ignored a curfew and vows of a forceful police response to take to the Minneapolis streets for a fourth straight night, as the anger stoked by the death of George Floyd in police custody spread to more cities across the U.S. The Pentagon on Saturday ordered the Army to put military police [...]

Body

Thousands of protesters ignored a curfew and vows of a forceful police response to take to the Minneapolis streets for a fourth straight night, as the anger stoked by the death of George Floyd in police custody spread to more cities across the U.S.

The Pentagon on Saturday ordered the Army to put military police units on alert to head to the city on short notice at President Donald Trump's request, according to three people with direct knowledge of the orders who did not want their names used because they were not authorized to discuss the preparations. The rare step came as the violence spread to other cities: a man shot dead in Detroit, police cars battered in Atlanta and skirmishes with police in New York City.

Criminal charges filed Friday morning against the white officer who held his knee for nearly nine minutes on the neck of Floyd, a black man, did nothing to stem the anger. Derek Chauvin, 44, was charged with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

Minneapolis police said shots had been fired at law enforcement officers during the protests but no one was injured.

As the night dragged on, fires erupted across the city's south side, including at a Japanese restaurant, a Wells Fargo bank and an Office Depot. Many burned for hours, with firefighters again delayed in reaching them because areas weren't secure.

Shortly before midnight, scores of officers on foot and in vehicles moved in to curb the violence, one day after city and state leaders faced blowback for their handling of the crisis. On Thursday, protesters had torched a police station soon after it was abandoned by police and went on to burn or vandalize dozens of businesses.

Watch: Tim Walz speaks at 2 a.m. as thousands ignore Minneapolis curfew in George Floyd protests

The new round of unrest came despite Gov. Tim Walz vowing early in the day to show a more forceful response by the state than the one Thursday run by Minneapolis city leaders. But by early Saturday morning, Walz was acknowledging he didn't have enough manpower, even with some 500 Guard soldiers.

"We do not have the numbers," Walz said. "We cannot arrest people when we are trying to hold ground."

Walz said he was moving quickly to mobilize more than 1,000 more Guard members, for a total of 1,700, and was considering the potential offer of federal military police. But he warned that even that might not be enough, saying he expected another difficult night Saturday.

The Minnesota Police and Peace Officers Association urged Walz to accept any help.

"You need more resources," the group said in a tweet. "Law enforcement needs leadership."

Not all the protests were violent. Downtown, thousands of demonstrators encircled a barricaded police station after the 8 p.m. Friday curfew. "Prosecute the police!" some chanted, and "Say his name: George Floyd!" Some protesters sprayed graffiti on buildings.

Anger filled the streets of Minneapolis.

Ben Hubert, a 26-year-old local resident, said he wasn't surprised people were breaking curfew and setting fires.

"I'm outraged," he said of the Floyd case. "But I'm also sad. The injustice has been going on for so long. It's been swelling for years."

Chauvin was also accused of ignoring another officer who expressed concerns about Floyd as he lay handcuffed on the ground, pleading that he could not breathe while Chauvin pressed his knee into his neck for several minutes. Floyd, who was black, had been arrested on suspicion of using a counterfeit bill at a store.

Chauvin, who was fired along with three other officers who were at the scene, faces more than 12 years in prison if convicted of murder.

An attorney for Floyd's family welcomed the arrest but said he expected a more serious murder charge and wants the other officers arrested, too.

Prosecutor Mike Freeman said more charges were possible, but authorities "felt it appropriate to focus on the most dangerous perpetrator."

Protests nationwide have been fueled by outrage over Floyd's death and years of police violence against African Americans. Protesters smashed windows at CNN headquarters in Atlanta, set a police car on fire and struck officers with bottles. Large demonstrations in New York, Houston, Washington, D.C., and dozens of other cities ranged from people peacefully blocking roads to repeated clashes with police.

"You are disgracing our city," Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms told protesters. "You are disgracing the life of George Floyd and every other person who has been killed in this country."

Watch: Tim Walz speaks at 2 a.m. as thousands ignore Minneapolis curfew in George Floyd protests

Police were trying to put Floyd in a squad car Monday when he stiffened and fell to the ground, saying he was claustrophobic, a criminal complaint said. Chauvin and Officer Tou Thoa arrived and tried several times to get the struggling Floyd into the car.

Chauvin eventually pulled Floyd out of the car, and the handcuffed Floyd went to the ground face down. Officer J.K. Kueng held Floyd's back and Officer Thomas Lane held his legs while Chauvin put his knee on Floyd's head and neck area, the complaint said.

When Lane asked if Floyd should be rolled onto his side, Chauvin said, "No, staying put is where we got him." Lane said he was "worried about excited delirium or whatever."

An autopsy said the combined effects of being restrained, potential intoxicants in Floyd's system and his underlying health issues, including heart disease, likely contributed to his death. It revealed nothing to support strangulation as the cause of death.

There were no other details about intoxicants, and toxicology results can take weeks. In the 911 call that drew police, the caller describes the man suspected of paying with counterfeit money as "awfully drunk and he's not in control of himself."

After Floyd apparently stopped breathing, Lane again said he wanted to roll Floyd onto his side. Kueng checked for a pulse and said he could not find one, according to the complaint.

Chauvin's attorney had no comment when reached by The Associated Press.

The prosecutor highlighted the "extraordinary speed" in charging the case four days after Floyd's death and defended himself against questions about why it did not happen sooner. Freeman said his office needed time to gather evidence, including what he called the "horrible" video recorded by a bystander.

Trump said Friday that he'd spoken to Floyd's family and "expressed my sorrow."

He called video of the arrest "just a horrible thing to witness and to watch. It certainly looked like there was no excuse for it."

Attorney Benjamin Crump, who is representing Floyd's family, asked to take custody of Floyd's body for an independent autopsy.

The doctor who will do the autopsy is Michael Baden, former chief medical examiner of New York City, who was hired to do an autopsy for Eric Garner, a black man who died in 2014 after New York police placed him in a chokehold and he pleaded that he could not breathe.

State and federal authorities also are investigating Floyd's death.

Associated Press writers Amy Forliti, Steve Karnowski, and Doug Glass in Minneapolis, Gretchen Ehlke in Milwaukee, Bernard Condon in New York, and James LaPorta in Delray Beach, Fla., contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Watch: Tim Walz speaks at 2 a.m. as thousands ignore Minneapolis curfew in George Floyd protests

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Before George Floyd's death, Minneapolis black activists saw progress on police reforms

ARTICLE LXVIII. BEFORE GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH, MINNEAPOLIS BLACK ACTIVISTS SAW PROGRESS ON POLICE REFORMS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1106 words

Byline: Aaron Morrison, Noreen Nasir

Highlight: Years of dialogue about police and criminal justice reforms in Minneapolis had improved the relationship between the African American community and law enforcement, activists say - before the police killing this week of George Floyd, a handcuffed black man who died after a white officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck for several minutes as [...]

Body

Years of dialogue about police and criminal justice reforms in Minneapolis had improved the relationship between the African American community and law enforcement, activists say - before the police killing this week of George Floyd, a handcuffed black man who died after a white officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck for several minutes as he pleaded for air.

Floyd's death and footage of his neck pinned under the officer's knee have unleashed protests and violent clashes with law enforcement - exposing simmering frustration and the fact that there's much work still ahead, several advocates and leaders told the Associated Press.

"Progress and change can ebb and flow," said Jeremiah Ellison, who won a City Council seat after participating in past protests against police killings of African Americans in Minnesota.

The four nights of unrest this week - including the torching of a police station that officers abandoned - "proved to me that we've regressed to the point of 2015," Ellison said, referring to the year that also saw protests after the death of Jamar Clark, a black man killed by police.

Minneapolis - a city of nearly 430,000 that is 60 percent white, 19 percent black and 9 percent Hispanic - has a long history of economic and educational disparities that have marginalized black residents for decades, despite its reputation for progressive values. It is one of the most segregated cities in the country for its size, and schools suffer from stubborn achievement gaps.

The city appointed its first black chief of police nearly three years ago, after slow progress toward making the department more inclusive. Earlier this year, a statewide task force made up of activists, people representing victims of police brutality, and law enforcement leaders released recommendations for policing reforms.

Before George Floyd's death, Minneapolis black activists saw progress on police reforms

That task force was formed in the wake of several high-profile fatal shootings of black men by police in the Minneapolis area. Those included Clark, who was killed during a struggle with two white Minneapolis officers, and Philando Castile, who was fatally shot by a Hispanic St. Anthony police officer during a Falcon Heights traffic stop in 2016.

While Nekima Levy Armstrong, a civil rights lawyer and former president of the Minneapolis NAACP, acknowledges that progress, she said that many old habits are still entrenched.

"The system itself has not changed," Armstrong said. "The culture within the Minneapolis Police Department has not changed."

The city's police department of more than 800 officers is still predominantly white, she said. The department did not respond to a request for up-to-date figures, but the Star Tribune reported in 2014 that the force, including cadets in field training, was 78.9 percent white, 9.2 percent black, 5.2 percent Asian, 4.1 percent Hispanic and 2.5 percent American Indian.

Some leaders, including former Mayor R.T. Rybak and state Sen. Jeff Hayden, have blamed the city's police union in recent days for fostering a culture that protects brutal officers and resists efforts at reform. The union's president, Lt. Bob Kroll, did not return a call seeking comment.

The eruption of anger in Minneapolis reflects frustration over these realities, despite some progress, said Teqen Zéa-Aida, a longtime activist in the city.

But the images themselves also demanded a "public response," he said, though he pushed for protests to happen online given the risks of gatherings during the coronavirus pandemic.

"We saw his eyes ... we saw a lynching. George Floyd is Emmett Till, 2020," he said, referring to the black 14-year-old who was abducted, beaten and killed in 1955 after he was accused of whistling at a white woman in Mississippi, a lynching that helped spur the civil rights movement.

Bystander video and photos of the arrest show Floyd on the ground with his neck under officer Derek Chauvin's knee, while Chauvin ignores his pleas for help. Two other officers appear to help hold him down, and a fourth attempts to keep space around the scene.

"My stomach hurts, my neck hurts, everything hurts ... I can't breathe," Floyd says in the video before eventually becoming motionless.

Police initially said they arrested Floyd because he matched the description of a man suspected of passing a counterfeit $20 bill at a South Minneapolis grocery store and that he resisted arrest. Police were trying to put Floyd in a squad car when he stiffened up and fell to the ground, saying he was claustrophobic, according to the criminal complaint detailing charges against Chauvin.

In addition to igniting the turmoil in Minneapolis, Floyd's death has garnered national attention, and it drew comparisons to the case of Eric Garner, a black man who died in 2014 in New York after he was placed in a chokehold by police and also said he could not breathe.

The delay in Chauvin's arrest may have also helped to drive the protests, which turned markedly more violent than those that followed the deaths of either Clark or Castile. Authorities arrested Chauvin and charged him Friday with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. His attorney had no comment when reached by the AP. The other three officers involved have not been charged, but the investigation is continuing. All four were fired Tuesday shortly after the video began circulating.

Before George Floyd's death, Minneapolis black activists saw progress on police reforms

Some activists and community leaders said they expected the protests to continue to push for the arrests of and charges for the three other officers.

Floyd's death "just touched people in a way that they didn't expect," said Armstrong.

"We must get to the underlying solutions or we will be right back here in a fairly short time," said Keith Ellison, the state's first African American attorney general, whose son is the Minneapolis city council member. "We've got to literally shift policing."

Ramsey County Undersheriff Bill Finney, who in 1992 became the first African American police chief in Minnesota when he was appointed to the job in St. Paul, said even when the relationship between police and the black community improves, all sides must guard against complacency.

"You have to constantly make deposits into the community bank of goodwill," Finney said. "You want to get to a place where the community stops considering you as 'the police' and starts seeing you as 'their police.'"

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

A Minneapolis civic leader reflects on police brutality, race relations, protesters and looters

ARTICLE LXIX. A MINNEAPOLIS CIVIC LEADER REFLECTS ON POLICE BRUTALITY, RACE RELATIONS, PROTESTERS AND LOOTERS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1712 words

Byline: Mary Divine

Highlight: After George Floyd died at the hands of Minneapolis police on Memorial Day, Abdul Omari was biking through the neighborhood at the center of the protests. Omari said he saw "fear and anger and sadness, hope and hopelessness." Omari is the founder of AMO Enterprise, a training institute that specializes in leadership development, diversity equity [...]

Body

After George Floyd died at the hands of Minneapolis police on Memorial Day, Abdul Omari was biking through the neighborhood at the center of the protests.

Omari said he saw "fear and anger and sadness, hope and hopelessness."

Omari is the founder of AMO Enterprise, a training institute that specializes in leadership development, diversity equity and inclusion. He also is lead consultant for a Minnesota Private College Fund's program for black men, which provides a financial scholarship, leadership development opportunities and mentoring.

Omari said he was reminded of the riots that occurred after the University of Minnesota men's hockey team won the national championship in 2003 and after the San Francisco Giants won the World Series in 2014.

"I want people to think of the events here as more warranted and justified," he said. "I thought of the differences between protesters, rioters and looters - there are major differences, and everyone should not be grouped together."

Omari, 34, served on the University of Minnesota's Board of Regents from 2013 to 2019 and led the regents' presidential search committee that picked Joan Gabel to be the U's 17th president.

He grew up in South Minneapolis, graduated from South High School and has three degrees from the U of M, including a doctorate in international development education.

In a phone interview with the Pioneer Press, Omari talked about race relations, riots and Gabel's decision to cut ties with the Minneapolis Police Department. The interview has been edited for length and clarity.

A Minneapolis civic leader reflects on police brutality, race relations, protesters and looters

Thank you for agreeing to talk to us about George Floyd and what has happened.

First and foremost, prayers and love to Mr. Floyd's loved ones and family and friends. Someone is dead, and he didn't have to die. He shouldn't be dead. Everything else comes later. I think the challenge for a lot of people is we ask too many questions right away; just stopping for a second and acknowledging that somebody is dead is very important.

Were you surprised by his death?

I am not surprised that George Floyd was killed. However, a death this close to home hits differently. I went to school very close to there. My father owned a small business right off of 35th and Cedar, so I was very frequently in those areas. I knew the folks who owned Cup Foods (where a clerk called 911 about Floyd) back when I was a kid.

One of the reasons why it's not surprising is because people of color, in particular black people, have had to try and find a way to shield themselves from the trauma and pain that things like this cause. We become numb to these things. It's very much a coping mechanism.

It's also important to note that none of these incidences are one-offs. What we are talking about is an accumulation of incidences that started with the beginning of policing, which came from the Ku Klux Klan as a way to keep [former] slaves enslaved. Those tactics and the laws have continuously shown that they disadvantage poor people and people of color.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

How can we change that?

When you have a system of policing that inherently is flawed, at its inception, to disadvantage people of color, plus a level of rules and regulations and laws that are being enforced that also significantly impact and disadvantage people of color, you have a system that is built to dismantle people of color. For me, none of this is a single thing.

Now, do I believe that the particular police officer who had his knee on Mr. Floyd's neck knew that what he was doing was wrong? Yes, yes, I do - absolutely. Do I think that he went into his day saying, "I'm going to try and kill a black person?" No. Do I believe that he has absorbed many of the things that America has absorbed and put into his mind that made him continue to act in the way that he did? Yes.

What do you think about the rioting?

Cub, Target, Aldi, which used to be Rainbow - I used to make weekly trips with my mom to those three stores, as much as I hated shopping. I live in downtown Minneapolis, but I still shop at that Cub, that Aldi and that Target. I am deeply saddened by what is happening.

All of the things that we've talked about from a systematic standpoint impact this. This is centuries of pent-up anger and frustration and, quite honestly, a yearning for how to display that - unfortunately, it's coming out in this way. It's not like all of a sudden a bunch of people decided to go and loot Target and burn it down. I'm not condoning it, but I just want to make that known.

What about the police response?

There are lots of police officers who are extremely upset with what happened to George Floyd. I know there are police officers that overnight were saving lives and businesses by breaking up rioters; there were officers that went into apartments and woke residents up to get out before fires would catch their building. In the midst of the chaos, this is happening, simultaneously.

The professional protesters are arriving - the ones who go around the country and cause unrest. Law enforcement is going to grow tired, both physically and mentally. We know that lack of proper rest leads to worse decision-making.

How does the history of the neighborhood play into this?

We have to acknowledge the entire history of our nation and the lands that were stolen from indigenous Native peoples. Neighboring the Third Precinct is South High School, which during my time at South had many Native students.

Moreover, we have to acknowledge in a time of stealing and looting that the nation was stolen and that black people were also stolen from the motherland and brought to this nation. So, yes, material items are being stolen today. In the past, bodies and land have been stolen. The blueprint was drawn long before this all began.

Is there any hope for improving relations with police?

The reality of that is anytime people of color see law enforcement officers in that kind of tactical gear, significant emotions and trauma are triggered. I know probably more police officers than the average person, particularly the average person of color, and I have many friends and a very close family member who is a police sergeant, and I still get nervous around cops.

I have been arrested. I've been followed. I have been pulled over for virtually no reason. I've had the talk with my dad about where to put my hands. I don't drive with my wallet in my pocket. I don't drive with a hat on; I always take my hat off.

I have played this in my head so many times: "All right, here's what we do. Here's how you got to do it." I used to work Marshall Field's in downtown Minneapolis, and I was followed by police in there, and I was an employee.

What's the call to action for white people?

Someone can't simply not be racist. You're either racist or anti-racist. From my perspective, both of those require that you cannot be neutral. Saying that "I'm not a racist" is not enough. To say that we're not racist means you're the opposite of racist, which would be anti-racist and being anti-racist requires action. It requires words. It requires doing things.

Sitting by neutrally is not OK, and it hasn't been. Come out as being anti-racist publicly and get others on board. I saw a lot of white people while I was out - one had a huge smoker and was making food for protesters, and others were handing out water.

A Minneapolis civic leader reflects on police brutality, race relations, protesters and looters

Some were in groups. This is another thing white people can do: Bring along other white people. Not only to protests, but also along the spectrum of equity and understanding of whiteness, white privilege and the systematic racism/inequity within which we live.

Any suggestions for starting that conversation?

I think you have a level of ability to talk about this, as a white person, that is less charged and won't put other white people in a defensive mode. I think that for a lot of black people and people of color, we're exhausted. We've been talking about it, we've been seeing it, we've been traumatized by it since the inception of the United States.

It can be more challenging at times to talk about it in a calm way or in a less emotional way. I'm not saying white people should speak on behalf of people of color. It's not that. It's: Speak your truth to folks who are denying that this exists. That can be powerful.

What do you think of President Gabel's decision to cut ties with the Minneapolis Police Department?

I'm a big fan of President Gabel. I think the statement that she made was bold, it was swift, it was decisive. It is commendable. I have gotten messages from people across the world who are alums of the university saying they have never been more proud to be an alum of the university.

If you look at the bus boycotts, it was boycotting the bus system to hit 'em where it counted - in their pockets. There is an incentive in the financial component, and I think that that is part of the brilliance of this move.

Any last thoughts?

Whenever I do seminars about equity, I always show pictures of my nieces and nephews, and I tell folks, "It's much easier to look at an adult and write off their experience. They'll be OK. They're grown adults." For me it's much harder when I look at a young person, when I look at my niece, when I look at my nephew. They are who I'm working for.

I took a walk shortly after Ahmaud Arbery (was killed in Georgia while out for a jog) with my nephew. He's 9. That's who I'm doing this for. I commend people who are still willing to have kids of color in the United States. I can't imagine being a parent. This is a frightening time.

Cornel West said, "Justice is unconditional love displayed in public." We need unconditional love right now. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Abdul M. Omari (Courtesy photo)

George Floyd (Courtesy of Christopher Harris via AP)

A Minneapolis civic leader reflects on police brutality, race relations, protesters and looters

A protester gestures in front of the burning 3rd Precinct building of the Minneapolis Police Department on Thursday, May 28, 2020, in Minneapolis.(AP Photo/Julio Cortez)

A chain portrait of George Floyd is part of the memorial for him, Wednesday, May 27, 2020. (AP Photo/Jim Mone)

Police officers fire dispersal ammunition in St. Paul's Midway neighborhood Thursday, May 28, 2020, during rioting following the Monday death of George Floyd while in police custody in Minneapolis. (John Autey/ Pioneer Press)

Joan Gabel talks to reporters on Northrop Mall after she is installed as the University of Minnesota's 17th President in Minneapolis on Friday, Sept. 20, 2019. (Jean Pieri / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Minnesota elected and community leaders plead with protesters to 'stay home' Saturday night

ARTICLE LXX.

MINNESOTA ELECTED AND COMMUNITY LEADERS PLEAD WITH PROTESTERS TO 'STAY HOME' SATURDAY NIGHT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 735 words

Byline: Christopher Magan

Highlight: Minnesota's top elected officials and a 10 community and religious leaders begged protesters who are mourning the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police to abide by an 8 p.m. curfew covering much of the Twin Cities metro area. "To be on the street after 8 means we can't separate you from [...]"

Body

Minnesota's top elected officials and a 10 community and religious leaders begged protesters who are mourning the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police to abide by an 8 p.m. curfew covering much of the Twin Cities metro area.

"To be on the street after 8 means we can't separate you from the bad people," state Attorney General Keith Ellison said at a Saturday afternoon news conference. "We need to be able to stop the burning and the looting and the destruction."

What in the world does burning down Migizi and Juxtaposition Arts in the Northside have to do with justice for George Floyd? Nothing.

We are asking for you to let the National Guard have the street after 8:00 p.m. so that we can restore order and build justice. pic.twitter.com/LwAxjAisWz

- Attorney General Keith Ellison (@AGEllison) May 30, 2020

State leaders say outside agitators have co-opted demonstrations protesting Floyd's death on Monday while in custody of Minneapolis police. Officials said they had growing evidence violent protesters were not locals.

In the days following Floyd's death the four officers on the scene that night have been fired and Chauvin has been arrested and charged with third-degree murder. What started as mostly peaceful demonstrations has turned into large-scale riots with looting, arson and wanton destruction in Minneapolis, St. Paul and surrounding communities.

Minnesota elected and community leaders plead with protesters to 'stay home' Saturday night

"They are using us," said Lul Osman, an advocate for Somali American women. "They are hiding behind us as they are burning down our businesses."

Gov. Tim Walz and local leaders have faced growing criticism for not being prepared to control the riots and destruction of the past nights. State and local officials have acknowledged they underestimated the size of the crowds that have taken to the streets.

Walz said he called on the group of leaders Saturday to help show that communities of color supported the work state and local officials were doing to get justice for George Floyd and his family. The Democratic governor said there was widespread agreement that violence and destruction did not honor Floyd's memory.

"We must allow this community to grieve and we must vow to do better," Walz said, noting that several who spoke were mentors to him. "I felt a weight was lifted off my heart just being in the presence of the people who are here."

One of those was Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan, who has not been in the same room as Walz in months because of the coronavirus pandemic. Flanagan, a member of the White Earth Nation, was a community organizer before being elected to state office and she worked with Walz when he was starting his political career.

Flanagan said her "heart and guts have been ripped out" because of the events of the last few days. She noted that landmarks and businesses important to communities of color have been destroyed by arson and vandalism.

"There are people who are burning down institutions that are at the core of who we are," Flanagan said. "We did not do that. We've been coming together to take care of our communities."

State and community leaders repeatedly made clear they were not condemning peaceful protests. They encouraged residents wanting to peacefully voice their anger and frustration about Minnesota's racial inequities to continue to do so.

But leaders begged them to be home by 8 p.m. to abide by curfews in place to try to quell the violence and destruction.

"I ask you to stay home tonight, but then to get up the next day and let's go to work because we have so much work to do," said Mary Merrill, the first woman of color to be superintendent of the Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board.

Walz acknowledge that Saturday night will likely be a dangerous one on the streets of the Twin Cities. He encouraged residents wanting to fight for change in honor of Floyd to heed the message of community leaders and stay home.

"This is our Minnesota. This is who we are," Walz said. "This is a decent state. We're not perfect, but we stand together on shared values of decency, of inclusion and that everybody gets an opportunity." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Minnesota elected and community leaders plead with protesters to 'stay home' Saturday night

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE LXXI. DEREK CHAUVIN'S WIFE FILING FOR DIVORCE, REPORT SAYS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 336 wordsByline: Kristi BelcaminoHighlight: Hours after former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin was charged with the murder of George Floyd, his wife announced that she is divorcing him, WCCO-TV reported Friday night.

According to WCCO, Kellie Chauvin released a statement through her attorney saying, "She is devastated by Mr. Floyd's death," sends condolences to his family and is divorcing [...]

Body

Hours after former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin was charged with the murder of George Floyd, his wife announced that she is divorcing him, WCCO-TV reported Friday night.According to WCCO, Kellie Chauvin released a statement through her attorney saying, "She is devastated by Mr. Floyd's death," sends condolences to his family and is divorcing Derek Chauvin.

She also asks that her family - her children from another marriage, her elderly parents and her extended family - be given safety and privacy.

Kellie Chauvin, who was profiled in the Pioneer Press in 2018, is a Laotian refugee who became the first Hmong Mrs. Minnesota. She told the Pioneer Press that she met Derek Chauvin when he dropped off a suspect at a Minneapolis hospital where she worked.

"Under that uniform, he's just a softie," the Oakdale resident said in the profile. "He's such a gentleman. He still opens the door for me, still puts my coat on for me. After my divorce, I had a list of must-haves if I were ever to be in a relationship, and he fit all of them."

On Memorial Day, Derek Chauvin was seen on a bystander's video pinning Floyd to the ground with his knee to Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes. Floyd, who was suspected of trying to pass a counterfeit $20 bill at a South Minneapolis grocery, is seen handcuffed and lying face-down while he pleads: "I can't breathe." He was later pronounced dead at a hospital.DEVELOPING: A lawyer has issued a statement from the wife of the now-arrested and charged former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, and she said she has filed for divorce. | <https://t.co/yzS05Ohnt5>- WCCO - CBS Minnesota (@WCCO) May 30, 2020

Derek Chauvin's wife filing for divorce, report says

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Trump walks back his incendiary Minneapolis 'thugs' post

ARTICLE LXXII. TRUMP WALKS BACK HIS INCENDIARY MINNEAPOLIS 'THUGS' POST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 977 words

Byline: Jill Colvin, Zeke Miller

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - President Donald Trump spent Friday walking back his post-midnight "thugs" tweet about Minneapolis protesters that added to outrage over the police killing of a black man.

Body

WASHINGTON - President Donald Trump spent Friday walking back his post-midnight "thugs" tweet about Minneapolis protesters that added to outrage over the police killing of a black man.

Trump's later repeated condemnation of the killing and outreach to the man's family was a marked change in tone from his earlier comments that also invoked a civil-rights-era phrase fraught with racist overtones.

"When the looting starts, the shooting starts," Trump had written in a tweet that was quickly flagged by Twitter as violating rules against "glorifying violence." Trump later said his comments had been misconstrued. "Frankly it means when there's looting, people get shot and they die," he said.

Trump's whiplash comments came after protesters torched a Minneapolis police station on Thursday night, capping three days of searing demonstrations over the death of George Floyd, who was captured on video pleading for air as a white police officer knelt on his neck for over eight minutes.

And they underscored Trump's complicated relationship with race as he tries to maintain a law-and-order mantle while looking to appeal to black voters during an election year. They also highlighted his refusal to avoid controversy or cede the spotlight even as the battered nation tries to make sense of another killing and reels over the mounting COVID-19 death toll.

Trump, in his tweets, borrowed a phrase once used by former Miami Police Chief Walter Headley in a 1967 speech outlining his department's efforts to "combat young hoodlums who have taken advantage of the civil rights campaign." In the speech, Headley said his department had been successful "because I've let the word filter down that when the looting starts, the shooting starts."

"We don't mind being accused of police brutality," he said in the same speech, according to news reports from the time.

Trump walks back his incendiary Minneapolis 'thugs' post

Trump, after hours of backlash, said Friday evening that he was unaware of the origins of the phrase. "But I've heard it for a long time, as most people have. And frankly it means when there's looting, people get shot and they die," he said.

Trump also revealed that he had been in touch with Floyd's family as he continued to denounce the circumstances of the man's killing, which he called "a terrible insult to police and to policemen."

"I just expressed my sorrow," Trump told reporters. "He was in tremendous pain, obviously, and couldn't breathe. And it was very obvious to anybody that watched it."

Still, Trump called on protesters to keep their demonstrations peaceful.

"The family of George is entitled to justice, and the people of Minnesota are entitled to live in safety," he said. "Law and order will prevail."

Criticism of the Trump's tweet had been swift, with his presumptive Democratic presidential rival Joe Biden saying it was "no time for incendiary tweets, no time to incite violence."

"It's not helpful," said Minnesota's Democratic Gov. Tim Walz. "Anything we do to add fuel to that fire is really, really challenging."

Rep. Emmanuel Cleaver, D-Mo., said that, as the country passed the grim milestone of more than 100,000 COVID-19 deaths, Trump had missed a chance to help the public cope with "two viruses: One is the coronavirus and the other is the virus of racial animus."

Trump has been accused of stoking racial tensions and exploiting divisions for personal gain since long before he ran for president, beginning with the full-page ads he ran in 1989 calling for the death penalty for the Central Park Five, five young men of color who were wrongly convicted of assaulting a white jogger.

Trump - who rarely holds his tongue - has been silent in the face of a long list of high-profile killings by police of black men, including Eric Garner, who was placed in a chokehold and whose dying words, "I can't breathe," became a rallying cry for the Black Lives Matter movement. (Trump has instead invoked those words on several occasions to mock political rivals, even bringing his hands to his neck for dramatic effect.)

He spent years railing against NFL quarterback Colin Kaepernick and other players for kneeling during the National Anthem to protest racial injustice and police brutality. And in one speech he appeared to advocate rougher treatment of people in custody, speaking dismissively of the police practice of shielding the heads of handcuffed suspects as they are being placed in patrol cars.

At the same time, Trump and his campaign have tried to make inroads with black Americans, particularly after Biden suggested last week that black voters who support Trump "ain't black." A bedrock of the Democratic base, black Americans are unlikely to embrace Trump en masse, but his campaign believes even a marginal shift could make a difference - and send a message to white voters uneasy about the president's charged rhetoric.

Meanwhile, the unrest complicates the Trump campaign's plans for Minnesota, one of the key swing states he hopes to win in November.

Trump walks back his incendiary Minneapolis 'thugs' post

Twitter's decision to flag Trump's tweet - the second time it has acted this week - came a day after he signed an executive order challenging the social media giant's protections against lawsuits as he accuses it of stifling conservative voices. The warning label prevented the tweet from being shared or liked, though it could still be viewed by users. The White House, trying to skirt the blockage, reposted the message on its own official Twitter account Friday morning. Twitter quickly flagged that tweet, too, accusing the White House of promoting violence.

Supporters of the president balked at the move.

Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale accused the media, Biden and other Democrats of "purposefully misrepresenting what the President had said, and showing once again that they are incapable of resisting their base impulse of dividing Americans, solely for the purpose of political gain, ratings, and cable news profit."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE LXXIII. TIM WALZ APOLOGIZES FOR ARREST OF CNN CREW AT GEORGE FLOYD PROTEST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 842 words

Byline: David Bauder

Highlight: NEW YORK - Following the arrest of a CNN crew on live television by police on Friday, an apologetic Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz promised that journalists would not be interfered with in reporting on violent protests following the death of George Floyd. CNN correspondent Omar Jimenez and two colleagues were released within an hour after [...]

Body

NEW YORK - Following the arrest of a CNN crew on live television by police on Friday, an apologetic Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz promised that journalists would not be interfered with in reporting on violent protests following the death of George Floyd.

CNN correspondent Omar Jimenez and two colleagues were released within an hour after network chief executive Jeff Zucker called Walz to demand answers about why they were led away and held in a police van.

"We have got to ensure that there is a safe spot for journalism to tell this story," Walz said.

Jimenez and colleagues Bill Kirkos and Leonel Mendez were doing a live shot for CNN's "New Day" shortly after 5 a.m. Central Time, describing a night of fire and anger in the wake of Floyd's death after a Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck. Fired officer Derek Chauvin was charged with murder in that case later Friday.

When first approached by officers, Jimenez, who is black, told them, "put us back where you want us. We are getting out of your way."

After being told he was being arrested and his hands were tied behind his back, Jimenez asked why he was being arrested. He did not get an answer.

The Minnesota State Patrol said on Twitter that the journalists were among four people arrested as troopers were "clearing the streets and restoring order" following the protests. The patrol said the CNN journalists "were released once they were confirmed to be members of the media."

Tim Walz apologizes for arrest of CNN crew at George Floyd protest

It's not clear why they were confused: Jimenez was holding what appeared to be a laminated ID card before his hands were secured, and his fellow crew members told police that they were from CNN and showing the scene live on the air.

"I've never seen anything like this," CNN "New Day" co-anchor John Berman said.

After being released, Jimenez said that he was glad that his arrest was shown on the air.

"You don't have to doubt my story," he said. "It's not filtered in any way. You saw it for your own eyes. That gave me a little bit of comfort. But it was definitely nerve-wracking."

At a later news conference, Walz said that "I take full responsibility. There is absolutely no reason something like that should happen ... This is a very public apology to that team."

The arrest drew widespread condemnation across the news industry. CNN competitors MSNBC, CBS News and Fox News all issued statements in support of Jimenez, along with the Society of Professional Journalists and the National Association of Black Journalists.

CNN accepted Walz's apology, saying the network appreciated the sincerity of his words.

Walz's words in support of journalists have impact at a time when the news media is often under attack, said Jane E. Kirtley, Silha Professor of Media Ethics and Law and director of the Silha Center at the University of Minnesota.

"It's really important for the governor to make that kind of statement to emphasize to everyone, especially law enforcement, that the press has an important job to do ... and they need to be respected," said Kirtley, who lives blocks away from the protests and could still smell smoke from the fires on Friday.

Later Friday, the network was again thrust into the story when hundreds of protesters confronted police outside CNN's downtown Atlanta headquarters. Activists spray-painted a large CNN logo outside the building, breaking a window and tagging doors. One protester climbed on top of the CNN sign and waved a "Black Lives Matter" flag to cheers from the crowd.

As anchor Chris Cuomo opened his prime-time show, he told viewers the network's headquarters had been "swarmed and defaced." Footage of the damage outside was mixed with scenes from other protests around the country.

Correspondent Nick Valencia reported from inside the building as protesters hurled objects at the building and police.

"This is our home, Chris, you know, this is where we come to work every day, journalists who are trying to tell the truth, trying to deliver information. ... And these demonstrators have decided to come here today to take out their frustration and anger it seems not just on police but on our CNN center as well," Valencia said.

Meanwhile, there were signs Friday that cable news networks, who were spending much of their time covering the story, have become sensitive to the impact of showing witness video of Floyd's treatment by police.

Tim Walz apologizes for arrest of CNN crew at George Floyd protest

News anchors on all three networks usually warned viewers of its graphic nature before showing the video.

"I must warn you that this is difficult to watch," said CNN's Brianna Keilar, "but it is important to remember."

Associated Press writers Gretchen Ehlke in Milwaukee and Aaron Morrison in New York and Television Writer Lynn Elber in Los Angeles contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE LXXIV. AS MINNEAPOLIS BURNS, MAYOR TAKES HEAT FOR THE RESPONSE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 929 wordsByline: Tammy Webber, Steve KarnowskiHighlight: First-term Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey appeared to be doing everything right. He worked with the city's booming business community and the City Council. He reached out to minority neighborhoods and advocated for affordable housing. He implemented stricter disciplinary measures against police who violated the city's body camera policy. When George Floyd, a handcuffed black man, [...]Body

First-term Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey appeared to be doing everything right.

He worked with the city's booming business community and the City Council. He reached out to minority neighborhoods and advocated for affordable housing. He implemented stricter disciplinary measures against police who violated the city's body camera policy.

When George Floyd, a handcuffed black man, died Monday after a white police officer pressed his knee into his neck for several minutes and ignored his "I can't breathe" pleas, Frey quickly expressed outrage and called for charges against the officer. Four officers were fired the next day, and on Friday, officer Derek Chauvin was charged in Floyd's death.

But Frey's leadership is being questioned after police failed to quell several nights of rioting, arson fires and ransacking of local businesses that followed Floyd's death. Frey, who pleaded for calm, also approved the decision to abandon the city's 3rd Precinct station on Thursday night, surrendering it to protesters who set fire to the building.

The night the station burned, Frey appeared at an early-morning news conference after hours of criticism on social media for a police response that didn't confront the violence despite the activation of the National Guard. As he began talking, one reporter snapped, "What's the plan here?" Frey struggled to answer, and the next morning, Gov. Tim Walz - like Frey, a Democrat - criticized the "abject failure" of the city's response and said the state had taken control. President Donald Trump took to Twitter to call Frey a "very weak Radical Left Mayor" and threatened to get involved.

By early Saturday morning, it was Walz who found himself struggling with the enormity of the challenge, conceding that he didn't have enough people to cope with the protests and moving to mobilize another

As Minneapolis burns, mayor takes heat for the response

1,000 Guard members. Walz also took pains to praise Frey, who appeared alongside him after another night of unrest.

Some wonder whether Frey's approach to the crisis might damage his chances for reelection next year. The 38-year-old former lawyer, community organizer and one-term City Council member took office in 2018 after defeating Betsy Hodges, whose time as mayor was marred by two high-profile police shootings.

The 2015 shooting of 24-year-old black resident Jamar Clark after a scuffle with two white police officers set off weeks of protests; neither officer was charged. The 2017 shooting of unarmed Australia native Justine Ruszczyk Damond, who had called 911 to report a possible sexual assault behind her house, provoked an international outcry. The black officer in that case was convicted of third-degree murder and is serving a 12.5-year term.

Frey campaigned partly on a promise to add police officers. But a City Council committee this spring voted against applying for a federal grant to hire 10 new officers for traffic enforcement, with one member saying he worried it would exacerbate racial disparities in vehicle stops.

Community activist Mel Reeves, who said he has led rallies to protest Floyd's killing, refused to discuss the mayor's response except to say that Frey had been "put in a difficult position." He said the black community doesn't trust police and prosecutors to do the right thing.

"The mayor is new, and he said all the right things," Reeves said. "This is not about the mayor; it's about the police department."

The day after the 3rd Precinct fire, University of Minnesota political science professor Larry Jacobs said Frey was "out of his depth" and "clearly unable to understand what he has to do to restore order while also creating the kind of healing that has to happen in Minneapolis."

He said abandoning the police station "sent a powerful message" that the city was not in control.

"There needs to be another message: 'Here is the line and order will be maintained,'" said Jacobs. "You've got businesses that are just shocked without words to see property going up in flames, often with no police intervention at all. You have the black community (that has) heard his words but does not believe them.

"He worked really hard at those relationships and they appear to be in tatters. And I think a lot of residents are unnerved by the violence and the chaos."

Jonathan Weinhagen, president and CEO of the Minneapolis Regional Chamber, said the mayor still has his support, and that many businesses damaged by the violent protests, including those owned by minorities and immigrants, want to rebuild.

"There is a lot of fear right now. If your store has been hit, you feel violated," said Weinhagen, adding that some businesses already were suffering because of the coronavirus restrictions. "They were just beginning to see some light and this hit."

But he believes the mayor is "leading with his values" and getting a lot of things right, including requesting the National Guard assistance initially and implementing a curfew Friday and Saturday nights.

As Minneapolis burns, mayor takes heat for the response

Jacobs said Frey has been energetic, upbeat and dynamic, effectively leading the fast-growing city. But his inexperience with crisis management has shown.

"Until about a week ago, he looked to be on glide path to reelection, and within a week, his mayorship looks like it's crumbled," Jacobs said.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey calls on Hennepin County attorney Mike Freeman to charge the arresting officer in the death of George Floyd as he speaks during a news conference Wednesday, May 27, 2020 at City Hall in Minneapolis. (Evan Frost/Minnesota Public Radio via AP)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Stunning mural of George Floyd provides community 'a place to process'

ARTICLE LXXV. STUNNING MURAL OF GEORGE FLOYD PROVIDES COMMUNITY
'A PLACE TO PROCESS'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1347 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: Minneapolis resident Dale Zarlee paused for a few minutes Saturday morning near the intersection of East 38th Street and Chicago Avenue, standing in the background before slowly making his way toward the George Floyd mural. With bouquets of flowers resting at his feet, and "I'll Be Missing You" by Puff Daddy blaring out of a [...]

Body

Minneapolis resident Dale Zarlee paused for a few minutes Saturday morning near the intersection of East 38th Street and Chicago Avenue, standing in the background before slowly making his way toward the George Floyd mural.

With bouquets of flowers resting at his feet, and "I'll Be Missing You" by Puff Daddy blaring out of a nearby car stereo, Zarlee put his hands on his head as he looked at the portrait of the man who died under a Minneapolis police officer's knee on Memorial Day.

"Senseless," Zarlee said.

Anoka resident Makena Hess arrived on the scene about 10 minutes later, completely consumed by her surroundings as she gazed at the mural from afar. She eventually made her way closer to the front, trying to compose herself as she stared at the wall.

"Brokenness," Hess said.

Minneapolis resident Monica Simmons showed up just as "NO JUSTICE, NO PEACE" chants broke out from the hundreds of protesters in attendance. She joined in as tears welled up in her eyes.

"Suffering," Simmons said.

Eventually, the "NO JUSTICE, NO PEACE" chants morphed into "I CAN'T BREATHE" chants, referencing some of the final words Floyd pleaded before he died.

As the scene built to a crescendo, the image, the name, and more importantly, the memory, of George Floyd served as the backdrop. Which was always the goal for local artist Xena Goldman when she decided to paint the mural in the first place.

Stunning mural of George Floyd provides community 'a place to process'

"It provides people a place to process," Goldman said. "I think having a place for people to come and cry or scream or pray or do whatever they need to do is really important."

'THIS IS OUR TOOL'

Like so many people, Goldman felt powerless in the immediate aftermath of Floyd's death, her sadness and anger simultaneously manifesting in her head with no rhyme or reason.

She wanted to help. She just wasn't sure how she could.

Then it hit her.

"As artists, this is our tool," Goldman said. "This is something we can do to serve the community and honor his memory."

As protests erupted in the days after Floyd's death, Goldman went down to the intersection of East 38th Street and Chicago Avenue to scope out the scene. She talked to members of the community Wednesday, two days after Floyd died, asking where they thought the best spot would be to commemorate him.

"They told me that Cup Foods would be a good spot because that's where he was killed," Goldman said. "There was a mural on the side of the building that had already been tagged over so we felt like the artist probably wouldn't mind."

With a location in mind, Goldman contacted fellow artists Cadex Herrera and Greta McClain, asking if they wanted to be a part of it.

They agreed and the artists met Thursday morning at the intersection of East 38th Street and Chicago Avenue.

"We wanted to do something and take action," Herrera said. "We couldn't just watch this happen and not be part of a process of change."

'HE WAS A LIGHT'

Before arriving Thursday morning, Goldman already had an idea of the larger-than-life portrait of Floyd she wanted to emblazon on the wall.

Likewise, Herrera had a concept for the background that he felt would honor Floyd for the person he was.

It featured his full name displayed prominently across the wall, the portrait resting in between, and in the backdrop, a sunflower with the names of other individuals who have been killed by police over the years.

"His name needed to be bold and needed to be big and needed to be bright," Herrera said. "To remind people that George Floyd was a human being full of life. He was a light to his family and his friends and his community. That needed to stand out."

Look closely inside the George Floyd lettering and notice images of protesters with their fists in the air. While they might be faceless, it's clear they are fathers, mothers and children joining together.

"I wanted to show the collective voice we have as a community," Herrera said. "They have their hands up in a fist showing that we are a community of power."

Stunning mural of George Floyd provides community 'a place to process'

No doubt the most impactful part of the background is the long list of names inside the sunflower. From Tamir Rice to Philando Castile to Jamar Clark to Freddie Gray to Michael Brown to Eric Garner to Sandra Bland, and so many more in between.

"I wanted to think of a connection that George Floyd was not the first person to be killed by the police," Herrera said. "Those names inside the sunflower are seeds that never got to fully grow. We didn't have enough space to put all the names. I don't think we would ever find enough space to put all the names."

With the ideas in their minds, Goldman, Herrera, and McClain got to work.

"We got there and it was just kind of discussing amongst us the best colors and the best ways to fill in everything else," Goldman said. "We just felt confident it would come together as we went along."

'DON'T LOOK AWAY'

As the day progressed, and Goldman, Herrera, and McClain made headway on the mural, other artists showed up to offer a helping hand. Niko Alexander, Maria Javier, and Pablo Hernandez joined in on the project, doing whatever they could to serve as support.

"We just came together as a group even though most of us didn't even really know each other," Herrera said. "It was collaborative. It was like, 'OK. You want to use that yellow? You want to use that blue? You want to add to it? You want to take away from it?' It was a fluid thing."

Meanwhile, some protesters demonstrated in the intersection about 50 yards away, while other protesters gathered around the work in progress.

"They stood with us the whole time," Goldman said. "It was really moving to be in that space and have so many members of the community talking about how important that felt for them and how healing it was for them."

As the crowd started to grow around the artists, even Rev. Jesse Jackson showed up at one point, watching the mural go up in real time before joining the protest.

"I stopped for a quick second and looked back and was like, 'Oh my god,'" Herrera said. "He went into the crowd and I put my brush down and went to the corner and listened to him for a few minutes. It moved me that we were doing something good for the community. It's a space for healing and light and to honor George Floyd for his life."

It took 12 hours to complete the mural and, as the artists were wrapping up, a woman from the community suggested they add the words "I CAN BREATHE NOW" at the bottom.

Initially, Goldman was hesitant. She understood the sentiment. She just didn't want to put words in Floyd's mouth.

"We wanted to be certain that it felt appropriate," Goldman said. "We didn't have any black artists in the group and we wanted to make sure the community felt like that statement was representative."

They had a woman do a poll, asking different members of the the community for their thoughts, and the response was overwhelmingly positive. That said, Goldman, Herrera, and McClain didn't want to be the people to paint that part.

Stunning mural of George Floyd provides community 'a place to process'

"We lettered it and had someone from the community paint the words," Goldman said. "That was the final touch of the mural and when he finished there was a big applause and it was a really beautiful moment."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

As she reflected on the mural a couple of days after its completion, Goldman paused when asked what she wants people to feel when they look at it. She took time to figure out what she wanted to say, and finally, it came to her.

"The fact that we couldn't come close to fitting all the names in the sunflower is a testament to the fact that it's been going on for way too long," Goldman said. "And it has to stop. I feel like this is a moment that the whole world, particularly Minneapolis, is screaming and saying, 'Look at us. Pay attention.' And I think a mural is a good format for that, saying 'Don't look away from this any longer.'"

Graphic

From left to right: Niko Alexander, Cadex Herrera, Greta McLain, Xena Goldman, Pablo Hernandez (Courtesy photo)

A group of artists paint a mural of George Floyd on the wall outside of Cup Foods, where Floyd was killed in police custody, on May 28, 2020 in Minneapolis, Minnesota. People have gathered at the site since Floyd was killed earlier this week. (Stephen Maturen/Getty Images)

Cadex Herrera continues work on a mural to George Floyd on the side of Cup Foods at 38th St. and Chicago Ave. in Minneapolis on Thursday, May 28, 2020. (John Autey/Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE LXXVI. MINNESOTA DFL POSTPONES 'VIRTUAL' CONVENTION; GOP'S WILL CONTINUE AFTER RESCHEDULING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 355 words

Byline: Forum News Service

Highlight: The Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party has postponed part of its 2020 virtual convention scheduled for this weekend in light of George Floyd's death on Monday. In a Friday news release, DFL Chairman Ken Martin said postponing the convention is "the only appropriate course of action given the grief and anger gripping much of our state and [...]"

Body

The Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party has postponed part of its 2020 virtual convention scheduled for this weekend in light of George Floyd's death on Monday.

In a Friday news release, DFL Chairman Ken Martin said postponing the convention is "the only appropriate course of action given the grief and anger gripping much of our state and nation." Floyd died Monday night after Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin knelt on his neck for several minutes and Floyd said he couldn't breathe. Chauvin was arrested and charged with murder on Friday.

After Floyd's death, thousands have protested throughout the Twin Cities - some peaceful and some resulting in stealing and arson fires. With Minnesota in unrest, Martin said, "Now is not the time for a partisan political rally."

The convention was slated to run Saturday morning through Sunday afternoon, with speaking appearances by former Vice President Joe Biden, Minnesota's Democratic congressional delegation and more. But the party said Friday the speaking and training portions of the convention are postponed to an unspecified date.

Electronic balloting to endorse the party's U.S. Senate candidate and other party positions opened earlier this week, and the party will still announce those results after ballots have been counted, per Friday's release.

A spokesperson for the Minnesota Republican Party said Friday that the state GOP's virtual convention is still scheduled for Saturday morning. The party was forced to reschedule its original convention weeks ago because of technical difficulties and suspected cyberattacks.

Minnesota DFL postpones 'virtual' convention; GOP's will continue after rescheduling

Both parties have opted for virtual conventions in order to avoid in-person gatherings during the coronavirus pandemic.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform MN top Republican: 'Leadership failed badly'; Sen. Paul Gazelka wants to end Walz emergency powers and 'pandemic fear' Did George Floyd memorial service violate Minnesota's coronavirus order? Pushing for race and police reforms, Walz fires shot at Republicans in Senate Walz extends curfew: 10 pm - 4 am Wednesday and Thursday nights in St. Paul and Minneapolis

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Protests, some violent, spread nationally in wake of George Floyd death

ARTICLE LXXVII. PROTESTS, SOME VIOLENT, SPREAD NATIONALLY IN WAKE OF GEORGE FLOYD DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1163 words

Byline: Sudhin Thanawala

Highlight: ATLANTA (AP) - Demonstrators marched, stopped traffic and in some cases lashed out violently at police as protests erupted Friday in dozens of U.S. cities following the killing of George Floyd after a white officer pressed a knee into his neck while taking him into custody in Minnesota.

Body

ATLANTA - Demonstrators marched, stopped traffic and in some cases lashed out violently at police as protests erupted Friday in dozens of U.S. cities following the killing of George Floyd after a white officer pressed a knee into his neck while taking him into custody in Minnesota.

Georgia's governor declared a state of emergency in one county to activate up to 500 members of the state National Guard "to protect people & property in Atlanta."

Gov. Brian Kemp said in a pair of tweets early Saturday that the move came at the request of Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms and in consultation with emergency officials. The Georgia National Guard will deploy "immediately" to assist law enforcement, he said.

In Minneapolis, where a police precinct was burned the night before, peaceful protests picked up steam as darkness fell, with thousands of people ignoring an 8 p.m. curfew to walk streets in the southern part of the city. Some cars were set on fire in scattered neighborhoods, business break-ins began and eventually there were larger fires. As a pair of restaurants and a Wells Fargo branch were set ablaze, a heavy contingent of National Guard, state troopers and police moved in, some on foot and some in vehicles.

In Phoenix, Denver, Las Vegas, Los Angeles and beyond, thousands of protesters carried signs that said: "He said I can't breathe. Justice for George." They chanted "'No justice, no peace" and "Say his name. George Floyd."

After hours of peaceful protest in downtown Atlanta, some demonstrators suddenly turned violent, smashing police cars, setting one on fire, spray-painting the iconic logo sign at CNN headquarters, and breaking into a restaurant. The crowd pelted officers with bottles, chanting "Quit your jobs."

Protests, some violent, spread nationally in wake of George Floyd death

At least three officers were hurt and there were multiple arrests, Atlanta police spokesman Carlos Campos said. Campos said protesters shot BB guns at officers and threw bricks, bottles and knives at them. People watched the scene from rooftops, some laughing as skirmishes broke out.

Bottoms passionately addressed the protesters at a news conference: "This is not a protest. This is not in the spirit of Martin Luther King Jr."

"You are disgracing our city," she told protesters. "You are disgracing the life of George Floyd and every other person who has been killed in this country. We are better than this. We are better than this as a city. We are better than this as a country. Go home, go home."

Bottoms was flanked by rappers T.I. and Killer Mike, as well as King's daughter, Bernice King.

Killer Mike cried as he spoke.

"We have to be better than this moment. We have to be better than burning down our own homes. Because if we lose Atlanta what have we got?" he said.

After Mayor Bottoms appealed for calm, the violence continued. More cars were set on fire, a Starbucks was smashed up, the windows of the College Football Hall of Fame were broken, and the iconic Omni Hotel was vandalized.

Protesters gathered outside the White House, with President Donald Trump inside, and some tried to push through barriers set up by the U.S. Secret Service along Pennsylvania Avenue.

An initially peaceful demonstration in New York City spiraled into chaos as night fell, as protesters skirmished with officers, destroyed police vehicles and set fires.

In Brooklyn, activists who had marched from Manhattan chanted insults at officers lined up outside the Barclays Center and pelted them with water bottles. Police sprayed an eye-irritating chemical into the largely diverse crowd multiple times, then cleared the plaza.

Video posted to social media showed officers using batons and shoving protesters down as they took people into custody and cleared streets.

Demonstrators rocked a police van, set it ablaze, then scrawled graffiti across its charred hulk and set it on fire a second time as officers retreated from the area. Blocks away, protesters used a club to batter another police vehicle.

Numerous people were arrested and police brought in buses to carry off those they arrested.

"We have a long night ahead of us in Brooklyn," Mayor Bill de Blasio tweeted. "Our sole focus is deescalating this situation and getting people home safe. There will be a full review of what happened tonight. We don't ever want to see another night like this."

The police department said numerous officers were injured, including one who had a tooth knocked out.

The names of black people killed by police, including Floyd and Eric Garner, who died on Staten Island in 2014, were on signs carried by those in the crowd, and in their chants.

Protests, some violent, spread nationally in wake of George Floyd death

"It's my duty to be out here," said Brianna Petrisko, among those at Foley Square in lower Manhattan, where most were wearing masks amid the coronavirus pandemic. "Our country has a sickness. We have to be out here. This is the only way we're going to be heard."

In Houston, where George Floyd grew up, several thousand people rallied in front of City Hall. Among them was 19-year-old Jimmy Ohaz, who came from the nearby city of Richmond, Texas.

"My question is how many more, how many more? I just want to live in a future where we all live in harmony and we're not oppressed."

Tensions rose in several West Coast cities as night fell and protesters blocked highways in Los Angeles and Oakland.

About 1,000 protesters gathered in Oakland. They smashed windows, sprayed buildings with "Kill Cops" graffiti and were met with chemical spray from police. Oakland Police were notifying a crowd that the demonstration was an unlawful assembly. Authorities said officers were injured when projectiles were thrown and that they were asking people to leave the area.

Demonstrators in Los Angeles scuffled at times with police, with a few protesters detained and one officer receiving medical treatment, police said. An LAPD vehicle had its windows smashed, and CNN reported that someone wrote "killer" on a patrol car.

Protesters repeatedly clashed with police in the Silicon Valley city of San Jose, said Mayor Sam Liccardo, and police responded with flash-bang grenades and rubber bullets. One officer was being treated at a hospital for an injury that was not life-threatening, he and police officials said.

Liccardo said his own officers shared the community's outrage over Floyd's in-custody death.

"It was a horrible injustice. I'd venture to guess that every police officer out there feels much of the same anger about what happened in Minneapolis," he told The Associated Press.

Thirty miles to the west, Santa Cruz police chief Andrew G. Mills said in a statement that the actions by Minneapolis officers in Floyd's death "are the antithesis of what we view as good policing." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Crowds ignore curfew amid more arson, looting; Walz will 'fully mobilize' National Guard

ARTICLE LXXVIII. CROWDS IGNORE CURFEW AMID MORE ARSON, LOOTING; WALZ WILL 'FULLY MOBILIZE' NATIONAL GUARD

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 769 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

Minneapolis and St. Paul endured another night of violence Friday into Saturday morning. Gov. Tim Walz said that protests that had begun largely peaceably in the wake of George Floyd's death in police custody had become mixed with "professional" violent influencers - whether from criminal gangs, domestic terrorists or international agents - who were aimed at destroying the city's social infrastructure.

"Our great cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul are under assault by people who do not share our values," Walz said, "and certainly are not here to mourn George Floyd." He said the state would "fully mobilize" the National Guard and would get more assistance from neighboring states.

The Star Tribune has a roundup of the night's violence, with fires flaring across the metro and especially around the Police Department's Fifth Precinct headquarters at Nicollet Avenue and 31st Street. Damaged buildings included a Wells Fargo bank, a Post Office and an office-supply store - but also a barbershop in North Minneapolis, a sign of targeted violence against black- and immigrant-owned businesses. In a press conference this morning, Mayor Jacob Frey said "the dynamic has changed," he said. "These people doing this are not from Minneapolis. ... This is no longer about protest; this is about violence and it needs to stop."

Crowds ignore curfew amid more arson, looting; Walz will 'fully mobilize' National Guard

St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter said that all of the Friday night arrests in St. Paul - which was spared the worst of violence that night - were of people who came from out of state, the Pioneer Press reports.

Thousands of people were in the streets, defying an 8 p.m. curfew order for both Minneapolis and St. Paul, but law enforcement presence was virtually absent until nearly midnight, despite the addition of National Guard members on Friday. Firefighters were also often absent, at least early in the evening; the department said they could not enter a scene without protection. By early Saturday morning crews, were battling blazes with escorts of National Guard and police.

Minnesota Public Radio has a report on a late-night briefing by Walz and other leaders, during which Walz acknowledges underestimating the size and aggression of the crowds Friday night. He suggested that much of the actual arson and violence was being perpetrated by people unrelated to the more peaceful protests earlier this week - white supremacists groups, drug cartels or anarchists - but that there were so many people in the streets that making actual arrests was impossible.

The Associated Press reports that more than 1,000 additional National Guard members were being mobilized Saturday, and the Pentagon has ordered U.S. Army military police units to head to Minneapolis if ordered by President Donald Trump.

The ongoing violence is taking a toll on businesses across the metro - the Star Tribune has detailed neighborhood maps of the buildings that have suffered damage this week. It also talks with business owners on Lake Street whose shops were looted or burned. Many entrepreneurs were already struggling as a result of the Covid-19 pandemic and state' stay-at-home order, which was lifted just recently.

The Business Journal also talked with University Avenue Business owners on Friday as they cleaned up damage from Thursday night riots.

Business insurance will likely cover much of the damage, but experts said owners should act quickly to document losses. The economic shock of the pandemic could also complicate insurance payouts.

Restaurants and other businesses that had hoped to reopen next week are delaying those plans.

The Associated Press has details on the professional background of former Minneapolis Police Officer Derek Chauvin, who became the focus of protests after video appeared of him kneeling on George Floyd's neck for nearly eight minutes before Floyd died.

Chauvin was fired shortly after the video became public and on Friday was charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter.

The CEO of Target Corp., which had one its Lake Street store ransacked by looters, told the Star Tribune the company hoped to reopen by year-end. Several other stores were damaged and could reopen within weeks. Target has also shut down several other Twin Cities locations during the unrest.

Crowds ignore curfew amid more arson, looting; Walz will 'fully mobilize' National Guard

Dozens of other chief executives, including the leaders of Best Buy Co. Inc. Cargill Inc., General Mills Inc. and U.S., Bancorp, signed a letter released by health system Children's Minnesota mourning the killing of George Floyd and calling for change at their respective businesses.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 1, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE LXXIX. EX-MINNEAPOLIS OFFICER CHARGED IN GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH HELD IN RAMSEY COUNTY JAIL

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 203 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: The former Minneapolis officer charged in the death of George Floyd has been held in the Ramsey County Jail since his arrest. Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension agents took Derek Chauvin into custody on Friday. "Due to the civil unrest, the BCA communicated with the Hennepin County Sheriff's Office which was dealing with potential threats [...]"

Body

The former Minneapolis officer charged in the death of George Floyd has been held in the Ramsey County Jail since his arrest.

Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension agents took Derek Chauvin into custody on Friday.

"Due to the civil unrest, the BCA communicated with the Hennepin County Sheriff's Office which was dealing with potential threats to their facilities at the time of the arrest," said Jill Oliveira, BCA spokeswoman. "They directed us to book him into the Ramsey County Jail."

Most inmates at the Ramsey County Jail are being held in cells without another person because of the risk of the coronavirus, said Ramsey County Sheriff Bob Fletcher. The jail also has a system of classifying inmates to "ensure the safety of everybody in our facility," he said.

Bail for Chauvin, who is charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter, is set at $500,000. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Derek Chauvin (Courtesy of Ramsey County Sheriff's Office)

Ex-Minneapolis officer charged in George Floyd's death held in Ramsey County Jail

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Expanded police/National Guard force gains upper hand in clashes with rioters

ARTICLE LXXX. EXPANDED POLICE/NATIONAL GUARD FORCE GAINS UPPER HAND IN CLASHES WITH RIOTERS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1782 words

Byline: Pioneer Press

Highlight: Gov. Tim Walz is fully mobilizing the National Guard for the first time in state history in order to combat rioting in Minneapolis.

Body

Expand

After nights of violence, the difference seen Saturday night into Sunday morning was striking - but officials cautioned the Twin Cities weren't out of the woods.

State and city officials had urged residents, especially in St. Paul and Minneapolis, to stay off their cities' streets Saturday, the second night of a curfew intended to quell violence that has erupted this week after the death of George Floyd.

Minneapolis - hit hard Friday night with fires and unrest - braced for another dangerous night but with a heavier presence of National Guard and law enforcement in the city.

Gov. Tim Walz said earlier in the day that he was taking the unprecedented action of fully mobilizing the National Guard.

In an update at 1 a.m. Sunday, Corrections Commissioner Paul Schnell - who is helping oversee operations in Minneapolis - said there had not been large issues in terms of property damage, "which we feel is fortunate, but we also do not want to be overly confident."

Officials felt the night "went far better" than previous ones because there was "clarity of mission, there was an overwhelming number of resources ... and there was incredible compliance" with the curfew, Schnell said.

"Many thousands" of law enforcement and Guard members were working in Minneapolis or guarding critical infrastructure, Schnell said. There were also thousands of personnel working Friday night, but there were much larger crowds then "and that force was overwhelmed and tonight that was not going to happen," he added.

Expanded police/National Guard force gains upper hand in clashes with rioters

Walz's message at the beginning of the evening to rapid-response teams and commanders overseeing mobile field forces was: "This will stop and it stops with us tonight. ... We need to give ... these neighborhoods back to the people who live there," according to Schnell.

Authorities closed freeways and highways around the Twin Cities metro area on Saturday at 7 p.m. They reopened between 4-5 a.m. on Sunday.

There had been no serious injuries reported as of early Sunday. Dozens of people had been arrested as of 10 p.m.

CALLING UP MORE GUARD MEMBERS

Up to 2,500 Guardsmen were expected to be deployed by midday Saturday and the rest will be available during coming days, according to Guard officials.

"We're gearing up, we're getting bigger, we're changing our approach and we are coming to stop it," said Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington.

A full activation could include between 7,000 to 10,000 members

Based on Saturday night and early Sunday, would there still be a need to fully activate the National Guard?

"I think the governor's commitment to this was we're in this until this is addressed and we do not feel that we are out of this yet," Schnell said. "I think it is critical for us to remain diligent ... until we are confident that regular, normal police operations can meet the public safety needs of the community."

Walz will also have to decide whether to extend the 8 p.m. curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis for another night.

ST. PAUL KEEPS MINNEAPOLIS PROTESTERS OUT

In St. Paul on Saturday night, police worked to keep an estimated 1,000 people from crossing the Lake Street-Marshall Avenue Bridge into the city. Police said they used tear gas, moved in to arrest people and protesters ran away.

Officials said Saturday that the looting and arson has been fueled by outsiders who came to Minnesota intent on using the protests over Floyd's death while in police custody to sow unrest, which has spread to other U.S. cities.

St. Paul officers stopped several vehicles Saturday night that were driving without license plates.

"Each time officers stopped the vehicles, people inside have raced away on foot, leaving vehicles and tools used to wreak havoc on our city behind," police said in a tweet.

Walz said on Saturday morning that officials estimated about 80 percent of the rioters Friday night were from outside Minnesota while 20 percent were residents. He said later in the day, "We'll find out when this is over."

A review of arrest records in Minneapolis and St. Paul show the majority of those cited Friday night and early Thursday to be from the Twin Cities.

Expanded police/National Guard force gains upper hand in clashes with rioters

ARRESTS IN MINNEAPOLIS

A heavy and rapid police and National Guard presence in South Minneapolis caused large groups to splinter into smaller ones late Saturday and into early Sunday.

But one large group on foot and in vehicles threw objects at officers near Hiawatha Avenue and Lake Street, according to police.

Police made several arrests late Saturday.

One suspect reportedly shot at officers in the 1400 block of Lake Street around 11 p.m. A gun was recovered.

Four other suspects were taken into custody after a vehicle nearly rammed officers near Pillsbury Avenue and Lake Street, police said. A gun was also recovered.

"The people that we're continuing to deal with are people who are more bent on creating disorder and problems in our city," Schnell said.

As the night turned to early Sunday, St. Paul police officers and Ramsey County sheriff deputies were stationed at major interstate accesses in the city questioning motorists and sending them to side streets.

Earlier, hundreds of protesters gathered, apparently peacefully, outside the 5th police precinct - which was a focal point of violence Friday night - in advance of the 8 p.m. curfew. Soon after 8 p.m., police came out of the parking lot arm-to-arm to move the crowd back and deployed tear gas and rubber bullets.

Some in the group began hurling rocks and full water bottles toward the 5th precinct, where other officers were stationed. More protesters arrived and a police line moved them east under the Interstate 35W bridge by releasing tear gas. A caravan of Humvees and other vehicles arrived to assist police.

pic.twitter.com/hN0GapCS3v

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress) May 31, 2020

Minneapolis police reported that people were on the I-35W bridge over 31st Street and throwing objects onto law enforcement below.

A veteran WCCO photographer covering the Minneapolis protests was filming Saturday night as he was shot with a rubber bullet and arrested by the State Patrol; he was released. Tom Aviles was one of at least three journalists, who are clearly listed as exempt from the curfew in Walz's order, who were either shot with rubber bullets and/or sprayed with tear gas within two hours of the 8 p.m. curfew.

They came by the hundreds but quickly retreated when the tear gas hit their eyes and lungs #mplsriots2020

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress)

FRIDAY NIGHT RIOTS

On Friday night, a law enforcement force of more than 2,000 was assembled to deal with rioting, but Harrington said it was met by many more protesters - "tens of thousands," he said.

Expanded police/National Guard force gains upper hand in clashes with rioters

St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter had said that all the people arrested in St. Paul in connection with rioting were from out of state. However, Saturday evening Carter said he had misspoken and received inaccurate information about the arrests.

"Those folks who are agitating and inciting are taking advantage of the pain, of the hurt, of the frustration, of the anger, of the very real and legitimate sadness that so many of our community members feel, to advocate for the destruction of our communities," Carter said.

Despite an 8 p.m. curfew and a heavier law enforcement force, Minneapolis had another night of rioting, vandalism and looting Friday with more cases of arson.

Firefighters responding to burning buildings were targeted by rioters, officials said, making it hard for them to contain fires.

"Our police officers, our firefighters are facing something they've never faced before," Carter said of the mayhem.

'MORE OF A MILITARY OPERATION NOW'

Walz said Saturday it would "be a dangerous situation on the streets tonight," but officials will do everything in their power to restore order.

Walz also said there were instance of rioters stopping semi trucks on highways and looting their contents.

"The situation in Minneapolis is no longer in any way about the murder of George Floyd," Walz said. "It is about attacking civil society, instilling fear and disrupting our great cities."

Officials have deployed a force that would have worked in any other civilian police operation, Walz said.

"But this resembles more of a military operation now," he said. "Ringleaders are moving from place to place."

State officials also said there have been incidents of shots fired at law enforcement and even improvised explosives used.

President Donald Trump urged Walz and other authorities in Minnesota to "be tough" in Minneapolis.

"We have our military ready, willing and able if they ever want to call our military, and we can have troops on the ground every quickly," Trump said. Pentagon officials have signaled they are ready to provide military support to quell unrest should Walz request it.

PEACEFUL PROTESTS, CLEANUP

Meanwhile, peaceful protests took place in South Minneapolis on Saturday afternoon.

Several hundred people gathered in front of the Cup Foods convenience store at Chicago Avenue and 38th Street where the 46-year-old Floyd, who was black, was arrested by Minneapolis police on Monday night after he was suspected of using a counterfeit $20 bill.

Unarmed and handcuffed, he died after an officer pressed a knee on his neck for nearly nine minutes until he stopped breathing. The officer, Derek Chauvin, was fired and charged Friday with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. Three other officers were also fired and, along with Chauvin, remain the subject of state and federal investigations.

Expanded police/National Guard force gains upper hand in clashes with rioters

Also on Saturday, dozens of small business owners were still boarding up stores and shops. Among them was Kore Grate, who owns a martial arts studio at 38th Street and Cedar Avenue.

Grate was getting help from a number of volunteers through University Rebuild, a group of theater professionals. Since Friday the group had helped 140 business owners board up their doors and windows in both St. Paul and Minneapolis.

"They are angels," Grate said of the volunteers. Grate, 65, also owns a tattoo shop at Lake Street and Lyndale Avenue that was broken into and looted early Saturday morning.

Nick Ferraro, Dave Orrick, Mara H. Gottfried, Frederick Melo, Nick Woltman, Kristi Belcamino, Christopher Magan and Mary Divine contributed to this report.

Correction: An earlier version of this article misidentified the agency involved in the arrest of the WCCO-TV photographer Tom Aviles.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform pic.twitter.com/GM701j50F5 May 31, 2020 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Police approach protesters after curfew Saturday, May 30, 2020, in Minneapolis. Protests continued following the death of George Floyd, who died after being restrained by Minneapolis police officers on Memorial Day, May 25. (AP Photo/John Minchillo)

Jiselle Henry, 4, jumps over flower petals strewn at the intersection of 38th St. and Chicago Ave. in Minneapolis Saturday, May 30 2020, in front of the CUP Foods where George Floyd died earlier in the week, (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Protests descend into chaos in Minneapolis Friday; more looting, fires in 'incredibly dangerous' situation

ARTICLE LXXXI. PROTESTS DESCEND INTO CHAOS IN MINNEAPOLIS FRIDAY; MORE LOOTING, FIRES IN 'INCREDIBLY DANGEROUS' SITUATION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1440 words

Byline: Nick Woltman

Highlight: Cars were set on fire, business break-ins began and eventually there were larger fires as protesters outflanked authorities and converged on the 5th Precinct police station.

Body

Expand

Peaceful protests over the death of George Floyd at the hands of police descended into chaos after darkness fell Friday, with thousands of people ignoring an 8 p.m. curfew to walk the streets in the south Minneapolis.

Demonstrators again squared off against law enforcement at the 3rd precinct headquarters of the city's police department, but a much larger crowd gathered outside its 5th precinct two miles west, chanting and lobbing fireworks at the building.

People who seemed less interested in the protest itself used it as an opportunity to loot and set fire to nearby businesses, including a Dollar Tree, an Office Depot and a Wells Fargo branch. A post office about a block from the precinct was also burned to the ground.

The crowd was driven out of the area shortly before 1 a.m. by police and Minnesota State Patrol troopers using tear gas and less-lethal projectiles, but many members of the group simply migrated west along Lake Street, embarking on a third straight night of nearly unchecked looting, vandalism and arson.

"The situation is incredibly dangerous," Gov. Tim Walz said in a live address at 1:30 a.m. "This is not grieving."

As officers cleared the area around the precinct, a contingent of newly activated Minnesota National Guard escorted the Minneapolis Fire Department into the neighborhood to fight the fires set by demonstrators.

The Minnesota Department of Public Safety said on Twitter that 350 personnel were in the area and arresting people who refused to disperse.

Protests descend into chaos in Minneapolis Friday; more looting, fires in 'incredibly dangerous' situation

"Go home," Walz urged protesters who had embraced violence while also admitting that public safety personnel were overwhelmed.

"Quite candidly we do not have the numbers," Walz said.

To that end, the National Guard is activating another 1,000 soldiers to join the 500 who were called up Thursday; another 200 were activated Friday night. Walz said the 1,700 would constitute the largest peacetime force ever assembled in Minnesota.

The Pentagon also took the rare step Friday of ordering the Army to put several active-duty U.S. military police units on the ready to deploy to Minneapolis.

Maj. Gen. Jon Jensen of the Minnesota National Guard said during Walz's late-night news conference that option remained on the table.

Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington, who also spoke during the event, said the troublemakers, whom he termed "entrenched rioters," had grown more dangerous. Harrington also said there was evidence of outside agitators arriving in Minneapolis to stoke unrest.

Several Lake Street business owners camped out at their shops and restaurants overnight to discourage the looters who were driven from the area around the 5th precinct. At least a couple even hired private security contractors to stand guard with loaded guns.

These guys are private security contractors hired by Lake Wine & Spirits to protect their store. They said they haven't had any trouble with looters, adding that their loaded guns are an effective deterrent. pic.twitter.com/mU5R5VGtCW

- Nick Woltman (@nickwoltman) May 30, 2020

At Anthony's Pipe & Cigar Lounge early Friday morning, employees were cleaning up a short time after looters laid waste to the shop. Joe Mosinski, a friend of the owner, had stopped by to check on the store and surprised "some kids" who had broken in, he said. They scattered when they realized he wasn't a fellow looter.

As I was walking by earlier tonight, employees of Anthony's Pipe & Cigar Lounge were cleaning up a short time after looters laid waste to the shop. Joe Mosinski, a friend of the owner, had stopped by to check on the store and surprised "some kids" who had broken in, he said. pic.twitter.com/ESqrEQ8cPT

- Nick Woltman (@nickwoltman) May 30, 2020

"They're just young, dumb kids," Mosinski said. "It seems like just a bunch of kids who have nothing to do."

As he and the stores employees swept up broken glass and took stock of what was stolen, looters continued to approach the store. A stern, "We're closed," seemed to be enough to discourage them from entering.

"If you tell them not to come in, they pretty much just listen," Mosinski said.

Protests descend into chaos in Minneapolis Friday; more looting, fires in 'incredibly dangerous' situation

Throughout the night, gun shots could be heard in different parts of the city. Some security personnel had been subjected to gunfire, though no one was injured, Harrington said.

John-Paul Syngh, 29, recounted seeing a man at 1st Avenue and Cecil Newman Lane shoot at a police squad vehicle.

"Out of nowhere a dude whipped out a handgun," Syngh said. "He got maybe six to eight shots off at a cop car. ... Everybody screamed a little bit."

By 4 a.m., law enforcement was pushing west down Lake Street, dispersing looters and making arrests. Lines of officers stood guard over several intersections around the 5th precinct to prevent the rioters from retaking them.

Following the Friday afternoon announcement by law enforcement officials that fired Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, who is white, had been arrested and charged with murdering Floyd, who was black, thousands of protesters again gathered in front of the Hennepin County Government Center to demand justice.

Demonstrators then marched through downtown and onto Interstate 35W, shutting down its southbound lanes. The freeway occupation was continuing early Saturday.

Closer to the battered 3rd Precinct, which was left to burn Thursday night, officers again fired tear gas and less-lethal projectiles Friday to drive back crowds of protesters.

Expand

The precinct building, which was abandoned by its contingent of officers about 10 p.m. Thursday after protesters breached a hastily erected perimeter fence, was just one of many buildings set ablaze during the chaos overnight.

Several businesses that survived the first round of rioting the night before were reduced to smoldering rubble by dawn. Community-led cleanup efforts were underway Friday in much of the city, including the heavily damaged area around Lake Street and Hiawatha Avenue as well as Uptown.

Among the scores of casualties was Ghandi Mahal, an Indian restaurant located about a block away from the third precinct. In a post on the restaurant's Facebook page, owner Ruhel Islam's daughter, Hafsa, thanked "our ?neighbors who did their best to stand guard and protect Gandhi Mahal."

"Don't worry about us, we will rebuild and we will recover," she wrote.

She also quoted her father: "Let my building burn," he said, according to the post. "Justice needs to be served, put those officers in jail."

A nearby U.S. post office on East 31st Street also burned overnight. The popular Hexagon Bar on 27th Avenue South was destroyed by fire, and the public library branch on East Lake Street was damaged.

Community volunteers spent much of the day Friday cleaning up debris and broken glass.

Protests descend into chaos in Minneapolis Friday; more looting, fires in 'incredibly dangerous' situation

Dean Hanson, 64, lives in a subsidized housing unit nearby, which is home to many older residents. He said his building lost electricity overnight, and residents were terrified as they watched mobs of people loot and burn their way through the neighborhood.

"I can't believe this is happening here," he said. "It was pure hell."

Also Friday, Walz apologized to CNN, saying he takes total responsibility for the arrest of one of the network's crews as they reported on the violent Minneapolis protests following Floyd's death.

"This is a very public apology to that team," Walz said at a news conference hours after correspondent Omar Jimenez and two colleagues were taken into custody by the Minnesota State Patrol and later released.

Jimenez was handcuffed and led away while reporting live on the air shortly after 5 a.m. His colleagues Bill Kirkos and Leonel Mendez were also taken away, with Mendez placing his still-running camera on the ground to record his arrest.

When first approached by officers, Jimenez, who is black, told them, "put us back where you want us. We are getting out of your way."

After being told he was being arrested and his microphone taken away for handcuffing, Jimenez asked why he was being arrested and did not get an answer.

The Minnesota State Patrol said on Twitter that the journalists were among four people arrested as troopers were "clearing the streets and restoring order" following the protests.

The patrol said the CNN journalists "were released once they were confirmed to be members of the media."

This report includes information from the Associated Press.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Pentagon ready to send troops to Minneapolis if state asks

ARTICLE LXXXII. PENTAGON READY TO SEND TROOPS TO MINNEAPOLIS IF STATE ASKS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1097 words

Byline: James Laporta

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - The Pentagon said Saturday it was ready to provide military help to authorities scrambling to contain unrest in Minneapolis, where George Floyd's death has sparked widespread protests, but Gov. Tim Walz has not requested federal troops.

Body

By JAMES LAPORTA and ROBERT BURNS

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Pentagon said Saturday it was ready to provide military help to authorities scrambling to contain unrest in Minneapolis, where George Floyd's death has sparked widespread protests, but Gov. Tim Walz has not requested federal troops.

Jonathan Rath Hoffman, the chief Pentagon spokesman, said several military units have been placed on higher alert "as a prudent planning measure" in case Walz asks for help. The Associated Press first reported on the potential deployments and, citing sources with direct knowledge of the orders, named four locations from which soldiers would be drawn.

Hoffman did not identify the units, but other officials said they are mainly military police. Hoffman said these are units normally on 48-hour recall to support state authorities in the event of crises like natural disasters. They are now on four-hour alert, Hoffman said.

Defense officials said there was no intent by the Pentagon to deploy any federal forces to Minnesota unless Walz asked for help. If he did make such a request, federal units such as military police could provide logistical and other kinds of support to the Minnesota National Guard or state law enforcement, but would not get directly involved in law enforcement under current plans, the officials said. They were not authorized to discuss the planning publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity.

Hoffman said Defense Secretary Mark Esper and Gen. Mark Milley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, had spoken to Walz twice in the past 24 hours and told him the Pentagon was prepared to help if needed.

Maj. Gen. Jon Jensen, the adjutant general of the Minnesota National Guard, said the Pentagon's decision to place some military units on a higher state of alert for potential deployment was "a prudent move" that gave Walz more options.

Pentagon ready to send troops to Minneapolis if state asks

Earlier, Alyssa Farah, the White House director of strategic communications, told the AP that the deployment of active-duty military police to Minnesota was untrue. In an email, she referred to Title 10, the U.S. law that governs the armed forces and would authorize active duty military to operate within the country

"False: off the record - title 10 not under discussion," said Farah. No off-record agreement was negotiated with the AP.

President Donald Trump urged Walz and other authorities in Minnesota to "be tough" in Minneapolis.

"We have our military ready, willing and able if they ever want to call our military, and we can have troops on the ground every quickly," Trump said.

Soldiers from Fort Bragg in North Carolina and Fort Drum in New York have been ordered to be ready to deploy within four hours if called, according to three people with direct knowledge of the orders. Soldiers in Fort Carson, in Colorado, and Fort Riley in Kansas have been told to be ready within 24 hours. The people were not were not authorized to discuss the preparations publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity.

The get-ready orders were sent verbally on Friday, after Trump asked Esper for military options to help quell the unrest in Minneapolis after protests descended into looting and arson in some parts of the city.

Trump made the request on a phone call from the Oval Office on Thursday night that included Esper, national security advisor Robert O' Brien and several others. The president asked Esper for rapid deployment options if the Minneapolis protests continued to spiral out of control, according to one of the people, a senior Pentagon official who was on the call.

The person said the military units would be deployed under the Insurrection Act of 1807, which was last used in 1992 during the riots in Los Angeles that followed the Rodney King trial. Another official said Saturday, however, that federal troops could be deployed to Minnesota without invoking that act. In that situation, they would perform non-law enforcement duties such as providing logistics help.

"If this is where the president is headed response-wise, it would represent a significant escalation and a determination that the various state and local authorities are not up to the task of responding to the growing unrest," said Brad Moss, a Washington D.C.-based attorney, who specializes in national security.

Members of the police units were on a 30-minute recall alert early Saturday, meaning they would have to return to their bases inside that time limit in preparation for deployment to Minneapolis inside of four hours. Units at Fort Drum are set to head to Minneapolis first, according to the three people, including two Defense Department officials. Roughly 800 U.S. soldiers would deploy to the city if called.

Protests erupted in Minneapolis this week after video emerged showing a police officer pressing his knee into Floyd's neck for several minutes even after Floyd stopping moving and pleading for air. Floyd later died of his injuries. The officer, Derek Chauvin, was arrested and charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter on Friday.

The protests turned violent and on Thursday rioters torched the Minneapolis Third Police Precinct near where Floyd was arrested. Mayor Jacob Frey ordered a citywide curfew at 8 p.m. local time, beginning on Friday. In that city, peaceful protests picked up steam as darkness fell, with thousands of people ignoring the curfew to walk streets in the southern part of the city. Some cars were set on fire in scattered neighborhoods, business break-ins began and eventually there were larger fires.

Pentagon ready to send troops to Minneapolis if state asks

Active-duty forces are normally prohibited from acting as a domestic law enforcement agency. But the Insurrection Act offers an exception. There was no indication Saturday that Trump intended to invoke that act.

It would allow the military to take up a policing authority it otherwise would not be allowed to do, enforcing state and federal laws, said Stephen Vladeck, a University of Texas School of Law professor who specializes in constitutional and national security law.

The statute "is deliberately vague" when it comes to the instances in which the Insurrection Act could be used, he said. The state's governor could ask Trump to take action or Trump could act on his own authority if he's determined that the local authorities are so overwhelmed that they can't adequately enforce the law, Vladeck said.

"It is a very, very broad grant of authority for the president," he added.

-

LaPorta reported from Delray Beach, Florida. Associated Press reporters writers Lita. C. Baldor, Michael Balsamo, and Zeke Miller contributed to this story.

-

Contact AP's global investigative team at Investigative@ap.org.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Charley Walters: Twins likely won't be able to dip into Rochester for help

ARTICLE LXXXIII. CHARLEY WALTERS: TWINS LIKELY WON'T BE ABLE TO DIP INTO ROCHESTER FOR HELP

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 2103 words

Byline: Charley Walters

Highlight: If and when the Minnesota Twins begin their 2020 season, it appears they won't be able to ask their Class AAA Rochester Red Wings club for help. It's not yet official, but it appears inevitable that Rochester's entire season - which already has had 49 games canceled due to COVID-19 - will be canceled. Last [...]

Body

If and when the Minnesota Twins begin their 2020 season, it appears they won't be able to ask their Class AAA Rochester Red Wings club for help.

It's not yet official, but it appears inevitable that Rochester's entire season - which already has had 49 games canceled due to COVID-19 - will be canceled. Last season, the Red Wings shuttled some 80 players between the Twins and other minor league affiliates.

Major league rosters will be extended for depth for an abbreviated season, but high-minor league development of players is expected to be eliminated.

Coincidentally, this is the final season of the Red Wings' AAA affiliate agreement with the Twins.

The Red Wings, who have a 140-game schedule, averaged attendance of nearly 8,000 after Memorial Day last season. The team already had ordered its promotional merchandise for the season, including 2,000 bobbleheads celebrating popular utility player Willians Astudillo, nicknamed "La Tortuga" (The Turtle). The bobbleheads feature a shell on the back.

If there is no season, those might be sold to charity.

The Red Wings have obtained a small business loan through mid-June, allowing the team to retain employees through then. After that, the future, affected by the virus, is unknown.

Had it not been for the pandemic, on Sunday afternoon the Twins would be completing a four-game series against the White Sox in Chicago. Twins are prepared for an MLB draft like no other Here's what you need to know about Twins, locals ahead of MLB Draft What would a 50-game season mean for the Twins? Minor leaguers keep training despite a baseball season in jeopardy MLB players offer 114 games, no more pay cuts

Charley Walters: Twins likely won't be able to dip into Rochester for help

Pssst: The Vikings' recent signing of Anthony Harris to a questionable $11.44 million franchise deal for the coming season probably means that either Harris, 28, or fellow safety Harrison Smith, 31, won't be back in Minnesota in 2021.

Most NFL teams don't pay safeties a total of $22.19 million. Smith is to make $10.75 million this year. Which safety to keep will be made based on who plays best, the other moving on.

Meanwhile, it had to be an easy decision for Harris to accept the franchise offer. With the COVID-19 pandemic, Vikings money could dry up. By signing, the $11.44 million is guaranteed.

This year's U.S. Open men's golf championship at Winged Foot in New York has been rescheduled from June 18-21 to September 17-20. Exactly 50 years ago on June 18-21, the U.S. Open was held at Hazeltine National in Chaska.

That was 1970, when promoters, eager to sell tickets, offered a $35 special - including clubhouse credentials and onsite parking for the entire tournament - if tickets were purchased in December, five months ahead of the event.

At Winged Foot in September, a clubhouse ticket, just for the first day of the tournament, cost $1,284.

At Hazeltine, remember, it was Dave Hill who was fined $150 for suggesting the course could use 80 acres of corn and a few cows to be complete. Hill finished runner-up to champion Tony Jacklin, the Englishman who won by seven shots. Jacklin's payday: $30,000 from a total purse of $195,700. The winner at Winged Foot in September will get a check for $2.25 million from a $12.5 million prize fund.

In the tournament at Hazeltine, played in cold and windy conditions, was 18-year-old amateur Ben Crenshaw, just out of high school in Texas. He would go on to win two Masters at Augusta National. Defending U.S. Open champion Orville Moody missed the cut.

Golf's greatest player, Jack Nicklaus, who previewed the tournament for Sports Illustrated and called the course a blind man's bluff because of the doglegs, shot an opening round 81 but made the cut with subsequent rounds of 72, 75, 76 to finish in a tie for 49th. Arnold Palmer tied for 54th (79-74-75-77).

Lower level ticket price for the scheduled Sept. 13 Vikings-Packers game in Minneapolis: $1,736 on vividseats.com.

Last week's naming of Gophers Max Meyer and Zach Raabe as All-Americans by Collegiate Baseball increased John Anderson's total of 15 he has coached. Between 1990-2006 at Minnesota, Anderson coached 15 players who went on to the major leagues.

Anderson, 65, in his 39th season as Gophers coach, is the Big Ten's all-time winning coach. But he's only the eighth-highest paid baseball coach in the conference at $232,000. Michigan's Erik Bakich is No. 1 at $625,000.

Jon Leuer, 31, the former Osseo star, after making nearly $35 million in nine NBA seasons that included a couple disabling injuries, has decided to retire.

Mike Rostampour, the 6-8, 230-pound Henry Sibley grad who has been playing professional basketball in Tehran, has had his season canceled due to the global pandemic but is still in Iran rehabbing from finger surgery. He'll return to St. Paul in a month or so.

Charley Walters: Twins likely won't be able to dip into Rochester for help

A Minnesota first: Last week, Paige Bueckers (basketball) from Hopkins and Jalen Suggs (football-basketball) from Minnehaha Academy were named national female and male high school athletes of the year by MaxPreps.

Meanwhile, Minnehaha Academy's 7-foot incoming senior Chet Holmgren has been named the nation's No. 2 basketball recruit by MaxPreps.

Twenty-four of the NBA's 30 teams have contacted Cretin-Derham Hall for background checks on Daniel Oturu, the former Raiders star who is leaving the Gophers after his sophomore season to turn professional.

The 6-10, 240-pound Oturu will be represented by Bill Duffy, who also will represent point guard Tre Jones from Apple Valley via Duke. Duffy, a former Gophers guard, is among the NBA's prominent agents. He also represents Tre's brother Tyus, who has a $28 million, three-year guaranteed contract with the Memphis Grizzlies. Tre also is leaving college after his sophomore season.

It looks like Oturu will be a top-15 overall pick, Jones late in the first round.

The NBA draft, initially scheduled for June 25, has been indefinitely postponed, probably until at least August, depending on playoffs.

By the way, Zeke Nnaji, the 6-11 Hopkins' grad via Arizona, could be a first-round pick, as could Tyrell Terry, the 6-3 point guard from DeLaSalle via Stanford.

Four NBA first-round draft picks would be unheard of for Minnesota.

A year from now, Suggs and Holmgren are expected to be considered as first-round picks.

The way it looks now, the Timberwolves' first-round draft pick will come from among James Wiseman from Memphis, LaMelo Ball from Australia or shooting guard Anthony Edwards from Georgia.

Still scheduled is the St. John's-St. Thomas football rivalry for Nov. 7 at U.S. Bank Stadium. Ticket prices have not been decided.

Byung Ho Park, 33, who batted .191 for the Twins in 201 after the club paid $12.85 million just for the rights to sign him, is batting .227 with five home runs for the South Korean Kiwoom Heroes, who can be seen on ESPN on Wednesday at 5:30 a.m. against the Hanwha Eagles.

Condolences to the family of former Gophers QB and hockey captain Larry Johnson, who lost wife Susan, a former Minneapolis Washburn cheerleader, after 62 years of marriage to complications from COVID-19.

The same to the family of Eveleth hockey icon Bobo Kochevar at age 84 last week with dementia in a nursing home.

That was Mendota Heights' 13-year-old Sammy Udovich shooting a 3-under-par 68 from Southview Country Club's 6,404-yard back tees last week. A day later, Bella McCauley, 16, who last year for Simley won the Class A girls state high school championship by nine shots, shot 69 from the same tees.

Happy birthday: Wayne "Twig" Terwilliger, the beloved former Twins-Saints coach, turns 95 next month.

Charley Walters: Twins likely won't be able to dip into Rochester for help

Before baseball's postponed season, Twins starter Michael Pineda was to sit out 39 of the 162-game schedule due to a 60-game drug violation suspension, of which he served 21 games last season.

Now, even though the new season has been proposed for 82 games, Pineda still has to serve the remaining 39 games. It will also cost the 31-year-old, who is signed for $10 million this season, millions resulting from the owners-proposed new pro-rated salary structure.

If Gophers junior pitcher Max Meyer is still available at No. 10 overall in major league baseball's draft on June 10-11, look for him to be chosen by the San Diego Padres.

The Colorado Rockies, who have the No. 9 pick, also have a lot of interest in the 6-0, 185-pound right-hander from Woodbury. The Rockies, by the way, drafted shortstop Terrin Vavra from the Gophers in the third round two years ago.

Due to baseball's reduction of the draft to just five rounds this year, Meyer will be the only Gopher chosen. That means a handful of other Gophers will not.

Rumors persist that 6-11 Gophers commitment Treyton Thompson of Alexandria, a top-100 recruit, is considering a transfer to Cretin-Derham Hall for his senior season this year.

As important as quarterbacks are to NFL teams, the Vikings are expected to place special emphasis on Kirk Cousins to try to insulate him from exposure to COVID-19 when practices begin.

CBS-TV's Jim Nantz, Nick Faldo, Ian Baker-Finch and Frank Nobile - and perhaps Michelle Wie and Davis Love III - are expected in town July 23-26 to cover the 3M Open if the pandemic doesn't postpone or cancel the PGA Tour tournament.

Ironically, Richard Pitino's new Gophers men's basketball assistant Jeff Mailhot, the Hopkins grad, last season was an assistant at Iona, where Pitino's father, Rick, has taken over coaching.

That was former heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson, 53, said to be contemplating a comeback, in downtown St. Paul on Thursday with his entourage.

With the Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference expanding to 10 teams last week, some people are convinced the next two schools joining the MIAC will be University of Northwestern-St. Paul and Martin Luther College of New Ulm.

By the way, it was esteemed former Vikings-Packers director of research and development Mike Eayrs, a member of the Augsburg Athletic Hall of Fame for football, who two years ago proposed how the MIAC could expand to 10 teams with two divisions.

Football coach P.J. Fleck, in his fourth year at Minnesota, is paid $4.5 million. Woody Hayes, who coached Ohio State to five national championships, was paid $43,000 in his final season in 1978, USA Today points out. Hayes believed the Buckeyes football coach shouldn't be paid more than the state's governor.

Fleck on Wednesday morning speaks to the Dunkers club via Zoom.

Charley Walters: Twins likely won't be able to dip into Rochester for help

Ex-Vikings QB Tommy Kramer, living in Centerville, Minn., is planning a 40th anniversary reunion of his last-second 1980 "Hail Mary" pass to Ahmad Rashad that stunned Cleveland at Met Stadium to win the Central Division.

Justin Morneau's No. 33 could be the next jersey retired by the Twins. When he came to the major leagues in 2003, his jersey number was 27.

Speaking of retired Twins jerseys, Tony Oliva wore No. 38 before switching to No. 6. Kent Hrbek was No. 26 before his No. 14 was retired. Tom Kelly came to the majors as No. 16 but retired as No. 10.

Zoilo Versalles (No. 2) is the only former Twins' American League MVP (1965) whose jersey is not retired.

Jim Kaat's No. 36 jersey would seem a good bet to be retired if he's finally - and appropriately - voted into baseball's hall of fame.

That was Wild owner Craig Leipold zooming into St. Paul in his private jet last Wednesday for the first time in a long time.

The Wild are 85-to-1 odds to win the 24-team reformatted Stanley Cup by sportsbattingdime.com

Vikings coach Mike Zimmer on first-round draft pick wideout Justin Jefferson, to NBC Sports: "I think every coach and GM say that they were surprised that he was there when we picked him, but we really were this time."

Insiders say ex-Timberwolves coach Tom Thibodeau remains the favorite as the next Knicks coach.

Jacksonville University, which was in the Pioneer Football League that St. Thomas hopes to join for the 2021 season, has dropped the sport. Meanwhile, San Diego, which won the league with an 8-0 record last season, averaged 2,096 attendance per home game. St. Thomas last season, tied for first with St. John's with a 7-1 MIAC Conference record, averaged 2,095 per home game.

Tony Dungy, who spent four years as a Gophers QB and four more as a Vikings assistant, on last week's killing of George Floyd by police officer Derek Chauvin in South Minneapolis and subsequent destruction of property protests, on Mike Tirico's "Lunch Talk Live" on NBCSN: "That's what really hurts. I'm very familiar with that neighborhood and driven by there hundreds of times. There's a lot of minority community leaders, there's minority businesses, and to see that area just get taken down like this, it's very sad." Charley Walters: 'He just wanted to help' Mike Robertson says of Michael Jordan

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Joe Biden ally sees Amy Klobuchar as less likely running mate

ARTICLE LXXXIV. JOE BIDEN ALLY SEES AMY KLOBUCHAR AS LESS LIKELY RUNNING MATE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 632 words

Byline: Alan Fram

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar seems a less likely choice to become Joe Biden's running mate on his presidential ticket following this week's death of a black man in police custody in Minneapolis, a key ally of the former vice president said.

Body

By ALAN FRAM

WASHINGTON (AP) - Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar seems a less likely choice to become Joe Biden's running mate on his presidential ticket following this week's death of a black man in police custody in Minneapolis, a key ally of the former vice president said.

Rep. James Clyburn, D-S.C., told reporters on Friday that while he believes Klobuchar is "absolutely" qualified to be vice president, "This is very tough timing for her."

Klobuchar was a prosecutor years ago in the county that includes Minneapolis. During that period, more than two dozen people - mostly minorities - died during encounters with police. Following customary practice at the time, she sent the cases to grand juries, which brought no criminal charges against any of the officers involved.

Clyburn, who called his view a "gut feeling," played a pivotal role in helping Biden become the Democratic Party's all-but-certain presidential nominee. Clyburn is the No. 3 House Democratic leader and Congress' highest-ranking black lawmaker.

"So often in politics, timing really dictates things. Barack Obama I don't think could have gotten elected four years before he got elected," Clyburn said of the former president during a conference call. "And I don't know whether he could get elected today."

Clyburn helped revive Biden's badly flagging presidential campaign earlier this year, lifting him to a decisive win in a South Carolina primary in which large numbers of voters were black. That fueled a Biden run to a string of victories in other state contests that resulted in his becoming the party's presumptive nominee.

Joe Biden ally sees Amy Klobuchar as less likely running mate

On MSNBC, Biden said the tensions in Minnesota following the death of George Floyd have "nothing to do with my running mate."

Pressed on whether Floyd's killing increases pressure to place an African American woman on his ticket, Biden said he's talked about putting women of color on the Supreme Court and in his Cabinet. "And I also already said that there are women of color under consideration," he said.

Klobuchar did not respond to a request Friday by The Associated Press for an interview. On CNN, she sidestepped a question about her vice presidential prospects.

"He's going to make the best decision on whoever he wants to govern with," she said of Biden.

Before being elected to the Senate in 2006, Klobuchar, who is white, spent eight years as prosecutor for Minnesota's largest county. Most of the more than two dozen people who died during police encounters in her tenure were people of color, according to data compiled by Communities United Against Police Brutality and news articles reviewed by the AP.

An officer involved in one of those past fatal incidents was Derek Chauvin, who was arrested and charged Friday in this week's death of Floyd. A video showing Floyd complaining that he could not breathe as Chauvin knelt on his neck has helped spark unrest in cities around the country.

Chauvin was among six officers who fired on and killed a man in 2006 who reportedly stabbed two people and then aimed a shotgun at police.

Chauvin's 2006 case went to the grand jury after Klobuchar was elected to the Senate and had left the county attorney's office. Mike Freeman, Klobuchar's successor as prosecutor, made "all prosecutorial decisions" about Chauvin, according to a Freeman statement that Klobuchar's office provided Saturday.

Klobuchar told MSNBC that she now believes the practice of asking a grand jury to decide whether to charge officers was wrong.

Klobuchar and 27 other Democratic senators wrote Friday to the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, asking it to investigate "patterns and practices of racially discriminatory and violent policing" by the Minneapolis police.

AP reporters Sara Burnett in Chicago and Will Weissert in Washington contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

St. Paul police rebut social media theory that officer instigated Minneapolis unrest

ARTICLE LXXXV. ST. PAUL POLICE REBUT SOCIAL MEDIA THEORY THAT OFFICER
INSTIGATED MINNEAPOLIS UNREST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 572 words

Byline: John Shipley

Highlight: The St. Paul Police Department pushed back Friday as social media posters accused one of its officers of instigating property damage as hundreds gathered to protest the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis. "It's malicious and it's character assassination," St. Paul police spokesman Steve Linders said. A white male dressed in black, wearing a large [...]

Body

The St. Paul Police Department pushed back Friday as social media posters accused one of its officers of instigating property damage as hundreds gathered to protest the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis.

"It's malicious and it's character assassination," St. Paul police spokesman Steve Linders said.

A white male dressed in black, wearing a large gas mask and holding an umbrella was caught on video smashing windows of an AutoZone shop in the early evening Wednesday, before protests escalated into large-scale property damage that destroyed several businesses in the area of East Lake Street. Twitter posters quickly identified the man, whose face was largely covered, as a St. Paul police officer - and later an Eagan police officer.

Those accusations were still spreading Friday evening.

Linders said the officer in question was not in the area at the time because he was working alongside Minneapolis firefighters.

"I want people to know about this and know it's not true," he said. "This has spread so far and so wide that the only thing we can do is tell the truth."

Eagan police also released a statement via Twitter, saying it had been "made aware of a social media post that falsely identifies one of our officers as the person caught on video breaking windows in Minneapolis. We have seen the photo and this person does not work for the Eagan Police Department."

The Eagan Police Department has been made aware of a social media post that falsely identifies one of our officers as the person caught on video breaking windows in Minneapolis. We have seen the photo and this person does not work for the Eagan Police Department.

St. Paul police rebut social media theory that officer instigated Minneapolis unrest

- Eagan Police (@EaganPolice) May 29, 2020

In the video, a protester is seen trying to stop the man from breaking windows, and others follow him away as he leaves, one asking, "Are you a cop?"

Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison made reference to the video while speaking to a cable network early Thursday evening and asked protesters to continue to document "suspicious people doing damage."

"I urge all the protesters, don't let somebody tear down the good reputation of your righteous protest," he said. "Take pictures of these people that might be provocateurs. That evidence is on YouTube; I urge people to take a look at it and see they can identify that guy."

RUMOR CONTROL ...

We are aware of the social media post that erroneously identifies one of our officers as the person caught on video breaking windows in Minneapolis.

We've seen it. We've looked into it. And it's false.

- Saint Paul Police Department (@sppdmn) May 29, 2020

Asked if he believed some of those who looted businesses and burned down buildings were from out of state, or not actually protesting Floyd's death, Gov. Tim Walz said Friday, "I'm not going to speculate on that."

"I think we can't tell that right now," he added, "but I think much of how all this happened, certainly all the things that have led to this, this is Minnesota, and I think we need to find out. I don't think it changes that calculus of how we got to this, how do we responded to it? We own it."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Want to donate? Help clean up? Here are some ideas.

ARTICLE LXXXVI. WANT TO DONATE? HELP CLEAN UP? HERE ARE SOME IDEAS.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1182 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: Hundreds of volunteers across Minneapolis and St. Paul have been out in full force to help clean up city streets and donate to those in need. The Pioneer Press has heard from many residents that they want to help in some way. Here's a list of places where people can donate and participate in cleanups [...]

Body

Hundreds of volunteers across Minneapolis and St. Paul have been out in full force to help clean up city streets and donate to those in need.

The Pioneer Press has heard from many residents that they want to help in some way. Here's a list of places where people can donate and participate in cleanups after three days of civil unrest following the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis. The list will be updated online. If you have any updates about organized donation or cleanup efforts, please email kbelcamino@pioneerpress.com.

Here are some places to explore if you are interested in helping. These resources are also great places to turn to for help if you are someone who needs help right now. Please try to reach out to the organization first (please look up phone numbers and email addresses) to make sure the information is up to date and the help is still needed.

CLEAN UP/VOLUNTEERS NEEDED

Bethlehem Lutheran Church in Midway St Paul - 436 N. Roy St. is still looking for volunteers

YWCA Minneapolis is collecting personal hygiene, home, baby and other supplies every Tuesday and Friday 11:00 am - 2:00 pm. Volunteers are also needed.

MINNEAPOLIS

YWCA Minneapolis is collecting personal hygiene, home, baby and other supplies every Tuesday and Friday 11:00 am - 2:00 pm. Volunteers are also needed.

Sanford Middle School is asking for 85 food kits that can be dropped off from 10 a.m. to noon Sunday in the school parking lot at 3524 42nd Ave. S., Minneapolis. Donations should be in brown paper bags and they are asking the kits to include the following items: one loaf of bread, one package tortillas, one bag of rice, two cans of beans, two cans of soup, one small bag of apples, one bag of baby carrots, one box of cereal. Diapers or small jugs of laundry soap are also needed. Any extra food donated will go to local food shelves. Note: Organizers only want fully completed kits in brown paper bags to minimize contact and protect against COVID-19 risk.

Want to donate? Help clean up? Here are some ideas.

Sanctuary Covenant Church, 2108 Aldrich Ave. N., collects food and financial donations for families in need. Food items requested include: water, beef hot dogs (not pork), hot dog buns, hamburger patties, hamburger buns, ketchup, mustard and relish, paper plates, clementines, individual chip bags, individual snacks, napkins, hand sanitizers, grill utensils. Also accepting financial donation at <https://sanctuarycov.org/give>.

Pow Wow Grounds, 1414 E. Franklin Ave., Needs sausage, eggs, pancake mix, bread, butter, peanut butter, potatoes, noodles, pasta sauce, meat, ground beef, lunch meat, presliced cheese, fruit, pop, juice boxes, snacks, protein bars

U.S. Bank, 1030 W. Broadway Ave., Minneapolis. Taking donations of nonperishable food items.

Pimento Kitchen, 2524 Nicollet Ave., Minneapolis Looking for water, milk, masks, gloves, medical supplies.

ST. PAUL

Bethlehem Lutheran Church, 436 N. Roy St., will be accepting and donating food and supplies from noon until 7 p.m. Sunday at 436 Roy St. N. in St. Paul.

Unidale Mall, Dale Street and University Avenue. Residents asked to donate diapers, wipes, formula, food, household supplies and hygiene supplies.

ONLINE

We Love Lake Street is collecting monetary donations to help rebuild Lake Street's small businesses and community organizations. The effort is being organized by the nonprofit, Lake Street Council. Organizers assure that 100 percent of funds collected will help go toward small businesses and nonprofits in the Lake Street community.

People & Pets Together is looking for donations to help families in south Minneapolis feed and care for their pets. People looking to donate pet food or cat litter can use the drop-box in the parking lot behind the People & Pets Together pet food shelf at 3745 Bloomington Ave. in Minneapolis.

The Neighbors United Funding Collaborative, a nonprofit fundraiser helping the Midway/Hamline Coalition, is helping the Midway + Union Park small business and nonprofit community rebuild the storefronts and repair the businesses in need.

Minnesota Rapid Response Coalition "Many of our local small businesses are being adversely impacted by the protests related to the murder of George Floyd. This coalition has joined together to help with the clean-up, in efforts to lower their unforeseen expenses so that they can get back to work and thrive. We will start with businesses along the Lake Street, Midway and East Saint Paul business corridors then allocate resources throughout the Twin Cities."

OTHER

Want to donate? Help clean up? Here are some ideas.

Women for Political Change say people who need a ride to get to safety can text "TRANSPORTATION" to 612-492-1507.

More businesses in need here.

THANK YOU to the community who came out this morning to help our City crews clean up damage caused by recent riots. #MinneapolisStrong

- City of Minneapolis (@CityMinneapolis)

I'm crying. Minneapolis is wonderful. I love this city. Hundreds are gathered at US Bank at West Broadway at Emerson to drop off and pick up donations. This area has been devastated by fires from rioters. #GeorgeFloyd pic.twitter.com/CbcsaO9lqk May 30, 2020 pic.twitter.com/eLgN3wOmQG

- Aaron Lavinsky (@ADLavinsky) May 30, 2020

Ongoing food pantries in MPLS & St.Paul pic.twitter.com/NTBU3HHgy4

- defund & disinvest in the police (@daniellemkali) May 30, 2020

Hundreds of people are near Midtown Global Market this morning helping clean up the neighborhood. Volunteers are handing out brooms, gloves and other material pic.twitter.com/i2POEBGKBS

- Natalie Rademacher (@nrademacher1) May 30, 2020

Minneapolis right now: neighbors from different backgrounds filling Lake St in mass clean up. Hold this image in your head-w/the image of a knee on a neck-to show what we can do and what we urgently need to fix. Don't let destruction by vandals from elsewhere distract pic.twitter.com/w43IsfJyDr

- R.T. Rybak (@R_T_Rybak) May 30, 2020

Went to clean up East Lake Library this morning. Some burned books, but just a lot of mess. pic.twitter.com/2zRAqMi5Xa

- Tracy Mumford (@mumfordmumford) May 30, 2020

IN THESE TRYING TIME WE AS PIMENTO WANT TO MAKE SURE AS A PILLAR IN THE BLACK COMMUNITY WE DO OUR PART.PLEASE DROP OFF ANY WATER MILK, MASK'S, GLOVES, AND MEDICAL SUPPLIES TO OUR MINNEAPOLIS LOCATION TO BE SHUTTLED TO CENTRALIZED LOCATION FOR THE SUPPORT OF PEOPLE IN NEED

- Pimento Kitchen (@Pimentokitchen) May 28, 2020

Community coming together to clean up in South Minneapolis. Of course the media won't show you this part though. pic.twitter.com/Cpywly5MRq

- Monica Chung (@lolwtfnotmonica) May 28, 2020

Dozens of people have turned up with shovels, brooms and trash bags to help clean up the destruction left in the neighborhood after last night's violence. #GeorgeFloyd @France24_en

Want to donate? Help clean up? Here are some ideas.

- Kethevane Gorjestani (@ketgorjestani) May 30, 2020 #Minneapolis pic.twitter.com/5wzhaOVdpd

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

4 charged in separate rioting/looting incidents in St. Paul and Falcon Heights

ARTICLE LXXXVII. 4 CHARGED IN SEPARATE RIOTING/LOOTING INCIDENTS IN ST. PAUL AND FALCON HEIGHTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 703 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: Charges have been filed against four people arrested in Falcon Heights and St. Paul involving separate incidents stemming from rioting and looting that followed the Memorial Day death of George Floyd in Minneapolis, according to criminal complaints filed Friday in Ramsey County District Court. Theodore Aaron Roloff, 26, of New London, Wis., was arrested on [...]

Body

Charges have been filed against four people arrested in Falcon Heights and St. Paul involving separate incidents stemming from rioting and looting that followed the Memorial Day death of George Floyd in Minneapolis, according to criminal complaints filed Friday in Ramsey County District Court.

Theodore Aaron Roloff, 26, of New London, Wis., was arrested on suspicion of felony third-degree burglary after authorities said he broke into and burglarized a Falcon Heights gas station.

According to the criminal complaint, about 12:50 a.m. Friday deputies saw three men walking out of the broken-glass door of the BP gas station at 1691 N. Snelling Ave. in Falcon Heights. Deputies chased, caught and arrested one of the men, who was wearing a ski mask and later identified as Roloff. As he fled, Roloff dropped a backpack, which contained "multiple packs of lottery tickets and unopened packs of cigarettes."

The other two men were not caught.

Felicia Ann Kelly Prestidge, 26, of Crystal, was arrested on suspicion of felony first-degree property damage after authorities said she threw rocks at a police car.

According to the criminal complaint, which didn't say when the incident happened, deputies responding to reports of a burglary at Merwin liquor store at 1559 Larpenteur Ave. in Falcon Heights, saw Prestidge coming out of the store carrying bottles of liquor. Deputies ordered her to put the bottles down and leave. She left but then returned "yelling profanities and throwing rocks" at a squad car. Surveillance video shows she threw rocks nine different times at the police car.

She said she threw the rocks because she was protesting, the complaint said.

4 charged in separate rioting/looting incidents in St. Paul and Falcon Heights

Saidhamza Isaq Omar, 23, of Mankato, Minn., was arrested on suspicion of felony third-degree burglary and carrying a firearm without a permit, after authorities said he broke into the Walgreens drugstore at 734 Grand Ave. in St. Paul early Friday morning.

According to the criminal complaint, about 4:30 a.m. Friday, officers responding to reports of two burglars inside the pharmacy found three men in the parking lot when they arrived.

The three men fled. Officers chased after them. As the men ran, authorities say a box of albuterol sulfate fell from Omar's jacket pocket. Officers eventually caught and arrested Omar and found a handgun magazine in his pocket that held 20 .40-caliber bullets. "Omar denied that he had a handgun and said he was only carrying the magazine."

When officers traced the path Omar had fled, they found a "Glock handgun with an extended clip in an area where Omar had fallen. The Glock was loaded to capacity and had a round of ammunition in its chamber."

In their investigation, officers also found "numerous prescriptions and medications strewn in the pharmacy's parking lot and in a nearby alley."

Walgreens alarm company sent police a photo of the two men who had broken into the pharmacy and authorities say Omar was one of the men.

Prince Marien Williams, 20, of Brooklyn Park, was arrested on suspicion of felony third-degree burglary after authorities said he broke into a gas station on Thursday.

According to the criminal complaint, a 911 caller reported a burglary in progress at 2057 Marshall Ave. in St. Paul on Thursday. (The complaint didn't give a time.) The caller said two young men broke into the Marshall Stop gas station and then walked back to a red Ford Focus. The caller gave the license plate number to 911 dispatchers. When officers arrived, they parked behind the vehicle and two men inside ran away.

The driver, Williams, was found hiding next to a garage in the 2100 block of Iglehart Avenue. Officers found tobacco products and a stack of gift cards inside the car. Upon investigation, officers found the front window of the gas station had been smashed. While metal bars prevented anyone from going inside, tobacco products were within reach.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE LXXXVIII. MOTHER OF LOUISVILLE POLICE SHOOTING VICTIM CALLS FOR PEACE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 940 wordsByline: Bruce SchneierHighlight: LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - Looking to defuse anger after gunfire wounded at least seven people at a protest in Louisville, the mother of a black woman killed by police urged protesters Friday to continue demanding justice but do so "without hurting each other."Body

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - Looking to defuse anger after gunfire wounded at least seven people at a protest in Louisville, the mother of a black woman killed by police urged protesters Friday to continue demanding justice but do so "without hurting each other."

Kentucky Gov. Andy Beshear read the statement from Breonna Taylor's mother hours after gunshots erupted during protests late Thursday outside City Hall. One person was in critical condition, Louisville Metro Police said Friday.

Mayor Greg Fischer said police officers fired no shots. Instead, they provided aid to the wounded, he said. TV video showed terrified protesters fleeing as gunfire erupted.

With more rallies planned, Taylor's mother joined the chorus of calls for protests to remain peaceful. In her statement, Tamika Palmer said her daughter - an emergency medical technician - devoted her life to others and the "last thing she'd want right now is any more violence."

"Please keep saying her name," her statement said. "Please keep demanding justice and accountability, but let's do it the right way without hurting each other. We can and we will make some real change here. Now is the time. Let's make it happen, but safely."

On Friday evening, what appeared to be several hundred people gathered downtown for the second night of protests. The crowd briefly blocked traffic near City Hall and chanted, "No justice, no peace."

Protesters carried signs calling for justice for Breonna Taylor and George Floyd, the black man who died after a Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck for several minutes even after he stopped moving and pleading for air.

Police presence intensified around 9:45 p.m. Friday, as officers in riot gear stood shoulder-to-shoulder moving people down a key street near City Hall, the Courier Journal reported.

Mother of Louisville police shooting victim calls for peace

A police officer was seen on camera during a WAVE-TV broadcast firing what appeared to be pepper bullets directly at the camera crew.

"I'm getting shot! I'm getting shot!" WAVE-TV reporter Kaitlin Rust is heard yelling off-camera. She told the indignant anchors in the studio that the crew was behind the line, but police wanted them to move further away.

Police spokeswoman Jessie Halladay said no shots had been fired at Friday's protest as of 10:40 p.m. and no significant injuries had been reported. Two people were arrested.

Bracing for more protests, police said they wouldn't tolerate violence or property destruction.

"We value the right to free speech and understand this community has a lot to say right now," Louisville police Lt. Col. LaVita Chavous said. "We hear you."

But she added that police were prepared to "take whatever action we must to try to ensure no one else is injured during this time of unrest. We ask the community to please voice your opinions in a peaceful way."

Meanwhile, Louisville's mayor said the use of no-knock warrants by police was being suspended, the latest in a series of policy changes and other actions in response to Taylor's death.

"To the people who gathered downtown last night to protest, and to many more throughout our city and throughout our country who feel angry, hurt, afraid, frustrated, tired and sick of story after story of black lives ending at the hands of law enforcement, I hear you," Fischer said.

Two people wounded in the gunfire underwent surgery, while five were in good condition, he said.

Beshear, speaking on CNN, said Thursday's protest started peacefully but some people later "turned it into something that it should not have been."

Local Councilwoman Keisha Dorsey termed the protest as "a revolt against a system in which people have felt oppressed," the Courier Journal reported. "What I'm seeing is people who are trying their best to do something with their hurt, their pain and their frustration."

The Louisville protests followed the release of a 911 call Taylor's boyfriend made on March 13, moments after the 26-year-old EMT was shot eight times by narcotics detectives who knocked down her front door. No drugs were found in the home.

Hundreds of demonstrators marched through downtown Louisville, ending in the early hours of Friday as rain poured down. Windows were broken and several vehicles were damaged during the unrest, police said. Shots were fired into government buildings, including police headquarters, they said. Bricks were thrown into buildings and graffiti was splashed in several places, including a firefighter memorial, they said. The police description of the damage made no reference to any looting.

Jordan Basham, a 24-year-old white bartender, said she was a few feet from where the people were shot. As people fled in terror, a man she didn't know pushed her to the ground, told her not to move and used his own body to shield her, she said Friday.

Mother of Louisville police shooting victim calls for peace

"I'll never be able to get that picture out of my mind," she said. "But I am still very glad that I was there. As long as they're out there protesting, I'll be back."

Many protesters wore masks as Kentuckians are strongly urged to follow health guidelines to contain the coronavirus pandemic.

Attention on Taylor's death has intensified since her family sued the police department this month. The case has attracted national headlines alongside the shooting of Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia in February and the recent death of Floyd. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Major highways in Twin Cities shutting down at 7 p.m. Saturday

ARTICLE LXXXIX. MAJOR HIGHWAYS IN TWIN CITIES SHUTTING DOWN AT 7 P.M. SATURDAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 184 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: Freeways and highways around the Twin Cities metro area are being closed Saturday night, according to a tweet by MnDot, which also noted that "routes will remain open for motorists to exit downtown areas." The following stretches will be shut down starting at 7 p.m. Saturday: I-35W north and south bound lanes between I-694 and [...]

Body

Freeways and highways around the Twin Cities metro area are being closed Saturday night, according to a tweet by MnDot, which also noted that "routes will remain open for motorists to exit downtown areas."

The following stretches will be shut down starting at 7 p.m. Saturday:

I-35W north and south bound lanes between I-694 and Highway 62. I-35E north and south bound lanes between Highway 36 and Highway 62 I-94 east and west bound between I-694 and the I-694 and I-494 interchange I-394 east between Highway 100 and I-94 Highway 55 north and south bound between Highway 62 and I-94

Officials warn of another night of protests that could turn dangerous in the Twin Cities Saturday night. A curfew is in effect in Minneapolis and St. Paul starting at 8 p.m.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

St. Paul small business owners, volunteers assess damage, prepare for worst while hoping for quiet night

ARTICLE XC. ST. PAUL SMALL BUSINESS OWNERS, VOLUNTEERS ASSESS DAMAGE, PREPARE FOR WORST WHILE HOPING FOR QUIET NIGHT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 30, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 851 words

Byline: Frederick Melo

Highlight: With plywood boards purchased in a hurry and more donated by Penumbra Theatre, Tetra Constantino and five volunteers calmly but resolutely boarded up Elsa's House of Sleep, his University Avenue furniture store. Like many small businesses across St. Paul, Constantino prayed for the best while prepping for the worst Saturday. During the riots Thursday night, [...]

Body

With plywood boards purchased in a hurry and more donated by Penumbra Theatre, Tetra Constantino and five volunteers calmly but resolutely boarded up Elsa's House of Sleep, his University Avenue furniture store.

Like many small businesses across St. Paul, Constantino prayed for the best while prepping for the worst Saturday.

During the riots Thursday night, Constantino approached teens congregating in the alley behind his store and explained to them, in no uncertain terms, that a fire at his shop would cause flammables to explode, and they would die.

Next door, Tim Wilson, proprietor of Urban Lights music store, acknowledged he hadn't slept in over 24 hours after catching a would-be fire starter behind his store, one of several in St. Paul's hard-hit Midway neighborhood marked "Black-Owned Business."

"We saw a guy bent over, lighting palettes, so we chased him off," said Wilson, standing in front of 10 carloads of friends and associates in the parking area next to his shop late Friday night, all of them ready to send a strong message if the troublemakers returned.

A REPRIEVE FRIDAY

For most of those St. Paul business owners whose shops survived heavy looting and rioting on Thursday, Friday night provided a welcome reprieve.

St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter on Friday ordered a two-night, 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew and joined Police Chief Todd Axtell in calling for back-up from State Patrol and the Minnesota National Guard, if necessary.

St. Paul small business owners, volunteers assess damage, prepare for worst while hoping for quiet night

"Yesterday we were braced for anything to happen, and we ended up seeing most of the activity take place in Minneapolis," said Carter, in an online discussion with business owners on Saturday afternoon organized by the St. Paul Area Chamber of Commerce.

The mayor said police and local government heard plenty of rumors about potential protests and group mayhem that might occur Friday night but none panned out. He urged demonstrators to respect the curfew and stay home.

The chamber is connecting volunteer business consultants to small business owners who may need help applying for state and federal relief or private financing at saintpaulchamber.com/payitforward.html.

Also Friday, an estimated 1,000 community volunteers fanned out along University Avenue with brooms and buckets, looking for opportunity to lend a hand. Some delivered water and meals to passersby in an effort to lift spirits.

Efforts were organized by Bethlehem Lutheran Church on Roy Street, the Hamline-Midway Coalition and other groups, though families looking to help others arrived from as far as Woodbury unaffiliated with any organization.

On Saturday, dozens of volunteers gathered at Galtier Elementary School, two blocks north of University Avenue in the Hamline-Midway neighborhood, to distribute community donations of canned and packaged food to families in need.

"Even in the ugliest moments you can set your clock by the beautiful spirit that arises in St. Paul" to help out, Carter said.

COSTLY DESTRUCTION, A TOSSED BRICK AWAY

In St. Paul's Midway and throughout most other corners of the capital city, Friday evening unfolded relatively quietly, with some isolated arrests of people mostly from outside the city, the mayor said.

Carter would not speculate on whether the curfew would be extended to a third night. Store owners said they were well aware that costly destruction is just a tossed brick or match strike away.

Friends of Urban Lights record store owner Tim Wilson are making the rounds around his shop at Pascal and University Avenue. He hasn't slept since 7 am Thursday, and confronted a guy last night trying to light palettes on fire. "So we chased him off," Wilson said. pic.twitter.com/bL39sIYcSy

- Frederick Melo, Reporter (@FrederickMelo) May 30, 2020

Several owners vowed to remain close to their shops Saturday night in case rioters returned.

MIDWAY STORES DESTROYED

Among the Midway stores destroyed in Thursday's riots was Lloyd's Pharmacy at 720 Snelling Ave. N., which opened in 1918 as Florian's Pharmacy. Also leveled was a Napa Auto Parts store at 1271 University Ave. W. and the Bole Ethiopian Cuisine at 590 Syndicate St. N.

A fire that destroyed the Sports Dome apparel shop and the Boost Mobile store at 1505 University Ave. W. on Thursday started up again on its own Friday night, bringing out St. Paul Fire trucks.

St. Paul small business owners, volunteers assess damage, prepare for worst while hoping for quiet night

At the east end of the Midway Shopping Center by Allianz Field, nothing but ash and burnt metal remained of a Foot Locker sneaker store, a Game Stop video game store and several neighboring vendors.

For her faith-based podcast, Frogtown resident Dinina Jay toured a Furniture Barn store that had sustained visible damage Thursday at University Avenue and Albert Street.

"I spoke to the owner. He's heartbroken," Jay said. "We need the law of the land done, and the law of the Lord." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE XCI. RETHINKING REOPENING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

May 30, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 5BLength: 868 wordsByline: SHARYN JACKSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Restaurants were ready for outdoor dining, but this week's unrest has some altering plans.Body

Long circled on the calendar for restaurateurs, June 1 was supposed to be the day for a new beginning. After more than two months without seated customers due to the coronavirus, restaurants finally got the greenlight from the state to open their patios on Monday.

But three nights of escalating community unrest in the aftermath of the death of George Floyd - which saw several Minneapolis restaurants damaged by fire, looting or vandalism - has owners reconsidering whether they will take Gov. Tim Walz up on the offer to reopen for outdoor dining.

"We're just flabbergasted," said Luke Derheim, director of operations for Craft & Crew Hospitality, which owns four restaurants, including two in Minneapolis. "Just when we thought things were going to get better, now we're having to grapple with an even larger crisis in the city."

All of Craft & Crew's restaurants are taking reservations for patio seating next week. But Derheim and his team will be making a final decision on opening the Minneapolis spots - the Howe Daily Kitchen & Bar in south Minneapolis, and Stanley's Northeast Bar Room - over the weekend.

"We're just trying to piece it together day by day or hour by hour," he said.

Brit's Pub, in downtown Minneapolis, was preparing to open its rooftop Monday for lunch. Now, general manager Shane Higgins said that opening could be a week or two away. Takeout has been suspended, too, and the restaurant on Nicollet Mall has been boarded up.

"We don't want anybody on the premises," he said. "For the safety of guests and employees, there's absolutely no point in trying to do carryout."

Surly Brewing's expansive beer garden was ready for outdoor dining under the state's parameters - tables placed at least 6 feet apart, no more than 50 customers at a time. Staffers would have their temperature checked before they could work.

Rethinking reopening

Those plans are on hold after a manager who lives in the neighborhood hit hardest by the unrest came to work in tears ahead of a COVID-19-related safety training.

"That was the thing that catapulted everybody into realizing this is a bigger situation than what we're trying to do right now," said Dan DiNovis, Surly's vice president of hospitality.

The company will reconvene Tuesday, after suspending takeout this weekend, and decide the next move.

The decision is almost existential, in light of the devastation faced by fellow restaurants and bars in other parts of the city.

"It's the abyss," DiNovis said. "What is going on in the world right now? What is trying to operate a restaurant? I don't know, because I see a lot of them getting burned down."

Not only restaurants are re-evaluating their long-wished-for reopenings.

The Mall of America will not open for retail Monday as planned either. MOA officials said they would announce a new opening date when it is finalized. Access to the property will be restricted through at least Sunday to ensure safety of employees. Curbside pickup also has been suspended.

"Many of our tenants were planning on using this weekend to prepare their stores and train their employees for reopening," the mall said in a statement. "With no access to the building, that will not be possible. By delaying our reopening date, it will give mall retailers additional time to prepare."

Staff at Amore Uptown, an Italian restaurant on West Lake Street - a 3-mile straight shot from the epicenter of the looting and rioting on East Lake Street - say they have "every intention" to open the rooftop Monday as planned.

"We would be pretty devastated if we weren't able to go forward with that," said assistant general manager Corey McHugh.

Eating at a restaurant, after all this time at home, might even be a salve for Minneapolis' wounds.

"We certainly understand people's grievances and we want to be able to serve great food, give great service in this time of uncertainty," McHugh said. "Even a short evening spent dining out with friends and family can change morale."

Baldamar, in Rosedale Mall's parking lot, shuttered Friday at the request of mall management. But owner Randy Stanley also hopes the restaurant's patio will be up and running Monday if it's safe. A lingering question: How might citywide curfews, should they extend beyond the weekend, affect dinner hours and staff's ability to come and go? That's just "another curveball," among many this year, said Stanley.

"You know, it's just been one punch in the gut after another," he said.

But Stanley said he's ready for whatever comes next. "Failure is not an option," he said. "We're going to march on, no matter what."

Peter Campbell, owner of Red Wagon Pizza in southwest Minneapolis, hadn't planned to open his patio June 1 ("The seating doesn't justify the expense," he said).

Rethinking reopening

But he also hadn't planned on suspending takeout and covering the windows with wooden boards on Friday.

It was a decision he made after two nearby businesses were vandalized the night before, and a decision that shook him as someone whose business is hospitality.

"We've spent the last two months saying, 'Don't come near us; don't walk in the building,' " Campbell said. "And now to board up the building? That goes against everything we've built. It's devastating."

Sharyn Jackson · 612-673-4853

@SharynJackson

Load-Date: May 30, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE XCII. OFFICIALS BLAME DIFFERING GROUPS OF 'OUTSIDERS' FOR VIOLENCE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1100 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - As protests over the death of George Floyd grow in cities across the U.S., government officials have been warning of the "outsiders" -- groups of organized rioters they say are flooding into major cities not to call for justice but to cause destruction.Body

By MICHAEL BALSAMO and KATHLEEN HENNESSEY

WASHINGTON (AP) - As protests over the death of George Floyd grow in cities across the U.S., government officials have been warning of the "outsiders" - groups of organized rioters they say are flooding into major cities not to call for justice but to cause destruction.But the state and federal officials have offered differing assessments of who the outsiders are. They've blamed left-wing extremists, far-right white nationalists and even suggested the involvement of drug cartels. These leaders have offered little evidence to back up those claims, and the chaos of the protests makes verifying identities and motives exceedingly difficult.

Police officers across the country were gearing up Saturday for another night of potentially violent clashes in major cities. Some states had even called in the National Guard to aid overwhelmed police.

The finger pointing on both sides of the political spectrum is likely to deepen the political divide in the U.S., allowing politicians to advance the theory that aligns with their political view and distract from the underlying frustrations that triggered the protests.

Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz on Saturday told reporters he'd heard unconfirmed reports that white supremacists were coming from elsewhere to stoke the violence and that even drug cartels "are trying to take advantage of the chaos." John Harrington, the state's commissioner of public safety, later said they had received intel reports on white supremacists.

"But I cannot say that we have confirmed observations of local law enforcement to say that we've seen cells of white supremacists in the area," he said Saturday.

Officials blame differing groups of 'outsiders' for violence

But federal officials later pointed to "far left extremist groups." President Donald Trump alleged the violence was "being led by Antifa and other radical groups." Antifa, short for anti-fascists, is an umbrella term for far-left-leaning militant groups that resist neo-Nazis and white supremacists at demonstrations.

Attorney General William Barr later seemed to echo Trump's assertion, saying the violent incidents in Minneapolis were driven by groups using "Antifa-like tactics." Barr vowed that federal prosecutors across the country would use federal riots statutes to charge protesters who cross state lines to participate in violent rioting.

A Justice Department spokesperson said the attorney general's assertion was based on information provided from state and local law enforcement agencies, but did not detail what that information entailed.

Acting Homeland Security Secretary Chad Wolf was even more vague, declining to point to any particular ideology in his assessment. His agency has heard that "a number of different groups are involved in these whether it's Antifa or it's others, frankly," he said. The groups appeared to be organized and using tactics that wouldn't normally happen in peaceful protest, he said, though he didn't elaborate.

While the motives behind the violence were unclear, there was firmer evidence that some of the protesters were coming to the demonstrations from outside the urban centers that have been the epicenter of the demonstrations.

In New York City, federal officials were bringing charges against several suspects, including one of two sisters from upstate New York accused of throwing a Molotov cocktail through the back window of a police van in Brooklyn, a law enforcement official said. The initially peaceful demonstrations in New York City over Floyd's death spiraled into chaos as night fell Friday. Protesters confronted police officers, destroying police vehicles and setting fires.

In Detroit, 37 of the 60 people who were arrested in overnight protests did not live in the city - and many came from nearby suburbs, police Chief James Craig said Saturday. Although Detroit is about 80% black, many of those arrested were white.

"We support the right to free speech. We support peaceful protests," Craig told reporters. "If you want to disrupt, stay home and disrupt in your own community."

Initially, St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter said he'd been told all of those arrested in his city Friday were from outside the state. But a spokesman said Saturday night the mayor had later learned more than half are from Minnesota.

In Hennepin County, which includes Minneapolis, 47 of the 57 people arrested in protest incidents through Saturday morning had provided a Minnesota address to authorities, according to Jeremy Zoss, a spokesman for the Hennepin County Sheriff's Office.

Carter expressed the opinion of many black activists in the Twin Cities who have expressed disbelief that local residents would destroy their own neighborhoods, burning down essential services and damaging small businesses. And while it was local protesters and groups that staged initial angry, but peaceful, demonstrations, it was agitators from elsewhere that strategically escalated the tension by causing damage and setting fires, they said. Their beliefs were reinforced by the large numbers of white people in the protests in Minneapolis.

Officials blame differing groups of 'outsiders' for violence

"I think about a third of the people are from out of town here to make the city burn," said Justin Terrell, executive director of the Council for Minnesotans of African Heritage. "It is just putting black people in a crossfire not just between fascists and anarchists - but putting us in a crossfire with the national guard."

It's exceedingly difficult in the chaos and dark of the events to prove these claims. The challenge is made harder in the Minnesota protest, where very few arrests were made in the first two nights of unrest. St. Paul arrest records showed 18 people were arrested on charges related to civil unrest from Thursday to early Saturday morning. Of those, only four were from outside the state; two were listed as unknown.

Still, some civil rights leaders had a clear message for anyone coming to protest, even those who show up to call for justice for Floyd.

"The moment has passed. Go home, stay away from here. We are a vulnerable population. At the end of that day if black folks can't rebuild then the only thing we've done is build more power for white folks," said Terrell. "You're talking about years, decades of work undone by these groups - and by the officer."

Trump vowed Saturday that the "radical left criminals, thugs and others" would "not be allowed to set communities ablaze."

"I will not allow angry mobs to dominate," he said. "Won't happen."

—

Hennessey reported from Minneapolis. Associated Press writers Jill Colvin in Cape Canaveral, Fla., Michael R. Sisak in New York and Corey Williams in Detroit contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates?

ARTICLE XCIII. LETTERS: IS THIS THE SOCIETY INTO WHICH WE'RE WELCOMING OUR 2020 HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES?

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1867 words

Byline: Letter Writers

Highlight: I've been taught to trust and forgive, but ... My name is Kaia Fitzgerald. I am 17 years old and a 2020 high school graduate. May 26, 2020, I turn on the news like I do every single day. The first thing I see is "I can't breathe" and above the headlining, a white police [...]

Body

My name is Kaia Fitzgerald. I am 17 years old and a 2020 high school graduate.

May 26, 2020, I turn on the news like I do every single day. The first thing I see is "I can't breathe" and above the headlining, a white police officer pinning a black man down with his knee. The police officer slowly grinding his knee into his neck, while the man pleads, groans and moans. The man says "I can't breathe" and "My stomach hurts. My neck hurts. Everything hurts. Water or something. Please. Please. I cannot breathe. I cannot breathe."

I start sobbing; I sink down into my chair and a wave of anger and sadness washes over me. Every single week I see another one of my brothers and sisters die due to the actions of policemen. I am disgusted. I have been told my whole life as a young black woman to look up to policemen, to trust them. But as I got older I have developed nothing but fear of the police. My white counterparts cannot share the same fear. Some members of their family are even policemen. They see the police as their everyday heroes battling the "evil" of society. Who knew the "evil" the police were battling was the color of my skin? So I ask you policemen of Minneapolis, is this the society you are welcoming your 2020 high school graduates to?

To Derek Chauvin #1087: I have grown up in a household where you forgive those who do wrong. But as I write this letter, and research more and more, I find it harder to forgive your actions. In my eyes you have killed an innocent man. There were a hundred other ways you could've dealt with this situation, even whilst you were killing him. The man was handcuffed, and on the ground, yet you decided the penalty for suspected forgery is death. While I am writing this letter, you and three other police officers have been fired. But I believe justice has not been served until you are behind bars.

To George Floyd's family and friends: There are no words to express how sorry I am for your loss. You have lost a loved one to the hands of ignorance and bigotry. I hope you all take your time to grieve, and know that justice will be served for George Floyd. You will all be in my prayers.

Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates?

Kaia Fitzgerald, Roseville

I am a Californian, but I will always be a Minnesotan. I grew up in Spring Valley, went to University of St. Thomas, have a degree from the University of Minnesota, taught in Anoka, and lived in White Bear Lake. I have been a supporter of Al Franken and am now a supporter of Amy Klobucher.

But what I am not is a supporter of the thugs who have burned the Twin Cities. I feel the killing of George Floyd was murder, a totally racist act. However, the violent and destructive actions by out-of-control criminals are wrong. As a loyal Minnesotan, even as a member of the diaspora, I am ashamed of what has gone on. Ashamed of the murder and ashamed of the thoughtless destruction. The mayor, the police chief, and the governor, are all honorable, and should be trusted to allow justice to prevail.

I have been proud to be a Minnesotan, and hope to restore that pride.

Stephen P. Collins, Petaluma, CA

Come to Minnesota where opening a store or swimming pool without permission could get you arrested but rioting, arson, burglary, and looting won't.

Richard Iffert, Eagan

The uprising of the people in the streets of Minneapolis is a simple call for justice to the murder of George Floyd by four Minneapolis police. Floyd's humanity is in need of justice for a murder that demeaned his humanness. Floyd's family is in need of justice for their loved one. The Black community of Minneapolis is in need of justice for yet another horrendous case of police brutality.

And what does justice look like? Derek Chauvin has been arrested and charged with murder. The other three policemen must be charged as accomplices in the murder of George Floyd.

Justice means that politicians such as Mayor Jacob Frey and state legislators and administrators should no longer support increased funding of police departments without instituting deep, structural reform that ends the culture of abuse endemic to policing in America.

Justice means that County Attorney Mike Freeman must treat this case of police murdering a civilian as he would when a civilian takes the life of another. Police should no longer be treated as privileged individuals who operate above the law.

And finally, justice means that Gov. Tim Walz and his administration must take concrete actions toward ridding this state of some of the worst racial disparities in this country. Like it or not, the people's uprising in Minneapolis is a cry against the huge inequalities plaguing this state.

Sanna Nimitz Towns, St. Paul

Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates?

The recent column by Joe Nocera about lockdowns and their worth shows how a health view is distorted when a business writer is given credence instead of doctors and health science experts. It was not fair and balanced. Obvious facts Nocera failed to include were that the H3N2 virus, or Hong Kong flu, lasted about one and a half years. The COVID-19 pandemic has been only three months, and with strong mitigation, i.e. stay at home orders, it has killed as many Americans.

Several scientific projections have said that by doing nothing, much the same as during the Hong Kong flu, as many as 2.5 million Americans could have died by this fall. That is only about a nine month period. Some predictions say, with mitigation, as many as 500,000 could still die.

Much more can be said on this issue by science experts, but my point is to present fair and balanced information on this highly deadly virus.

Gary Thompson, St. Paul

A priest, an imam, and a rabbi sign into a Zoom call ... In years past, that might have been the beginning of a joke, but now it's a promising reality. For the past several weeks, at the request of Commissioner John Harrington of the Minnesota Department of Public Safety, Interfaith Action of Greater Saint Paul has hosted Zoom conversations with the commissioner and leaders of many diverse religious denominations. Participants shared ideas, examples and concerns about how to serve and lead during this pandemic.

Recently our conversations turned to how we should prepare to re-open our doors and on what timeline. Our views differ, as do our religious perspectives and lived experiences. One minister in a community hard-hit by coronavirus at a meatpacking facility implored us to move with utmost caution. An African American minister shared sobering statistics about how communities of color are being disproportionately affected by the pandemic. Some wondered why the Mall of America could open but churches could not.

Our discussions revealed many differences. In some cases, urban concerns are different from rural concerns. Different faith traditions present different viewpoints regarding prayer and ritual practices. How might we handle communion? Seder? Eid? We expressed collective concern about the youth in our congregations and brainstormed about drive-in and outdoor worship services. The thing we all agreed on is this: Our choices matter. We know that how faith communities behave in the coming weeks will have significant impact on the 2 million to 3 million Minnesotans who belong to a church, synagogue, mosque or other place of worship.

We believe that listening is critical right now and leads us to better decision-making. We commend Commissioner Harrington for repeatedly bringing faith leaders together to discuss and debate as he seeks to understand all of our needs and perspectives and ensures that they are heard and represented in the recommendations offered to the Governor.

None of us has walked this path before. As ELCA Bishop Ann Svennungsen said, "We cannot go back. The question is, 'How do we go forward?'"

So how do we build a new statewide approach in these troubled times? Let's start with the values that our various faith traditions share: safeguarding lives, caring for our neighbors, and providing for those in need. Careful balancing of our religious and public safety needs asks much of us. We are fortunate to live in a state where the balancing is informed by all of our voices, in which we're all at the table, and in which listening, as Commissioner Harrington has demonstrated, is careful and authentic.

Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates?

Randi Ilyse Roth, Jon Anderson, Aaron S. Weininger, Jill E. Crimmings and Asad Zaman Roth is executive director of Interfaith Action of Greater Saint Paul. Anderson is bishop of the Southwestern Minnesota Synod ELCA. Weininger, Adath Jeshuran Congregation rabbi, and Crimmings, Bet Shalom Congregation rabbi, are co-chairs of the Minnesota Rabbinical Association. Imam Zaman is executive director of the Muslim American Society of Minnesota.

Nothing makes my blood boil more than a male venting about abortion. Might I remind your recent letter writer ("Tax-funded abortions," May 22) that ALL unwanted pregnancies are caused by men. And if men had to bear the consequences of their actions there never would have been any anti-abortion laws passed by the all-male legislatures of the day. No male judge, senator, governor, doctor or even spiritual advisor has a right to tell a woman what to do with her body. If your letter writer is so opposed to abortion, I suggest that he shouldn't get one.

LaVonne McCombie, Hudson

The St. Paul City Council has a tenant protections ordinance coming up and I am strongly in favor. Nearly every problem addressed in the list of solutions offered by this ordinance is one that's been inflicted on me by a St. Paul landlord at one point or another living here.

I've had ludicrously big security deposits surcharged to nothing with fees that all evaporated when challenged with photos. I was accidentally evicted by a landlord who just forgot to file our lease renewal, I only found out when the maintenance guy waltzed in and proclaimed "Oh ... you're still here." I had my home of five years sold out from under me after Fred Melo (Sorry, Fred) wrote an article about a hot real estate market. I could have afforded that rickety little house too. I've been screwed time and again by the landlords in this town, and I've barely been able to defend myself, and I'm someone who knows my rights.

Tenants deserve rights, and they deserve to have them enumerated.

Furthermore, the council and city should take this further, we need to be talking about and advocating for things like expanded public housing, rent control, and more homeless shelters. We are just going to be trapped in this endless loop of plot-by-plot development squabbling, pitting neighborhood against neighborhood until we have the bravery to act big. The market will not save us, the landlords are not our friends, and until we do something gutsy to solve our housing crisis (which was bad before COVID!) we will be stuck in the most interminable aggravating variance-obsessed cycle until we're all broke and Jim Crockerell owns the whole city.

Tom Basgen, St. Paul

Letters: Progressives have controlled Minneapolis for 40 years. Hold them accountable Tainted: Hey, bicyclists, what's wrong with your special bikeway? Letters: You own this, Minneapolis and Minnesota Democrats Letters: SPPD should extend its purview Letters: Address the ways we deny people their human dignity and rights

Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates?

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

DC mayor: We have to be concerned about virus rebound

ARTICLE XCIV. DC MAYOR: WE HAVE TO BE CONCERNED ABOUT VIRUS REBOUND

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1010 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: MIAMI (AP) - In hindsight, Rosa Jimenez Cano realizes that attending a protest against police brutality was risky - and not just for the usual reasons.

Body

By KELLI KENNEDY, DANICA KIRKA and PABLO GORONDI

MIAMI (AP) - In hindsight, Rosa Jimenez Cano realizes that attending a protest against police brutality was risky - and not just for the usual reasons.

"This can be kind of a tinderbox for COVID," the 39-year-old venture capitalist said after attending a demonstration in Florida, one of many around the country sparked by the death of George Floyd, a black man who died after he was pinned at the neck by a white Minneapolis police officer.

As more beaches, churches, mosques, schools and businesses reopened worldwide, the sudden and mass civil unrest in the United States is raising fears of new virus outbreaks in a country that has more confirmed infections and deaths than any other. And it's not just in the U.S. - London hosted a large anti-racism protest Sunday where demonstrators violated social distancing rules.

Rosa Jimenez Cano said she planned to self-quarantine for 14 days, worrying she was perhaps "irresponsible" when she attended Saturday night's protest in Miami, where she exposed herself to crowds of people.

Protests over Floyd's death - the latest in a series of killings of black men and women at the hands of police in America - have shaken the country from Minneapolis to New York, from Atlanta to Los Angeles. Some turned into riots and clashes with police, leaving stores in flames and torched cars in the streets.

Health experts fear that silent carriers of the virus could unwittingly infect others at protests where people are packed cheek to jowl, many without masks, many chanting, singing or shouting. The virus is dispersed by microscopic droplets in the air when people cough, sneeze, sing or talk.

DC mayor: We have to be concerned about virus rebound

"There's no question that, when you put hundreds or thousands of people together in close proximity, when we have got this virus all over the streets ... it's not healthy," Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan said Sunday on CNN's "State of the Union."

"Two weeks from now across America, we're going to find out whether or not this gives us a spike and drives the numbers back up again or not."

The U.S. has seen over 1.7 million infections and nearly 104,000 deaths in the pandemic, which has disproportionately affected racial minorities in a nation that does not have universal health care.

Washington Mayor Muriel Bowser said Sunday she was very concerned that the protests in the nation's capital and elsewhere could provide fertile ground for a new series of outbreaks. Many of the protesters were wearing masks, but there were no attempts at social distancing.

"We've been working very hard in these last eight to 10 weeks to not have any mass gatherings," she said. "As a nation, we have to be concerned about a rebound."

Even the many protesters wearing masks are not guaranteed protection. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says cloth masks keep infected people from spreading the virus but are not designed to protect wearers from getting it.

Mass protests in connection with Floyd's death were also being held in Europe.

In London, thousands of people marched Sunday chanting "No justice! No peace!" while carrying signs reading "Justice for George Floyd" and "Racism is a global issue." Many demonstrators were not wearing masks and most in the crowd at Trafalgar Square were packed closely together. Britain has seen nearly 38,500 virus deaths, the second-highest in the world after the United States.

In Berlin, hundreds of protesters picketed outside the U.S. Embassy on Saturday night under the motto: "Justice for George Floyd." Others marched near the U.S. embassy in Copenhagen, Denmark.

Many Americans returned Sunday to in-person church services for the first time in weeks and tens of thousands of mosques reopened across the Middle East, but countries from India to Colombia still saw rising numbers of new infections.

Nearly 6.1 million infections have been reported worldwide, with nearly 370,000 people dying, according to a tally by Johns Hopkins University. The true death toll is believed to be significantly higher, since many victims died of the virus without ever being tested.

The situation worsened Sunday in India, where new daily cases topped 8,000 for the first time and 193 more deaths were reported. Despite that, India still is easing restrictions on shops and public transport in more states beginning Monday, although subways and schools will remain closed.

In Saudi Arabia, mosques reopened Sunday for the first time in more than two months, but Islam's holiest site in Mecca remained closed. In Jerusalem, throngs of worshippers waited outside the Al-Aqsa Mosque before it reopened. Many wore surgical masks and waited for temperature checks as they entered.

In Bogota, the capital of Colombia, authorities were locking down an area of nearly 1.5 million people as cases continued to rise. Mayor Claudia Lopez said no one in the working-class Kennedy area - inaugurated by the late U.S. President John F. Kennedy in 1961 - will be allowed out, except to seek food or medical care or in case of an emergency. Factories must also close.

DC mayor: We have to be concerned about virus rebound

In Spain, Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez said Sunday that he would ask Parliament for a final two-week extension of the nation's state of emergency that is set to expire on June 7. That allows the government to keep ordering lockdown measures to control its coronavirus outbreak, which has claimed at least 27,000 lives, many of them in overwhelmed nursing homes.

"We have almost reached safe harbor," Sánchez said.

At the Vatican, Pope Francis cautioned people against being pessimistic as they emerge from coronavirus lockdowns.

During Mass in St. Peter's Basilica to mark Pentecost Sunday, Francis noted a tendency to say that "nothing will return as before." That kind of thinking, Francis said, guarantees that "the one thing that certainly does not return is hope."

Kirka reported from London and Gorondi reported from Budapest. AP reporters from around the world contributed to this report.

Follow AP pandemic coverage at <http://apnews.com/VirusOutbreak> and <https://apnews.com/UnderstandingtheOutbreak>

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

1,500 protesters march from Capitol onto I-94 in St. Paul for about 1 hour

ARTICLE XCV. 1,500 PROTESTERS MARCH FROM CAPITOL ONTO I-94 IN ST. PAUL FOR ABOUT 1 HOUR

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 363 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: NOTE: This story stopped being updated Sunday evening. For the latest on what happened at the Capitol, including perhaps a dozen arrests, read this more recent story. About 1,500 people who gathered for a large protest at the Capitol in St. Paul on Sunday began marching later in the afternoon and walked onto Interstate 94. [...]

Body

NOTE: This story stopped being updated Sunday evening. For the latest on what happened at the Capitol, including perhaps a dozen arrests, read this more recent story.

About 1,500 people who gathered for a large protest at the Capitol in St. Paul on Sunday began marching later in the afternoon and walked onto Interstate 94. They headed westbound for about an hour before they exited.

Police described the group as organized and peaceful. After leaving the Capitol, the group used the St. Anthony Avenue ramp to enter Interstate 94 West shortly after 4 p.m. They exited at Lexington Parkway about 5 p.m. to University Avenue, headed east and returned to the Capitol.

The protest began at 1 p.m., with people calling for a special prosecutor to be appointed in the case of George Floyd, who died on Monday after a Minneapolis police officer was seen on video kneeling on his neck.

Derek Chauvin, who was fired from the police department, was charged Friday with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter in Floyd's death.

People at Sunday's protest were also calling for three other officers who were present, and who have also been terminated from the Minneapolis police department, to be arrested and charged.

Michelle Gross said Communities United Against Police Brutality, of which she is president, has worked for 20 years on attempting to approve police accountability.

"We need to get the framing back where it belongs - it's not about burned buildings and smashed windows," Gross said before Sunday's protest. "... This is about the murder of an innocent man who was unarmed. ... It's about the decades of murders by police in this state and across this country that have brought us to this moment."

1,500 protesters march from Capitol onto I-94 in St. Paul for about 1 hour

During the protest at the Capitol, the city closed University Avenue from Rice to Jackson streets, which remains closed.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE XCVI. FALSE CLAIM TARGETS WIFE OF OFFICER CHARGED IN FLOYD'S DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 409 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: Amid reports that the wife of the white officer charged with murder in the death of George Floyd filed for divorce, false social media posts emerged claiming her brother was among the officers involved in the arrest.

Body

By BEATRICE DUPUY

Amid reports that the wife of the white officer charged with murder in the death of George Floyd filed for divorce, false social media posts emerged claiming her brother was among the officers involved in the arrest.

"THE PLOT THICKENS!" shouted a Facebook post Saturday claiming that Derek Chauvin's wife, Kellie Chauvin, was the sister of an officer captured on video standing by as the 46-year-old black man cried out for help.

But Kellie Chauvin is not the sister of Tou Thao, one of the officers on the scene.

"Tou Thao is NOT Ms. Chauvin's brother. I would GREATLY appreciate help putting that rumor to rest," Amanda Mason-Sekula, her divorce lawyer, said in an email. "Her family has been harassed and threatened based on multiple incorrect reports."

Kellie Chauvin, who competed for the title of Mrs. Minnesota in 2018 with the hope of becoming the first Hmong winner, does have a brother, but it's not Thao. Her brother is a police officer in St. Paul, said Mason-Sekula, adding he was not involved in any aspect of Floyd's death.

Both Kellie Chauvin and Thao are Asian. Kellie Chauvin was born in Laos in 1974. Her family fled to Thailand in 1977 following the war.

Posts making the false claim spread across Twitter, Facebook and YouTube, with the rumor swirling in Minneapolis' Hmong community. The widely shared posts included side-by-side photos of Thao, Chauvin and Kellie Chauvin. Derek Chauvin has been charged with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter in the death of the Floyd, which has led to days of protests in the U.S. and violence. All four officers involved in the arrest were fired.

False claim targets wife of officer charged in Floyd's death

"Kellie Chauvin is the wife of Derek Chauvin, Tou Thao is Kellie Chauvin's brother," said one post on Instagram with more than 3,000 likes.

False information surrounding Floyd's death has snowballed on social media amid protests calling for justice in the killing of Floyd who had recently moved to Minneapolis to start a new life for himself.

Charges have not been filed against Thao and the other officers at the scene. Thao was sued in federal court in 2017 for alleged excessive force, according to online records obtained by The Associated Press. According to the lawsuit, Lamar Ferguson claimed that in 2014 Thao and his partner stopped him and beat him up while he was on his way to his girlfriend's house. The lawsuit was settled for $25,000.

Associated Press writer Michael R. Sisak contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Truck drives through crowd in Minneapolis, apparently hitting none; evening sees mass arrests but little violence

ARTICLE XCVII. TRUCK DRIVES THROUGH CROWD IN MINNEAPOLIS, APPARENTLY HITTING NONE; EVENING SEES MASS ARRESTS BUT LITTLE VIOLENCE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1855 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: An afternoon of peaceful demonstrations across the Twin Cities Sunday was shattered when a tanker truck drove into a crowd of demonstrators marching on Interstate 35W in Minneapolis.

Body

An afternoon of peaceful demonstrations across the Twin Cities Sunday was shattered when a tanker truck drove into a crowd of demonstrators marching on Interstate 35W in Minneapolis.

But apparently, it hit none of them, according to authorities, who were unclear of the driver's motives.

As evening drew on after curfew, the evening became punctuated by orderly mass arrests of curfew violators, but as of 11 p.m., no fires and little violence. Around 11:30 p.m., Minneapolis responded to a fire at a small grocery store, and after midnight they responded to a few reports of looting and fires that could not be readily confirmed.

"We're seeing very few incidents," Gov. Tim Walz said around 10:30 p.m.

One large group of demonstrators gathered in Minneapolis, preparing for a standoff with police on the ground where George Floyd, whose death sparked protests last week. Floyd, who was unarmed, died Monday after a Minneapolis police officer knelt on him.

The group neither exhibited - nor allowed - violence within its ranks, disobeying curfew for hours in what was a largely solemn display. "This is a safe space," one of the demonstrators said.

By 1 a.m., the group had hauled in trailers, signs and parts of fences to barricade the area from police, whom they assumed would arrive, sooner or later.

pic.twitter.com/YpkbMojLk8

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress) June 1, 2020

The lack of carnage in the truck incident was astounding to many.

Truck drives through crowd in Minneapolis, apparently hitting none; evening sees mass arrests but little violence

"Not to have a tragedy and many deaths is just an amazing thing," Walz said at 7 p.m., a little over an hour after the incident happened.

The driver was mobbed by the crowd and detained for police, who arrested him. Video of the event shows him being forcibly removed and roughed up while some in the crowd pleaded with those grabbing him to not harm him. After being treated at a hospital for non life-threatening injuries, he was released into police custody.

The horrifying and chaotic incident was still being investigated as nightfall approached, heralding the third straight night of curfew and highway closures as the metro area and thousands of law enforcement and National Guard personnel braced for whatever the night might bring.

As the sun set and crowds dispersed from a peaceful protest in front of the State Capitol in St. Paul, several hundred previously peaceful protesters in Minneapolis ignored the curfew and marched on a different stretch of I-35W, apparently destined for a police confrontation. After sunset, police began to make mass arrests of curfew breakers in Minneapolis - about 150 as of 10 p.m.

A small group remained at the Capitol and briefly clashed with police, resulting in perhaps a dozen arrests, officials said.

Those arrests - slow and methodical constrictions of police surrounding peaceful demonstrators - contrasted sharply with the tear gas-tinged incursions of law enforcement the evening before. Officials said the difference was that authorities were able to determine that Sunday's groups did not include violent actors, but rather those engaging in peaceful disobedience.

Some arrests at #GeorgeFloydProtests in Minneapolis

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress)

The entire area is reeling following a week that witnessed widespread and unchecked violence, looting and fires until Saturday night, when the state's largest-ever assemblage of law enforcement - a militarized force, really - was aided by widespread curfew compliance and seized control of the streets.

In a pattern that has played out in cities across the nation, the demonstrations were followed by escalating violence after the death of Floyd.

NO DECISION ON MONDAY CURFEW

While the early part of Sunday evening appeared relatively quiet, officials said that no decision had been made on whether curfew would be imposed Monday. Top law enforcement officials will make a recommendation to Walz, who has instituted the previous curfews jointly with the respective mayors of St. Paul and Minneapolis and authorized local officials across the state to do so as they see fit.

ARSONISTS' CACHES

There were signs that those intent on doing harm - and it's unclear exactly who they are pic.twitter.com/4awDyw3ZXh June 1, 2020 - would try again Sunday.

Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said authorities continued to discover caches of incendiary materials in vehicles and other places. Some appeared to be days old and were found in areas where fires previously had been set, while others appeared to have been placed within the previous 24 hours. They were associated with a fleet of vehicles, many if not all stolen, that have been stripped of license plates.

Truck drives through crowd in Minneapolis, apparently hitting none; evening sees mass arrests but little violence

Harrington said the pattern speaks to sophisticated planning and coordination.

TRUCK VS. CROWD

TV aerial video and state traffic cameras showed a disturbing and chaotic series of events before 6 p.m. after a large crowd of marchers had taken to I-35W, which was officially closed at 5 p.m.

Absolutely frightening scene on I-35W as a tanker truck drivers through thousands of protesters. @WCCO has live coverage right now!

- Jeff Wagner (@Jeff_Wagner4)

Harrington said that preliminary reviews of state traffic cameras suggested the driver was already on the highway when crews began closing it. Later, Department of Corrections Commissioner Paul Schnell said that the driver did drive around a traffic "diversion" that was being set up to shunt vehicles off the highway.

Authorities initially planned to close the highways later in the evening. However, when throngs of peaceful demonstrators marched from a mostly peaceful event at U.S. Bank Stadium, several thousand headed toward the interstate. The Minnesota Department of Transportation announced the 5 p.m. closure time about 20 minutes before it took effect.

Harrington said that action - by what he estimated were 4,000 to 7,000 people - prompted officials to decide to close the highway earlier than planned to protect the safety of the demonstrators, who were not authorized to march on the interstate.

The 18-wheeler tanker truck drove toward and into the edge of the crowd at what appeared to be swift speed - Schnell suggested it could have been above the speed limit - before coming to a halt. The crowd largely appeared to scatter in advance of the truck, and some videos posted online showed the driver sounding his horn at one point.

"It was sheer panic," said Rachel Quinn, a nurse from Minneapolis who was in the crowd when the truck rolled in.

The truck did not appear to swerve or veer toward the crowd as it came to a stop.

The cab was soon mobbed. Video shows the truck then begin to drive forward again with people on its hood and clinging to both sides of the cab. One of them appeared to break the driver's front window, and the truck stopped came to a stop a second time. That person can be seen breaching the cab through the driver's front window.

While protestors were taking a knee on I-35 a semi truck driver ran into protestors. The police have arrived macing protestors instead of going after the truck driver. pic.twitter.com/BmqFseSmUJ https://t.co/onZsO4D515 May 31, 2020

- Shade Pratt (@ShadePratt22) May 31, 2020

Truck drives through crowd in Minneapolis, apparently hitting none; evening sees mass arrests but little violence

Immediately following, the crowds fled - or attempted to flee - from the stretch of interstate, which is elevated as it approaches a span over the Mississippi River. Some people could be seen vaulting over guardrails, while others stayed put.

Harrington said authorities didn't know if the tanker and its content might be hazardous or explosive - or if they were secure. As such, police aggressively cleared the crowd, using chemical irritants and other tactics that have become commonplace lately. The tactic drew criticism from many in the crowd, who noted their demonstration, while civilly disobedient, had been non-violent.

Harrington said it was necessary for their safety and so authorities could reach and secure the tanker truck, which some witnesses told a TV reporter was leaking fuel.

Hennepin County jail records indicate the name of the trucker as Bogdan Vechirko, 35, of Otsego, booked under suspicion of assault.

The trucking company described the driver as an independent contractor.

Kenan Advantage Group, a major petroleum transportation company, released the following statement Sunday evening:

"Our hearts go out to all those who are grieving the events of this past week. We have been informed of an incident involving one of our independent contractors in Minneapolis, MN during recent protests. Our first and foremost concern is for the safety and security of the public, our employees and our customers. We will be cooperating fully with the investigating authorities in the days ahead. It would be inappropriate to comment at this time until we have additional facts as the investigation is in its early stages. We will comment further once we have more information."

ST. PAUL PROTEST

Some 1,500 people rallied at the Capitol in St. Paul and also took to the interstate afterward, but that event featured none of the horror of the otherwise-similar scene in Minneapolis. Later, however, the situation became more heated.

The afternoon protest led to road closures around the Capitol complex and featured some tense moments near the front of the crowd, where police and soldiers from the Minnesota National Guard stood behind a fence they had erected. Around 4 p.m., a contingent of the crowd marched onto the Interstate 94, headed west, and exited at Lexington Avenue.

By 8 p.m., only a few remained at the Capitol. St. Paul officers were assisting with the arrest of a small group of people at the Capitol for curfew violations about 9:30 p.m.

Satara Strong, Black Lives Matter Twin Cities, says organized March officially dispersed when they got to the State Capitol, and they're not in charge of this particular action at the fence. That's organic and they need to be aware. 19 min to curfew. Some organizers nervous. pic.twitter.com/wmeMl6tNJA

- Frederick Melo, Reporter (@FrederickMelo) June 1, 2020

Schnell said at one point a small group of people attempted to breach the fence around the Capitol. This led to an exchange where authorities deployed gas. Schnell said the number of those arrested was "10 to 12 or less."

Truck drives through crowd in Minneapolis, apparently hitting none; evening sees mass arrests but little violence

CHAUVIN COURT APPEARANCE

Derek Chauvin, the former Minneapolis police officer charged with third-degree murder for in Floyd's death, was to make his first court appearance on Monday, but it was rescheduled to June 8, according to a court record, which did not list an attorney for him.

Chauvin was booked into the Ramsey County Jail after Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension agents took him into custody Friday. He was transferred Sunday to the Hennepin County Jail, according to a jail roster, and then moved to the state prison in Oak Park Heights Sunday, Schnell said.

Nick Ferraro, Frederick Melo and Mara H. Gottfried contributed to this report.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world!': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Bogdan Vechirko, 35, was arrested Sunday, May 31, 2020, after he drove a semi through a crowd of protesters on Interstate 35W in Minneapolis. No one was injured. (Courtesy of the Hennepin County Jail)

Derek Chauvin

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

155+ people arrested in George Floyd unrest on Saturday night, Sunday

ARTICLE XCVIII. 155+ PEOPLE ARRESTED IN GEORGE FLOYD UNREST ON SATURDAY NIGHT, SUNDAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 518 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: More than 155 people were arrested on Saturday night and Sunday as law enforcement and the Minnesota National Guard changed tactics after several nights of arson and looting in the Twin Cities. Based on intelligence gathered by law enforcement and with the cooperation of community members, the Minnesota Multi-Agency Command Center "deployed fast-moving teams to [...]"

Body

More than 155 people were arrested on Saturday night and Sunday as law enforcement and the Minnesota National Guard changed tactics after several nights of arson and looting in the Twin Cities.

Based on intelligence gathered by law enforcement and with the cooperation of community members, the Minnesota Multi-Agency Command Center "deployed fast-moving teams to targets that were of high value and high probability of attack," according to a statement from the Department of Public Safety.

Thousands of officers from the National Guard, Minnesota State Patrol, Minnesota Department of Natural Resources and local law enforcement worked on the strategy.

There has been unrest in the Twin Cities since George Floyd, 46, died on Monday after a Minneapolis officer pinned him with his knee by the neck. The officer has since been charged with murder.

"We prepositioned staff so they would be immediately adjacent and told them 'get there fast,'" said Department of Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington. "Speed was of the essence to stop the violence and criminal activity."

People were arrested on suspicion of curfew violation, weapons possession, narcotics possession and rioting, according to DPS.

The State Patrol confiscated seven firearms and Minneapolis Police Department recovered five firearms. St. Paul police officers stopped several vehicles without license plates and "within those vehicles were tools that could be used for destructive purposes," according to a DPS statement.

St. Paul police arrested 15 people between Saturday and early Sunday; the number doesn't reflect all the arrests in the city, but only those made by St. Paul officers. Seven had St. Paul addresses, four had

155+ people arrested in George Floyd unrest on Saturday night, Sunday

Minneapolis addresses, and one each were residents of Blaine and St. Michael in Wright County. Two had unknown addresses.

The Hennepin County Sheriff's Office reported 73 people were cited and released for curfew violations - 50 had Minnesota driver's licenses, five had California driver's licenses, two had Colorado driver's licenses, and one each had licenses from Florida, Illinois, South Dakota and Texas. Information about the addresses of the others couldn't be confirmed.

There were 52 protest-related arrested in Hennepin County - 22 on suspicion of riot, 20 for failing to comply with a peace officer, five for weapons, two for assault, one for assault and weapons, one for burglary and one for curfew violation.

Forty-one of those arrested listed a Minnesota address. Of the others, four listed a Wisconsin address, two an Iowa address and one each from Oregon, Nebraska, North Dakota, Illinois and Australia.

Gov. Tim Walz said an 8 p.m. curfew will continue tonight in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and major highways in the Twin Cities closed at 5 p.m.· Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Gandhi Mahal Restaurant burned in George Floyd riot, but owner still supports protest

ARTICLE XCIX. GANDHI MAHAL RESTAURANT BURNED IN GEORGE FLOYD RIOT, BUT OWNER STILL SUPPORTS PROTEST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 721 words

Byline: Amelia Nierenberg

Highlight: On Friday morning, as dawn broke through the smoke hanging over Minneapolis, the Gandhi Mahal Restaurant was severely damaged by fire. Hafsa Islam, whose father owns the Bangladeshi Indian restaurant with members of his family, woke at 6 a.m. to hear the news. "At first, I was angry," said Islam, 18. "This is my family's [...]"

Body

On Friday morning, as dawn broke through the smoke hanging over Minneapolis, the Gandhi Mahal Restaurant was severely damaged by fire. Hafsa Islam, whose father owns the Bangladeshi Indian restaurant with members of his family, woke at 6 a.m. to hear the news.

"At first, I was angry," said Islam, 18. "This is my family's main source of income."

But then she overheard her father, Ruhel Islam, speaking to a friend on the phone. "Let my building burn," he said. "Justice needs to be served."

On Friday afternoon, after the fire stopped smoldering and the family came together, he repeated his support for the protests that had closed his restaurant. "We can rebuild a building, but we cannot rebuild a human," said Ruhel Islam, 42. "The community is still here, and we can work together to rebuild."

For days, the family has watched the protests over the arrest and killing of George Floyd, the African American man who died Monday after a white police officer pinned him to the ground, a knee pressed against Floyd's neck for several minutes. The officer has been fired and on Friday was arrested and charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter, authorities said.

The restaurant is just a few doors away from the 3rd Precinct headquarters of the Minneapolis Police Department, which was set ablaze by protesters Thursday night. Other buildings also burned, and fire eventually reached the restaurant.

Hafsa Islam, who delivers food part-time for DoorDash, said she had stopped her car at a red light Monday as Floyd was arrested. She watched, horrified, from her car, she said. She learned only later that he had died.

Gandhi Mahal Restaurant burned in George Floyd riot, but owner still supports protest

"I understand why people did what they did," she said of the demonstrators. "They had tried with the peaceful protesting, and it hasn't been working."

Gandhi Mahal opened in 2008, during the Great Recession. Although Ruhel Islam believes in nonviolent protest - he named his restaurant in honor of Mohandas K. Gandhi, also known as Mahatma Gandhi - he empathizes with the frustration of many Minneapolis residents.

"I am going to continuously promote peaceful ways and nonviolent movement," he said. "But our younger generation is angry, and there's reason to be angry."

So as mounted police fired tear gas into the crowd Tuesday, the Islam family opened a room in their spacious restaurant to medics, who set up a makeshift field hospital. Hafsa Islam said she saw at least 200 people come in and out on Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Some needed to catch their breath after inhaling tear gas, she said. One woman had been hit in the eye by a rubber bullet, damaging her vision. A rubber bullet tore open the back of another man's neck. When he fell unconscious, the medics laid him out on a table.

"We were just trying to do what we could to help our community," said Hafsa Islam, who helped treat wounded protesters. "Sure, we had our business. Sure, we were trying to keep our kitchen open. But more than anything, we were concerned for our people."

The tension in Ruhel Islam's adopted city reminds him of his childhood in Bangladesh, when he lived through a dictatorship. Two of his fellow students were killed by police, he said. "We grew up in a traumatic police state, so I am familiar with this type of situation," he said.

The restaurant has been a hub for interfaith efforts against climate change, and a related art collection was lost to the flames. In the basement, the family cultivated a small aquaponics farm to supply the restaurant with fresh ingredients.

"Now probably the whole basement is aquaponics with the water," Ruhel Islam said, joking about the sprinkler damage.

Both Tuesday and Wednesday night, before the medics had to relocate to a nearby church to protect their patients, Ruhel Islam kept cooking. As wounds were bandaged and hands were held in the front room, he was in the kitchen, preparing daal, basmati rice and naan. Simple food, he said, but high in protein - just the thing to get his community through a long, dark night.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

'We're sick of it': Anger over police killings shatters U.S.

ARTICLE C. 'WE'RE SICK OF IT': ANGER OVER POLICE KILLINGS SHATTERS
U.S.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1104 words

Byline: Tim Sullivan, Stephen Groves

Highlight: MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Tense protests over the death of George Floyd and other police killings of black people grew Saturday from New York to Tulsa to Los Angeles, with police cars set ablaze and reports of injuries mounting on all sides as the country convulsed through another night of unrest after months of coronavirus lockdowns.

Body

MINNEAPOLIS - Americans awoke Sunday to charred and glass-strewn streets in dozens of cities after another night of unrest fueled by rage over the mistreatment of African Americans at the hands of police, who responded to the violence with tear gas and rubber bullets.

Tens of thousands marched peacefully through streets to protest the death of George Floyd, a black man who died Monday after a white Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee on his neck until he stopped breathing. But many demonstrations sank into chaos as night fell: Cars and businesses were torched. The words "I can't breathe" were spray-painted all over buildings. A fire in a trash bin burned near the gates of the White House.

The fury sparked by Floyd's death was compounded by the coronavirus pandemic, which has left millions out of work and killed more than 100,000 people in the U.S., including disproportionate numbers of black people.

"We're sick of it. The cops are out of control," protester Olga Hall said in Washington, D.C. "They're wild. There's just been too many dead boys."

People set fire to squad cars, threw bottles at officers and busted windows of storefronts, carrying away TVs and other items even as some protesters urged them to stop. In Indianapolis, multiple shootings were reported, including one that left a person dead amid the protests, adding to deaths in Detroit and Minneapolis in recent days.

In Minneapolis, the city where the protests began, police, state troopers and National Guard members moved in soon after an 8 p.m. curfew took effect to break up the demonstrations.

'We're sick of it': Anger over police killings shatters U.S.

At least 13 police officers were injured in Philadelphia, and at least four police vehicles were set on fire. In New York City, dangerous confrontations flared repeatedly as officers made arrests and cleared streets. A video showed two NYPD cruisers lurching into a crowd of demonstrators who were pushing a barricade against one of them and pelting it with objects. Several people were knocked to the ground. It was unclear if anyone was hurt.

"The mistakes that are happening are not mistakes. They're repeated violent terrorist offenses, and people need to stop killing black people," Brooklyn protester Meryl Makielski said.

Overnight curfews were imposed in more than a dozen major cities nationwide, including Atlanta, Denver, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, San Francisco and Seattle.

Few corners of America were untouched, from protesters setting fires inside Reno's city hall, to police launching tear gas at rock-throwing demonstrators in Fargo, North Dakota. In Salt Lake City, demonstrators flipped a police car and lit it on fire. Police said six people were arrested and an officer was injured after being struck in the head with a baseball bat.

By daybreak, cleanup had already begun in Nashville along Broadway Street - known for its famous honky tonks - after protesters broke windows, lit fires and destroyed light poles. Police said in a tweet that at least 30 businesses and buildings were damaged.

Republican Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp authorized the deployment of up to 3,000 National Guard troops to Athens, Savannah and any other cities where more demonstrations were planned Sunday. Kemp had already approved up to 1,500 Guardsmen to help enforce a 9 p.m. Saturday curfew in Atlanta.

"The protesters need to know we're going to support their efforts in a peaceful, nonviolent protest," Kemp told television station WSB late Saturday. "The agitators need to know that we'll be there ... to take them to jail if they're destroying lives and property."

President Donald Trump appeared to cheer on the tougher tactics Saturday night, commending the National Guard deployment in Minneapolis, declaring "No games!" and saying police in New York City "must be allowed to do their job!"

Presumptive Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden condemned the violence as he continued to express common cause with those demonstrating after Floyd's death.

"The act of protesting should never be allowed to overshadow the reason we protest," Biden said in a statement Saturday night.

In Ferguson, Missouri, where Michael Brown Jr. was shot and killed by a white police officer in 2014, sparking a wave of protests throughout the country, six officers were hurt after being hit with rocks and fireworks.

Police have arrested nearly 1,700 people in 22 cities since Thursday, according to a tally by The Associated Press. Nearly a third of those arrests came in Los Angeles, where the governor declared a state of emergency and ordered the National Guard to back up the city's 10,000 police officers as dozens of fires burned across the city.

This week's unrest recalled the riots in Los Angeles nearly 30 years ago after the acquittal of the white police officers who beat Rodney King, a black motorist who had led them on a high-speed chase. The protests of Floyd's killing have gripped many more cities, but the losses in Minneapolis have yet to approach the staggering totals Los Angeles saw during five days of rioting in 1992, when more than 60 people died, 2,000-plus were injured and thousands arrested, with property damage topping $1 billion.

'We're sick of it': Anger over police killings shatters U.S.

But not all protests were marred by violence. In Juneau, Alaska, local police joined protesters at a rally in front of a giant whale sculpture on the city's waterfront.

"We don't tolerate excessive use of force," Juneau Police Chief Ed Mercer told a gathering where most people wore masks and some sang Alaska Native songs.

The show of force in Minneapolis came after three days in which police largely avoided engaging protesters, and after the state poured more than 4,000 National Guard troops into Minneapolis. Authorities said that number would soon rise to nearly 11,000.

"The situation in Minneapolis is no longer in any way about the murder of George Floyd," said Gov. Tim Walz, who also said local forces had been overmatched the previous day. "It is about attacking civil society, instilling fear and disrupting our great cities."

Some residents were glad to see the upheaval dissipating.

"I live here. I haven't been able to sleep," said Iman Muhammad, whose neighborhood saw multiple fires set Friday night. Muhammad said she sympathized with peaceful protests over Floyd's death but disagreed with the violence: "Wrong doesn't answer wrong."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CI. FOX NEWS REPORTER ATTACKED, CHASED FROM WHITE HOUSE DEMONSTRATION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 889 wordsByline: David BauderHighlight: NEW YORK (AP) - A Fox News reporter was pummeled and chased by protesters who had gathered outside the White House early Saturday as part of nationwide unrest following the death of George Floyd.Body

NEW YORK - A Fox News reporter was pummeled and chased by protesters who had gathered outside the White House early Saturday as part of nationwide unrest following the death of George Floyd.

For several journalists across the country, the demonstrations were taking an ominous, dangerous turn.

A television reporter in Columbia, S.C., was hurt by a thrown rock Saturday and a journalist in Minneapolis was shot in the thigh by a rubber bullet. A television news photographer in Pittsburgh said he was beaten by demonstrators, and police in Louisville, Kentucky, apologized after an officer fired what appeared to be pepper bullets at a television news crew.

Fox's Leland Vittert was rattled following the Washington attack that he said was clearly targeted at his news organization.

"We took a good thumping," he told The Associated Press. A live shot he was doing was interrupted by a group of protesters who shouted obscenities directed at Fox. Flanked by two security guards, he and photographer Christian Galdabini walked away from Washington's Lafayette Park trailed by an angry group before riot police dispersed them.

Vittert said there were no markings on him or the crew's equipment to identify them as from Fox. But he said during the demonstration, one man continually asked him who he worked for. He didn't answer, but the man found a picture of Vittert on his cell phone and shouted to other protesters that he was from Fox.

"The protesters stopped protesting whatever it was they were protesting and turned on us," he said, "and that was a very different feeling."

He compared it to when he was chased away from a demonstration in Egypt during the Arab Spring of 2011 by a group that shouted, "Fox News hates Muslims."

Fox News reporter attacked, chased from White House demonstration

A correspondent from the website The Daily Caller followed Vittert and the demonstrators as they left the park. At one point, someone took Vittert's microphone and threw it at his back. One woman chasing him wore a t-shirt that said, "I can't breathe," a reference what Floyd said earlier this week when a Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee against his neck.

Vittert said he was "extremely grateful" to the Daily Caller for documenting the scene; Galdabini's camera was smashed. "They were putting themselves at risk," he said.

"It makes me proud to do my job and to be a journalist," he said. "I'm proud to be an organization that is unyielding in our coverage. We're going to keep on telling our story and doing exactly what we're doing."

Suzanne Scott, CEO of Fox News Media, said in a memo on Saturday that Fox was taking all necessary security precautions to protect its journalists covering the story.

"We are truly living in unprecedented and transformative times and freedom of the press is a vital element to the foundation of our society," Scott wrote.

On Friday, CNN correspondent Omar Jimenez and his two-person crew were arrested while covering overnight protests in Minneapolis. They were quickly released, and Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz apologized to CNN.

CNN's headquarters in Atlanta was damaged later Friday by a group of protesters who also fought with police and set cars afire. While police tried to keep them away from the CNN Center, demonstrators broke windows there and scrawled obscene graffiti on the network's logo.

Ian Smith, a photographer for KDKA-TV in Pittsburgh, said that he was attacked by protesters who stomped and kicked him at a demonstration there. Smith, who said other protesters jumped in to save him, posted a picture on Twitter showing him with a bruised face and bloody hand.

In Louisville, WAVE-TV was on the air covering a demonstration when video showed a police officer aiming a rifle at reporter Kaitlin Rust and her crew. She was heard yelling, "I've been shot! I've been shot!" and described them as pepper bullets.

Louisville Police spokeswoman Jesse Halladay apologized for the incident, and said police would review the video for potential discipline.

Two Associated Press photographers have been hit by projectiles while documenting protests, one in Minneapolis on Thursday and another in Los Angeles on Friday. Neither was seriously injured.

Demonstrators surrounded the police department headquarters in Columbia, S.C. on Saturday and a scuffle broke out with someone wearing a "Make America Great Again" hat. Rocks were thrown and Miranda Parnell, a television reporters from WIS-TV, was injured and taken to the hospital, according to a tweet from network anchor Judi Gatson.

It was not clear who threw the rock that hit Parnell.

In Minneapolis on Saturday, a Swedish journalist was shot in the thigh with a rubber bullet, apparently from a police gun, while covering a protest, according to the Norwegian newspaper VG. Later Saturday night, a CNN crew said some of its members were hit with rubber bullets.

Fox News reporter attacked, chased from White House demonstration

AP correspondents Mike Stewart in Atlanta, Jari Tanner in Minneapolis and Bruce Schreiner and Dylan Lovan in Louisville, and Jeffrey S. Collins in Columbia, S.C. contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CII.

CITIES FEAR GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS MAY FUEL NEW WAVE OF CORONAVIRUS OUTBREAKS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1279 wordsByline: Brian Melley, John SeewerHighlight: LOS ANGELES (AP) - The massive protests sweeping across U.S. cities following the police killing of a black man in Minnesota have sent shudders through the health community and elevated fears that the huge crowds will lead to a new surge in cases of the coronavirus.

Body

LOS ANGELES - The massive protests sweeping across U.S. cities following the police killing of a black man in Minnesota have sent shudders through the health community and elevated fears that the huge crowds will lead to a new surge in cases of the coronavirus.

Some leaders appealing for calm in places where crowds smashed storefronts and destroyed police cars in recent nights have been handing out masks and warning demonstrators they were putting themselves at risk.

"If you were out protesting last night, you probably need to go get a COVID test this week," Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms said Saturday evening. "There is still a pandemic in America that's killing black and brown people at higher numbers."

Minnesota's governor said too many protesters weren't socially distancing or wearing masks after heeding the call earlier in the week.

But many seemed undeterred.

"It's not OK that in the middle of a pandemic we have to be out here risking our lives," Spence Ingram said Friday after marching with other protesters to the state Capitol in Atlanta. "But I have to protest for my life and fight for my life all the time."

Ingram, 25, who was wearing a mask, said she has asthma and was worried about contracting the virus. But she said as a black woman, she always felt that her life was under threat from police and she needed to protest that.

The demonstrations over the killing of George Floyd, a black man who died after a white Minneapolis officer pressed a knee into his neck, are coming at a time when many cities were beginning to relax stay-at-home orders.

Cities fear George Floyd protests may fuel new wave of coronavirus outbreaks

That's especially worrisome for health experts who fear that silent carriers of the virus who have no symptoms could unwittingly infect others at gatherings with people packed cheek to jowl and cheering and jeering without masks.

"Whether they're fired up or not that doesn't prevent them from getting the virus," said Bradley Pollock, chairman of the Department of Public Health Sciences at the University of California, Davis.

Even for the many protesters who have been wearing masks, those don't guarantee protection from the coronavirus. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommends cloth masks because they can make it more difficult for infected people to spread the virus - but they are not designed to protect the person wearing the mask from getting it.

The U.S. has been worst hit by the coronavirus outbreak, with more than 1.7 million cases and over 103,000 deaths, according to a tally kept by Johns Hopkins University.

In New York, where more than 21,000 people have died during the pandemic, a large crowd in Brooklyn tossed water bottles at officers and torched a police van Friday outside the Barclays Center. Officers cleared the crowd by spraying an eye-irritating chemical.

Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz said after another night of unrest in Minneapolis that many protesters wearing masks were simply trying to hide their identities and "cause confusion and take advantage of this situation."

"I will continue to stress, because it seems like a lifetime ago: We are still in the middle of a pandemic and passed 1,000 deaths yesterday. We still have hospitals on the verge of being overrun with COVID-19," he said.

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey echoed those concerns: "We have two crises that are sandwiched on top of one other."

The state's health commissioner had warned just days earlier that the massive protests were almost certain to fuel new cases of the virus. Minnesota reported 35 deaths on Thursday, a single-day high since the start of the outbreak, and 29 more on Friday.

But it wasn't just protesters at risk - unmasked officers stood within arm's reach of shouting demonstrators. In Atlanta, police Chief Erika Shields waded into a crowd without a mask Friday while she listened to people air frustrations.

When Los Angeles officials announced earlier in the week that the city was relaxing stay-at-home orders and reopening stores, they said political protests could resume but with a cap of 100 people.

Several hundred people showed up for a protest organized by Black Lives Matter-LA and later shut down a freeway. Most wore masks, but many did not observe a buffer zone.

Los Angeles County Public Health Director Barbara Ferrer said Friday that was an ongoing concern.

"Show respect for each other by putting on that face covering so that your respiratory droplets aren't unintentionally getting into somebody else's mouth, nose or eyes," she said.

Cities fear George Floyd protests may fuel new wave of coronavirus outbreaks

Those same concerns surfaced Saturday in Paris when unions flouted a ban on large gatherings at a march to protest conditions for workers in the country illegally. Police used tear gas to disperse the crowds and said they had banned the march due to the "health risks that such an event is likely to generate."

Meanwhile, the European Union on Saturday urged President Donald Trump to rethink his decision to terminate the U.S. relationship with the World Health Organization as spiking infection rates in India and elsewhere reinforced that the pandemic is far from contained.

Trump on Friday charged that the WHO didn't respond adequately to the pandemic and accused the U.N. agency of being under China's "total control." The U.S. is the largest source of financial support for the WHO, and its exit is expected to significantly weaken the organization.

The head of the EU's executive arm urged Trump to reconsider. "The WHO needs to continue being able to lead the international response to pandemics, current and future," European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen said.

German Foreign Minister Heiko Maas told Germany's Funke media group that Trump's decision was the "wrong signal at the wrong time."

In China, where the virus outbreak began, only four new confirmed cases were reported Saturday, all brought from outside the country.

More than 6 million coronavirus infections have been reported worldwide, with over 368,000 deaths and more than 2.5 million recoveries, according to the Johns Hopkins tally. The true death toll is widely believed to be significantly higher, with experts saying many victims died of the virus without ever being tested for it.

Elite sporting events will be allowed to resume in England starting Monday, but without spectators, paving the way for the planned June 17 return of the Premier League, the world's richest soccer competition.

England's deputy chief medical officer Jonathan Van-Tam warned that the situation overall remained precarious. "I believe this is also a very dangerous moment," he said. "We have to get this right."

India registered another record single-day jump of 7,964 cases and 265 deaths. The government had been expected to end a 2-month-old nationwide lockdown but instead extended measures in some areas due to coronavirus outbreaks.

Italy, though, added 111 new victims to its death toll and nearly 420 new infections, in line with its recent daily tallies, suggesting the virus is under control nearly four weeks after the country began gingerly loosening a strict lockdown in the onetime European epicenter of the pandemic.

Seewer reported from Toledo, Ohio. AP reporters from around the world contributed to this report.

Follow AP pandemic coverage at <http://apnews.com/VirusOutbreak> and <https://apnews.com/UnderstandingtheOutbreak> Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota

Cities fear George Floyd protests may fuel new wave of coronavirus outbreaks

deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Keith Ellison will take lead in case against ex-Minneapolis cop after ACLU request

ARTICLE CIII. KEITH ELLISON WILL TAKE LEAD IN CASE AGAINST EX-MINNEAPOLIS COP AFTER ACLU REQUEST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 646 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: Hours after the ACLU called Sunday for Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison to be involved in the George Floyd murder case, Gov. Tim Walz said Ellison will take the lead in the prosecution of the case. Shortly before that, Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman had announced that he asked Ellison to work with him on [...]

Body

Hours after the ACLU called Sunday for Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison to be involved in the George Floyd murder case, Gov. Tim Walz said Ellison will take the lead in the prosecution of the case.

Shortly before that, Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman had announced that he asked Ellison to work with him on the prosecution and that Ellison had agreed to help.

"It (is) with a large degree of humility and a great seriousness, I accept for my office the responsibility for leadership on this critical case involving the killing of George Floyd. We are going to bring to bear all the resources necessary to achieve justice in this case," Ellison tweeted.

Walz made the announcement in a Sunday night press conference.

Earlier Sunday, the ACLU and the Legal Rights Center called for the third-degree murder charges against former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin be "immediately amended" and demanded a special prosecutor be appointed in the case.

Freeman's statement did not mention amending the charges.

Ellison "has accepted Freeman's invitation to be a full partner in further proceedings in this case," and the two were planning to meet Monday to begin working together, according to a prepared statement by Freeman.

"There have been recent developments in the facts of the case where the help and expertise of the Attorney General would be valuable," Freeman said in the statement Sunday.

Calling the third-degree murder charge "potentially defective," the ACLU and the Legal Rights Center said they have "grave concerns about the legal sufficiency of the criminal complaint" charging Chauvin in the death of George Floyd, saying it may "allow Chauvin to evade the punishment warranted for his actions." Chauven held his knee on Floyd's neck during an arrest this past week for nearly 9 minutes, including nearly 3 minutes after Floyd became unresponsive.

Keith Ellison will take lead in case against ex-Minneapolis cop after ACLU request

Chauven also has been charged with manslaughter.

The ACLU sent a letter to Walz, Freeman and Ellison demanding that the prosecution be taken out of the Hennepin County Attorney's office and turned over to Ellison.

"The horrific extrajudicial of Mr. Floyd by the police has once again focused a national spotlight on racial bias and use of excessive force by police in Minnesota, in particular against Black, Indigenous, and other people of color," the letter said. "Many people feel a deep chasm between themselves and the police who are supposed to serve them, deepened by a history of failures to hold police accountable for their misconduct."

The letter said since Minneapolis police and Freeman work closely on other matters, "it is untenable for people to investigate the same officers they work with and rely on daily. Having them do so fosters distrust and suspicion in the community."

The current charge "combined with the delay by the Hennepin County Attorney's office in charging Chauvin and the other involved officers, further strengthens and validates demands for appointment of a special prosecutor to handle charges arising from this tragic event and its aftermath."

The complaint is "potentially deficient" because "Minnesota courts have repeatedly ruled that to support a (third-degree murder) charge, the offender's actions need to be 'eminently dangerous to more than one person,' " the statement said, noting that Chauvin's actions were only toward Floyd.

Because prosecutors did not recognize the "potential flaws," they wrote, the current charge "only serves to further undermine community trust in the Hennepin County Attorney's Office."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Gov. Walz: Minneapolis, St. Paul curfews continue Sunday night. Highway closures started at 5 p.m.

ARTICLE CIV. GOV. WALZ: MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL CURFEWS CONTINUE SUNDAY NIGHT. HIGHWAY CLOSURES STARTED AT 5 P.M.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 907 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: An overnight curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis and closures of major highways during the evening will continue tonight, Gov. Tim Walz announced Sunday.

Body

An overnight curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis and closures of major highways during the evening will continue tonight, Gov. Tim Walz announced Sunday.

After days of looting and arson, law enforcement from across Minnesota and the National Guard were able to quell it Saturday night into Sunday morning, Walz said.

Overnight highway closures in the Twin Cities were to begin at 7 p.m., but the Minnesota Department of Transportation announced about 4:40 p.m. that they would take effect at 5 p.m. instead. Protesters started marching from the Capitol and onto westbound Interstate 94 in St. Paul shortly after 4 p.m. before exiting the highway about 5 p.m.

Protests began after George Floyd, who was handcuffed, died on Monday after a Minneapolis police officer pressed a knee into his neck. Derek Chauvin, who was fired from the police department, was charged Friday with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

IMPORTANT UPDATE: Road closures will now begin at 5PM, and will be more extensive than previously planned. <https://t.co/8Znf2BVk9x>

- Minnesota Department of Transportation (@MnDOT)

On Sunday, Walz thanked Minnesotans for protecting their neighbors. He said law enforcement and the Minnesota National Guard executed "the most complex public safety operation in state's history. They did so in a professional manner. They did so without a single loss of life and minimal property damage."

More than 155 people were arrested pic.twitter.com/IPfOEIRTRL May 31, 2020 between Saturday night and Sunday.

Gov. Walz: Minneapolis, St. Paul curfews continue Sunday night. Highway closures started at 5 p.m.

Walz said he received a call on Saturday night from Jay-Z, "not international performer, but dad, stressing to me that justice needs to be served and that as he's listening and hearing it, that this is a place that wants to do it."

Walz gathered on Saturday with elected officials, community leaders and clergy.

"We were there together for dual purpose - the first was to send a message to stay home last night, to stay off the streets to allow us to execute this, so that we wouldn't have a loss of life and we could restore order," Walz said. "But it was very clear that was not the primary message. That message was a means to an end ... to open up the space for the real conversation, a real understanding that George Floyd was dead and the conditions here in Minnesota contributed to that."

Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said they set up a new operational approach on Saturday, recognizing the group of rioters who attacked Minneapolis, St. Paul and surrounding areas had large numbers, speed and a tactical advantage over officers and firefighters in the earlier days.

Speed was of the essence to stop the violence and the criminal activity, Harrington said.

Thousands of National Guard members were called up and they stood watch over critical infrastructure, freeing up officers "to be the rapid response" that was needed, according to Harrington.

People were arrested for being out after the 8 p.m. curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis and also weapons violations. There were AR-15s found on people, Harrington said.

One officer who was shot at was not injured. Police arrested two people in the vehicle where the shot came from and recovered an AR-15.

Law enforcement noted vehicles were seen driving in communities without license plates and their headlights off. When police stopped them, drivers ran. Officers found they were stolen locally and full of rocks, Harrington said.

PUBLIC SAFETY UPDATE:

Our officers have been busy stopping several vehicles driving around the city without license plates. Each time officers stopped the vehicles, people inside have raced away on foot, leaving vehicles and tools used to wreak havoc on our city behind.

- Saint Paul Police Department (@sppdmn) May 31, 2020

Police also received tips from community members with rumors of riots and looting coming to their communities, most of which were debunked, Harrington said.

Also on Sunday, Walz apologized to journalists, who he said were "inadvertently but nevertheless detained. ... It is unacceptable."

Minnesota has high rankings nationally for public schools, personal income, home ownership and life expectancy.

"But if you take a deeper look and peel it back - which this week has peeled back - all of those statistics are true if you're white," Walz said. "If you're not, we rank near the bottom. And what this week has shown all of us is those two things can't operate at the same place. You cannot continue to say you're a great place to live if your neighbor, because of the color of their skin, doesn't have that same opportunity."

Gov. Walz: Minneapolis, St. Paul curfews continue Sunday night. Highway closures started at 5 p.m.

Walz continued, "The ultimate end of that type behavior is the ability to believe that you can murder a black man in public and it is an unusual thing that murder charges were brought days later."

Restoring order to the streets "simply gets us back to a place where we were before," Walz said. "And that place is not good enough. ... If we do not get to that systemic problem eventually this will get us back to a point that led to our communities on fire, our security and safety in question and a searching for who we are."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world!': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Houston mayor says George Floyd's body will return to hometown

ARTICLE CV. HOUSTON MAYOR SAYS GEORGE FLOYD'S BODY WILL RETURN TO HOMETOWN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 307 words

Byline: The Associated Press

Highlight: HOUSTON - The mayor of Houston said Saturday that the body of George Floyd, whose death after a Minneapolis police officer pressed a knee on his neck during an arrest has sparked protests across the U.S, will be returning to the city where he grew up. Floyd was a Houston native before moving to Minnesota. [...]

Body

HOUSTON - The mayor of Houston said Saturday that the body of George Floyd, whose death after a Minneapolis police officer pressed a knee on his neck during an arrest has sparked protests across the U.S, will be returning to the city where he grew up.

Floyd was a Houston native before moving to Minnesota. Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner said at a news conference that Floyd's body would be coming back to Houston but provided no additional details. His family has not announced funeral plans.

"This is the same city that George Floyd grew up in. And his body will be returning to this city," Turner said. "And so the focus needs to be on supporting and uplifting this family."

Turner spoke alongside Houston Police Chief Art Acevedo, who said his department had arrested more than 130 people since protests began Friday in the nation's fourth-largest city.

Floyd, 46, grew up in Houston's Third Ward, one of the city's predominantly black neighborhoods. At 6 feet, 6 inches, Floyd emerged as a star tight end for Jack Yates High School and played in the 1992 state championship game in the Houston Astrodome. Yates lost to Temple, 38-20.

Floyd's death Monday and other police killings of black men have fueled tense demonstrations nationwide.

The white police officer who held his knee to Floyd's neck as he begged for air was arrested Friday and charged with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. But many protesters are demanding the arrests of the three other officers involved.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He

Houston mayor says George Floyd's body will return to hometown

is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

George Floyd (Courtesy of Facebook)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Police make nearly 1,400 arrests nationwide as George Floyd protests continue

ARTICLE CVI. POLICE MAKE NEARLY 1,400 ARRESTS NATIONWIDE AS GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS CONTINUE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 203 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: LOS ANGELES (AP) - Police have arrested nearly 1,400 people in 17 U.S. cities since Thursday as protests continue over the death of George Floyd.

Body

LOS ANGELES - Police have arrested nearly 1,400 people in 17 U.S. cities since Thursday as protests continue over the death of George Floyd.

Floyd died Monday in Minneapolis after a police officer put his knee on Floyd's neck for more than 8 minutes. The officer, Derrick Chauvin, was arrested on Friday and charged with third-degree murder. Floyd was black. Chauvin is white.

The arrest has done little to quell protests across the country over the weekend. Most have been peaceful, but some have erupted in violence.

An Associated Press tally of arrests found at least 1,383 people have been arrested since Thursday. The actual number is likely higher as protests continue Saturday night.

More than a third of the arrests, 533, came from Los Angeles alone on Friday.. The mayor of the nation's second-largest city has imposed a citywide curfew until 5:30 a.m. Sunday. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform. 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress. Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books. 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd. Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Bolé tops $100,000 rebuilding goal in a day; Ethiopian restaurant destroyed in riot fires

ARTICLE CVII. BOLÉ TOPS \$100,000 REBUILDING GOAL IN A DAY; ETHIOPIAN RESTAURANT DESTROYED IN RIOT FIRES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 269 words

Byline: Isabel Saavedra-Weis

Highlight: After fires in St. Paul burned down Ethiopian restaurant Bolé, the owners created a GoFundMe page to raise $100,000 to rebuild. One day later, over 2,300 people donated more than $106,000. Many businesses in the East Midway neighborhood caught on fire on May 28 during rioting. The fire destroyed both the Bolé restaurant and Bolé [...]

Body

After fires in St. Paul burned down Ethiopian restaurant Bolé, the owners created a GoFundMe page to raise $100,000 to rebuild. One day later, over 2,300 people donated more than $106,000.

Many businesses in the East Midway neighborhood caught on fire on May 28 during rioting. The fire destroyed both the Bolé restaurant and Bolé Express, the new fast food option set to open May 31.

Lelna Desta, a business partner at Bolé, created a GoFundMe page on May 31 at the request of the restaurant owners Solomon Haile and Rekik Abaineh. In a message posted to the site on behalf of the Bolé staff, Desta said the staff is mourning the loss of their business and George Floyd, whose death while being arrested by Minneapolis police has led to days of protest and unrest.

"As we silently watched our beloved Bolé go up in flames, it was heartbreaking to witness what we all considered our home reduced to ashes," Desta wrote.

On May 31, Desta posted another message on behalf of the Bolé staff expressing gratitude after surpassing their fundraising goal.

"We are overwhelmed and speechless by the amount of love and support you have shared with us," she wrote.

Desta urges any further donations to be directed to other businesses in the Twin Cities impacted by civil unrest.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Bolé tops $100,000 rebuilding goal in a day; Ethiopian restaurant destroyed in riot fires

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CVIII. HUDSON MAYOR ASKS GOVERNOR FOR NATIONAL GUARD HELP

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 225 wordsByline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: The mayor of Hudson has asked the Wisconsin governor to send in the National Guard to help keep his city safe. Hudson Mayor Rich O'Connor issued a statement Saturday saying he asked for help as an "overabundance of caution to ensure that in the absolute worst-case scenario we are prepared." "The City of Hudson recognizes that [...]"

Body

The mayor of Hudson has asked the Wisconsin governor to send in the National Guard to help keep his city safe.

Hudson Mayor Rich O'Connor issued a statement Saturday saying he asked for help as an "overabundance of caution to ensure that in the absolute worst-case scenario we are prepared."

"The City of Hudson recognizes that there is concern in our community about the unfortunate situation occurring to our neighbors in Minnesota," he said in his statement. "Please rest assured the City is doing everything possible in conjunction with our County and State partners to keep our citizens safe. I did request that the Governor provide the National Guard to assist in these efforts."

There was no word on Saturday evening whether Wisconsin Gov. Tony Evers would send the Guard to Hudson, which lies about 18 miles east of St. Paul.

Earlier on Saturday, Evers authorized Wisconsin National Guard to assist Milwaukee police dealing with looters and "agitators" disrupting peaceful George Floyd protests. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

MN state computers under attack, officials say. So far, cyber-attacks have been repelled.

ARTICLE CIX. MN STATE COMPUTERS UNDER ATTACK, OFFICIALS SAY. SO FAR, CYBER-ATTACKS HAVE BEEN REPELLED.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 305 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: Minnesota is fending off cyber-attacks aimed at crippling the state's computer systems, officials announced Sunday afternoon. Officials haven't explicitly said that the attacks are connected to attempts to foment civil unrest as law enforcement and the National Guard mount an unprecedented mobilization to tamp down unprecedented violence over the past several days following the death [...]

Body

Minnesota is fending off cyber-attacks aimed at crippling the state's computer systems, officials announced Sunday afternoon.

Officials haven't explicitly said that the attacks are connected to attempts to foment civil unrest as law enforcement and the National Guard mount an unprecedented mobilization to tamp down unprecedented violence over the past several days following the death of George Floyd, a black man who died Monday after a white police officer knelt on his neck. But the inference is there to be made.

Here's a statement from Tarek Tomez, the state's chief information officer and commissioner of MNIT, the state's information technology agency:

"MNIT's Security Operations Center is defending against distributed denial-of-service (DDOS) cyber-attacks aimed at overloading state information systems and networks to tip them offline. Keeping our communications systems secure during times of crisis is critical to protecting the Minnesotans that we serve, and we work to meet the challenging and evolving threat to those systems every day. At this time, these attacks have not successfully disrupted the state services that Minnesotans depend upon, and MNIT is working in close coordination with partners at the Department of Public Safety and with the federal government to share intelligence and stay proactive on cyber threats."

The situation was first mentioned publicly by Gov. Tim Walz at a Sunday morning briefing.

Further details weren't immediately available.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He

MN state computers under attack, officials say. So far, cyber-attacks have been repelled.

is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CX. RESIDENTS, BUSINESS OWNERS GUARDED HOMES AND STOREFRONTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1305 wordsByline: Frederick MeloHighlight: Armed with a small camp heater and boxes of pretzel bites, donuts and tea donated by a local gas station, longtime West Seventh Street resident Barbara Jungbauer, 58, spent all Saturday night into Sunday morning seated in the parking lot of Cooper's Foods, keeping an eye out for slow-moving cars lacking license plates. It was [...]Body

Armed with a small camp heater and boxes of pretzel bites, donuts and tea donated by a local gas station, longtime West Seventh Street resident Barbara Jungbauer, 58, spent all Saturday night into Sunday morning seated in the parking lot of Cooper's Foods, keeping an eye out for slow-moving cars lacking license plates.

It was her third overnight in a row playing unofficial neighborhood guardian, but this time, she had plenty of company. About 14 neighbors joined her, most of them carrying bats. One brought a slingshot and a pile of stones. A restaurant server showed off a bent metal pipe with a nail punched through the end. A father brought his two teenage daughters, as well as bats for each one.

"Being an Air Force veteran, I demanded that nobody in our group be packing," said Jungbauer, who asked for no guns. "Our point was to be a presence, so if anyone saw us, they would just keep driving." The night unfolded uneventfully, despite a few suspicious passersby. St. Paul Police squad cars made frequent rounds.

How much of this did you see last night or partake in? Whole families came out to protect their neighborhoods - including #BatDad and his two . I don't condone violence. One member of group of 15 said the goal was by showing strength numbers, they aimed to avoid it. pic.twitter.com/JrPjhi9v8T

- Frederick Melo, Reporter (@FrederickMelo)

Two days after widespread rioting and looting destroyed numerous businesses, many of them in St. Paul's Midway neighborhood, residents and business owners throughout the city took security measures into their own hands. Some homeowners spent the night on their three-season porches, lights on, to monitor their streets. Others gathered friends to help guard their storefronts. It was a scene repeated in Minneapolis, which has felt the brunt of the damage from rioters and looters.

Residents, business owners guarded homes and storefronts

Many said they were horrified by the death of George Floyd, a black man shown on video restrained face-down with a police officer's knee in his neck for an extended period, but they saw little relationship between calls for police reform and looting and fire-starting near residential neighborhoods.

NORMALCY AMONG THE PLYWOOD

To discourage looters, entire business districts were boarded up in precautionary plywood, creating the surreal feel of a Hollywood movie set stripped down and yet to be switched to the next scene.

Pockets of normalcy stood out, even during preparations for nightfall. On Rice Street, Dar's Double Scoop continued to serve ice cream cones, and Mama's Pizza sold whole pies until the mayor's 8 p.m. curfew went into effect for a second night. A third night of curfew was announced Sunday.

Mischief Toy Store owner Dan Marshall joined his son and a friend outside their Grand Avenue shop, prepping for looters. Instead, they found five welcome intruders: a robin guarding her four baby chicks in a nest formed in the "C" of their decorative outdoor sign. During the pandemic, nature had reclaimed some territory.

Ask owner @DanMarStP #BatDaughters May 31, 2020 and he'll tell you there's some serious mischief up at Mischief Toys on St. Paul's Grand Avenue tonight - but only if you look closely. Hints: Batman and R--
-. Plus four chicks just hanging out. I mean literal . pic.twitter.com/T3SnCiPO88

- Frederick Melo, Reporter (@FrederickMelo) May 31, 2020

"Last night started out menacing with several unplatd cars cruising Grand," said Marshall on Sunday by way of Twitter. "As the night wore on all we saw were squad cars and unmarked cop cars. By 2 a.m. all was quiet and we went to bed cold, bored and relieved."

For most of the day Saturday into early Sunday morning, rumors and misinformation about additional looting and violence in St. Paul circulated on social media, but little of it was true. One claim had it that workers at Setzer Pharmacy in Roseville had barricaded themselves into a storage room to protect themselves from rioters. A reporter who drove to the site found amused workmen and a growing drive-through line at a nearby Starbucks, but little additional activity.

TAKING A STAND IN MINNEAPOLIS

Most of the unwanted activity occurred across the river in Minneapolis, where peaceful demonstrations against police brutality drew violent agitators at the edges. Videos posted to social media showed young men dressed in hooded black gear, goggles, boots and other paramilitary-style outfits committing acts of vandalism in alleys just outside the central post area before being confronted by demonstrators.

Sometime around 10 p.m., authorities stationed on the Minneapolis side of the Mississippi River used gas and non-lethal rounds to keep an estimated crowd of 1,000 marchers from crossing the Lake Street Bridge into St. Paul.

In the Cedar-Riverside neighborhood of Minneapolis, young men from the Somali community barred entry into the area around residential towers in an effort to protect it. The same was true by the Karmell Mall in South Minneapolis. "We have poor immigrant people over here, and they've been working hard for every penny," said Abdi Mohamed, filmed by a reporter for social media. "I'm a security guard, and I promised them I would save this place."

Residents, business owners guarded homes and storefronts

The best part of the night was when we went by the Karmel Mall. Somali teenagers vetted me on Twitter, making me lower my mask. Then they thanked me for being there. This is Abdi Mohamed, a security guard.

Such a strong sense of community. pic.twitter.com/Pbvs9eHB92

- Jared Goyette (@JaredGoyette) May 31, 2020

Native Americans erected barricades and patrolled to the Little Earth Community off Hiawatha Avenue in Minneapolis. In an exchange caught on camera, employees of a liquor store near the Minneapolis Convention Center attempted to question a man sitting in a black sport utility vehicle with no front or black plates. The man drove off hurriedly.

Social media sites were created in neighborhoods like Southside Responds where Minneapolis residents reported suspicious vehicles and offered tips on safety. Media reports going up and down Lake Street showed business owners gathering in front of their stores late into the night. Rich Johnson helped guard the Casablanca Foods store on Nicollet Avenue with community members, . They had a sign that read: "Looters & arsonists will be shot."

He was there because "it's one of the only stores still open in this area that isn't burned down or damaged," he told MPR.

"There's a lot of people that live here that use this store that need it, that rely on it," he said.

ENOUGH WAS ENOUGH

In St. Paul, John Keenan, grandson of Keenan's Irish Bar founder Bill Keenan Sr., said he had no interest in violence. But seven or more pickup trucks full of looters swarmed a West Seventh Street liquor store across the street from the family business Thursday, broke its windows, reached through its metal bars and grabbed what they could.

After that, he felt obligated to guard the Cooper's lot with Jungbauer, and word of their efforts spread, drawing others. For the first two nights, slow-moving drivers would eye them, then zip away. Then came the speeders taking advantage of the empty streets.

Friends, It's powerful to see Black men in our community standing in the gap all night to protect Black businesses in North Minneapolis. pic.twitter.com/BFICzGkzti according to Minnesota Public Radio #CommunityPatrols

- Nekima Levy Armstrong (@nvlevy) May 31, 2020

"There was one driving at 100 miles per hour, and I'm not exaggerating," Jungbauer said.

Nick Ferraro contributed to this report.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He

Residents, business owners guarded homes and storefronts

is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Journalists report being fired on, arrested, gassed covering Minneapolis unrest

ARTICLE CXI.

JOURNALISTS REPORT BEING FIRED ON, ARRESTED, GASSED COVERING MINNEAPOLIS UNREST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1180 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: A veteran WCCO photographer covering the Minneapolis unrest was filming as he was shot with a rubber bullet and arrested Saturday night by the Minnesota State Patrol. Tom Aviles was one of several journalists from across the country and world in the Twin Cities who reported they were either shot with rubber bullets and/or sprayed [...]

Body

A veteran WCCO photographer covering the Minneapolis unrest was filming as he was shot with a rubber bullet and arrested Saturday night by the Minnesota State Patrol.

Tom Aviles was one of several journalists from across the country and world in the Twin Cities who reported they were either shot with rubber bullets and/or sprayed with tear gas after the 8 p.m. curfew. Aviles was later released.

Media are listed as exempt from the curfew in Gov. Tim Walz's order. The State Patrol said Sunday they are "reviewing these incidents and its training protocols in an effort to prevent similar incidents in the future."

In a Sunday morning news conference, Walz said he "failed" the media, taking "full responsibility" for the attacks on the journalists.

"It is unacceptable," Walz said. "It is critically important that I'm able to maintain or restore our trust in the necessity of them being out there to tell the story."

"You can rest assured that we will look back at what happened and try to make those changes," Walz said, noting that he has had a history of openness toward the press and it is his intention to keep that.

Walz had already publicly apologized for the treatment of journalists before after he intervened to have a CNN reporter released after the reporter was arrested by state patrol on Friday while filming live.

Walz had said he took "full responsibility" for that incident, as well, involving CNN reporter Omar Jimenez, saying "We have got to ensure that there is a safe spot for journalism to tell the story. The issue here is trust."

Journalists report being fired on, arrested, gassed covering Minneapolis unrest

Along with the arrest of the WCCO reporter, other local and international journalists reported being fired on, thrown the ground, and gassed by authorities:

* Freelance journalist Linda Tirado said on Twitter she might lose her eye after getting hit by a tracer round.

* A producer for VICE news said he was thrown to the ground and pepper sprayed by police.

* Two Reuters journalists reported they were struck and injured by rubber bullets in southwest Minneapolis. Cameraman Julio-Cesar Chavez filmed a police officer aiming at him while firing rubber bullets and dispersing tear gas.

"A police officer that I'm filming turns around points his rubber-bullet rifle straight at me," said Chavez in a Reuters story. Chavez was struck in the back of his neck and arms.

His colleague, Reuters security advisor Rodney Seward was also struck and injured, suffering a "deep gash under his left eye" and injuries to his arms.

"The Reuters journalists were clearly identified as members of the news media. Chavez was holding a camera and wearing his press pass around his neck. Seward was wearing a bullet proof vest with a press label attached," the story said.

* A Los Angeles Times reporter tweeted a video saying she was struck "point blank" range with tear gas by the Minnesota State Patrol after identifying herself as press.

Molly Hennessy-Fiske with the Times said she was at the 5th Precinct with "at least a dozen" other media. She had her notebook in her hand when the State Patrol "advanced" on her group, who identified themselves as journalists, she said.

Minnesota State Patrol just fired tear gas at reporters and photographers at point blank range. pic.twitter.com/r7X6J7Lko8

- Molly Hennessy-Fiske (@mollyhf) May 31, 2020

"They fired tear gas canisters on us at point blank range," she said. She was hit in the leg. "I was saying 'Where do we go? Where do we go? They did not tell us where to go. They didn't direct us. They just fired on us.'"

* Former Pioneer Press reporter Ryan Faircloth, now with the Star Tribune, said he was struck by broken glass when his car window was shot out as he tried to drive out of the way of police.

This is @RyanFaircloth, a reporter with the . He says he was trying to get home when police shot out his window.

He is bleeding but seems ok.

- Jared Goyette (@JaredGoyette) May 31, 2020 @StarTribune pic.twitter.com/LYH0h7c4hf

* A KSTP-TV reporter tweeted that he and his crew were also fired upon with tear gas and pepper sprayed after identifying themselves as press.

Journalists report being fired on, arrested, gassed covering Minneapolis unrest

Myself, photographer, and producer just made it back to the car. We were with a group of media and thought we were in a safe spot. We kept saying we're media. Police tear gassed and pepper sprayed the entire group. Everyone ran. It was insane. It happened so fast. pic.twitter.com/Wl3Fzlsnw

- Ryan Raiche (@ryanraiche) May 31, 2020

* A Star Tribune reporter, Chris Serres, reported in a Tweet: "Regarding police behavior last night, I was twice ordered at gunpoint by Minneapolis police to hit the ground, warned that if I moved "an inch" I'd be shot. This after being teargassed and hit in groin area by rubber bullet. Waiving a Star Tribune press badge made no difference."

* Another CBS reporter, not from the local WCCO affiliate, said Minneapolis police struck his sound engineer with a rubber bullet.

"We were not standing within 500 feet of any protesters and we had credentials displayed and cameras out," he tweeted.

Police in Minneapolis are firing on us (press) with rubber bullets. Our sound engineer John Marschitz was hit. He is ok. We were not standing within 500 feet of any protesters at the time, and we had credentials displayed and cameras out. #cbsnews

- Michael George (@MikeGeorgeCBS)

* A KMSP-TV news crew said pic.twitter.com/Ai6Qd8gLjz May 31, 2020 their windshield was shattered by rubber bullets fired during the protest. They didn't say which agency fired the bullets.

On Sunday, the Minnesota Society of Professional Journalists condemned the way journalists were treated in a tweet:

The board of the Minnesota Society of Professional Journalists condemns in the strongest possible terms the violence and contempt that the @MinneapolisPD and other law enforcement has shown journalists in recent days and calls on and city leaders to do the same.

- MN SPJ (@mnspj)

Police fire rubber bullet at FOX 9 crew as officers clear out protesters in Minneapolis @GovTimWalz May 31, 2020

- FOX 9 (@FOX9) May 31, 2020

RELATED: Fox News reporter attacked, chased from White House demonstration

WCCO photojournalist records himself getting shot in the leg with a rubber bullet and arrested by state patrol pic.twitter.com/kPVn6SZU65

- CJ Fogler (@cjzero) May 31, 2020

Journalists report being fired on, arrested, gassed covering Minneapolis unrest

Regarding police behavior last night, I was twice ordered at gunpoint by Minneapolis police to hit the ground, warned that if I moved "an inch" I'd be shot. This after being teargassed and hit in groin area by rubber bullet. Waiving a Star Tribune press badge made no difference. pic.twitter.com/pfBm7ubzOg

- Chris Serres (@ChrisSerres) May 31, 2020

Correction: An earlier version of this article misidentified the agency involved in the arrest of the WCCO-TV photographer Tom Aviles.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

MN Republicans call on Tim Walz, Jacob Frey to resign at virtual convention amid Twin Cities chaos

ARTICLE CXII. MN REPUBLICANS CALL ON TIM WALZ, JACOB FREY TO RESIGN AT VIRTUAL CONVENTION AMID TWIN CITIES CHAOS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 576 words

Byline: Sarah Mearhoff

Highlight: As the Twin Cities braced for a potential fifth night of rioting - which officials pin on possible outside agitators - the Minnesota Republican Party during its virtual convention took aim at Democrats in power for what they call a "failure of leadership" in the state. In order to avoid a large gathering amid the [...]

Body

As the Twin Cities braced for a potential fifth night of rioting - which officials pin on possible outside agitators - the Minnesota Republican Party during its virtual convention took aim at Democrats in power for what they call a "failure of leadership" in the state.

In order to avoid a large gathering amid the coronavirus pandemic, the GOP held its convention virtually on Saturday, a rescheduled date since the first was postponed due to technological issues and suspected cyberattacks.

After several days of protests in the Twin Cities - some violent, some peaceful - responding to the death of George Floyd, GOP Chair Jennifer Carnahan opened Saturday's convention calling for the resignations of Democrats Gov. Tim Walz and Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey.

"(Walz and Frey) have failed Minnesota," she said. "(They) failed our business owners, both small and large. They failed our residents and families. They failed our police. They failed our National Guard. They failed our minority and non-minority communities. They failed us all. And most importantly, they failed George Floyd."

Carnahan, followed by Minnesota's Republican Washington delegation and state Republican leaders, said the events in the Twin Cities demonstrate a need to elect more Republicans in November.

U.S. Rep. Tom Emmer said Minneapolis' three-decade-long blue voting record "clearly is coming to a head right now."

"You want to know whether leadership matters? Just look at what's happening to this state today," he said. "There is a reason why Republicans offer the only hope going forward."

MN Republicans call on Tim Walz, Jacob Frey to resign at virtual convention amid Twin Cities chaos

As for official party business of the day, members voted to endorse former congressman Jason Lewis for November's U.S. Senate election against Democrat U.S. Sen. Tina Smith. Out of 1,066 voters online for Saturday's convention, nearly 73 percent voted for Lewis. Runners-up were Rob Barrett Jr. and Forest Hyatt.

Lewis urged convention goers to unite on party platforms, noting that President Donald Trump only lost Minnesota in 2016 by about 44,000 votes.

"This is going to be razor thin no matter what. Every vote counts," Lewis said. "This state is up for grabs and it is one we must flip if we are going to keep control of the Senate and help President Trump."

Noticing 2016's thin margins, state and national Republican organizers have been eyeing Minnesota as a flip opportunity for months for both Trump and congressional seats. At his last Minnesota rally in October, Trump vowed to snap Minnesota's longest-in-the-country streak of voting for Democratic presidential candidates come November.

Meanwhile, the Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party postponed part of its 2020 virtual convention scheduled for this weekend in light of Floyd's death.

The convention was slated to run Saturday morning through Sunday afternoon, with speaking appearances by former Vice President Joe Biden, Minnesota's Democratic congressional delegation and more. But the party said Friday the speaking and training portions of the convention are postponed to an unspecified date.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform MN top Republican: 'Leadership failed badly'; Sen. Paul Gazelka wants to end Walz emergency powers and 'pandemic fear' Did George Floyd memorial service violate Minnesota's coronavirus order? Pushing for race and police reforms, Walz fires shot at Republicans in Senate Walz extends curfew: 10 pm - 4 am Wednesday and Thursday nights in St. Paul and Minneapolis

Graphic

Jennifer Carnahan (Courtesy of Minnesota Republican Party)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

St. Paul police stop cars without plates, find within 'tools to wreak havoc in our city'

ARTICLE CXIII. ST. PAUL POLICE STOP CARS WITHOUT PLATES, FIND WITHIN 'TOOLS TO WREAK HAVOC IN OUR CITY'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 266 words

Byline: Pioneer Press

Highlight: St. Paul police said they stopped several vehicles without license plates on Saturday night and found "tools used to wreak havoc on our city" inside. "Each time officers stopped the vehicles, people inside have raced away on foot," the department said in a tweet shortly after 10 p.m. PUBLIC SAFETY UPDATE: Our officers have been [...]

Body

St. Paul police said they stopped several vehicles without license plates on Saturday night and found "tools used to wreak havoc on our city" inside.

"Each time officers stopped the vehicles, people inside have raced away on foot," the department said in a tweet shortly after 10 p.m.

PUBLIC SAFETY UPDATE:

Our officers have been busy stopping several vehicles driving around the city without license plates. Each time officers stopped the vehicles, people inside have raced away on foot, leaving vehicles and tools used to wreak havoc on our city behind.

- Saint Paul Police Department (@sppdmn) May 31, 2020

Officers found the cars were stolen locally and were full of rocks, Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said.

Authorities last week investigated reports that outsiders have largely fueled the destruction and rioting in the Twin Cities. However, most of those arrested appeared to have Minnesota addresses.

Last night's stopping of plate-less cars coincided with clashes between law enforcement and protestors. At one point, confrontations ensued on the Lake Street Bridge as about 1,000 protesters tried to move from Lake Street in Minneapolis to Marshall Avenue in St. Paul but were stopped by authorities firing tear gas.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He

St. Paul police stop cars without plates, find within 'tools to wreak havoc in our city'

is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CXIV. TWO CRISES CONVULSE A NATION: A PANDEMIC AND POLICE VIOLENCE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1175 wordsByline: Jack Healy, Dionne SearceyHighlight: Two Crises Convulse a Nation: A Pandemic and Police ViolenceBody

They are parallel plagues ravaging America: The coronavirus. And police killings of black men and women.

Jimmy Mills' life has been upended by both. His barbershop in Midtown Minneapolis was one of many small, black-owned businesses that have struggled to survive the pandemic. But Mills, 56, was hopeful because, after two months shut down, he was due to reopen next week.

Then early Friday, the working-class neighborhood where Mills has cut hair for 12 years went up in flames as chaotic protests over the death of George Floyd and police killings of African-Americans engulfed Minneapolis and cities across the country.

"To have corona, and then this - it's like a gut shot," Mills said.

The upheaval sparked by a video capturing Floyd's agonizing last minutes as a white police officer kneels on his neck is pulsing through an America already ragged with anger and anxiety. Emotions are raw over the toll of a pandemic that has killed more than 100,000 people across the country and cost millions of jobs.

Minneapolis residents said outrage and protests in the aftermath of the killing of Floyd were a result of a community being tested repeatedly in recent weeks by both police violence and the virus - and in ways that put America's deep racial inequalities in stark relief.

The outbreak has inflicted disproportionate economic and health tolls on racial minorities and immigrants in Minneapolis and beyond. Black and Latino workers have been more likely to have lost their jobs. Many others are among the low-paid hourly workers who risk their health by going to work at grocery stores, nursing homes, factories, slaughterhouses and other jobs that cannot be done remotely.

The black community in Minnesota has also been hit hard by cases of the virus, just as African-Americans across the country are being infected and dying at higher rates.

Two crises convulse a nation: a pandemic and police violence

By one estimate, black people accounted for at least 29% of known COVID-19 cases in Minnesota, despite making up about 6% of the state's population. African-Americans make up 35% of coronavirus cases in Minneapolis, although they are less than 20% of the city's population.

"There are no words to describe what people are going through," said state Rep. Mohamud Noor, who represents a district with many Somalis and other immigrants.

His great-uncle died of the coronavirus a few days ago, and Noor said he is losing track of how many other relatives and constituents are dying.

Noor said that the school closures had hurt poorer students without laptops or reliable internet access to take classes online, and that waves of job losses had sent local unemployment rates soaring. Now, with more than 200 businesses damaged or destroyed in the unrest, Noor said he was worried about new waves of foreclosures, job losses and business failures.

"Many people who are poor who didn't have much, this devastation will really impact them," Noor said.

Even before the pandemic, the Midtown neighborhood, where buildings were burned, damaged and looted, had been trying to rebuild itself after years of economic hardship. The area is in a historically segregated part of town where some residents had felt neglected. A railway was repurposed into a bike and walking trail that runs through the neighborhood. The Midtown Global Market had sprung up, attracting diners and shoppers to its Hmong, Indian, Moroccan and other international food and crafts.

But now, next door to Mills, the barber, a dollar store and beauty-supply shop have been burned to rubble. The front windows of Mills' barbershop were smashed, and looters stole his televisions, video equipment and his clippers.

Now, with the power out, water seeping across the floor and phalanxes of police officers and National Guard troops blockading his neighborhood, he does not know when his J-Klips barbershop might reopen.

"Half of the place is condemned," he said. "Where do we go from here?"

Phillipe Cunningham, a city council member, represents a poor ward in northern Minneapolis with a large black, Hmong and Native American population. He said had spent the past two months fighting to get a coronavirus testing site opened and fielding calls from laid-off workers falling behind on rent and black business owners unable to navigate the maze of federal relief programs.

On Friday, Cunningham drove around surveying damaged buildings, helping some of the same business owners board up their storefronts and trying to prevent looters from breaking into stores.

"We were already struggling," Cunningham said.

In many pockets of the city where the virus seemed to be more concentrated, residents have not had access to masks and hand sanitizer, even as the mayor ordered masks be worn when inside businesses as of last week, said Jia Starr Brown, pastor of First Covenant Church in downtown Minneapolis.

Even healthy people in Minneapolis were feeling anxious after a long stretch of being holed up in their homes as spring arrived; a limited reopening of businesses was not set to begin until Monday. That loosening of restrictions came with a long list of social-distancing and sanitation rules.

Brown spoke as she stepped away from a protest outside a county building Friday afternoon, saying she was heartened to see so many people attend rallies calling for justice for Floyd, even when doing so was a health risk.

"This is about collective widespread grief, and how great must the grief be that people would risk their livelihoods?" she said. "Who we are as a people is greater than the risk to be out there. This is urgent. This isn't about just our own individual lives as black people, but this is about our futures and children."

Many young people, especially minorities, were gig-economy workers holding two or three part-time jobs that evaporated when the outbreak hit, said Tyler Sit, pastor of the New City Church, which is blocks away from where Floyd died and from the Third Precinct that was burned in the protests. They were left jobless and worried about not having benefits should they become ill.

Sitting at home during lockdown, with no work and no prospect of finding work for the foreseeable future, he said, they were more aware than usual of news reports and then had the time to react by taking to the streets.

"I hear messages from community members trying to deliberate whether or not they're going to show up. They don't want to catch COVID-19 and spread COVID-19 if they happen to be an asymptomatic carrier," he said. "But there's a deep feeling of we have to do something because our city is burning."

In Atlanta, Denver, New York and beyond, protesters have also emerged despite the pandemic. They have slipped on face masks and bandannas to guard against the coronavirus, as well as tear gas.

Rashawn Ray, a sociologist and fellow at The Brookings Institution, said one crucial difference between the two plagues is that the coronavirus, like past diseases, may one day dissipate with a vaccine or medical breakthrough.

"We've never gotten to a place where racism is not a significant part of everyone's life in the United States," he said.

Graphic

A person wears a mask reading "I Can't Breathe" during a protest over the death of George Floyd in Chicago, Saturday, May 30, 2020. Protests were held throughout the country over the death of George Floyd, a black man who died after being restrained by Minneapolis police officers on May 25. (AP Photo/Nam Y. Huh)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CXV. BUSINESS PEOPLE: MPLS. FOUNDATION DEPLOYS \$500,000 TO AID COMMUNITY HEALING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 392 words

Byline: Pioneer Press

Highlight: OF NOTE: PHILANTHROPY The Minneapolis Foundation announced that it will deploy $500,000 from its Fund for Safe Communities to support the people of Minneapolis as they strive for justice, equity and healing in the aftermath of George Floyd's death in police custody, and an additional $453,000 in OneMPLS grants to 41 nonprofit organizations that are [...]

Body

The Minneapolis Foundation announced that it will deploy $500,000 from its Fund for Safe Communities to support the people of Minneapolis as they strive for justice, equity and healing in the aftermath of George Floyd's death in police custody, and an additional $453,000 in OneMPLS grants to 41 nonprofit organizations that are providing critical services during the COVID-19 crisis.

Minneapolis creative agency Bolin announced it has promoted Justin Zwiig to chief creative officer and Lindsey Denne to chief growth officer, and the additions of staff members Kris Growcott, senior creative director and strategist; Ivan Trushin, design director; Shannon Fletcher, copywriter and strategist; Jessica Anderson, director of project management; Mitchell Baker, project Manager, and Aryanna Amos, senior account manager.

St. Paul-based TKDA announced that Craig Bursch has been named a Fellow of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

First State Bank and Trust, Bayport, recently announced the promotions of Jason Howard, executive vice president and chief operating officer, to bank president, and Chad Fett, executive vice president of trust services, to president of trust services. ... Firefly Credit Union, Burnsville, and TruStone Financial, Plymouth, have announced their intent to merge subject to regulatory approval and a member vote; the combined entity will operate under the TruStone Financial name and will serve 190,000+ members with a branch network of 23-locations across Minnesota and southeast Wisconsin. ... Ideal Credit Union, Woodbury, announced that Ian Walker has joined as branch manager in North St. Paul.

The Minneapolis Regional Chamber and the TwinWest Chamber of Commerce announce plans to merge. The president and CEO of the merged chamber will be Jonathan Weinhagen, the current president and CEO of the Minneapolis Regional Chamber; TwinWest Chamber President Shannon Full will assume the role of executive vice president for the new organization. Minneapolis police chief takes on union.

Business People: Mpls. Foundation deploys $500,000 to aid community healing

promises reform 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin The Athletic lays off 8 percent of staff 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

EMAIL ITEMS to businessnews@pioneerpress.com.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Pioneer Press newspaper deliveries may be delayed

ARTICLE CXVI. PIONEER PRESS NEWSPAPER DELIVERIES MAY BE DELAYED

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 102 words

Byline: Pioneer Press

Highlight: Delivery of the print edition of the Pioneer Press may be delayed Sunday for the safety of the people who deliver it. Visit saintpaulpioneerpress.mn.newsmemory.com to read our e-edition. Thank you for your patience.

Body

Delivery of the print edition of the Pioneer Press may be delayed Sunday for the safety of the people who deliver it.

Visit saintpaulpioneerpress.mn.newsmemory.com to read our e-edition.

Thank you for your patience.

Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots Price tag to call up National Guard for Twin Cities disturbances: Nearly \$13M Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

'Back in the game': SpaceX ship blasts off with 2 astronauts

ARTICLE CXVII. 'BACK IN THE GAME': SPACEX SHIP BLASTS OFF WITH 2 ASTRONAUTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1332 words

Byline: Marcia Dunn

Highlight: CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - A rocket ship built by Elon Musk's SpaceX company thundered away from Earth with two Americans on Saturday, ushering in a new era in commercial space travel and putting the United States back in the business of launching astronauts into orbit from home soil for the first time in nearly a decade.

Body

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - A rocket ship built by Elon Musk's SpaceX company thundered away from Earth with two Americans on Saturday, ushering in a new era in commercial space travel and putting the United States back in the business of launching astronauts into orbit from home soil for the first time in nearly a decade.

NASA's Doug Hurley and Bob Behnken rode skyward aboard a white-and-black, bullet-shaped Dragon capsule on top of a Falcon 9 rocket, lifting off at 3:22 p.m. from the same launch pad used to send Apollo crews to the moon a half-century ago. Minutes later, they slipped safely into orbit.

"Let's light this candle," Hurley said just before ignition, borrowing the historic words used by Alan Shepard on America's first human spaceflight, in 1961.

The two men are scheduled to arrive Sunday at the International Space Station, 250 miles above Earth, for a stay of up to four months, after which they will come home with a Right Stuff-style splashdown at sea, something the world hasn't witnessed since the 1970s.

The mission unfolded amid the gloom of the coronavirus outbreak, which has killed more than 100,000 Americans, and racial unrest across the U.S. over the case of George Floyd, the handcuffed black man who died at the hands of Minneapolis police.

NASA officials and others expressed hope the flight would lift American spirits and show the world what the U.S. can do.

"We are back in the game. It's very satisfying," said Doug Marshburn, of Deltona, Florida, who shouted, "USA! USA!" as he watched the 260-foot rocket climb skyward.

'Back in the game': SpaceX ship blasts off with 2 astronauts

SpaceX becomes the first private company to launch people into orbit, a feat achieved previously by only three governments: the U.S., Russia and China.

"This is something that should really get people right in the heart of anyone who has any spirit of exploration," Musk, the visionary also behind the Tesla electric car company, said after liftoff, pounding his chest with his fist.

The flight also ended a nine-year launch drought for NASA. Ever since it retired the space shuttle in 2011, NASA has relied on Russian spaceships launched from Kazakhstan to take U.S. astronauts to and from the space station.

Over the past few years, NASA outsourced the job of designing and building its next generation of spaceships to SpaceX and Boeing, awarding them $7 billion in contracts in a public-private partnership aimed at driving down costs and spurring innovation. Boeing's spaceship, the Starliner capsule, is not expected to fly astronauts until early 2021.

NASA plans to rely in part on commercial partners as it pursues its next goals: sending astronauts back to the moon within a few years, and on to Mars in the 2030s.

At a post-liftoff rally held at NASA's massive 525-foot-high Vehicle Assembly Building, President Donald Trump commended Musk and proclaimed: "Today we once again proudly launch American astronauts on American rockets, the best in the world, from right here on American soil."

He vowed the U.S. will be the first to land on Mars, promising a "future of American dominance in space."

Vice President Mike Pence, who also witnessed the launch, said that as the nation deals with the coronavirus and racial strife, "I believe with all my heart that millions of Americans today will find the same inspiration and unity of purpose that we found in those days in the 1960s" during Apollo.

The first attempt to launch the rocket, on Wednesday, was called off with less than 17 minutes to go in the countdown because of lightning. On Saturday, stormy weather threatened another postponement for most of the day, but the skies began to clear just in the time.

The astronauts set out for the launch pad in a gull-wing Tesla SUV after Behnken pantomimed a hug of his 6-year-old son, Theo, and said: "Are you going to listen to Mommy and make her life easy?" Hurley blew kisses to his 10-year-old son and wife.

Nine minutes after liftoff, the rocket's first-stage booster landed, as designed, on a barge a few hundred miles off the Florida coast, to be reused on another flight.

"Thanks for the great ride to space," Hurley told SpaceX ground control. The two crewmates batted around a floating blue dinosaur plush toy doubling as a dragon, demonstrating that they had reached zero gravity.

SpaceX controllers at Hawthorne, California, cheered and applauded wildly, and NASA Administrator Jim Bridenstine declared: "This is everything that America has to offer in its purest form."

Attendance inside Kennedy Space Center was strictly limited because of the coronavirus, and the crowd amounted to only a few thousand. By NASA's count, over 3 million viewers tuned in online.

'Back in the game': SpaceX ship blasts off with 2 astronauts

Despite NASA's insistence that the public stay safe by staying home, spectators flocked to beaches and roads, some of them not wearing masks or keeping 6 feet from others.

Among the spectators was Neil Wight, a machinist from Buffalo, New York.

"With everything that's going on in this country right now, it's important that we do things extraordinary in life," he said. "We've been bombarded with doom and gloom for the last six, eight weeks, whatever it is, and this is awesome. It brings a lot of people together."

Hurley, a 53-year-old retired Marine, and Behnken, 49, an Air Force colonel, are veterans of two space shuttle flights each.

Because of the coronavirus, the astronauts were kept in quasi-quarantine for more than two months. The SpaceX technicians who helped them get into their spacesuits wore masks and gloves that made them look like black-clad ninjas. And the SpaceX controllers had masks and were seated far apart.

In keeping with Musk's penchant for futuristic flash, the astronauts wore angular white uniforms with black trim. Instead of the usual multitude of dials, knobs and switches, the Dragon capsule has three large touchscreens.

Once settled in orbit, Hurley disclosed that the capsule has been christened Endeavour, a storied name in the history of exploration, also given to one of the space shuttles.

SpaceX has been launching cargo capsules to the space station since 2012.

Under the new corporate-public model, aerospace companies design, build, own and operate spaceships, and NASA is essentially a paying customer on a list that could eventually include non-government researchers, artists and tourists. (Tom Cruise has already expressed interest.)

Saturday's mission is technically considered a test flight. The next SpaceX voyage to the space station, set for the end of August, will have a full, four-person crew: three Americans and one Japanese.

The first flight was originally targeted for around 2015. But the project encountered bureaucratic delays and technical setbacks. A SpaceX capsule exploded on the test stand last year. And Boeing's first Starliner capsule ended up in the wrong orbit and was nearly destroyed during a test flight in December.

For SpaceX and the future of public-corporate space exploration, the stakes on Saturday were extraordinarily high.

With the spaceship finally on its way, Musk got choked up talking about the weight of his responsibility for the astronauts' lives and their families and noted that the return to Earth is more dangerous in some ways than ascent, "so we don't want to declare victory yet."

Still, Musk said he wasn't nervous about the launch on Saturday the way he was during the previous attempt.

"Today, I don't know, it felt like just the fates were aligned," he said.

'Back in the game': SpaceX ship blasts off with 2 astronauts

Associated Press writers Jill Colvin and Mike Schneider in Cape Canaveral, Fla., contributed to this report.

The Associated Press Health and Science Department receives support from the Howard Hughes Medical Institute's Department of Science Education. The AP is solely responsible for all content. Coronavirus: 8 things we got wrong - at first - about the deadly pandemic 'Cops,' on air for 33 seasons, dropped by Paramount Network Trump pushes conspiracy theory about Buffalo protester Tropical downpours in the Twin Cities? Thanks, Cristobal When protesters cry 'defund the police,' what does it mean?

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CXVIII. EXCESS SAVINGS ACTUALLY HURTING ECONOMY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

May 31, 2020 Sunday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1DLength: 846 wordsByline: LEE SCHAFER; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Since the last recession ended in 2009, Americans have generally saved about 5% of what they made.

That held up until March, when the savings rate shot up to 13%. Then on Friday morning April's savings rate was reported, and it had zoomed to 33%.

If that seems strange, Americans saving one-third of their incomes, that's because it is. Nothing like this has happened before.

Could this be a good thing? More old-fashioned thriftiness when times are hard?

No, it's not.

One person's spending is somebody else's income. Nothing about a savings rate of 33% should be comforting.

The story of the pandemic recession of 2020 is usually told as one of horrific job losses and lost income for business owners. But the other worrisome part of this story is that even people with money may not want to spend it. How long this goes on will largely shape the economic recovery.

It was a terrible week here in the Twin Cities, beginning with the shocking death of George Floyd in Minneapolis. This article is being written with the smell of smoke from burned-out buildings in the air. Given all that, it was hard to look at yet another extraordinary report on the economy in hopes of finding a glimmer of optimism.

But after a read-through of Friday's numbers on spending and saving, it's difficult to see how a quick rebound in consumer spending can happen.

It's understandable that spending might have slowed in April, of course, as there were no Twins games to attend or leisurely nights out at a favorite casual restaurant. Lots of things were closed, as the COVID-19 pandemic kept people home, either by government order or their own choice.

Spending by consumers really matters, of course, as nearly 70 cents of every dollar in gross domestic product is consumption spending.

As for the numbers, consumption spending in April was down more than 13% from March and more like 20% from February. Spending declined in April more or less across the board, everything from money spent on long-lasting items to spending on services. Even interest expense was down, which makes sense if people are not using their credit cards as much.

Incomes in April actually increased, however, but that's just another really weird aspect about the world we are living in right now. It was not due to big boosts in worker pay or business profits, as both declined sharply from the pre-pandemic levels of February.

What increased were government benefits, including surging unemployment insurance payments and a whopping increase on a line on a Department of Commerce chart simply labeled "other," capturing the individual federal stimulus payments. There could be more than one federal stimulus check, but no one in my family is counting on it.

That's part of the problem, because if people don't expect another check they might try to save more of the one they just got.

If incomes look shaky out into the future, and for a lot of people they must here in May 2020, then one thing to do is adjust spending down now. People, after all, aren't really in a position to quickly move to a smaller house or sell a car if future prospects suddenly don't look so rosy.

Rather they want to keep household spending close to what it had been. One way to do that if incomes seem to be at risk is to cut back some on spending right now and start putting more money away.

This reality has been reflected in consumer confidence surveys, including the well-known one by the University of Michigan. The last one reported that confidence in future expectations declined further from the April survey, even though the first steps toward more shopping and other activity were being taken in Minnesota and elsewhere.

"The CARES relief checks and higher unemployment payments have helped to stem economic hardship," the principal author was quoted saying in the most recent release. "But those programs have not acted to stimulate discretionary spending due to uncertainty about the future course of the pandemic."

It's hard to imagine that spending can keep declining, and the Wall Street Journal last week cited an uptick in automobile sales in its coverage of the start of a recovery. Car sales did bounce back from a shocking collapse at the end March, yet as of the latest report in May, sales were still running about 25% below the previous forecast for the year.

Meanwhile, the stock market has recovered strongly from March. While this is just another thing that seems hard to easily understand, there is a good explanation.

The value of any business, including the 30 that have their stocks included in the famous Dow Jones industrial average, comes from how much money they will make in the future, not what happened in April.

Excess savings actually hurting economy

Without being a stock market guru, we intuitively know that eventually consumers will stop stashing away so much money and get back to spending at least close to what they were before the pandemic. That will generate profits for businesses and let them hire more people.

What no one yet knows is if that will be later this year or next year - or even the year after that.

lee.schafer@startribune.com 612-673-4302

Load-Date: May 31, 2020

End of Document

Roundup: Twin Cities protests continue, but National Guard and neighbors help quiet violence

ARTICLE CXIX. ROUNDUP: TWIN CITIES PROTESTS CONTINUE, BUT NATIONAL GUARD AND NEIGHBORS HELP QUIET VIOLENCE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 884 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

Protesters again took to the streets on Saturday in demonstrations against police, but the Twin Cities were largely spared another night of arson and looting. Relatively widespread adherence to an 8 p.m. curfew, a much stronger presence by the police and National Guard as well as watchful neighborhood groups helped thwart violence, even as unrest spread to other cities around the United States.

The Star Tribune has a report on the second night of ordered curfew, which saw a marked change in the balance of power on the streets. The National Guard presence grew to more than 4,100, with thousands more at the ready, and authorities took a much more active role in clearing the streets with tear gas and other crowd-control implements. Dozens of people were arrested.

Demonstrators, meanwhile, turned out in force during the day to protest the death of George Floyd during an altercation with Minneapolis Police last Monday. But unlike Friday night, when crowds openly defied the curfew for hours, they largely dispersed after the curfew took effect. "First responders would not have had any opportunity to succeed" if people had not stayed home, Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey said Sunday morning.

Roundup: Twin Cities protests continue, but National Guard and neighbors help quiet violence

Gov. Tim Walz extended the state-ordered curfew in Minneapolis/St. Paul for another night, beginning at 8 p.m. Sunday through 6 a.m. Monday. "The curfew on Friday and Saturday night allowed our law enforcement to target those who meant to do harm to our communities," he said in a statement, noting that arrests on Saturday yielded seizures of "weapons, narcotics, long guns, handguns, magazines and knives."

Law enforcement also drew criticism for their tactics. KMSP reports on video from the Whittier neighborhood of Minneapolis in which residents standing on their porches are fired upon with "paint canisters." (It's legal to be outside during a curfew, as long as you're on your own property.) The video identifies the shooter as National Guard, but the National Guard said in a statement that, "The enforcement officers in this tweet are not members of the Minnesota National Guard."

Even as violence abated somewhat, debate continued over just who was behind it. Early Saturday, Gov. Tim Walz and St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter said that most of the arrested protesters so far had been from out-of-state. KARE-11 checked the arrest records and found that wasn't so, and Carter later said his information was wrong.

But authorities continued to say that extremists were using the protests as cover to burn and loot buildings. Minnesota Public Radio reports on several eyewitness accounts of armed white men around the city and trucks bearing white-supremacist stickers. WCCO notes that President Trump and U.S. Attorney General William Barr blamed left-wing radicals. Walz, on Sunday, noted that state computer systems were subjected to a "denial of service" attack

The Pioneer Press reports that St. Paul Police stopped several cars without plates in the city. Passengers fled on foot, leaving behind both cars and "tools used to wreak havoc on our city," according to the police department.

Neighborhood groups, convinced that outsiders of some type were targeting businesses in their areas, took a more active role in keeping watch Saturday, the Star Tribune reports. In North Minneapolis, where unknown arsonists targeted neighborhood fixtures like barbershops on Friday, residents sat in chairs all night along North Broadway. In Cedar Riverside, Somali-American residents stood watch on the streets.

Minneapolis was the first city to experience plagues of violence and protests in the wake of Floyd's death, but outbursts have since spread across the country. The New York Times has a roundup.

Target Corp., whose store in South Minneapolis was badly damaged by looters in one of the first nights of unrest in Minneapolis, has expanded the number of stores it's closing to other states. In addition to virtually all of its Twin Cities stores, the Minneapolis-based retailer is shuttering more than 70 other locations in states like Texas, California, Oregon, Illinois and New York. The full list is here. Target CEO Brian Cornell told the Star Tribune Friday that the retailer hoped to reopen most damaged Twin Cities stores within weeks, though repairing South Minneapolis store could take much longer.

Forbes reporter Andrew Solender in New York spotted crowds trying to break into the Target store in Brooklyn; they were stopped by protest organizers.

Roundup: Twin Cities protests continue, but National Guard and neighbors help quiet violence

The ongoing violence is taking a toll on businesses across the metro. The Star Tribune has detailed neighborhood maps of the buildings that have suffered damage this week.

The Star Tribune also has a wrap-up of local nonprofits and other groups taking donations and organizing cleanup efforts for businesses hit by the riots.

Neighborhoods hit badly in Thursday and Friday night violence saw scores of people turn out Saturday to clean up debris and help repair buildings. The Southwest Journal has details on the effort.

Business insurance will likely cover much of the damage, but experts said owners should act quickly to document losses. The economic shock of the pandemic could also complicate insurance payouts.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 1, 2020

End of Document

Sunday coronavirus update: 14 additional MN deaths, 664 new cases

ARTICLE CXX. SUNDAY CORONAVIRUS UPDATE: 14 ADDITIONAL MN DEATHS, 664 NEW CASES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 377 wordsByline: Pioneer PressHighlight: Minnesota's death toll from the coronavirus has reached 1,040 as 14 additional cases were reported on Sunday. Of the total deaths, 848 were residents of long-term care of assisted living centers, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health data updated Sunday morning. The state also lists 10 probable COVID-19 deaths, where the coronavirus is listed [...]Body

Minnesota's death toll from the coronavirus has reached 1,040 as 14 additional cases were reported on Sunday.

Of the total deaths, 848 were residents of long-term care of assisted living centers, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health data updated Sunday morning. The state also lists 10 probable COVID-19 deaths, where the coronavirus is listed on a death certificate but a positive test is not documented for the person.

The state's report details an additional 664 confirmed infections, raising the state's overall number of cases to 24,850. State officials say there are likely many more cases who have not been tested.

HOW ARE THEY DOING? There were 18,695 patients Sunday who have recovered enough that they no longer need to be isolated, an increase from 17,864 patients the day before. There were 555 with COVID-19 in Minnesota hospitals, a decrease from 589 on Saturday. Of those hospitalized, 257 were reported Sunday in intensive care units, a decrease from 263 the day before. WHO'S GETTING SICK? Age group with most confirmed infections: 30- to 39-year-olds, with 4,964 cases. Age group with most deaths: 80-to 89-year-olds, with 357. Number of health care workers with COVID-19: 3,690.

The latest figures come as the Twin Cities area and nation grapples with protests and riots sparked by the death of 46-year-old George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody. Demonstrations held in the metro have drawn large crowds that threaten to increase the risk of COVID-19 transmission.

But any spikes that occur as a result of this past week's protests will likely take three weeks to become apparent, given the incubation period of new cases and the lag time for test results to return. That places those cases in late June, a period already forecast as a window for a peak in the outbreak.

Sunday coronavirus update: 14 additional MN deaths, 664 new cases

Forum News Service contributed to this report.

Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Target announces indefinite closure of several stores, including two in Minnesota

ARTICLE CXXI. TARGET ANNOUNCES INDEFINITE CLOSURE OF SEVERAL STORES, INCLUDING TWO IN MINNESOTA

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

May 31, 2020 Sunday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 320 words

Byline: Pioneer Press

Highlight: In addition, the Minneapolis-based retail chain said it has "adjusted or closed over 200 stores over this weekend." These included several dozen temporary store closures in and around the Twin Cities.

Body

Target has announced the indefinite closure of six stores, including two in Minnesota.

One of these, the store on Lake Street in Minneapolis, was badly damaged during recent looting, and is scheduled to reopen in late 2020.

Target did not specify estimated reopening dates for the other five stores, saying only they are "closed until further notice."

Those stores are:

Uptown in Minneapolis Broadway, Oakland, Calif. Buckhead, South Atlanta, Ga. South Loop, Chicago Washington Square, West Philadelphia

The Minneapolis-based retail chain said it has "adjusted or closed over 200 stores over this weekend."

These included several dozen temporary store closures in and around the Twin Cities. About 24 of these closed their doors well prior to the weekend.

Target didn't say how it chose which of these stores to shutter, nor when they will reopen.

"As the situation is so fluid, and we're evaluating temporary adjusted hours and closures on a store-by-store basis, we don't have any more specifics to share at this time," spokeswoman Aryn Ridge said. "We'll keep this page updated as needed."

Target said employees at stores that are closed will be paid for up to 14 days, including premiums they are earning due to the coronavirus pandemic. They will also be able to work at Target locations that remain open.

Target announces indefinite closure of several stores, including two in Minnesota

"We are heartbroken by the death of George Floyd and the pain it is causing communities across the country," Target said in a statement. "Our focus will remain on our team members' safety and helping our community heal."

Dozens of homeless people evicted from Minneapolis hotel 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen Fever checks at the door, no facials or blow drying: Hair salons 'reinventing' under coronavirus St. Paul police officer one of six area leaders to land 2020 Bush Foundation fellowships

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

The Latest: California closes all downtown state buildings

ARTICLE CXXII. THE LATEST: CALIFORNIA CLOSES ALL DOWNTOWN STATE BUILDINGS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 2719 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: The Latest on the death in Minneapolis of George Floyd, a handcuffed black man who pleaded for air as a white police officer pressed a knee on his neck:

Body

The Associated Press

The Latest on the death in Minneapolis of George Floyd, a handcuffed black man who pleaded for air as a white police officer pressed a knee on his neck:

—

SAN FRANCISCO - The state Department of Human Resources sent a directive to close all California state buildings "with offices in downtown city areas" on Monday, a sweeping mandate that covers everything from Department of Motor Vehicles offices to those that license workers and provide health care.

"After consultation with the California Highway Patrol and Office of Emergency Services, the decision was made this evening to advise all state departments with offices in downtown city areas to close tomorrow, and to notify staff of the decision," said Amy Palmer, a spokeswoman for the state Government Operations Agency.

The directive was sent Sunday evening and it was left up to officials at individual agencies to determine which buildings should be closed.

A state Department of Justice memo sent to employees said the attorney general's offices in Sacramento, Oakland, San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego would be closed, though employees who can work from home should do so.

"Staff assigned to these offices should not report to work for any reason. Staff who are able to telework should continue to do so despite the office closures," the memo said.

—

The Latest: California closes all downtown state buildings

PORTLAND, Ore. - Police in Portland deployed tear gas to disperse a large crowd downtown late Sunday night after authorities said projectiles were thrown at officers.

Earlier, police said protesters smashed windows at the federal courthouse, and authorities on loudspeakers declared the gathering a civil disturbance.

Thousands of people marched throughout Oregon's largest city on Sunday, the third day of George Floyd protests in Portland. For much of the afternoon and evening protesters were largely peaceful, but there were reports of increased violence directed at police into the night.

SEOUL, South Korea - North Korea's official Rodong Sinmun newspaper on Monday reported the demonstrations across the United States in reaction to the death of George Floyd, saying protesters "harshly condemned" a white police officer's "lawless and brutal murder" of a black citizen.

The article, published with photos, said hundreds of protesters gathered in front of the White House chanting "No justice, no peace." It also said there were demonstrations in Minneapolis, New York, Denver, Chicago, Los Angeles and Memphis and that the protests were expected to grow further.

Several thousand people marched Monday in New Zealand's largest city, Auckland, to protest George Floyd's death and show solidarity with the Black Lives Matter movement.

The protesters marched from Aotea Square to the U.S. consulate, where they kneeled. They held banners with slogans such as "I can't breathe" and "The Real Virus is Racism." Hundreds more joined protests and vigils elsewhere in the country, on a day that was a public holiday.

The protests were peaceful. Protesters said they were also standing up against police violence and racism in New Zealand.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. - More than 15 people were arrested during protests in Charlotte on Sunday night, the city's police department said.

Police said four demonstrators were arrested for assaulting officers, including one for hitting an officer with a rock. Three others were arrested on illegal weapon charges, police said.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri - Shortly after local officials praised what had been a peaceful protest in Kansas City, Missouri, police fired tear gas into the crowd after some demonstrators began lobbing water bottles, law enforcement officials said.

A large crowd had gathered at County Club plaza and police had allowed it to slowly dissipate after the city's 8 p.m. curfew took effect. But police used stronger tactics against the smaller crowd that remained when rocks and water bottles started flying and two television station news vehicles were smashed and set on fire.

The Latest: California closes all downtown state buildings

Police declared the scene an "unlawful assembly" and said the area was clear of activity by midnight.

OLYMPIA, Wash. - Washington Gov. Jay Inslee late Sunday ordered a statewide activation of the National Guard following vandalism and stealing in stores and shopping malls in multiple cities.

Inslee had previously authorized 400 troops for Seattle and 200 for Bellevue. On Saturday night people smashed downtown Seattle store fronts and stole items from many businesses, tossing mannequins into the street. On Sunday there were break-ins and thefts in stores and shopping malls in Bellevue, Spokane, Tukwila and Renton.

Inslee's activation means more troops will be used to help control unrest.

"We must not let these illegal and dangerous actions detract from the anger so many feel at the deep injustice laid so ugly and bare by the death of George Floyd," Inslee said in a statement. "But we also will not turn away from our responsibility to protect the residents of our state."

WASHINGTON - Break-ins and stealing were rampant in downtown Washington and elsewhere in the city as protests over George Floyd's death turned violent for a third straight night.

Protesters broke into a branch of Capital Bank, and empty jewelry boxes could be seen scattered on the sidewalk outside a Mervis Diamonds store.

After protesters broke into a La Colombe coffee shop, someone in the crowd yelled, "What are you looting a coffee shop for? You're messing up the whole message."

NEW YORK - The mayor of New York City's own daughter is one of the nearly 790 people who have been arrested in the city since protests over the death of George Floyd began last week.

A law enforcement official who spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the matter tells The Associated Press that 25-year-old Chiara de Blasio was arrested Saturday night. An arrest report obtained by The New York Post says she refused to leave a Manhattan street ordered cleared by officers because people were throwing things.

Chiara de Blasio, who is black, was later given a court summons and released.

Mayor Bill de Blasio, who is white, didn't mention the arrest in his Sunday press briefing. City Hall spokespeople didn't have an immediate comment.

- By Michael R. Sisak

AUSTIN, Texas - Police fired rubber bullets and pepper spray late Sunday night at demonstrators who gathered outside the downtown police station in Austin.

The Latest: California closes all downtown state buildings

Live television cameras on Spectrum News showed officers firing several shots into the crowd and several people on the ground. Some people could be seen throwing water bottles at police.

The officers were stationed above the crowd on the steps of the police station and a raised section of Interstate 35.

Unlike Dallas, where police made dozens of arrests to enforce a downtown curfew, Austin doesn't have a curfew and demonstrators have been roaming downtown from the police station to the state Capitol several blocks away for nearly 10 hours. The crowd has ebbed and flowed from a few thousand to a few hundred.

Demonstrators could not get on the Capitol grounds, which were protected by a large police presence.

DENVER - Police fired tear gas and projectiles at demonstrators defying a Denver curfew Sunday night following a day of peaceful marching and chants of "Don't shoot" alongside boarded-up businesses that had been vandalized the night before.

Dozens of demonstrators, some throwing fireworks, taunted police and pushed dumpsters onto Colfax Avenue, a major artery, in the sporadic confrontations that occurred east of downtown. The demonstration over the death of George Floyd came after turbulent protests that led to the arrest of 83 people Saturday night.

Denver Mayor Michael Hancock called the behavior of unruly protesters "reckless, inexcusable and unacceptable."

PHOENIX - Protests held Sunday night in downtown Phoenix appeared to be peaceful, according to local media reports.

An hour before a curfew went into effect, activist Armonée Jackson told protesters in the parking lot of an art gallery downtown that they should avoid any violence, The Arizona Republic reported.

"Listen to me: We are not ending in violence. I refuse to end in violence," Jackson told the crowd.

David Riutta told the newspaper that he came out to protest police brutality and wants to see a panel of civilians investigate officers' use-of-force cases.

WASHINGTON - As demonstrations continued past an 11 p.m. curfew, D.C. police said they were responding to multiple fires that were "intentionally set" around the city. One was at St. John's Episcopal Church, which is located across Lafayette Park from the White House.

The church says every president beginning with James Madison, "until the present," has attended a service at the church, giving it the nickname, "the church of presidents."

The first services at the church were held in 1816, according to its website.

WASHINGTON - The entire Washington, D.C., National Guard - roughly 1,700 soldiers - is being called in to help with the response to protests outside the White House and elsewhere in the nation's capital, according to two Defense Department officials.

Washington Mayor Muriel Bowser said Sunday she had requested 500 Guardsman to assist local law enforcement. Later on Sunday, as the protests escalated, Army Secretary Ryan McCarthy ordered the rest of the Guardsman - about 1,200 soldiers - to report.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to publicly discuss the matter.

The D.C. National Guard did not reply to a request from The Associated Press for comment.

- By James LaPorta

WASHINGTON - Protesters started fires near the White House as tensions with police mounted during a third straight night of demonstrations held in response to the death of George Floyd at police hands in Minnesota.

An hour before the 11 p.m. curfew, police fired a major barrage of tear gas stun grenades into the crowd of more than 1,000 people, largely clearing Lafayette Park across the street from the White House and scattering protesters into the street.

Protesters piled up road signs and plastic barriers and lit a raging fire in the middle of H Street. Some pulled an American flag from a nearby building and threw it into the blaze. Others added branches pulled from trees. A cinder block structure, on the north side of the park, that had bathrooms and a maintenance office, was engulfed in flames.

As the curfew hit, police sealed the perimeter of the park. Shortly beforehand, police pushed a crowd of about 300 demonstrators several blocks with a series of charges with batons and riot shields.

Enraged protesters screamed, "Who do you serve? Who do you protect?" Police shot pepper powders point black at several protesters.

Several miles north, a separate protest broke out in Northwest D.C., near the Maryland border. The Metropolitan Police Department says there were break-ins at a Target and a shopping center that houses Neiman Marcus, Saks Fifth Avenue Men's Store, T.J. Maxx, a movie theater and specialty stores. Police say several individuals have been detained.

At least 4,100 people have been arrested over days of protests across the country since George Floyd's death Monday, according to a tally compiled by The Associated Press.

Arrests ranged from thefts to blocking highways and breaking curfew.

The Latest: California closes all downtown state buildings

The arrest figures as of 11 p.m. EST on Sunday included those from demonstrations in New York and Philadelphia on the East Coast, Chicago and Dallas in the Midwest and Southwest, and Los Angeles on the West Coast as protests take place all over the country.

In Dallas, police began sweeping downtown streets with arrests to enforce a curfew that went into effect at 7 p.m.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. - Michael Jordan is "deeply saddened, truly pained and plain angry."

With protesters taking to the streets across the United States again Sunday, Jordan released a statement on George Floyd and the killings of black people at the hands of police.

"I am deeply saddened, truly pained and plain angry," the former NBA star and current Charlotte Hornets owner said in the statement posted on the Jordan brand's social media accounts and the team's Twitter account.

"I see and feel everyone's pain, outrage and frustration. I stand with those who are calling out the ingrained racism and violence toward people of color in our country. We have had enough.

"I don't have the answers, but our collective voices show strength and the inability to be divided by others. We must listen to each other, show compassion and empathy and never turn our backs on senseless brutality. We need to continue peaceful expressions against injustice and demand accountability. Our unified voice needs to put pressure on our leaders to change our laws, or else we need to use our vote to create systemic change. Every one of us needs to be part of the solution, and we must work together to ensure justice for all.

"My heart goes out to the family of George Floyd and to the countless others whose lives have been brutally and senselessly taken through acts of racism and injustice."

BOSTON - A Sunday afternoon of mostly peaceful protests in Boston broke at nightfall when demonstrators clashed with officers, throwing rocks, breaking into several stores and lighting a police vehicle on fire.

Boston police tweeted that at least 40 people had been arrested as of 3 a.m. Monday. Police said seven police officers had been hospitalized and 21 police cruisers were damaged.

A National Guard unit was called in to help quell the unrest.

Republican Gov. Charlie Baker called the violence "criminal and cowardly" in a tweet. The nighttime destruction was a stark contrast to the several protests earlier Sunday that featured thousands of demonstrators marching peacefully.

ATLANTA - Riot police firing volleys of tear gas dispersed hundreds of demonstrators as a curfew took hold Sunday night, scattering a crowd that had protested for hours in downtown Atlanta over the deaths of George Floyd in Minnesota and Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia.

The Latest: California closes all downtown state buildings

Hundreds of police, National Guard troops and other forces lined up in positions around downtown Centennial Park, a focal point of the weekend of protests.

An overnight curfew took hold at 9 p.m. as some on the fringes of what was a largely peaceful afternoon protest were setting off fireworks and burning construction materials near the park. An Associated Press photographer saw police then begin firing many 40 millimeter canisters of tear gas toward the crowd. People were choking, gasping and some throwing up as they scattered, leaving only a few still in the streets.

As police and National Guard troops took up positions with plastic shields on major streets, crowds melted away. WSB-TV showed footage about an hour later of officers taking people who lingered in the streets into custody, using plastic ties to handcuff them on street corners.

WASHINGTON - Secret Service agents rushed President Donald Trump to an underground bunker Friday, as hundreds of protesters gathered outside the White House, some throwing rocks and tugging at police barricades just outside the executive mansion.

That's according to a Republican close to the White House not authorized to publicly discuss private matters and confirmed by another official. The abrupt decision by the agents underscored the rattled mood inside the White House, where the chants from Lafayette Park could be heard all weekend and Secret Service agents and law enforcement officers struggled to contain the crowds.

The Friday protests, triggered by the death of George Floyd, a black man who died after he was pinned at the neck by a white Minneapolis police officer, turned violent and appeared to catch officers by surprise. It sparked one of the highest alerts on the White House complex since the Sept. 11 attacks in 2001. In the days since, security at the White House has been reinforced by the National Guard and additional personnel from the Secret Service and the U.S. Park Police.

On Sunday, the Justice Department also deployed members of the U.S. Marshals Service and agents from the Drug Enforcement Administration to supplement national guard troops outside the White House, according to a senior Justice Department official. The official could not discuss the matter publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity.

- By Jonathan Lemire and Zeke Miller

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Truck driver on Minneapolis highway slammed brakes, says he didn't mean to hurt anyone, officials say

ARTICLE CXXIII. TRUCK DRIVER ON MINNEAPOLIS HIGHWAY SLAMMED BRAKES, SAYS HE DIDN'T MEAN TO HURT ANYONE, OFFICIALS SAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1220 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: He didn't want to hurt anyone. The truck driver who drove into - or nearly into - a crowd of protesters on Interstate 35W in Minneapolis Sunday says he didn't intend to do so, but rather found himself confused on a highway that he didn't understand was closed - and certainly didn't know would be [...]

Body

He didn't want to hurt anyone.

The truck driver who drove into - or nearly into - a crowd of protesters on Interstate 35W in Minneapolis Sunday says he didn't intend to do so, but rather found himself confused on a highway that he didn't understand was closed - and certainly didn't know would be occupied with thousands of people on foot.

But he wasn't completely blameless either in the terrifying incident, which untold numbers of people watched unfold live on TV; he was speeding, and his first reaction upon seeing the crowd was not to slow down.

That's the picture state officials sketched out Monday as they discussed the matter and marveled that no one was killed or even seriously injured.

"From what we can tell from our interviews ... we don't have any information that makes this seem like an intentional act," Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said.

On Monday afternoon, the driver, Bogdan Vechirko, 35, of Otsego, remained in Hennepin County Jail without bail, held on probable cause for assault. However, to hear officials tell it Monday, one would expect some of that might change.

Here's what happened, according to to Harrington:

CONFUSING CLOSURE

The Minnesota Department of Transportation had planned to close the highway at 8 p.m. to coincide with curfew. But they changed plans abruptly.

Truck driver on Minneapolis highway slammed brakes, says he didn't mean to hurt anyone, officials say

Around 4:30 p.m., a large crowd of protesters began to walk onto the highway.

The people had been attending a demonstration at U.S. Bank Stadium seeking justice for George Floyd, the unarmed black man whose death a week ago spawned protests that led to riots. The demonstration had been peaceful, and the thousands marching onto the highway were as well - although the act of occupying an Interstate is illegal.

Harrington and others quickly decided the safest move was to shut down the highways ASAP. "We asked MnDOT, 'Can you lock it down now?' And MnDOT said, 'As quick as we can, we will.' And they started the process of shutting down entrance ramps." They announced at 4:38 p.m. they were closing the highways at 5 p.m.

The process of setting up barricades at entrance ramps and diverting traffic already on the highways takes time - and the highways near downtown Minneapolis are a noodle nest of merges, ramps and commons, as Interstate 94 and I-35W cross paths.

Vechirko was already on I-94 when the process started.

EMPTY TANKER, EMPTY ROAD

Vechirko was on his second trip of the day as part of a milk run of stops with his tanker, which is owned by Kenan Advantage Group, a major petroleum distributor to gas stations. He's an independent contractor for the company, KAG has said.

The tanker was empty, Harrington said.

Vechirko exited from I-94 east to northbound I-35W. "He turned on 35 before we got barricades or trucks there to block off his access to 35," Harrington said.

He wasn't alone. Several motorists found themselves on the highway, having bypassed no barricades or diversions and unaware of the unscheduled closure, according to the Minneapolis-based Star Tribune.

He was doing somewhere in the neighborhood of 70 mph. "From what we understand, he was speeding," Harrington said, cautioning that his information was "preliminary" and based on investigators' interview of Vechirko, reviews of traffic cameras, and other sources.

It's unclear if Vechirko had any inkling that the throngs - some 4,000 to 7,000 people - had taken to the highway.

"He knew the protests was going on, but it doesn't appear that he was trying to intercept the protests," Harrington said.

PANIC, THEN BRAKES

"We do have some information that he saw the crowd," Harrington said. "And initially, what it looks like, is he panicked, and he just kept barreling forward.

"And then he saw what he described as ... a young woman on a bike fall down in front of him, and he slammed on the brakes, and he slid for a certain period of time until the vehicle stopped.

Truck driver on Minneapolis highway slammed brakes, says he didn't mean to hurt anyone, officials say

Videos of the horrifying event posted to social media carries audio in which the truck's horn can be heard sounding as the crowd scatters ahead of its approach, shortly before 6 p.m.

"It was sheer panic," said Rachel Quinn, a nurse from Minneapolis who was in the crowd when the truck rolled in.

The rig did not appear to swerve or veer toward the crowd as it came to a stop alongside them - an observation that supports the idea that Verchiko's aim was not to run people over.

The cab was soon mobbed. Video shows the truck then begin to drive forward again with people on its hood and clinging to both sides of the cab. One of them appeared to break the driver's front window, and the truck stopped came to a stop a second time. That person can be seen breaching the cab through the driver's front window.

Gov. Tim Walz said Monday that in addition to fearing multiple deaths from the truck steaming toward the crowd - and the possibility of an explosion from the tanker - the moment Vechirko was wrestled from his cab immediately recalled images of Reginald Denny, a white truck driver who was beaten nearly to death when he happened upon a mob of black demonstrators during the following the acquittal of four police officers who beat Rodney King.

However, Walz said, Vechirko emphasized to investigators that after some in the crowd mobbed his cab and yanked him out, the bulk of people in the crowd sought to ensure he was not harmed.

BLOODIED BUT PROTECTED

"I thought they were going to kill him," said Justin Goeman, an activist and witness to the event who also of it, in an interview with KMSP-TV 1992 riots in Los Angeles streamed video. "The crowd was angry."

Goeman said that the crowd, while peaceful, was seeded with unease based on an apparently false rumor that the the initial event was not legitimate, but a ruse to gather demonstrators together to harm them en masse. Thus, between that fear and the immediate assumption that the truck had intentionally targeted the crowd, Vechirko was in danger.

Go to around 38 minutes into the video.

https://www.facebook.com/plugins/video.php?href=https%3A%2F%2Fwww.facebook.com%2FNinjaBlack47%2Fvideos%2F2569982826549242%2F&show_text=0&width=267?width=267?height=476?style=border:none;overflow:hiddenscrolling=noframeborder=0?allowTransparency=trueallowFullScreen=true

"Stop! We need to stop that!" Goeman yells as he rushes toward the crowd that is rushing the cab. As the cab is being breached, Goeman pleads, "We cannot hurt him. It defeats our purpose."

For more than five minutes, a host of demonstrators struggle to protect Vechirko, who eventually emerges, bloodied and battered, as police arrive and take him into custody.

Vechirko was taken to Hennepin County Medical Center, where he was treated for non life-threatening injuries and released.

Truck driver on Minneapolis highway slammed brakes, says he didn't mean to hurt anyone, officials say

Gov. Walz summed it up like this: "I think you had someone do something really stupid, got into a dangerous situation on the highway, feels incredibly lucky he did not kill someone, and is incredibly lucky Minnesotans showed their better angels and he did not get killed."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

After unrest in St. Paul, some businesses will remain closed despite Monday's reopen

ARTICLE CXXIV. AFTER UNREST IN ST. PAUL, SOME BUSINESSES WILL REMAIN CLOSED DESPITE MONDAY'S REOPEN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 655 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: Like so many businesses up and down West Seventh Street in St. Paul, Cafe Astoria lined their doors and windows with plywood over the weekend. That was the common response after protests over George Floyd's death morphed into widespread rioting and looting that destroyed numerous businesses throughout the Twin Cities. And while St. Paul has [...]

Body

Like so many businesses up and down West Seventh Street in St. Paul, Cafe Astoria lined their doors and windows with plywood over the weekend.

That was the common response after protests over George Floyd's death morphed into widespread rioting and looting that destroyed numerous businesses throughout the Twin Cities.

And while St. Paul has been relatively calm for the last couple of days, some businesses will remained closed on Monday despite the fact Gov. Tim Walz has given them permission to reopen on a limited basis amid the coronavirus pandemic.

According to Phase II of the "Stay Safe Minnesota" reopening plan, which goes into effect Monday, restaurants and bars will be limited to outdoor dining only with no more than 50 people allowed at a time, while barber shops, hair salons, and tattoo parlors can operate at a maximum 25 percent capacity.

"I'm very unsure if we're going to reopen Monday," Cafe Astoria co-owner Leah Raymundo said. "I've been hearing so much I feel it might not be safe for the business."

It's unclear exactly how many businesses will remain closed, though judging by the amount of plywood on Western Seventh Street and parts of University Avenue, a lot of businesses owners will be approaching the situation with caution.

Saints Coast Barber Studio owner Chris Osborn said his shop won't reopen until at least Tuesday. That gives him and his staff a couple of nights to reassess the situation before making a decision. In the meantime, the shop remains boarded up with "JUSTICE FOR GEORGE FLOYD" spray painted on the front.

After unrest in St. Paul, some businesses will remain closed despite Monday's reopen

Grand Avenue Tattoo will also remain closed with owner Ransom Bennett citing an "abundance of caution" as his main reason. boarded up his shop with messages commemorating George Floyd.

Outside of the Twin Cities, the Mall of America has decided to postpone its planned June 1 reopening of retail stores. "As soon as we confirm a new reopening date, we will share it," a statement read. "Additionally, Curbside Pickup at Mall of America has been suspended. A notice will be posted on our website when it resumes."

Additionally, Target has temporarily closed dozens of storefronts across the Twin Cities metro with locations on Lake Street and Uptown closed indefinitely after taking damage.

As for Tom Reid's Hockey City Pub a couple of blocks from the Xcel Energy Center, owner Tom Reid said the patio will be open as planned Monday, barring anymore unrest in St. Paul.

WHAT HAPPENS MONDAY

Phase II of Governor Tim Walz's "stay safe" plan begins Monday with these changes:

Restaurants and bars - In-person dining is outdoors and no more than 50 customers. Reservations required. Masks required for workers, strongly recommended for customers. Six feet of distance must be maintained. Personal services (salons, tattoos, barbershops) - Maximum occupancy of 25 percent. Appointments required. Masks required for workers and customers. Six feet of distance must be maintained. School buildings - Can be open with hybrid model of in-person and distance learning for summer learning per Centers for Disease Control and Minnesota Department of Health guidance. Organized youth sports - Can start per MDH guidance with no games. Recommendations for social distancing, masking when appropriate, following routine disinfection of high-touch items (balls, rackets, bats, other equipment), promoting health checks, and screening of participants and staff/volunteers. Campgrounds and charter boats - Open with guidance, which includes capacity limits and cleaning of facilities, and discouraging the sharing of fishing equipment and sanitizing it between uses. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin The Athletic lays off 8 percent of staff 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CXXV. PHOTOS: A WEEKEND OF PROTESTS IN AMERICA

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 245 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: Flames shooting from a Los Angeles Police Department kiosk. Kneeling protesters having their stinging eyes flushed. Police in riot gear standing outside the White House.Body

Flames shooting from a Los Angeles Police Department kiosk. Kneeling protesters having their stinging eyes flushed. Police in riot gear standing outside the White House.

These are just some of the moments captured as demonstrators took to the streets from Boston to San Francisco over the weekend to protest killings of black people by police.

As night fell, many demonstrations that had started out peacefully sank into violence: Cars and stores were torched. The words "I can't breathe" were spray-painted on buildings. Police responded with tear gas and rubber bullets.

The massive protests started after last week's death of George Floyd, a black man who died after a white Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into his neck for several minutes during an arrest, including for some time after Floyd had stopped moving and saying he couldn't breathe.

Floyd's death in Minneapolis came after tensions had already flared after two white men were arrested in May for the February shooting death of black jogger Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia, and the Louisville police shooting death of Breonna Taylor in her home in March.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Hundreds attend George Floyd rally at Governor's Residence. Cops take knee, hug protesters. Walz meets Floyd family.

ARTICLE CXXVI. HUNDREDS ATTEND GEORGE FLOYD RALLY AT GOVERNOR'S RESIDENCE. COPS TAKE KNEE, HUG PROTESTERS. WALZ MEETS FLOYD FAMILY.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 424 words

Byline: Nick Woltman

Highlight: Gov. Tim Walz emerged from the Summit Avenue residence and attended the event for about 20 minutes, listening to speakers and meeting with members of Floyd's family.

Body

Hundreds of peaceful protesters turned out in 88-degree heat Monday afternoon in front of the Minnesota Governor's Residence in St. Paul to demand the arrest and prosecution of the three remaining Minneapolis police officers involved in the death of George Floyd.

Of the four officers who were fired in the wake of Floyd's May 25 death, only Derek Chauvin is in custody, facing one count each of third-degree murder and manslaughter. Chauvin was seen in a viral video of the incident pinning Floyd to the ground with his knee, ignoring the 46-year-old's repeated complaints that he couldn't breathe.

MN Governor Tim Walz looks on from behind several rousing speakers talking to thousands of protesters gathered peacefully in front of the governor's residence Monday. pic.twitter.com/76Smc5CGjk

- Judy Griesedieck (@judygpix) June 1, 2020

"What we want is for all four of them to go to jail now," activist Mel Reeves told the crowd. "Police violence is a disease. ... You know how you get rid of a disease? You gotta cut it out."

Gov. Tim Walz emerged from the Summit Avenue residence and attended the event for about 20 minutes, listening to speakers and meeting with members of Floyd's family.

Walz had spoken to them before on the phone, but this was their first face-to-face meeting, a spokesman confirmed. When Walz returned to the residence, some in the crowd jeered him.

Organizers who spoke at the Summit Avenue rally called for a special prosecutor to be appointed to oversee the case, rather than Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison, who took over Chauvin's prosecution last weekend from Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman.

They also criticized the third-degree murder charge against Chauvin as insufficient.

Hundreds attend George Floyd rally at Governor's Residence. Cops take knee, hug protesters. Walz meets Floyd family.

Reeves compared efforts to correct racial disparities in policing to the the fights against slavery, apartheid and segregation.

"If we fight, we'll win," he said. "This is how every revolution starts. Just like this."

When some protesters refused to disperse as city's 10 p.m. curfew took effect, law enforcement officers began making arrests. The St. Paul Police Department later said on Twitter that 65 people were taken into custody.

Dave Orrick contributed to this report.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

A woman addresses Minnesota Governor Tim Walz, right, during a demonstration Monday, June 1, 2020, in St. Paul, Minn. Protests continued following the death of George Floyd, who died after being restrained by Minneapolis police officers on Memorial Day. (AP Photo/John Minchillo)

Demonstrators gather at the Minnesota governor's mansion Monday, June 1, 2020, in St. Paul, Minn. Protests continued following the death of George Floyd, who died after being restrained by Minneapolis police officers on Memorial Day. (AP Photo/Julio Cortez)

Lt. Col. Sam Andrews of the Minnesota National Guard receives a hug from a protester at the State Capitol in St. Paul on Monday June 1, 2020, after telling the group he would pull back his soldiers so they would not be an unwelcome presence at the rally. A crowd of several hundred marched to the Capitol mall from the Minnesota Governor's Residence after a two hour demonstration calling for the arrest and prosecution of the remaining Minneapolis police officers involved in the death of George Floyd. (Nick Woltman / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Minneapolis police chief to George Floyd's family: 'I am absolutely, devastatingly sorry for their loss'

ARTICLE CXXVII. MINNEAPOLIS POLICE CHIEF TO GEORGE FLOYD'S FAMILY: 'I AM ABSOLUTELY, DEVASTATINGLY SORRY FOR THEIR LOSS'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 254 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo said Sunday he wanted to tell the family of George Floyd, "I am absolutely, devastatingly sorry for their loss." A CNN reporter talking to Arradondo on a Minneapolis street told him the Floyd family happened to be on live with journalist Don Lemon at that time, and asked if there's [...]

Body

Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo said Sunday he wanted to tell the family of George Floyd, "I am absolutely, devastatingly sorry for their loss."

A CNN reporter talking to Arradondo on a Minneapolis street told him the Floyd family happened to be on live with journalist Don Lemon at that time, and asked if there's anything he would want to say to them.

"I am absolutely, devastatingly sorry for their loss. If I could do anything to bring Mr. Floyd back, I would do that. I would move heaven and Earth to do that." Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo addresses the family of George Floyd live on CNN. <https://t.co/tzZe64FaEp>

- CNN (@CNN)

After taking off his hat and saying he was sorry, he continued, "And if I could do anything to bring Mr. Floyd back, ... I would move heaven and earth to do that, so I'm very sorry."

Floyd, 46, died last Monday when he was handcuffed on the ground and Minneapolis officer Derek Chauvin put his knee on Floyd's neck for more than 8 minutes, according to a criminal complaint. Chauvin, who was fired, was arrested on Friday and charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform pic.twitter.com/dOmRV6O7ZV June 1, 2020 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Minneapolis police chief to George Floyd's family: 'I am absolutely, devastatingly sorry for their loss'

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

How did officers, National Guard quell violence on Saturday night? Lots of boots on the ground, focusing on speedy responses.

ARTICLE CXXVIII. HOW DID OFFICERS, NATIONAL GUARD QUELL VIOLENCE ON SATURDAY NIGHT? LOTS OF BOOTS ON THE GROUND, FOCUSING ON SPEEDY RESPONSES.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1065 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: Speed is of the essence. Stop the violence. Those were among the mandates for law enforcement officers who worked in large numbers Saturday night into Sunday morning to gain control over the Twin Cities, which had been rocked by nights of people setting fires and looting after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody. [...]

Body

Speed is of the essence. Stop the violence.

Those were among the mandates for law enforcement officers who worked in large numbers Saturday night into Sunday morning to gain control over the Twin Cities, which had been rocked by nights of people setting fires and looting after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

It wasn't perfect, and there were lessons to be learned, but "our goal was accomplished," Minnesota State Patrol Col. Matt Langer said Sunday.

"Fires were not set," he said. "We didn't see the lawlessness, we didn't see the risk to personal safety, the crime, the looting, the burglary, the property destruction was stemmed. That was our goal, that was our expectation, and that is our hope as we move forward."

Gov. Tim Walz announced Sunday morning that the 8 p.m. curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis, which was in place the previous two nights, would continue into Sunday night. Major highways in the Twin Cities closed down again for the evening.

Walz said he knew some people would criticize the continued restrictions as excessive and ask why he was keeping forces on the ground, but he said he thought it would be irresponsible not to.

"We don't think these people quit," he said. "I think in light of what we're seeing around the country (with protests) that these have expanded."

Walz activated the National Guard on Thursday and after continued rioting that night and Friday night took the unprecedented step Saturday of authorizing the full contingent of the Guard.

How did officers, National Guard quell violence on Saturday night? Lots of boots on the ground, focusing on speedy responses.

Why was that show of massive force not seen earlier, a journalist asked Walz at a Sunday morning press briefing.

Walz said there were logistics to be managed, plus the dynamics of a community that is raw over Floyd, who died on Monday.

"Keeping in mind what the spark was that lit this was law enforcement killing an innocent man on the street, so trying to measure when the proper time was, when it was right to be there," Walz said. "I will not make excuses ... If we had assembled this force last Friday we'd have been better off, but that wasn't going to be."

Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said they set up a new operational approach on Saturday, recognizing the group of rioters who attacked Minneapolis, St. Paul and surrounding areas had large numbers, speed and a tactical advantage over officers and firefighters in the preceding days.

They worked to flip that dynamic Saturday night, knowing that speed was of the essence to stop the violence and the criminal activity, Harrington said.

More than 155 people were arrested, many for curfew violations and others for weapons violations and other offenses.

One officer was shot at but not injured. Police arrested two people in the vehicle where the shot came from and recovered an AR-15.

Law enforcement noted vehicles were seen driving in communities without license plates and their headlights off. When police stopped them, drivers ran. Officers found several had been stolen locally and full of rocks, Harrington said.

St. Paul Police Chief Todd Axtell said he thinks the people in vehicles without license plates, whom officers have stopped in St. Paul, are attempting "to better conceal their ongoing criminal activity." Officers have recovered guns during traffic stops and two bulletproof vests in one instance, Axtell said Sunday.

Police also received tips from community members with rumors of riots and looting coming to their communities, most of which were debunked, Harrington said.

National Guard members stood watch over critical infrastructure, freeing up officers "to be the rapid response" that was needed, according to Harrington.

In St. Paul, the situation came to a head after curfew Saturday night, when Axtell estimated 800 to 1,200 people marched from Minneapolis to the Lake Street-Marshall Avenue Bridge. Police believed they were trying to head to the Capitol.

"As we have observed previously, there are people hellbent on destruction in our city," Axtell said.

As soon as people were seen heading east on Lake Street toward St. Paul, police quickly assembled a team of officers who lined the bridge - "we drew a hard line in the sand," Axtell said. Police used tear gas and less-lethal munitions and tried to make a mass arrest, but most everyone ran back into Minneapolis.

How did officers, National Guard quell violence on Saturday night? Lots of boots on the ground, focusing on speedy responses.

After people took to St. Paul's streets during the day on Thursday and began looting stores and setting buildings ablaze, especially in the Midway area, police have been working to get the situation under control in St. Paul, and the nights that followed have progressively gotten better, Axtell said.

That's because they've had extra help, both from the Guard and from law enforcement from other agencies - there have been hundreds of law enforcement personnel on duty in the city, Axtell said.

St. Paul was able to add more "strike teams" of officers, "who are very mobile and can quickly respond to hot spots to resolve situation decisively and without delay," the police chief said.

There are also police mobile field forces at work in St. Paul and Minneapolis, "who have the ability to manage a large crowd of people," Axtell said, and there are also arrest teams from the Ramsey County sheriff's office who can take on the time-consuming arrest process.

Walz said he received a call Saturday night from Jay-Z, "not international performer, but dad, stressing to me that justice needs to be served and that as he's listening and hearing it, that this is a place that wants to do it."

St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter said he knows asking people to stay home at night is a big request, but clearing the streets allows "the opportunity to reclaim a sense of peace."

"I want to be very clear that we are not asking you for patience and we are not asking you for pacifism," Carter said. "We're asking you to take that energy ... and use it not to destroy our neighborhoods, but to destroy the historic culture, to destroy the systemic racism, ... all of the things that make it so difficult to hold someone accountable when a life like George Floyd's is so wrongfully taken." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Hennepin County autopsy concludes Floyd died of homicide caused by police restraint, neck compression

ARTICLE CXXIX. HENNEPIN COUNTY AUTOPSY CONCLUDES FLOYD DIED OF HOMICIDE CAUSED BY POLICE RESTRAINT, NECK COMPRESSION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1006 words

Byline: Amy Forliti, Steve Karnowski

Highlight: The Hennepin County medical examiner's office on Monday classified George Floyd's death as a homicide, saying his heart stopped as Minneapolis police restrained him and compressed his neck, in a widely seen video that has sparked protests in the Twin Cities and across the nation. "Decedent experienced a cardiopulmonary arrest while being restrained by law [...]"

Body

The Hennepin County medical examiner's office on Monday classified George Floyd's death as a homicide, saying his heart stopped as Minneapolis police restrained him and compressed his neck, in a widely seen video that has sparked protests in the Twin Cities and across the nation.

"Decedent experienced a cardiopulmonary arrest while being restrained by law enforcement officer(s)," the medical examiner's office said in a news release. Cause of death was listed as "cardiopulmonary arrest complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint and neck compression."

Under "other significant conditions" it said Floyd, 46, suffered from heart disease and hypertension, and listed fentanyl intoxication and recent methamphetamine use. Those factors were not listed under cause of death.

A Minneapolis police officer was charged last week with third-degree murder in Floyd's death, and three other officers were fired. Bystander video showed the officer, Derek Chauvin, holding his knee on Floyd's neck despite the man's cries that he can't breathe until he eventually stopped moving.

A separate autopsy commissioned for Floyd's family also called his death a homicide. It concluded that that he died of asphyxiation due to neck and back compression, said the family's attorney, Ben Crump, who called for the charge against Chauvin to be upgraded to first-degree murder and for three other officers to be charged. He didn't say what the charges against the other officers should be.

That autopsy, by a forensic pathologist who also examined Eric Garner's body, found the compression cut off blood to Floyd's brain, and that the pressure of other officers' knees on his back made it impossible for him to breathe, Crump said earlier Monday while detailing the findings.

Hennepin County autopsy concludes Floyd died of homicide caused by police restraint, neck compression

Both the medical examiner and the family's experts differed from the description in last week's criminal complaint against the officer of how Floyd died. The complaint, citing preliminary findings from the medical examiner, listed the effects of being restrained, along with underlying health issues and potential intoxicants in Floyd's system. But it also said nothing was found "to support a diagnosis of traumatic asphyxia or strangulation." Neither side has released its full autopsy report so far.

The family's autopsy found no evidence of heart disease and concluded he had been healthy.

Floyd, a black man who was in handcuffs at the time, died after Chauvin, who is white, ignored bystander shouts to get off Floyd and Floyd's cries that he couldn't breathe. His death on Memorial Day sparked days of protests in Minneapolis-St. Paul and around America.

The complaint provided no details about intoxicants. In the 911 call that drew police to a South Minneapolis grocery, the caller described the man suspected of paying with counterfeit money as "awfully drunk and he's not in control of himself."

Floyd's family and attorneys, like the families of other black men killed by police, commissioned their own autopsy because they didn't trust local authorities to produce an unbiased report.

The family's autopsy was done by Michael Baden and Allecia Wilson. Baden is the former chief medical examiner of New York City, and was hired to do an autopsy of Garner, a black man who died in 2014 after New York police placed him in a chokehold and he pleaded that he could not breathe.

Baden also did an autopsy at the family's request for Michael Brown, an 18-year-old shot by police in Ferguson, Mo. He said Brown didn't reveal signs of a struggle, casting doubt on a claim by police that a struggle between Brown and the officer led to the shooting.

Dr. Judy Melinek, a forensic pathologist from the San Francisco Bay area who blogs about the subject and is not connected with the case, said the key difference between the medical examiner's conclusions and those of Baden and Walker are the official finding of "significant" conditions for Floyd, including heart disease and drugs in his system.

Baden and Wilson acknowledged on a conference call with reporters that they didn't have access to the tissue samples that the medical examiner kept that might have given more information on his health. Nor did they have their own toxicology results yet.

Melinek said it's not unusual for different pathologists to reach different determinations, given that they may be looking at different information and that they've had different experiences and training.

Under the law, a medical examiner determines the cause and manner of death, but it's up to prosecutors to decide whether criminal charges are warranted. The term homicide means only that a person's death was caused by another person.

Chauvin, who was also charged with manslaughter, is being held in the state prison at Oak Park Heights. The other three officers on scene, like Chauvin, were fired the day after the incident but have not been charged.

The head of the Minneapolis police union said in a letter to members that the officers were fired without due process and labor attorneys are fighting for their jobs. Lt. Bob Kroll, the union president, also criticized city leadership, saying a lack of support is to blame for the days of sometimes violent protests.

Hennepin County autopsy concludes Floyd died of homicide caused by police restraint, neck compression

When asked to respond, Mayor Jacob Frey said Kroll's opposition to reform and lack of empathy for the community has undermined trust in the police.

Gov. Tim Walz announced Sunday that Attorney General Keith Ellison would take the lead in any prosecutions in Floyd's death. Local civil rights activists have said Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman doesn't have the trust of the black community. They have protested outside his house, and pressed him to charge the other three officers.

Freeman remains on the case.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Trump warns of military action; Washington and New York join other cities with curfews

ARTICLE CXXX. TRUMP WARNS OF MILITARY ACTION; WASHINGTON AND NEW YORK JOIN OTHER CITIES WITH CURFEWS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1210 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: President Donald Trump threatened on Monday to deploy the United States military unless states quickly halted the violent protests that have convulsed cities from coast to coast, hours after George Floyd's brother pleaded for peace, saying destruction is "not going to bring my brother back at all."

Body

By TIM SULLIVAN and AARON MORRISON

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - President Donald Trump threatened on Monday to deploy the United States military unless states quickly halted the violent protests that have convulsed cities from coast to coast, hours after George Floyd's brother pleaded for peace, saying destruction is "not going to bring my brother back at all."

The competing messages - one conciliatory, one bellicose - came as the U.S. braced for another round of violence at a time when the country is already buckling because of the coronavirus outbreak and the Depression-level unemployment it has caused.

Trump said he was recommending that governors deploy the National Guard in sufficient numbers to "dominate the streets." If governors fail to take action, Trump said, he will deploy the United States military and "quickly solve the problem for them."

As Trump spoke in the Rose Garden, tear gas canisters could be heard exploding as police and National Guard soldiers aggressively forced back hundreds of protesters who gathered in Lafayette Park, across the street from the White House, and chanted peacefully against police brutality and the death of George Floyd.

Trump deplored the violence that broke out in the nation's capital Sunday night and warned that Washington's 7 p.m. curfew would be strictly enforced.

But in Minneapolis, Floyd's brother, Terrence, made an emotional plea for peace at the site where Floyd was pinned to the pavement by an officer who put his knee on the handcuffed black man's neck until he stopped breathing.

"Let's switch it up, y'all. Let's switch it up. Do this peacefully, please," Terrence Floyd said.

Trump warns of military action; Washington and New York join other cities with curfews

The crowd chanted, "What's his name? George Floyd!" and "One down, three to go!" in reference to the four officers involved in Floyd's arrest. Officer Derek Chauvin has been charged with murder, but protesters are demanding that his colleagues be prosecuted, too. All four were fired.

The gathering was part rally and part impromptu eulogy as Floyd urged people to stop the violence and use their power at the ballot box.

"If I'm not over here messing up my community, then what are you all doing?" he said. "You all are doing nothing. Because that's not going to bring my brother back at all."

The country has been beset by angry demonstrations for the past week in some of the most widespread racial unrest in the U.S. since the 1960s. Spurred in part by Floyd's death, protesters have taken to the streets to decry the killings of black people by police.

On Monday, police fired tear gas at hundreds of protesters who spilled onto an interstate highway in the heart of Philadelphia just before a 6 p.m. curfew took effect.

While most of the demonstrations have been peaceful, others have descended into violence, leaving neighborhoods in shambles, stores ransacked, windows broken and cars burned, despite curfews around the country and the deployment of thousands of National Guard members in at least 15 states.

Earlier Monday, Trump told the nation's governors in a video conference that they they "look like fools" for not deploying even more National Guard troops. "Most of you are weak," he said.

He added: "You've got to arrest people, you have to track people, you have to put them in jail for 10 years and you'll never see this stuff again."

Washington Gov. Jay Inslee, a Democrat, dismissed Trump's comments as the "rantings of an insecure man trying to look strong after building his entire political career on racism."

Former Vice President Joe Biden, the Democratic presidential candidate, vowed to address institutional racism in his first 100 days in office. He met in person with black leaders in Delaware and also held a virtual meeting with big-city mayors.

Biden said hate emerges "when you have somebody in power who breathes oxygen into the hate."

Meanwhile, an autopsy commissioned for Floyd's family found that he died of asphyxiation from neck and back compression, the family's attorneys said.

That distinguishes it from the official autopsy, which said he died from the effects of being restrained along with underlying health problems and potential intoxicants in his system. The official autopsy found nothing "to support a diagnosis of traumatic asphyxia or strangulation."

The second autopsy was done by a doctor who also examined the body of Eric Garner, a New York man who died in an officer's chokehold six years ago.

Authorities in many cities have blamed the violence on outside agitators, though have provided little evidence to back that up.

But on Monday, federal authorities arrested a 28-year-old Illinois man, Matthew Lee Rupert, saying he had posted self-recorded video on his Facebook page last week that showed him in Minneapolis handing out explosive devices and encouraging people to throw them at law enforcement officers. The video also showed him attempting to light a business on fire, and looting, according to an FBI affidavit. Early Sunday, he posted more videos of himself in and around Chicago, saying "let's start a riot."

Trump warns of military action; Washington and New York join other cities with curfews

He was arrested in Chicago for violating the city's curfew.

As they girded for more violence, Washington and New York joined other cities in announcing curfews. The move followed a chaotic Sunday night in New York, where groups broke into Chanel, Prada and Rolex boutiques and electronics stores.

Hours before Washington's 7 p.m. curfew was to go into effect, nearly a dozen National Guard vehicles rumbled through the White House grounds and exited opposite Lafayette Park, where crowds had gathered for another night of protests. On Sunday, police fired tear gas and stun grenades into a crowd of protesters in the park. They scattered to light fires in nearby streets.

At least 4,400 people nationwide have been arrested over the past week for such offenses as stealing, blocking highways and breaking curfew, according to a count by The Associated Press.

Police officers and National Guard soldiers enforcing a curfew in Louisville, Kentucky, killed a man early Monday when they returned fire after someone in a large group shot at them, police said. In Indianapolis, two people were reported dead in bursts of downtown violence over the weekend, adding to deaths recorded in Detroit and Minneapolis.

While police in places tried to ease tensions by kneeling or marching in solidarity with the demonstrators, officers around the country were accused of treating protesters with the same kind of heavy-handed tactics that contributed to the unrest in the first place.

Cities struggled to keep police in line.

In Fort Lauderdale, Florida, an officer was suspended for pushing a kneeling woman to the ground during a protest. In Atlanta, two officers were fired after bashing in the window of a car and using a stun gun on the occupants. In Los Angeles, a police SUV accelerated into several protesters, knocking two people to the ground.

In New York, the police commissioner said about six incidents were being investigated by the department's internal affairs bureau, including a weekend confrontation in Brooklyn in which two police vehicles appeared to plow through a group of protesters. In another incident, an officer pointed a gun at protesters, drawing condemnation from the mayor.

Associated Press journalists across the U.S. contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Curfew eased, not ended; Floyd private autopsy results released

ARTICLE CXXXI. CURFEW EASED, NOT ENDED; FLOYD PRIVATE AUTOPSY RESULTS RELEASED

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 379 words

Byline: Carrigan Miller

Body

Governor Tim Walz said a curfew will remain in effect for Monday and Tuesday, though it will start at 10 p.m. and only extend until 4 a.m.

National Guard members will begin returning home Monday, though the forces will leave the Twin Cities in stages, and could be called back if widespread looting and arson begin again, Walz said in a press conference Monday.

Transportation in Minneapolis and St. Paul will also become less restricted. There are no planned highway closures in the Twin Cities metro Monday evening, the Minnesota Department of Transportation said, but Metro Transit services will remain suspended through the end of the day Monday.

The situation in the state is becoming more controlled, Walz said, and Sunday night had little violence.

Curfew eased, not ended; Floyd private autopsy results released

Walz and Harrington also commented on the potentially tragic situation on Sunday when a fuel tanker came barreling towards thousands of people protesting on I-35W.

"I was breathless as I watched it because I thought I was going to witness dozens or hundreds killed in the immediate crash," Walz said.

However, the driver didn't appear to be intentionally trying to injure protestors and was on the highway before protestors, according to Harrington. The officials confirmed that no one was seriously injured in the incident, and that the driver was confused about the time the highway would be shut down by police.

"We got lucky. There was something miraculous happening there," Harrington said of the fact that no one was hurt, adding that the driver was going up to 70 miles an hour close to the protestors.

Also Monday, the family of George Floyd released the results of a third-party autopsy that concluded that Floyd - who died during an arrest in Minneapolis a week ago - was asphyxiated not just by ex-police officer Derek Chauvin's knee on his neck but by the pressure of an additional two officers on his back, The New York Times reports. The results, from Dr. Allecia M. Wilson of the University of Michigan and Dr. Michael Baden, a former medical examiner in New York City, conflict with an official autopsy that found "no physical findings that support a diagnosis of traumatic asphyxia or strangulation."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 1, 2020

End of Document

Roundup: Tanker truck disrupts march, Ellison will lead Floyd case

ARTICLE CXXXII. ROUNDUP: TANKER TRUCK DISRUPTS MARCH, ELLISON WILL LEAD FLOYD CASE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 408 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

A peaceful march was turned into chaos Sunday after a tanker truck, driving on a closed highway, barreled into thousands of protesters. More than 150 people were arrested for breaking curfew. The night was mostly free of violence, though reports persist of roving groups of arsonists.

The New York Times reports on the truck incident, which happened on the I-35W bridge where marchers had gathered to protest the death of George Floyd. The driver was dragged from the truck by protesters before being arrested by police. He's under arrest for probable cause of assault. No injuries among the marchers were confirmed, though protesters said several people may have been hurt. The road had been closed for about an hour beforehand, but state officials said the driver apparently steered around traffic diversions.

Roundup: Tanker truck disrupts march, Ellison will lead Floyd case

The event disrupted what had been a day of largely peaceful protests and raised tensions before a second night of curfew. More than 150 people were arrested for staying on the streets after 8 p.m., Minnesota Public Radio reported.

The night didn't have the sort of widespread violence and looting present a few days ago, when hundreds of businesses were damaged or destroyed around the Twin Cities. But state officials, who have warned for days that extremists of some type were using protests for cover, said Sunday that caches of flammable materials had been found in neighborhoods and in cars stopped for lack of license plates, the Star Tribune reports.

WCCO reports that four North Minneapolis businesses were destroyed by fire early Monday; a neighborhood group said that a truck had driven to the building and something had been tossed on the roof of the structure before the blaze.

The Wall Street Journal has a story on how the violence in Minneapolis - and around the country - are prompting police departments to change long-used tactics on how to deal with protests.

It's now been a week since the Floyd's death during an arrest by Minneapolis police officers that was captured on video. One of the officers in the video, Derek Chauvin, was arrested and charged with third degree murder and manslaughter on Friday. On Sunday, the Star Tribune reports that Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison will lead the case on Floyd's death. Normally such cases would be led by Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman's office.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 1, 2020

$2 million raised to help rebuild riot-damaged Lake Street in Minneapolis

ARTICLE CXXXIII. \$2 MILLION RAISED TO HELP REBUILD RIOT-DAMAGED LAKE STREET IN MINNEAPOLIS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 327 words

Byline: Isabel Saavedra-Weis

Highlight: The Lake Street Council has raised $2 million in four days to help repair the damage left by days of riots in Minneapolis following the death of George Floyd. The money will go to small businesses and nonprofits - many of which are immigrant- and minority-run - damaged during the destruction. Beyond rebuilding, business owners need [...]

Body

The Lake Street Council has raised $2 million in four days to help repair the damage left by days of riots in Minneapolis following the death of George Floyd.

The money will go to small businesses and nonprofits - many of which are immigrant- and minority-run - damaged during the destruction. Beyond rebuilding, business owners need funds for temporary storage and replacing inventory, as well as paying employees while closed down.

Theresa Swaney, senior creative operation manager at Lake Street Council, created the We Love Lake Street website on May 28 hoping to raise at least $25,000. While her initial goal was surpassed, she says it will take "billions of dollars to repair what was lost."

"It's easy to see the physical damage, but there's a lot beyond that." Swaney said.

Swaney says many businesses on Lake Street have small or single-person staff, and contacted Lake Street Council seeking assistance boarding up windows or cleaning up rubble debris. The council, a staff of four, has been working hard the past week fielding phone calls from business owners, helping them find resources or work through language barriers.

"We've always talked about (Lake Street Council) as the connector between small businesses and the city," said Swaney. "We're continuing on that mission, but in a very different way than normal."

Council members also announced that to acknowledge the injustice that led to the unrest on Lake Street, they have made a donation to Floyd's family, from the council's general operating fund to the family of George Floyd.

Those wanting to donate can go online to www.welovelakestreet.com.

$2 million raised to help rebuild riot-damaged Lake Street in Minneapolis

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

276 people arrested between Sunday, early Monday, mostly for curfew violations

ARTICLE CXXXIV. 276 PEOPLE ARRESTED BETWEEN SUNDAY, EARLY MONDAY, MOSTLY FOR CURFEW VIOLATIONS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 362 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: Officers arrested 276 people between Sunday and early Monday, mostly for curfew violations, as people have continued taking to the streets over the death of George Floyd.

Body

Officers arrested 276 people between Sunday and early Monday, mostly for curfew violations, as people have continued taking to the streets over the death of George Floyd.

Included in the number were 150 people who were arrested in the area of Washington Avenue and Interstate 35W in Minneapolis on Sunday night after the 8 p.m. curfew, after law enforcement said they gave dispersal orders.

Some arrests at #GeorgeFloydProtests in Minneapolis

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress)

During the arrests, officials found two bulletproof vests and four handguns hidden in nearby bushes, along two handguns in people's backpacks, according to the Minnesota Department of Public Safety.

The Minneapolis fire department reported one new fire overnight, which was on the corner of 44th North and Penn avenues. Firefighters also responded throughout the night to several rekindled fires from earlier in the weekend. There were no fire-related injuries reported.

In St. Paul, there was not major activity overnight. Law enforcement arrested 21 people for curfew violations in St. Paul - seven at the Capitol and 14 others elsewhere, according to the police department.

"Even peaceful protesters who are breaking curfew are subject to arrest," the Department of Public Safety tweeted Sunday night. "Please go home and stay there."

Sunday was the third night of an 8 p.m. curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis. There have been peaceful protests since Floyd died in Minneapolis police custody last Monday, but also large-scale looting, arson and other violence. An officer, who has been terminated from the department, was charged with murder and manslaughter in Floyd's death on Friday.

276 people arrested between Sunday, early Monday, mostly for curfew violations

Since the Minnesota Multi-Agency Command Center was set up Friday to respond to the unrest, there have been 481 arrests. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform pic.twitter.com/4awDyw3ZXh June 1, 2020 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

'Let's start a riot,' says Illinois man in federal charges accusing him of starting fire, looting in Minneapolis

ARTICLE CXXXV. 'LET'S START A RIOT,' SAYS ILLINOIS MAN IN FEDERAL CHARGES ACCUSING HIM OF STARTING FIRE, LOOTING IN MINNEAPOLIS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 882 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried, Dave Orrick

Highlight: "We came to riot," a man from an Illinois town stated in a video he livestreamed on Facebook when he was in Minneapolis. And federal authorities say that's what he did. He was accused Monday - one week after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody - of passing out explosive devices and [...]

Body

"We came to riot," a man from an Illinois town stated in a video he livestreamed on Facebook when he was in Minneapolis. And federal authorities say that's what he did.

He was accused Monday - one week after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody - of passing out explosive devices and encouraging people to throw them at law enforcement officers, appearing to light a building on fire and looting a business.

Matthew Lee Rupert, 28, posted messages on Facebook on Thursday about the protests in the Twin Cities over Floyd's death and wrote, "I'm going to Minneapolis tomorrow who coming only goons I'm renting hotel rooms," according to the criminal complaint. He is from Galesburg, Ill., which is about 45 miles from Peoria.

Gov. Tim Walz talked on Saturday about people coming from outside Minnesota, fueling destruction and rioting in the Twin Cities, but has said in following up that "there's a lot more investigating to be done." Some people who have been arrested are from out of state, but most gave authorities Minnesota addresses.

Who are the outside agitators coming in?

"There's a lot of rumors and there's a lot of stuff up on social media, and that we are feeding that to our intelligence units to try to see if we can validate or vet any of those," Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said Sunday. "At this point I don't have any credible evidence of any specific group being here in Minnesota. I have lots of people calling me saying 'Have you heard?,' but I have not had anybody that can actually bring me evidence ... that actually validates that."

'Let's start a riot,' says Illinois man in federal charges accusing him of starting fire, looting in Minneapolis

On Friday, Rupert posted a live video to Facebook, indicating he was in Minneapolis. He said, "They got SWAT trucks up there ... I've got some bombs if some of you all want to throw them back ... bomb them back," according to the complaint. Soon after, he said, "Light that (expletive) and throw it at them."

Rupert asked for lighter fluid before going in a Sprint store and then said, in the video, "I lit it on fire," after which he went in a nearby Office Depot and filmed himself taking items from the store, the complaint said.

The U.S. attorney's office in Minnesota charged Rupert with civil disorder, carrying on a riot and possession of unregistered destructive devices. An attorney for Rupert was not listed in the court record.

On Saturday, Rupert posted messages on Facebook saying he was heading to Chicago, "We will be back bro we can loot til 2:30," the complaint said.

Early on Sunday, Rupert posted multiple videos on Facebook showing him in Chicago, wearing an American flag bandanna and baseball cap, and saying, "Let's start a riot" and "I'm going to start doing some damage," according to the complaint.

Chicago police arrested him about 2:20 a.m. Sunday for violating the city's emergency curfew order. Officers found explosive devices in his vehicle, along with a hammer, a heavy-duty flashlight and cash, the complaint continued.

Rupert was taken into federal custody on Monday in Chicago.

A DESIRE TO SEEK JUSTICE FOR FLOYD

Rupert's public Facebook posts over several years and via several different accounts don't suggest an obvious classification into a traditional Republican or Democratic category. At times they appear left-of-center, but he expresses enthusiasm for President Donald Trump in several posts from 2017 and 2016.

He's expressed a disdain for police - his posts claim a number of encounters with law enforcement - for several years. He spoke of a desire to seek justice for Floyd, posting about Floyd soon after his death. He displayed signs drew by hand saying "RIP George" that he appeared to post around Galesburg at first, and then later Minneapolis.

A post from Thursday reads: "Fight for what u believe in!! Cops kill everyday and everyone wants to just now stand. I been a freedom fighter my whole life and I'll live behind my constitutional rights!!! I love this country but the people u pay to harass us I hate to the death of me."

In his numerous live videos from his recent trips across the Upper Midwest, he occasionally chants such sentiments at demonstrations, but they're generally dominated by talk of arson, violence and looting.

He appears to have an affinity for firearms, likes to fish and shares macho memes. In November 2016, two weeks after Trump's election, he posted a picture of himself in a store with his hand on a bikini-clad female mannequin's crotch with the comment, "On my 2k16 Donald trump s-."

Other than Trump, he doesn't appear to frequently mention elected officials by name, although shortly after the 2016 election, he also posted "Man IMA miss Obama... Now I'm scared for the sake of america.."

FEDERAL TIPLINE

'Let's start a riot,' says Illinois man in federal charges accusing him of starting fire, looting in Minneapolis

The FBI is asking the public to report suspected arson, use of explosive devices, or violent, destructive acts associated with the otherwise peaceful protests of the last week by calling 800-CALLFBI (800-225-5324), or providing pictures or videos at fbi.gov/violence.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

State health officials urge protesters to monitor themselves for symptoms of coronavirus

ARTICLE CXXXVI. STATE HEALTH OFFICIALS URGE PROTESTERS TO MONITOR THEMSELVES FOR SYMPTOMS OF CORONAVIRUS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 289 words

Byline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: Minnesota health officials are urging those protesting to closely monitor themselves for symptoms of the coronavirus and get tested. Since the death of George Floyd last week while in Minneapolis police custody, thousands have participated in protests across the Twin Cities and the country. While many participants wore masks, some were in close proximity to [...]

Body

Minnesota health officials are urging those protesting to closely monitor themselves for symptoms of the coronavirus and get tested.

Since the death of George Floyd last week while in Minneapolis police custody, thousands have participated in protests across the Twin Cities and the country. While many participants wore masks, some were in close proximity to one another and COVID-19 cases may therefore increase.

In a media briefing Monday afternoon, Minnesota Department of Health officials Jan Malcolm and Kris Ehresmann said participants should watch for symptoms and refrain from exposing themselves to the elderly and those with underlying health conditions. Since testing is more widely available now than previously, participants are urged to get tested, they said.

Due to the incubation period of the coronavirus, a spike in cases due to the protests would most likely occur later this month, in about 21 days.

One testing center, the MDH Public Health Laboratory, was forced to close Friday afternoon due to protests in the area, but reopened Monday morning.

Malcolm emphasized the state is working to address racial health disparities that have affected Minnesota communities, especially during this current time.

"We must continue our work to address these health disparities and the long standing stain of racism in our communities, our state, in our country," Malcolm said.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He

State health officials urge protesters to monitor themselves for symptoms of coronavirus

is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Trump calls MN response to protests 'laughingstock.' Walz responds, 'No one's laughing ... we're in pain.'

ARTICLE CXXXVII. TRUMP CALLS MN RESPONSE TO PROTESTS 'LAUGHINGSTOCK.'
WALZ RESPONDS, 'NO ONE'S LAUGHING ... WE'RE IN PAIN.'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 451 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: President Donald Trump, speaking to governors about their responses to protests over George Floyd's death, said Minnesota was "a laughingstock all over the world," according to audio posted by CNN. Gov. Tim Walz said Monday that he responded by saying, "No one's laughing here. We're in pain. We're crying. We saw a man lose his [...]"

Body

President Donald Trump, speaking to governors about their responses to protests over George Floyd's death, said Minnesota was "a laughingstock all over the world," according to audio posted by CNN.

Gov. Tim Walz said Monday that he responded by saying, "No one's laughing here. We're in pain. We're crying. We saw a man lose his life in front of them and our challenge is that this is about social trust, social compacts and reestablishing faith in the people who are there to serve them."

Here's the audio of that remarkable call where Trump lashes out at governors and says they need to crack down on protesters. pic.twitter.com/ANSsniYItN

- Oliver Darcy (@oliverdarcy) June 1, 2020

In the wake of the death of Floyd, 46, in Minneapolis police custody last Monday, there were repeated instances of arson and looting in St. Paul and Minneapolis. Walz called up the Minnesota National Guard on Thursday and then took the unprecedented step of fully activating it on Saturday.

Overnight curfew has been in place in St. Paul and Minneapolis and, with more law enforcement and the National Guard on the streets, there weren't major problems on Saturday and Sunday in the Twin Cities.

Trump said he and Walz have talked.

"I fully agree with the way he handled it the last couple of days," Trump said in a recording of the teleconference with governors that was posted by The New York Times. "I asked him to do that. ... You have to dominate."

Trump told the state leaders on Monday they "have to get much tougher."

Trump calls MN response to protests 'laughingstock.' Walz responds, 'No one's laughing ... we're in pain.'

"Most of you are weak," Trump said. "You have to arrest people."

During Walz's press briefing Monday, responding to reporters' questions about the call, he said he thanked Trump and the defense secretary for their support.

"I also shared with the president that a posture of a force on the ground is both unsustainable militarily, it's also unsustainable socially because it's the antithesis of how we live, it's the antithesis of civilian control."

Much as other states watched New York and Washington to see how they responded to COVID-19, Walz said governors have been calling him about the unrest sweeping the country.

"We've talked about using this police presence and public safety presence to separate the legitimate and visceral pain ... from the people who are causing problems," Walz said.

This report includes information from the Associated Press. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

UnitedHealth donates $10 million, employee volunteer hours in George Floyd's honor

ARTICLE CXXXVIII. UNITEDHEALTH DONATES $10 MILLION, EMPLOYEE VOLUNTEER HOURS IN GEORGE FLOYD'S HONOR

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 180 words

Byline: Emma Harville

Highlight: UnitedHealth Group said Monday it will donate $10 million and 25,000 employee volunteer hours to advance racial equity and rebuild the Twin Cities after days of civil unrest damaged dozens of businesses. The Minnetonka-based health care company said the donations will propel equity and inclusivity in the Twin Cities while honoring the memory of George [...]

Body

UnitedHealth Group said Monday it will donate $10 million and 25,000 employee volunteer hours to advance racial equity and rebuild the Twin Cities after days of civil unrest damaged dozens of businesses.

The Minnetonka-based health care company said the donations will propel equity and inclusivity in the Twin Cities while honoring the memory of George Floyd, who died in police custody May 25.

The company said $5 million and the volunteer hours will be spent rebuilding and restoring restaurants and other businesses, many of which were small and minority owned.

An additional $5 million is going to the YMCA Equity Innovation Center of Excellence.

The company also said it's establishing a college trust fund for Floyd's children. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Curfew continues Tuesday night in St. Paul, Minneapolis; National Guard presence remains

ARTICLE CXXXIX. CURFEW CONTINUES TUESDAY NIGHT IN ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS; NATIONAL GUARD PRESENCE REMAINS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 632 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: A curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis will continue for the next two nights with modified times and some Minnesota National Guard members are being sent home, Gov. Tim Walz announced Monday.

Body

Gov. Tim Walz on Monday extended the curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis for Monday and Tuesday nights in the midst of unrest over George Floyd's death last week in Minneapolis police custody.

With more than 7,000 members of the National Guard mobilized, Maj. Gen. Jon Jensen said Monday he's confident their presence can be somewhat reduced. However, the number of Guard members who are on the ground to assist in St. Paul and Minneapolis won't change and it won't happen in a "light-switch way," according to Major Scott Hawks.

"I don't like the term pulling back," Jensen said. "What happened here early on, admittedly, we made mistakes as it related to troops on the ground and even tactics, so we had to get ahead of the curve."

After Walz called up the Guard on Thursday, riotous behavior continued. He authorized the full contingent of the Guard on Saturday.

"What we're seeing now is a much more stable position," Jensen said Monday.

Some units that have not fully mobilized or that have other upcoming requirements will return home to their communities. Those who have worked the longest will be given an opportunity to rest and return home, as they're replaced with other units to complete their work in St. Paul and Minneapolis, according to Hawks.

Shortly before 10 p.m. Sunday, a driver sped toward a National Guardsman and law enforcement officers in the area of Washington Avenue and Interstate 35W in Minneapolis. The Guard member responded with verbal and non-verbal signals for the vehicle to stop, but it "continued at a high rate of speed," Jensen said.

Curfew continues Tuesday night in St. Paul, Minneapolis; National Guard presence remains

"Non-lethal methods were engaged on the vehicle ... to have the vehicle stop," but it continued coming toward them, Jensen said. "... Our soldier fired three rounds from his rifle in response to a perceived and legitimate threat to him and the Minnesota police officers that he was in direct support of."

The vehicle changed course and left; no injuries were reported. The incident is under investigation.

Walz said Monday he was grateful and proud of Minnesotans for a second night of security and order on the streets. The extended curfew he announced has modified times - 10 p.m. to 4 a.m. On Monday night, arrests were underway outside the Capitol for curfew violations.

Thousands of people peacefully marched and protested during the day on Sunday and Monday.

"I don't want to paint a picture that this is over," Walz said Monday. "... It looks to me like there's a clear delineation between the folks who are rightfully pained and angered, wanting to see change and expressing it in lawful ways and what we witnessed on several days earlier in the week, those that are bent on wanton destruction of the very communities that are most pained."

Officers arrested 276 people between Sunday and early Monday, mostly for curfew violations.

Included in the number were 150 people who were arrested in the area of Washington Avenue and Interstate 35W on Sunday night.

During the arrests, officials found two bulletproof vests and four handguns hidden in nearby bushes, along two handguns in people's backpacks, according to the Minnesota Department of Public Safety.

Law enforcement arrested 21 people for curfew violations in St. Paul - seven at the State Capitol and 14 others elsewhere, the St. Paul Police Department reported Monday morning.

Since the Minnesota Multi-Agency Command Center was set up Friday to respond to the unrest, there had been 481 arrests as of Monday morning.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Gophers' P.J. Fleck on aftermath of George Floyd's death: 'This is the generation that can change this'

ARTICLE CXL. GOPHERS' P.J. FLECK ON AFTERMATH OF GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH: 'THIS IS THE GENERATION THAT CAN CHANGE THIS'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 665 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: As protests have erupted in the aftermath of George Floyd dying under the knee of a Minneapolis police officer last week, college coaches have drawn criticism for remaining silent about the issue at hand. North Carolina Central men's basketball coach LeVelle Moton, who is black, brought the conversation to the forefront during an interview with [...]

Body

As protests have erupted in the aftermath of George Floyd dying under the knee of a Minneapolis police officer last week, college coaches have drawn criticism for remaining silent about the issue at hand.

North Carolina Central men's basketball coach LeVelle Moton, who is black, brought the conversation to the forefront during an interview with ESPN over the weekend. He said the silence from white coaches across Power 5 conferences, particularly in football and men's basketball, is alarming because of the message it sends.

He said both sports tend to care about African Americans when they're on their teams, yet don't offer the same concern when African Americans die at the hands of law enforcement officers.

Meanwhile, Gophers football coach P.J. Fleck, who is white, broke several days of silence when he came out with his first public statement last Friday.

"I felt it was appropriate to communicate fully with our team, staff, parents and recruits before commenting publicly on the tragic loss of George Floyd," Fleck said in his statement. "This week has been extremely difficult for our community and state, as we mourn the unnecessary loss of Mr. Floyd. His death was indefensible and I stand with the community in asking for accountability and justice."

Fleck added to the dialogue Monday, appearing on ESPN's First Take to further discuss Floyd's death and share how he is supporting his players during this time. He touched on various topics, including the protests in the Twin Cities, the way his program talks about social injustices, and how the rest of the world could learn a lot from college athletes.

"This week I've told our football team, 'I'm a 39-year-old Caucasian male; I'm not your head football coach,' " Fleck said. " 'You tell me. You call me. I'm here to listen.' "

Gophers' P.J. Fleck on aftermath of George Floyd's death: 'This is the generation that can change this'

"Too many times as a head football coach we want to talk and talk and talk and talk," he added. "This is a time to listen and to have empathy and to be very real (about) what's going on with the social injustice around us."

ESPN commentator Stephen A. Smith followed up, saying the Twin Cities has long been home to some of the worst racial disparities in the country, and asking Fleck what some of his players have shared with him about those experiences.

"All I can speak about is our program," Fleck responded. "This is a life program, not a football program. And our program tackles societal issues head on. We keep open dialogue with our players about those societal issues."

He added that his goal is to give his players a platform to make sure their voice is heard. Notably, star wide receiver Rashod Bateman has been vocal on Twitter since Floyd's death.

"There have been generations upon generations upon generations who have passed down hate to hate to hate, that have combated hate with more hate instead of hate with love," Fleck said. "It's up to this generation of our players, our millennials, that people talk about all the time that have too big of a voice, that say what they feel, that always ask why. This is the generation that can change this."

Gophers get second chance at JD Spielman Minnesota athletes and coaches combine to help the community, and perhaps spark change Food and supplies distribution event Friday to feature Kyle Rudolph, Josh Okogie, Ryan Saunders and P.J. Fleck Gophers add Indiana defensive end to 2021 recruiting class What limited attendance at Gophers football games could do to the U's budget

As his interview on First Take came to a close, Fleck talked specifically about how his team came together virtually last week to unpack everything that happened. They had a team meeting Tuesday, individual meetings Wednesday and Thursday, and a parent meeting Friday.

All were designed to put his team at the forefront and make sure he's in the best position to help enact lasting change.

"Over 100 parents called in, and that was my chance to listen," Fleck said, "to be able to take their voices and then apply change as we continue to move forward."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Metro Transit remains shut down over unrest, but service tentatively slated to resume this week

ARTICLE CXXI. METRO TRANSIT REMAINS SHUT DOWN OVER UNREST, BUT SERVICE TENTATIVELY SLATED TO RESUME THIS WEEK

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 221 words

Byline: Betsy Helfand

Highlight: Metro Transit announced Monday that all bus, light rail and Northstar service will remain suspended through at least Tuesday amid ongoing protests in the Twin Cities. In a release, Metro Transit said it expects to begin bus and Northstar service again on Wednesday with light rail service starting up again on Thursday but will provide [...]

Body

Metro Transit announced Monday that all bus, light rail and Northstar service will remain suspended through at least Tuesday amid ongoing protests in the Twin Cities.

In a release, Metro Transit said it expects to begin bus and Northstar service again on Wednesday with light rail service starting up again on Thursday but will provide a definitive update on Tuesday before 6 p.m. about Wednesday's services.

"We are still in the process of assessing damage to our infrastructure and facilities, developing and evaluating the necessary detours, and identifying other potential service limitations," Metro Transit said in a prepared statement. "As we resume transit operations, transit schedules may be adjusted to reflect any curfew orders, detours, and other issues that will affect service."

While service is suspended, Metro Transit still will be providing transportation for essential workers as classified under Gov. Tim Walz's executive order on the coronavirus pandemic.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Twin Cities restaurants reopen to outdoor diners, but George Floyd protests have many holding off

ARTICLE CXLII. TWIN CITIES RESTAURANTS REOPEN TO OUTDOOR DINERS, BUT GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS HAVE MANY HOLDING OFF

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 918 words

Byline: Nancy Ngo

Highlight: For the first time in 11 weeks, Minnesota restaurateurs on Monday rolled out the welcome mat for dining, albeit for outdoor seating only and with restrictions. Meanwhile, others are postponing planned openings amid unrest following the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

Body

For the first time in 11 weeks, Minnesota restaurateurs on Monday rolled out the welcome mat for dining, albeit for outdoor seating only and with restrictions.

Meanwhile, others are postponing planned openings amid unrest following the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

Perennial restaurant patio favorites Patrick McGovern's and French Meadow opened patios Monday for St. Paul diners. Francois Paradeise, general manager of French Meadow on Grand Avenue, had his first reservation at 11:30 a.m.

"It feels like back to the future. We're so thankful to diners for coming. I'm an optimist. I believe that everyday we're going to go further and the next day is going to be a better day than before," Paradeise said. "The weather today so far has been perfect. If it stays like this it would be great."

Monday was supposed to be a happy - well, happier - day for the restaurants as Gov. Tim Walz allowed them to reopen for outdoor dining amid the coronavirus pandemic. The mood instead was a combination of excitement for some and angst for others.

Some restaurants that were slated to open outdoor spaces Monday held off because of protests and riots occurring throughout the metro, one week after Floyd's death. They include La Grolla in St. Paul and Brit's Pub and the French Meadow outpost in Minneapolis.

"We've pushed the reopening to tomorrow. And that could change. We want to take it day by day," said La Grolla owner Mikael Asp. "We had reservations booked. But with the uncertainty on the curfew side, I don't want to be unfair to the customers. You can take a 6 p.m. reservation, but you can't take a 7:15? It's unfair to customers. In any business you want to have the ability to plan. You want to maintain the quality and experience and service for your guests. The timing of this combined with (COVID-19), you couldn't have made a more perfect storm for restaurants."

Twin Cities restaurants reopen to outdoor diners, but George Floyd protests have many holding off

Before Monday, dining at Minnesota restaurants had been closed down since March 17, when the state prohibited dine-in while allowing carryout and delivery. In mid-May, the governor announced restaurants could reopen on June 1, but with restrictions that included outdoor dining only, tables 6 feet or more apart, no more than 50 diners total, required reservations and group size limits of four, or six per family.

Restaurateurs expected Walz would allow for indoor dining at limited capacity, so the outdoor-only restriction was "surprising and disappointing," according to Hospitality Minnesota, which predicts more restaurants will close for good.

MANY WAITING TO REOPEN

Several restaurants slated to reopen later this week have been delayed. Parlour St. Paul planned to open its patio Monday or Tuesday, but owner Brent Frederick said that won't happen until sometime later this week. Frederick said other restaurants by Jester Concepts slated to open early this week - Borough, Parlour and Monello in Minneapolis - also will be pushed back a few days.

Surly Brewing Co. planned to roll out its beer garden sometime this week but since has decided to postpone it indefinitely.

Even with the state allowing restaurants to open for outdoor service, not all restaurant owners of some of the metro's popular patios planned to reopen their al fresco dining spaces the first week.

At Meritage in downtown St. Paul, chef/owner Russell Klein said he probably will wait, even with outdoor dining now permitted. "Ideally, we will be waiting until dining rooms are allowed with at least 50 percent," he said.

'A GREAT SETUP'

At Patrick McGovern's, several tables were occupied by early afternoon diners longing for a sense of normalcy.

Tables were 6 feet apart and restaurant workers wore masks, but John Otteson of St. Paul said his experience has not been wildly different from his dining experiences before the pandemic.

"It's not confined at all; we're all outside, so it's good," Otteson said. "This is a really nice place to come; they've got a great setup."

Karrie and Jannet Powell of St. Paul and Eagan said they came to McGovern's because several restaurants on Grand Avenue were boarded up due to the unrest in Minneapolis.

"This was one of the only restaurants open," Karrie said. "We were disappointed that all of these other restaurants weren't open when they were supposed to be."

At French Meadow in St. Paul, some University of St. Thomas students sat at a table on the sidewalk, in front of windows boarded up to protect the cafe from rioters. Meanwhile, another couple dined on a back patio.

"We were just excited to get back out into the real world," said Adam Gottesman of Minneapolis.

In White Bear Lake, Admiral D's and ACQUA opened for outdoor dining Monday, and the patio at MIZU was slated to reopen Tuesday.

Twin Cities restaurants reopen to outdoor diners, but George Floyd protests have many holding off

In Stillwater, Charlie's Restaurant and Papa's Rooftop Patio both opened Monday.

With things changing hour by hour, check in with your favorite restaurant to see what their reopening plans are. However, delay or no delay, you still have several options to get your fill of your favorite restaurants. Carryout and delivery continue at many places.

Emma Harville and Emma Eidsvoog contributed to this report.

Restaurant News: Amid closings, say hello to restaurant openings in the time of the coronavirus Pandemic, protests and ice cream. 2 Scoops Ice Cream Eatery seeks to heal us. W.A. Frost preps to reopen patio with new philosophy Watch: Walz announces opening of indoor dining, gyms, movie theaters, bowling alleys Midtown Global Market evicts Holy Land over employee's past social media posts

Graphic

Patrick McGovern's in St. Paul was among the Twin Cities restaurants that reopened for outdoor dining Monday, June 1, 2020 under new coronavirus pandemic guidance from Gov. Tim Walz. (Emma Harville / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Lawmakers call for state aid for Twin Cities properties damaged in riots

ARTICLE CXLIII. LAWMAKERS CALL FOR STATE AID FOR TWIN CITIES PROPERTIES DAMAGED IN RIOTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 351 words

Byline: Bill Salisbury

Highlight: Minnesota legislators of color and House Speaker Melissa Hortman are calling for speedy state financial assistance for Minneapolis and St. Paul rebuilding efforts after the devastation caused by looting and arson sparked by the murder of George Floyd while in police custody last week. In a statement issued Sunday, members of the legislative People of [...]

Body

Minnesota legislators of color and House Speaker Melissa Hortman are calling for speedy state financial assistance for Minneapolis and St. Paul rebuilding efforts after the devastation caused by looting and arson sparked by the murder of George Floyd while in police custody last week.

In a statement issued Sunday, members of the legislative People of Color and Indigenous (POCI) Caucus and Hortman said they will seek "immediate access to legislative funds" to address the "emergency situation" in the Twin Cities.

More than 170 businesses were damaged or looted in St. Paul last week, according to police. The fire department reported there were 55 fires, primarily to commercial buildings, in St. Paul between Thursday and Friday morning. In Minneapolis last week, more than 200 buildings were damaged or destroyed, according to the Star Tribune.

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey said because of the coronavirus pandemic, they already knew businesses were going to need fiscal help to recover.

Now, "we've got entire corridors in Minneapolis where buildings have been destroyed," Frey said Monday. "We need to have help to replace those buildings, to get people back on track and I know the governor and mayor are committed to ... helping to provide that necessary support."

POCI members also called for the arrest of all former Minneapolis police officers involved in Floyd's death.

On Monday, a representative for the group said they are drafting legislation and discussing detailed proposals with Gov. Tim Walz's staff.

The caucus consists of 19 of the 201 members of the Legislature.

Lawmakers call for state aid for Twin Cities properties damaged in riots

Mara H. Gottfried contributed to this report.

MN top Republican: 'Leadership failed badly'; Sen. Paul Gazelka wants to end Walz emergency powers and 'pandemic fear' Pushing for race and police reforms, Walz fires shot at Republicans in Senate Police, criminal justice reform bills introduced at Minnesota Capitol 'Anonymous' highlights Minnesota Senate computer hacking; passwords file accessed, web pages down Report: Homeland security warned of 'anarchist and militia extremists' plan to storm MN Capitol and burn it

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Target plans to pay store employees displaced by unrest for up to 14 days

ARTICLE CXLIV. TARGET PLANS TO PAY STORE EMPLOYEES DISPLACED BY UNREST FOR UP TO 14 DAYS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 401 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: As Target continues to announce temporary store closures throughout the Twin Cities metro, the company has committed to paying employees impacted for up to 14 days of scheduled hours. They will also be able to work at other nearby Target locations that are not closed. "We are making the decision to reduce hours or temporarily [...]"

Body

As Target continues to announce temporary store closures throughout the Twin Cities metro, the company has committed to paying employees impacted for up to 14 days of scheduled hours. They will also be able to work at other nearby Target locations that are not closed.

"We are making the decision to reduce hours or temporarily close stores for the safety of team members and guests," a Target spokesperson wrote in an email. "We are not providing a count on the number of store impacted by reduced hours or temporary closures as the situation remains incredibly dynamic."

There have been several dozen temporary store closures in and around the Twin Cities with the storefront on Lake Street and the storefront in Uptown closed indefinitely after taking damage amid protests for George Floyd.

In a letter posted on the company's website over the weekend, CEO Brian Cornell announced several measures to support the Twin Cities which included: providing immediate first aid, food, and basic essentials to the community; supporting team members at closed stores; committing to rebuilding and reopening the storefront Lake Street as well as any other storefronts impacted; and engaging with community leaders to support local families.

"The murder of George Floyd has unleashed the pent-up pain of years, as have the killings of Ahmaud Arbery and Breonna Taylor," Cornell wrote. "We say their names and hold a too-long list of others in our hearts. As a Target team, we've huddled, we've consoled, we've witnessed horrific scenes similar to what's playing out now and wept that not enough is changing. And as a team we've vowed to face pain with purpose."

According to a Target spokesperson, the company is providing goods through partnerships with local nonprofits, including bottled water, food, baby formula, diapers, dry goods, common first aid supplies,

Target plans to pay store employees displaced by unrest for up to 14 days and medicine. It is also working with Hands On Twin Cities to bring together volunteers to support immediate recovery efforts, and will assist small businesses in their efforts to rebuild through our philanthropic commitments.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin The Athletic lays off 8 percent of staff 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Twitter users hail protest coverage from an unlikely source, WCCO sports director Mike Max

ARTICLE CXLV. TWITTER USERS HAIL PROTEST COVERAGE FROM AN UNLIKELY SOURCE, WCCO SPORTS DIRECTOR MIKE MAX

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 825 words

Byline: Ross Raihala

Highlight: As the protests over the death of George Floyd intensified over the weekend, WCCO-TV decided to send its veteran sports director Mike Max to the frontlines. Twitter took notice.

Body

'Cops,' on air for 33 seasons, dropped by Paramount Network Anchor Pat Evans leaves KARE-TV after more than 25 years Meet Kamryn Johnson, the 9-year-old who has raised more than \$50,000 for Minneapolis Fox News: Black deaths, stock market graphic was insensitive Second City CEO steps down amid claims of racism at theater When the COVID-19 pandemic shut down all sports and other live entertainment events, it left media outlets with the question of what to do with reporters who cover such events.

As the protests over the death of George Floyd intensified over the weekend, WCCO-TV decided to send its veteran sports director Mike Max to the frontlines.

Twitter users took note, initially with skepticism. But Max - who grew up in Gaylord and has worked for WCCO radio and TV since 1998 - soon won Twitter over with his solid reporting, thoughtful questions and his ability to dodge rubber bullets and endure tear gas.

"Since Mike Max isn't active on Twitter," Minneapolis/St. Paul Business Journal reporter Nick Halter tweeted on Monday, "has anyone informed him that everyone on this website has fallen in love with him over the last 72 hours?"

Here's a look at how Max captivated an audience during a national emergency. (He wasn't available for an interview on Monday.)

At first Twitter wondered what was going on, but soon after Max began to win folks over.

How the heck did Mike Max get to be a war correspondent?

- David Brauer (@dbrauer) May 30, 2020

Of all the local news reporters, I did not have Mike Max pegged as one of the people to be right in the middle of these protests.

Twitter users hail protest coverage from an unlikely source, WCCO sports director Mike Max

- EvolvingWild (@EvolvingWild) June 1, 2020

I'll admit, I was never a fan of Mike Max. I am now...

- Scott Korzenowski (@Skorzo60) June 1, 2020

Previously I may have found a certain reporter whose name rhymes with Ike Axe irritating but now he's won me over and also I'm worrying about him because Frank & Amelia kept wondering where he was and if he's okay.

- Laurel Krahn (@windowseat) May 31, 2020

Max's thoughtful coverage continued to impress.

So it turns out @WCCO's sports reporter, Mike Max, is a secret genius at reporting on the ? He is genuine, curious, thoughtful, and keeps reiterating that the protestors have been peaceful as they incur police violence.

- Ashleigh Lambert (@nora_charles)

Mike Max @WCCO #MinneapolisUprising June 1, 2020 deserves an Emmy for this interview. pic.twitter.com/5nqqdsknDU

? Kim Dutcher (@kddutch) June 1, 2020

So impressed by Mike Max reporting live on @WCCO each night. Not only remaining calm and focused in what's often been chaos, but bringing real humanity and insight as well. is making the sports media proud, and doing it a hell of a lot better than most of us ever could.

- Aaron Gleeman (@AaronGleeman)

Mike Max is giving us the stories we need to hear from the protestors @wcco @MaxWCCO June 1, 2020 pic.twitter.com/TmniHNx9Ej

- Kelsey L (@lavakels) June 1, 2020

I would have never guessed that Mike Max, the WCCO sports guy, would be the best protest reporter I've ever seen in mainstream media.

He's constantly reinforcing that protestors are being peaceful and reporting on violent actions of police.

- Ashley Fairbanks (@ziibiing) June 1, 2020

At one point, Max was the No. 1 trend on local Twitter.

If you're wondering why Mike Max is the No. 1 trend on Twitter in Minneapolis, this video is why. You should watch it. <https://t.co/tR3J76qvNV>

- Zach Halverson (@ZachHalverson) June 1, 2020

So far Mike Max has:

Twitter users hail protest coverage from an unlikely source, WCCO sports director Mike Max

- Had solid interviews w/a street medic, AIM member & tanker truck incident eyewitnesses
- Seen tear gas & raised weapons
- Picked smart & insightful things to film & people to talk to
- Made use of a magic helicopter to be virtually everywhere at once??

- Fran Snarkenton (@KeepMNBlue) June 1, 2020

Mike Max being pelted with rubber bullets as molotov cocktails rain down around him in the midst of a global pandemic and state curfew: winks at someone off camera.

- Andy (@newbiemn) June 1, 2020

Mike Max's plan to take over the world by becoming immune to tear gas is moving along at a rapid pace.

- Ray Fury (@fatassets) June 1, 2020

In the middle of a tragic situation, Max gave Twitter a chance to pause.

Maybe moving Mike Max to news is like when the Twins moved Glen Perkins to the bullpen.

- Brandon Warne (@Brandon_Warne) June 1, 2020

You guys it was nice knowing Mike Max. I will miss him but will be sure to watch him from afar when he becomes CBS' newest war correspondent.

- sarah hinde #JusticeForGeorgeFloyd (@sarahhinde) June 1, 2020

God bless Mike Max.

- Ryan Stanzel (@rstanzel) May 31, 2020

Mike Max pic.twitter.com/uuWzzmpbht

- Bring Me The News (@bringmethenews) May 31, 2020

'Cops,' on air for 33 seasons, dropped by Paramount Network Anchor Pat Evans leaves KARE-TV after more than 25 years Meet Kamryn Johnson, the 9-year-old who has raised more than \$50,000 for Minneapolis Fox News: Black deaths, stock market graphic was insensitive Second City CEO steps down amid claims of racism at theater

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Fire at warehouse storing The Liffey, Local, Kieran's furniture make patio reopening dates uncertain

ARTICLE CXLVI. FIRE AT WAREHOUSE STORING THE LIFFEY, LOCAL, KIERAN'S FURNITURE MAKE PATIO REOPENING DATES UNCERTAIN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 222 words

Byline: Nancy Ngo

Highlight: A fire burned the warehouse of Cara Irish Pubs, the group behind popular restaurant patios The Liffey in St. Paul as well as The Local (downtown Minneapolis and St. Louis Park) and Kieran's (downtown Minneapolis), to the ground on Friday night. The warehouse on East Lake Street in Minneapolis was where the restaurant group stored [...]

Body

A fire burned the warehouse of Cara Irish Pubs, the group behind popular restaurant patios The Liffey in St. Paul as well as The Local (downtown Minneapolis and St. Louis Park) and Kieran's (downtown Minneapolis), to the ground on Friday night.

The warehouse on East Lake Street in Minneapolis was where the restaurant group stored its patio furniture, extra tables, chairs, bar stools, equipment and supplies. The incident means reopening dates of Cara's outdoor dining spaces is even more uncertain despite the state allowing outdoor dining at restaurants starting Monday after closures since mid-March due COVID-19.

"Everything was destroyed, nothing salvageable," said Peter Killen, CEO of Cara Irish Pubs. "Thankfully, nobody was hurt."

Killen said the fire is being investigated. The incident occurred in an area heavily hit with fires and looting amid days of unrest following the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

Restaurant News: Amid closings, say hello to restaurant openings in the time of the coronavirus Pandemic, protests and ice cream. 2 Scoops Ice Cream Eatery seeks to heal us. W.A. Frost preps to reopen patio with new philosophy Watch: Walz announces opening of indoor dining, gyms, movie theaters, bowling alleys Midtown Global Market evicts Holy Land over employee's past social media posts

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

For some business owners, Monday's reopening is a time for excitement. For others, it's not nearly enough

ARTICLE CXLVII. FOR SOME BUSINESS OWNERS, MONDAY'S REOPENING IS A TIME FOR EXCITEMENT. FOR OTHERS, IT'S NOT NEARLY ENOUGH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1895 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: Chris Osborn and the rest of his team at Saints Coast Barber Studio started planning for their reopen long before they got official word from the state government. They planned for a maximum of three barbers in the in the shop at a time. They planned to keep the door locked during business hours to [...]

Body

Chris Osborn and the rest of his team at Saints Coast Barber Studio started planning for their reopen long before they got official word from the state government.

They planned for a maximum of three barbers in the in the shop at a time. They planned to keep the door locked during business hours to manage who comes in. They planned to wear masks and gloves and will request clients wear masks, too. They even planned to take everyone's temperature upon arrival with a no-touch thermometer.

Needless to say, Saints Coast Barber Studio is as prepared as it can be for whatever comes next.

"We have pretty much everything in place to make sure everyone is safe," said Osborn, who owns the shop in St. Paul. "We are ready to roll."

After protests over George Floyd's death morphed into widespread rioting and looting over the weekend, some business remained closed Monday despite the fact Gov. Tim Walz has given them permission to reopen on a limited basis amid the coronavirus pandemic.

That said, the fact that places like like restaurants, bars, breweries, barber shops, and tattoo parlors, among others have the option to reopen is welcomed to many business owners.

In the past couple of months, roughly 90 percent of Minnesota restaurant and bar operators say they have laid off or furloughed employees, and 54 percent of Minnesota breweries estimate they will have to close within the next few months if things continue on this trajectory, according to Hospitality Minnesota, the trade association representing 2,000 restaurants, hotels, resorts, campgrounds and outfitters in the state.

More data from the Minnesota Department of Employment and Economic Development shows that of the more than 700,000 people across the state who have applied for unemployment assistance since March 16,

For some business owners, Monday's reopening is a time for excitement. For others, it's not nearly enough food and beverage serving workers have been most impacted. More than 50,000 people in that sector have applied for unemployment.

Additionally, a recent survey from Hospitality Minnesota showed more than half of hospitality businesses may be forced to close permanently in the next couple of months if things continue at the current rate. That would put roughly 150,000 people out of work.

"Frankly, the reality is a lot of these businesses are out of time and out of money," said Ben Wogsland, Hospitality Minnesota director of government relations. "They have done their part to allow the state to catch up and expand healthcare capacity. Now they are at the precipice of bankruptcy and collapse. They need to be allowed to bring in more revenue."

That's why some business owners fear if Walz doesn't loosen some of the restrictions in place that the reopen could end up having an adverse effect

According to Phase II of the "Stay Safe Minnesota" reopening plan, restaurants and bars will be limited to outdoor dining only with no more than 50 people allowed at a time, while barber shops, hair salons, and tattoo parlors can operate at a maximum 25 percent capacity.

"We should be OK," said Osborn, who delayed his reopen until at least Tuesday. "It's still a thought in the back of my head that it might be temporary. I've got a buddy who's a barber out in Las Vegas and he said when they first opened up they were booked solid for a couple of weeks and after that it really slowed down. That's definitely a possibility."

'WE HAVE TO AT LEAST TRY'

While places like Saints Coast Barber Studio are already booked solid for the next few weeks, less than 10 minutes up the road, Grand Avenue Tattoo is struggling with the logistics of everything.

As of right now, owner Ransom Bennett has a makeshift system in place that will allow him and the rest of his team to have "a revolving door" of clients for the foreseeable future.

"We each have a call list and will start at the top and call people a few days in advance to set up appointments," Bennett said. "We decided to do it like this so we don't have to move people around in the event that we do have to dial it back. There's no clear path right now. We are just doing the best we can."

There are more than 100 people on his call list, so Bennett likely won't be short on clients in the coming weeks. There's an excitement that comes with that, especially considering the past couple of months have been hard physically, emotionally and financially.

"I know for a fact that it makes me feel good to be in the shop," Bennett said. "It's always been a safe haven for me. Anytime I've had mental health issues or troubles in my past, as soon as I'm giving a tattoo I feel better and that's why I love it so much. I know during the process of tattooing I'm going to feel great and I'll be so glad to be back."

That said, Bennett also doesn't expect to turn a profit while operating at 25 percent capacity. That's next to impossible with accounting for overhead costs.

"I don't even know if I'll be able to pay all the bills with the money coming in," Bennett said. "Not that there's really a better option than reopening. We have to do it. We have to at least try."

For some business owners, Monday's reopening is a time for excitement. For others, it's not nearly enough

What would it take for Bennett to start turning a profit again?

"I'd say realistically the capacity it would take for us to operate at and remain safe doesn't exist," Bennett said. "I think that number for profit might be like 75 percent capacity or something like that and the number for safely operating might be like 50 percent capacity or something like that. I guess what I'm saying is I don't think they overlap. And I would never value income over human life, so I don't think that's a viable option."

For now, Bennett is simply hoping to keep his head above water until things can return to normal.

"I've known this is going to be a long game," Bennett said. "I've been trying to prepare for it as best I can. I've told my team to do the same. Hopefully, it's enough."

'IT'S NOT NEARLY ENOUGH'

Chuck Dougherty couldn't help but feel a little insulted with Walz's announcement about restaurants reopening.

As the owner of the recognizable Water Street Inn in downtown Stillwater, as well as the adjacent Charlie's Restaurant and Irish Pub, and new rooftop location Papa's, he was gearing up to reopen his restaurants at 50 percent capacity after a nightmarish couple of months.

Instead, he planned to reopen Monday only able to seat a maximum of 50 people at a time. He's especially frustrated because he feels like he can service more than that while still maintaining social distancing.

"We have a rooftop patio that can seat about 300 people outside," Dougherty said. "We weren't thinking we were going to be able to open at 100 percent capacity right away. We were just expecting more. If we can only seat 50 people for the foreseeable future, that's not going to work for very long."

That's the hardest part about Monday for many business owners, and it's why Tom Reid is hoping outdoor dining will quickly pave the way for indoor dining.

"It's difficult to process only being able to seat 50 people on a patio in a restaurant that seats roughly 300 people," said Reid, owner of Tom Reid's Hockey City Pub on West Seventh Street. "That doesn't come close to paying the bills."

It's been a brutal couple of months for Reid, who estimates he's already lost 35 percent of his business for the year. He typically relies on March and April to drive revenue, largely due to St. Patrick's Day, various college hockey tournaments, and the start of the NHL playoffs.

He called it a "nightmare" for everyone in the industry, lamenting how St. Paul mainstays like Pazzaluna have been forced to shut their doors. He also emphasized that only being able to seat 50 people at a time is not at all sustainable for anyone trying to turn a profit.

"We need to be able to ramp up sooner rather than later," Reid said. "We can't go on like this."

That's exactly how Dougherty feels. He's already been forced to pare down his staff from 50 people to a skeleton crew of about 12 people, and while he's anticipating a boon in business at first, he's skeptical about how long it will last.

"It's a little baby step," Dougherty said. "It's not nearly enough."

For some business owners, Monday's reopening is a time for excitement. For others, it's not nearly enough

'HOPE FOR THE BEST'

As frustrated as some restaurant owners are at the moment, with so many people still working from home for the foreseeable future, Cafe Astoria sees a target audience as they prepare for their reopen.

In the words of co-owner John Occhiato, "Most people are going to want work from anywhere but their living room."

That's why Cafe Astoria has made improvements to their patio, purchasing additional tables and chairs, umbrellas to block the sun, and potted plants to create extra space between potential customers.

"We are set up pretty well because we have a rear entrance that kind of goes out to the patio," Occhiato said. "That creates kind of a natural flow."

The cafe is also hoping to close down a side street adjacent to the coffee shop in between its operation and Hope Breakfast Bar. That would provide some additional outdoor space for both businesses.

With business still down 60 percent this week, Occhiato knows the coming week will be extremely important for him and co-owner Leah Raymundo. They are treating it like a grand opening of sorts. Not a reopening.

"We have to let people know we are open and give them confidence that they are going to be safe when they are here," Occhiato said. "There's some concern that business might not come back fast enough. That said, I think we are going to be fine. It's just going to be a hard year and the bank account is going to continue to go down before it goes back up."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin The Athletic lays off 8 percent of staff 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

As for Saints Coast Barber Studio right up the road, Osborn is approaching the reopen with similar optimism.

"I think the only thing I'm worried about is the unknown," Osborn said. "I think we are very much prepared for this entire thing and I think we can handle it perfectly. As excited as we are to be back, at the end of the day we are still kind of like, 'Here we go.' We just have to go for it and hope for the best."

Phase II of Governor Tim Walz's "stay safe" plan begins Monday with these changes:

Restaurants and bars - In-person dining is outdoors and no more than 50 customers. Reservations required. Masks required for workers, strongly recommended for customers. Six feet of distance must be maintained. Personal services (salons, tattoos, barbershops) - Maximum occupancy of 25 percent. Appointments required. Masks required for workers and customers. Six feet of distance must be maintained. School buildings - Can be open with hybrid model of in-person and distance learning for summer learning per Centers for Disease Control and Minnesota Department of Health guidance. Organized youth sports - Can start per MDH guidance with no games. Recommendations for social distancing, masking when appropriate, following routine disinfection of high-touch items (balls, rackets, bats, other equipment), promoting health checks, and screening of participants and staff/volunteers.

For some business owners, Monday's reopening is a time for excitement. For others, it's not nearly enough

Campgrounds and charter boats - Open with guidance, which includes capacity limits and cleaning of facilities, and discouraging the sharing of fishing equipment and sanitizing it between uses.

Graphic

Ransom Bennett and his three-year-old daughter, Ivy, in Bennett's tattoo parlor, Grand Avenue Tattoo in St. Paul, on Friday, April 17, 2020. (John Autey / Pioneer Press)

Charlie's Restaurant and Irish Pub at Water Street Inn in downtown Stillwater. (Courtesy of Water Street Inn)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Lake Street Council raises $2M to rebuild decimated businesses

ARTICLE CXLVIII. LAKE STREET COUNCIL RAISES \$2M TO REBUILD DECIMATED BUSINESSES

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 241 words

Byline: Carter Jones

Body

Several organizations are rounding up donations after days of rioting left Twin Cities neighborhoods smoldering.

The Lake Street Council launched the We Love Lake Street fundraiser last week, which has raised $2,284,058 through 27,000 individual donations as of Monday morning. 100% of the funds will go towards Lake Street's small businesses and nonprofits to help them reopen quickly.

"A majority of Lake Street businesses are owned by immigrants and people of color, and Lake Street Council is committed to ensuring that our support is accessible to all businesses and has an equitable impact," reads a statement on the website. "As we work to allocate and distribute these funds, we will focus on helping the hardest-hit and most vulnerable businesses in our community, which disproportionately includes immigrant and POC-owned businesses."

Lake Street Council raises $2M to rebuild decimated businesses

The Midway Chamber of Commerce and Saint Paul Downtown Alliance are soon launching the We Love the Midway fundraiser.

The Official George Floyd Memorial Fund, started by Floyd's biological sister, has raised over $7 million through 284,000 individual donations.

Other fundraisers include Du Nord's Riot Recovery Fund which has raised over $50,000 "to support black and brown companies affected by the riots."

Support the Cities, a subsidiary of Bethlehem Baptist Church, is also accepting donations.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 1, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CXLIX. MASS GATHERINGS, EROSION OF TRUST UPEND CORONAVIRUS CONTROL

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 995 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: Protests erupting across the nation over the past week - and law enforcement's response to them - are threatening to upend efforts by health officials to track and contain the spread of coronavirus just as those efforts were finally getting underway.

Body

By MIKE STOBBE

NEW YORK (AP) - Protests erupting across the nation over the past week - and law enforcement's response to them - are threatening to upend efforts by health officials to track and contain the spread of coronavirus just as those efforts were finally getting underway.

Health experts need newly infected people to remember and recount everyone they've interacted with over several days in order to alert others who may have been exposed, and prevent them from spreading the disease further. But that process, known as contact tracing, relies on people knowing who they've been in contact with - a daunting task if they've been to a mass gathering.

And the process relies on something that may suddenly be in especially short supply: Trust in government.

"These events that are happening now are further threats to the trust we need," said Dr. Sandro Galea, dean of the Boston University School of Public Health. "If we do not have that, I worry our capacity to control new outbreaks becomes more limited," he said.

Government officials have been hoping to continue reopening businesses, churches and other organizations after months of stay-at-home orders and other infection-prevention measures. But health experts also hoped that any reopening would be accompanied by widespread testing, contact tracing and isolation to prevent new waves of illness from beginning.

Over the past week, protests sparked by the death of George Floyd, a black man who died after a white Minneapolis police officer pinned a knee to his neck, have involved thousands of people gathered tightly together in large crowds in more than 20 cities nationwide.

It's unclear if the protests themselves will trigger large new outbreaks. The protests were outside, where infections don't spread as readily as indoors. Also, many of the protesters were wearing masks, and much of the contact was likely less-hazardous "transient" moments of people moving around, passing each other, said Dr. William Schaffner, an infectious diseases expert at Vanderbilt University.

But, still, experts worry that public efforts to contain the disease in the future could be undermined.

In Los Angeles, the city's mayor announced Saturday that COVID-19 testing centers were being closed because of safety concerns related to violent protests. Testing in Minneapolis will be affected because some of the clinics that provide the service have been damaged in the protests, according to a city government spokesperson.

Reduced testing could "be giving the virus another head start," Schaffner said.

And contact tracing, which is only just getting going in several states, is an even bigger concern. It involves people who work for or with health departments asking intimate questions about where a person has been and who they've been talking to - and getting full, truthful answers in return.

"In this current environment which has enhanced or brought forth a mistrust of governmental authority, it might make them disinclined to speak with anyone in government," Schaffner said.

That is especially true in black communities trying to cope with episodes of police violence and longstanding frustrations with how they have been marginalized and mistreated by people who work for government agencies. And those are the communities that have been hardest hit by the coronavirus in the U.S. and most in need of public health measures to help control it.

Protests in Salt Lake City that drew several thousand people are a setback for contact tracers already struggling to contain the spread of the coronavirus, said Tair Kiphibane, infectious disease bureau manager for the Salt Lake County Health Department.

She became concerned as she watched hundreds of protesters go by her downtown Salt Lake City office Saturday afternoon where she and her staff were working another weekend day after seeing increases in COVID-19 cases last week.

She sent contact tracers home three hours early Saturday as protests grew violent near the office. She expects further increases in cases because so many people were close to one another during the protest. Tracing the web of infected people that may have been exposed will be daunting since protesters likely won't have names and phone numbers for many of the people they were around.

"It is going to make it so much harder," Kiphibane said. "It could be anybody. They don't know most of those people ... It is just too many people."

In a press conference Saturday, Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington used the term "contact tracing" when describing an investigation into arrested protesters there. He said the goal is to "see if there are crime or white supremacy organizations that have played a role" and "to understand how do we go after them, legally," Harrington said.

But Harrington's use of "contact tracing" by law enforcement may complicate the job of health workers as they try to track the virus's spread, some experts said.

"That was an abuse of the word 'contact tracing.' That is not what contact tracing is," said Dr. Tom Frieden, former director of the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"Contact tracing is a service to patients and their contacts to provide services for patients and warning for contacts. It has nothing to do with police activity. Nothing," said Frieden, who is now president of Resolve to Save Lives, a nonprofit that works to prevent epidemics.

Galea said he hopes many people will separate in their minds the contact tracing done by public health workers from crime investigations by the police. But, he added, "I do think sometimes it's difficult to make a distinction when you feel marginalized by, and targeted by, the entire government."

Associated Press writer Brady McCombs contributed to this report in Salt Lake City.

The Associated Press Health and Science Department receives support from the Howard Hughes Medical Institute's Department of Science Education. The AP is solely responsible for all content.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

McGovern's Pub in St. Paul struggled through lockdown. Now partially reopened

ARTICLE CL.

MCGOVERN'S PUB IN ST. PAUL STRUGGLED THROUGH LOCKDOWN. NOW PARTIALLY REOPENED

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 808 words

Byline: Bob Shaw

Highlight: Go ahead, ask Pat Boemer if he's happy about reopening his restaurant. Then you'd better stand back. "This whole thing is so bizarrely stupid," Boemer snapped on Wednesday as he worked to get the patio ready at McGovern's Pub and Restaurant in St. Paul. On Monday, restaurants like his were allowed to reopen, and Boemer [...]

Body

Go ahead, ask Pat Boemer if he's happy about reopening his restaurant.

Then you'd better stand back.

"This whole thing is so bizarrely stupid," Boemer snapped on Wednesday as he worked to get the patio ready at McGovern's Pub and Restaurant in St. Paul.

On Monday, restaurants like his were allowed to reopen, and Boemer said the protests and looting related to George Floyd's death in Minneapolis police custody didn't affect his neighborhood. But there are so many conditions that instead of celebrating their revival, many restaurant owners are feeling as gloomy as ever.

McGovern's may only serve customers outdoors, must take reservations, can't serve more than 50 people at one time and must not let customers get too close together.

Even with government subsidies and pep talks, Boemer said, about 30 percent of local restaurants will go out of business.

"I am so sick of government saying, 'We understand,' " he fumed as he unstacked deck chairs recently. "You do not understand anything."

His business has had a long, tough slog back to reopening.

McGovern's is a St. Paul landmark in a 132-year-old building, and Boemer has owned the place for 38 years.

McGovern's Pub in St. Paul struggled through lockdown. Now partially reopened

He never imagined anything could shut him down - until Gov. Tim Walz's stay-at-home order of March 28.

Boemer had to fire 70 employees. The pub, which is packed during the state hockey tournaments, became eerily silent.

At first, Boemer accepted the shutdown. The virus was a threat to everyone, no one was sure how it was spread, and lives had to be saved.

The pub muddled along with a takeout business. That generated about one-tenth of its normal income.

"It was enough to pay my cook," Boemer said.

He got help from the federal government: $370,000. That was welcome, he said, and it was enough to keep the business alive. For three weeks.

The pub's usual monthly income is about $450,000. "It was a Band-Aid," he said.

Then he received some money from the state. But once again, it came with strings attached.

"They said 75 percent of it had to be spent on employees," he said. That made sense when he had 70 of them, he said, but at the time he had five.

Two weeks ago, he was happy to hear hints that the governor would let restaurants reopen. On May 20, he heard about the details.

"It was shocking to hear it was only for outdoor dining," he said. Lucky for him, he had just completed a remodeling of his patio, which has a retractable roof for rainy days.

But half the restaurants, he said, have no patios. Others have only tiny outdoor areas.

"What are they supposed to do if it rains?" asked Boemer. Even in a thunderstorm, it is not allowed to have customers rush indoors.

Walz limited all restaurants to 50 customers.

"We have a capacity for 700," said Boemer. "We can't exist with 50 people."

To limit the crowd size, reservations are required. No one will be dropping in for a quick beer after work or a spontaneous birthday celebration.

"Reservations are for fine dining. We are casual dining," he said.

Tables need to be six feet apart. And only four people per table. Unless they are family members, and then six is OK. How can the pub guarantee that everyone is in the same family?

Boemer rolled his eyes.

He wouldn't complain if he thought the rules were saving lives. But he's not so sure of that now.

As of Monday, 1,050 Minnesotans had died. "That is out of 5.6 million people," he said.

McGovern's Pub in St. Paul struggled through lockdown. Now partially reopened

It is now clear that the virus is not an equal danger to everyone. More than 80 percent of fatalities are older people in nursing homes and assisted living facilities. Why not focus the shutdown orders on those, asked Boemer, and let other businesses stay open?

"It's not fair to close the whole economy because of a few," he said. "My employees are begging to come back."

Behind him, four workers struggled to set up an awning at the bar. One was pub manager Eric Wold.

"We are reopening, with only 50?" he said, doing the math in his head. "So, that is one-sixteenth our normal."

Still, he is determined to make it work. "We have to show the governor there is no difference between this and having 200 people in Sam's Club without masks," said Wold.

For him, Monday did not mean a triumphant revival, but another halting step as the pub staggers back to normal.

As he pushed tables into place, Boemer said he was hiring 30 employees for the reopening.

Will that be enough? Will his customers return?

He looked around at the scattered chairs and tables. "Come back next week," he said, "and I will tell you then." Restaurant News: Amid closings, say hello to restaurant openings in the time of the coronavirus Pandemic, protests and ice cream. 2 Scoops Ice Cream Eatery seeks to heal us. W.A. Frost preps to reopen patio with new philosophy Watch: Walz announces opening of indoor dining, gyms, movie theaters, bowling alleys Midtown Global Market evicts Holy Land over employee's past social media posts

Graphic

Bartenders Aaron Jost, left, and Scott Hanlon do a deep cleaning of the bar area at Patrick McGovern's Pub in St. Paul on May 27, 2020, in preparation for opening their patio. Restaurants and bars will be allowed to reopen Monday, June 1 for dining outdoors amid the coronavirus pandemic. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Midtown Corner likely a total loss‘

ARTICLE CLI. MIDTOWN CORNER LIKELY A TOTAL LOSS‘

Finance and Commerce

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 BridgeTower Media All Rights Reserved

FINANCE & COMMERCESection: NEWSLength: 515 wordsByline: Brian JohnsonBody

The 189-unit Midtown Corner affordable housing project in Minneapolis was nearly ready for installation of fire sprinklers when it burned amid last week’s riots, the project’s developer said Monday.

The wood-framed building, under construction at 2913 26th Ave. S., was set on fire amid protests over the death of George Floyd, the 46-year-old African American man who died while in the custody of Minneapolis police last week.

“We were completely framed up to the roof and probably a week or two from getting fire sprinklers in there, but it happened before that took place,” Steve Wellington, CEO of St. Paul-based Wellington Management, said in an interview. “Obviously, it’s a very vulnerable time for a wood-framed building. ” The wood went up in flames “very quickly,” Wellington said. The first-floor concrete, as well as the garage underneath, will likely have to be replaced as well, as the concrete was stressed by the heat, he added.

The project is likely a “total loss,” Wellington said. “We are going through the process with the adjusters, but it doesn’t take too much insight to take a look” at the damage that was done.

Photos and videos circulating on social media showed the building engulfed in flames a graphic and chilling image of the outrage that swept through Minneapolis and other cities across the country in the wake of Floyd’s death.

The Midtown Corner project site is just a skip and a jump away from the epicenter of the violence, Minneapolis Police 3rd Precinct station at 3000 Minnehaha Ave. S. The police station was also set on fire.

<https://youtu.be/CY5ApwpacNw>

Wellington said Monday that the Midtown Corner building was scheduled for completion in the first quarter of 2021. At the time of the fire, the six-story building was just starting to be enclosed and about eight to 10 months of interior work was still ahead, Wellington said.

Wellington said he intends to rebuild, but it’s not clear when that process will begin.

Midtown Corner likely a total loss‘

“We are going to step back and get it going again, but it’s going to be a significant delay in getting that project back underway,” he said.

The city of Minneapolis doesn’t have a damage assessment of the Midtown Corner building, though the city may have something by the end of the week or early next week, city spokesman John Louis said in an email.

Site construction for the project began in August 2019, according to Wellington. Watson Forsberg is the general contractor. Finance & Commerce reported that the city had just issued a building permit for the project in March.

Of the 189 units, 20% would have been affordable at 60% area median income, and the remaining units were in the 60% to 80% AMI range, Wellington said.

Midtown Corner is the “next project in Wellington Management’s multiphase redevelopment of the former Rainbow Foods grocery store at Lake Street and Hiawatha Avenue,” according to the developer’s website.

[SlideDeck2 id=458337]

[divider]

Like this article? Gain access to all of our great content with a month-to-month subscription. Start your subscription here.

Copyright © 2020 BridgeTower Media. All Rights Reserved.

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CLII. MONDAY CORONAVIRUS UPDATE: 10 MORE MN DEATHS, 361 NEW CASES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 1, 2020 Monday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 464 words

Byline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: As the state begins to reopen and protests continue, the Minnesota's death toll from COVID-19 reached 1,050, with an additional 10 deaths reported on Monday. Of the state's total deaths, 855 were in long-term care or residents of assisted living centers, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health. The state agency reported another 361 confirmed [...]

Body

As the state begins to reopen and protests continue, the Minnesota's death toll from COVID-19 reached 1,050, with an additional 10 deaths reported on Monday.

Of the state's total deaths, 855 were in long-term care or residents of assisted living centers, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health.

The state agency reported another 361 confirmed infections - the fewest in five weeks - increasing Minnesota's total cases to 25,208. The actual number of cases is likely much higher as the data only represents those who have been tested for the virus, state officials say.

As the daily count of cases decreased, so did the number of tests administered. There were 6,073 reported Monday, down nearly 1,000 from the day before and 2,500 on Friday. The state's Public Health Lab closed over the weekend because of rioting in St. Paul and Minneapolis and processed no tests Saturday and Sunday. Some were re-routed to partner laboratories when possible, the state said.

Those protests could lead to increases later this month due to large gatherings protesting the death of George Floyd.

With the COVID-19 pandemic underway, health officials have been worried about the risk of more transmission during large protest gatherings. Gov. Tim Walz said planning is underway for "massive mobile testing in the cities" and people who develop symptoms of COVID-19 should self-isolate.

Most people infected by COVID-19 experience mild symptoms, including a fever and cough. However, the virus can cause severe illness such as pneumonia, particularly for those who are elderly and have underlying health conditions.

Monday coronavirus update: 10 more MN deaths, 361 new cases

Monday also marks the first day that under an executive order signed by Walz, restaurants can open for outdoor dining. Salons and barber shops can also begin reopening.

HOW ARE PATIENTS DOING? There were 19,441 patients Monday that no longer need to be isolated as they have recovered enough from the virus. This is an increase from 18,695 patients yesterday. There were 549 patients with COVID-19 in Minnesota hospitals, a decrease from 555 from the day before. Of those patients in hospitals, 253 are in intensive care, a decrease from 257 on Sunday.

WHO IS GETTING SICK? Age group with most confirmed infections: 30- to 39-year-olds, with 5,036 cases. Age group with most deaths: 80-to 89-year-olds, with 361 deaths. Number of health care workers with COVID-19: 2,725. Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CLIII. BARR: LAW ENFORCEMENT MUST 'DOMINATE' STREETS AMID PROTESTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1332 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. officials vowed to "maximize federal law enforcement presence" in the nation's capital Monday night after days of violent demonstrations led to fires across Washington and left scores of businesses with broken windows and dozens of police officers injured.

Body

By MICHAEL BALSAMO

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. officials vowed to "maximize federal law enforcement presence" in the nation's capital Monday night after days of violent demonstrations led to fires across Washington and left scores of businesses with broken windows and dozens of police officers injured.

In a call with governors, President Donald Trump and Attorney General William Barr also encouraged more aggressive action against those who cause violence during protests across the country following the killing of George Floyd, a black man who died after a white Minneapolis policeman pressed his knee into his neck for several minutes even after Floyd stopped moving and pleading for air. The demonstrations have turned violent in several cities, with fires ignited in Lafayette Park across from the White House.

The comments from Trump, Barr and other federal officials appeared aimed at avoiding similar scenes Monday night, when protesters were expected to gather again. But there were also questions about whether using more aggressive law enforcement measures against demonstrators protesting police brutality would only increase tensions.

Barr told the state leaders that law enforcement officials must "have adequate force" and "go after troublemakers."

"Law enforcement response is not going to work unless we dominate the streets," Barr said.

Trump said he was "taking immediate presidential action to stop the violence and restore security and safety in America."

The president urged governors to deploy the National Guard, which he credited with helping calm the situation Sunday night in Minneapolis, and demanded that similarly tough measures be taken in cities that also experienced spasms of violence, including New York, Philadelphia and Los Angeles.

Barr: Law enforcement must 'dominate' streets amid protests

"Mayors and governors must establish an overwhelming law enforcement presence until the violence has been quelled," Trump said. "If a city or state refuses to take the actions that are necessary to defend the life and property of their residents, then I will deploy the United States military and quickly solve the problem for them."

Trump directed Barr to "lead federal law enforcement efforts to assist in the restoration of order to the District of Columbia," Justice Department spokesperson Kerri Kupec said.

Minutes before Trump spoke Monday evening in the Rose Garden of the White House, police and members of the National Guard took aggressive action, using tear gas and flash bangs, to move back peaceful protesters who were outside Lafayette Park, across from the White House.

Law enforcement officials had made a decision earlier Monday that they needed to extend the security perimeter around the White House after multiple fires broke out in Lafayette Park the night before, according to a law enforcement official who would not publicly discuss the security protocols and spoke on condition of anonymity.

A Justice Department spokesperson declined to comment when asked whether Barr was involved in the decision to use tear gas on protesters outside the White House. A U.S. Park Police spokesperson did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Between the protests and the response to the coronavirus pandemic, the National Guard has been deployed at its highest level in recent history, surpassing the number of troops sent to the Gulf Coast during Hurricane Katrina in 2005. More than 66,700 soldiers and airman have been activated - 45,000 to assist with the pandemic and more than 17,000 to help with the protests.

Other law enforcement resources are also being mobilized.

The Justice Department deployed the U.S. Marshals Service and agents from the Drug Enforcement Administration to supplement National Guard troops in Washington on Sunday. By midnight, Barr had ordered the FBI to deploy its Hostage Rescue Team, an elite tactical unit, to the streets of the nation's capital, a senior Justice Department official said.

Barr has also directed the federal Bureau of Prisons to send teams of prison riot officers to patrol the streets in Miami and Washington, the official added. The federal prison system had also implemented a temporary measure to further curtail inmate movement at prisons across the U.S. "to ensure the good order and security of our institutions, as well as ensure the safety of staff and inmates," the Bureau of Prisons said.

Barr was traveling around Washington on Monday night to observe the protests, according to the senior Justice Department official, who would not discuss the matter publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity.

The U.S. Park Police and Secret Service have had dozens of officers out in riot gear in Washington for the last few nights, in addition to the Metropolitan Police Department. U.S. Customs and Border Protection was also sending officers, agents and aircraft around the country to assist other law enforcement agencies "confronting the lawless actions of rioters," the agency said. The officers were being deployed in several states, though the official declined to provide specific details, citing security concerns.

Barr: Law enforcement must 'dominate' streets amid protests

Several major cities have enacted curfews, and District of Columbia Mayor Muriel Bowser set a 7 p.m. curfew for Monday and Tuesday. Violent demonstrators ignored the 11 p.m. curfew the night before as they set buildings and trash cans on fire and broke into stores to steal items from the shelves.

Most of the protesters have been peaceful and tried to discourage violence. Trump, Barr and others have tried to blame some of the civil unrest on left-wing extremist groups, including antifa, and other "anarchists." Short for anti-fascists, antifa is an umbrella term for far-left-leaning militant groups that resist neo-Nazis and white supremacists at demonstrations.

The FBI is using its network of regional joint terrorism task forces to "identify criminal organizers," and federal prosecutors across the country have been instructed to share information and utilize federal riot, arson or terror statutes against any "violent radical agitators" who attempt to hijack protests to cause destruction.

The Justice Department has vowed to treat the "violence instigated and carried out by antifa & other similar groups" as domestic terrorism. Although there isn't a specific federal domestic terrorism statute, prosecutors could charge other offenses and seek enhanced sentencing.

The FBI has already started questioning rioters who were arrested in several cities to determine whether they committed any federal crimes, the senior Justice Department official said. It is a federal crime to cross state lines to participate in violent riots.

Between 600 and 800 National Guard members from five states - Delaware, New Jersey, New York, Ohio and Utah - are being sent to D.C. to provide assistance, senior Defense Department officials said. Those troops are either already on the ground or will arrive by midnight.

In addition, officials said that soldiers from Fort Bragg, North Carolina, and Fort Drum, New York, were heading to D.C. and would be based outside the city in case they are needed. They would be prepared to respond, but the officials said they are hopeful those troops will not be needed. If they are sent in, they are not expected to be conducting any law enforcement. The officials declined to say how many active-duty troops were en route.

In addition, members of the Army's 3rd Infantry Regiment, an active-duty unit known as the Old Guard and most visible as the unit that stands at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, have been called up to protect Fort Myer, Virginia, the U.S. Army post adjacent to Arlington National Cemetery.

The officials said some of the National Guard in D.C. will be armed and others will not. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss ongoing military deployments.

Associated Press writers Lolita C. Baldor, Kevin Freking and Ben Fox in Washington; Alan Suderman in Richmond, Va.; James LaPorta in Delray Beach, Fla.; and Sarah Blake Morgan in West Jefferson, N.C., contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CLIV. STATE OPENS WIDE-RANGING PROBE OF 10 YEARS OF MINNEAPOLIS PD RACE RELATIONS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1506 wordsByline: Dave Orrick, Mara H. GottfriedHighlight: Human Rights Commissioner Rebecca Lucero wrote the charge of discrimination was on the basis of race. Floyd was black and the officer who knelt on his neck for more than eight minutes is white.Body

The administration of Gov. Tim Walz on Tuesday thrust its full weight of civil rights authority against the Minneapolis Police Department as it opened a wide-ranging investigation into the agency's previous 10 years of racial practices.

The salvo came in the form of the Minnesota Department of Human Rights opening an inquiry into the department following the death of George Floyd, an unarmed black man who died - according to two autopsies - because of the actions of several of its officers who held Floyd on the ground.

Floyd's death prompted protests across the metro area that evolved into rioting, arson and looting last week, a pattern that has repeated itself in cities across the nation. The violence in the Twin Cities has subsided, but the outrage against Floyd's treatment caught on video - a white officer's knee on his neck for minutes until he went limp - has not ebbed, underscoring the moment as a flashpoint for race relations.

While Tuesday's action by the Human Rights Department was hooked on Floyd's death, the investigation will amount to a strip search of the culture of the entire police force for the past decade, according to a picture painted by officials.

"This investigation is different," Human Rights Commissioner Rebecca Lucero said, drawing a distinction between ongoing probes, such as the criminal investigation of the officers involved, the murder prosecution by Attorney General Kieth Ellison of former officer Derek Chauvin, and a federal civil rights inquiry into the specific events surrounding Floyd's death. "This is looking at the system."

The leverage Lucero has is the Minnesota Human Rights Act, a 50-year-old statute that forms the bedrock of the state's legal stand against racial discrimination. The hammer that could ultimately be swung would be a court order, or a consent decree between the state and Minneapolis, that would compel - with the force of law - the police department to make what Lucero described as "structural change."

State opens wide-ranging probe of 10 years of Minneapolis PD race relations

Lucero did not provide a timeline for how long the process might take. It's unclear whether the state has ever attempted such reform at such a large and politically potent organization. In other jurisdictions where similar actions have been taken, the process often takes more than a year, but the effects can last decades under the watchful eye of advocates with the ability to get action enforced by a judge.

In what amounts to a statement of probable cause, Lucero wrote that the charge of discrimination was on the basis of race. Floyd was black, and Chauvin, who knelt on his neck for more than eight minutes, is white.

But she also wrote there is sufficient information to investigate whether the Minneapolis Police Department "utilizes systemic discriminatory patterns or practices towards people of color, specifically Black community members, on the basis of race and in the area of public services."

PROBE WELCOMED

Tuesday's announcement was welcomed by some who have long sought structural and cultural change in not just the Minneapolis Police Department, but in law enforcement agencies across the state.

Justin Terrell, executive director of the Council for Minnesotans of African Heritage, said the probe is "exactly what this community needs" following what he described as "years of gross violations."

However, he cautioned, promises of reform have been made before, and yet, African-Americans still feel profiled, oppressed and fundamentally unsafe at the hands of police. "This is not the end of the fight," he said in a news conference that was led by Walz to announce the news.

Benjamin Crump, the attorney representing the Floyd family, tweeted in all caps that the announcement was "very significant!"

The state's most powerful Republican, state Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake, said he supports the investigation.

"As Commissioner Lucero said, Minnesota has some of the strongest human rights laws in the country, and a process in place to enforce them," Gazelka said in a statement. "This is a positive step to allow transparency to help restore trust."

Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo released the following statement: "The sworn and civilian members of the Minneapolis Police Department remain steadfast in recognizing that service is honorable, and it requires building genuine and authentic relationships with all communities. The authority given to us by the community comes with great responsibility and obligation to always have their best interest at heart. With the assistance of the State Human Rights Commission, we can take an honest examination at systemic barriers that have prevented us from reaching our greatest potential for those we serve."

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey welcomed the state's action.

"For our city to begin healing, we need to deliver justice for George Floyd and his family and enact deep, meaningful policing reforms," Frey said in a statement. "For years in Minneapolis, police chiefs and elected officials committed to change have been thwarted by police union protections and laws that severely limit accountability among police departments. I welcome today's announcement because breaking through those persistent barriers, shifting the culture of policing, and addressing systemic racism will require all of us working hand-in-hand."

State opens wide-ranging probe of 10 years of Minneapolis PD race relations

Minneapolis police union president Bob Kroll could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

UNION PRESIDENT TARGETED

While the investigation will broadly look at the department's policies, procedures and practices over the past decade, several key areas are likely to be probed: use of force training and techniques, the effect of not requiring officers to live in the city, the way officers are disciplined, how complaints are handled, whether there is enough civilian oversight of the department, and the prospect of "integrity standards" for officers, to name a few.

And then there's the politics, culture and tactics of the roughly 800-strong police union, which defends officers accused of misconduct.

Kroll, the outspoken leader of the union who has served since 2015, was the target of growing calls to resign this week.

On Tuesday, Minnesota AFL-CIO President Bill McCarthy said Kroll "has failed the Labor Movement and the residents of Minneapolis. Bob Kroll has a long history of bigoted remarks and complaints of violence made against him. As union President, he antagonizes and disparages members of the Black community."

The Minnesota Nurses Association joined that call Wednesday.

Education Minnesota, the state's largest teachers union, also called for Kroll to "resign or be removed by his membership."

On Monday, former Minneapolis Police Chief Janeé Harteau tweeted a letter that Kroll wrote to members of the police union and she wrote, "A disgrace to the badge! This is the battle that myself and others have been fighting against. Bob Kroll turn in your badge!"

Kroll wrote in his letter about the hard work of officers during "what everyone except us refuses to call a riot."

"The politicians are to blame and you are the scapegoats," Kroll wrote to officers.

PUBLIC INPUT SOUGHT

Walz and Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan said that while reforms are long-term, they're directly tied to the mass demonstrations of recent days. As they spoke Tuesday, thousands peacefully gathered not far away on the lawn in front of the state Capitol in one of what has become a roving cycle of large gatherings seeking justice for Floyd and an end to needless police killings of black men.

Walz put it this way: "All of us have come to understand we're not gonna restore peace on our streets by having a bigger group of National Guard show up. We're not gonna establish peace on our streets by keeping a curfew in place all the time. We're going to establish peace on our streets when we address the systemic issues that caused it in the first place."

People with information for the investigation into the Minneapolis Police Department are being asked to contact the Department of Human Rights at 651-539-1100 or mn.gov/mdhr.

State opens wide-ranging probe of 10 years of Minneapolis PD race relations

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights' Minnesota State Advisory Committee issued a report in 2018, calling for Minneapolis police to undergo training in use of force, de-escalation and mental health interventions. The findings and recommendations were shared with Minnesota federal and state lawmakers, and law enforcement organizations, according to the commission.

The commission's Minnesota advisory committee is holding a public meeting on Friday from noon to 1:30 p.m., which people can call into at 800-367-2403 and use confirmation code 6816733; there will be an open public comment period during the meeting. People can also send written submissions to callen@usccr.gov.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CLV. SPORTS' VOICES OF OUTRAGE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: SPORTS; Pg. 1CLength: 1381 wordsByline: MICHAEL RAND; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Athletes react with sadness, indignation over George Floyd's deathBody

Thirty years ago, as his stardom reached dramatic heights, Michael Jordan uttered a line that has stuck with him as a symbol of his reticence toward taking political stands.

"Republicans buy sneakers, too," Jordan said in 1990, in the midst of a politically contentious North Carolina Senate race.

The implication wasn't hard to parse: By choosing sides on an issue, Jordan risked jeopardizing the support, financial or otherwise, of those who disagreed with his stance.

It was striking then to see Jordan break from his own history Sunday to offer thoughts on last week's death of George Floyd in the custody of Minneapolis police and the ensuing protests demanding justice around the world.

"I am deeply saddened, truly pained and plain angry," Jordan said in a statement. "I stand with those who are calling out the ingrained racism and violence toward people of color in our country. We have had enough."

Jordan's comments were measured to be sure, but they are part of an overall sports response that seems to be changing in diversity and tone - as well, perhaps, as philosophy.

While speaking out a generation ago might have been deemed harmful to a brand, staying silent as a sports figure or team during a time of national crisis in 2020 can create an impression of being complacent at best and complicit at worst.

That's not to say, though, that what's being said in the wake of Floyd's death is merely an attempt to placate fans - even if some statements from teams and leagues read that way.

More than a moment

SPORTS' VOICES OF OUTRAGE

The breadth and passion of comments - and in many cases, actions - from athletes of all colors suggest more of a movement than a mere moment across sports.

Among the many voices that registered as both authentic and perhaps unexpected included that of the NHL's Blake Wheeler - a Twin Cities native who posted an impassioned message that examined his own white privilege.

"We need to stand with the black community and fundamentally change how the leadership in this country has dealt with racism," the Winnipeg Jets forward wrote Saturday on Twitter. "I'm sorry it has taken this long, but I'm hopeful that we can change this NOW."

NASCAR driver Ty Dillon posted a similar message on Instagram, while retired baseball star Dale Murphy posed a series of tweets about his son being shot in the eye with a rubber bullet by police during a protest in Denver.

"If you're a beneficiary of systemic racism, then you will not be able to dismantle it at no cost to yourself," Murphy wrote. "You will have to put yourself at risk. It might not always result in being physically attacked, but it will require you to make yourself vulnerable."

Countless leagues and teams have offered statements, but the NBA's Washington Wizards late Sunday released what it called a unified statement from players that didn't mince words. "We will no longer tolerate the assassination of people of color in this country," it read in part, while also promising to take a stand against government leaders and law enforcement.

The Wizards statement ended: "We will no longer shut up and dribble," citing the phrase Fox News host Laura Ingraham used in a critique of LeBron James in 2018.

United they stand

Indeed, it seems more players are speaking out - with James looming large among them. He has been active on both Instagram and Twitter, where combined he has more than 110 million followers, in condemning violence and elevating images of peaceful protests.

Perhaps even more notably, several athletes not only have been active on social media but they have been in the thick of protests and activism themselves.

Former NBA player Stephen Jackson was in Minneapolis last week at a rally for social justice also attended by Timberwolves star Karl-Anthony Towns. Celtics players Enes Kanter and Jaylen Brown made long drives - one to Boston, one to Atlanta - to participate in protests.

"We stand with our players, employees, partners, and fans in being committed to championing the change we need," the Celtics said in a statement Sunday.

Activism in sports is nothing new, of course. But our expectation of it - and the comfort level of sports figures in engaging in it - is perhaps shifting.

Even recently, as part of the 10-part "The Last Dance" documentary, Jordan was asked about his role.

"I do commend Muhammad Ali for standing up for what he believed in. But I never thought of myself as an activist. I thought of myself as a basketball player," Jordan said. "I wasn't a politician when I was playing my sport. I was focused on my craft. Was that selfish? Probably. But that was my energy. That's where my energy was."

SPORTS' VOICES OF OUTRAGE

And now?

"Our unified voice needs to put pressure on our leaders to change our laws, or else we need to use our vote to create systemic change," Jordan said Sunday. "Every one of us needs to be part of the solution, and we must work together to ensure justice for all."

What they're saying

A sampling of reaction from around the sports world to George Floyd's death and protests demanding justice and reform:

- Gophers athletic director Mark Coyle, in a statement: "I have spent the last week listening to our student-athletes and staff. They are hurting over the indefensible killing of Mr. Floyd. They are also committed to enacting change, and many of them have participated in the numerous peaceful protests and community and charitable efforts in the Twin Cities. I applaud them for using their voice and actions in a positive way."

- Timberwolves guard Josh Okogie, in a Star Tribune interview: "I hear our cries and it's just hard because as I don't condone violence, at the same time, you can't push people to the wall and expect them not to fight back. I think that's just a display of what we're seeing right now."

- Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson, in a statement: "We cannot continue to ignore racism as if it has ended, or never happened. The continual violence inflicted upon blacks and people of color must stop. We need a change now. We need love. We need compassion. We need grace and forgiveness even in the midst of the pain. We need true leadership. We need justice. We need equality."

- Twins manager Rocco Baldelli, on Twitter: "George Floyd should be breathing right now. We have a lot of progress to make. A lot. Remember his name. Remember what happened."

- Twins outfielder Byron Buxton, on Instagram: "It's unbearable to even think about what's happening in our city and throughout the country, but things have to CHANGE. African Americans have been slaughtered left and right for nothing more than the color of our skin. That is reality and it has been ignored far too long. DEMAND PROGRESS - DEMAND JUSTICE for George Floyd."

- Islanders forward Anders Lee, a former Edina High School star, on Twitter: "I will never fully understand because of the color of my skin, but I have an opportunity to make a difference. I stand for anti-racism. I stand for the rights of black people in America, so we can all be equal. I stand alongside the black community through this difficult time and in the future. I stand for the justice of George Floyd and the countless others who have been killed by racism. Black Lives Matter."

- The NHL, in a statement: "As protests in both the United States and Canada in recent days have focused attention upon racial injustice for the Black community, the NHL stands with all those who are working to achieve a racially just society, and against all those who perpetuate and uphold racism, hatred, bigotry and violence."

- Spurs coach Gregg Popovich, to thenation.com: "The thing that strikes me is that we all see this police violence and racism, and we've seen it all before, but nothing changes. That's why these protests have been so explosive. But without leadership and an understanding of what the problem is, there will never be change. And white Americans have avoided reckoning with this problem forever, because it's been our privilege to be able to avoid it. That also has to change."

SPORTS' VOICES OF OUTRAGE

· Gophers receiver Rashod Bateman, on Twitter, along with a team photo: "No matter what happens, I will continue to LOVE all kind because I have witnessed how beautiful it is when it all clicks. Moving forward, all of my brothers and sisters in this photo will FIGHT for each other and everyone else who wants to better themselves and others."

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

Justice: 'A long road'

ARTICLE CLVI. JUSTICE: 'A LONG ROAD'

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1127 wordsByline: LIZ NAVRATIL; PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: MEDICAL EXAMINER: FLOYD DEATH HOMICIDE // Passions high, violence ebbs in St. Paul as Trump seeks 'domination'Body

Two autopsy results - one requested by George Floyd's family and the other from Hennepin County - agree that his death is a homicide but disagree over exactly what killed him.

During a news conference Monday afternoon, two doctors hired by the Floyd family to do a private autopsy said they believe he died of asphyxia, which happens when oxygen flow is cut off, causing the brain and other organs to stop working.

"We believe truth will help lead to justice and so, despite how painful these autopsy findings are, especially for George Floyd's family, we think it is essential that the truth comes out about the manner and the exact manner and science as to how George Floyd was killed," Benjamin Crump, an attorney for the Floyd family, told reporters.

Hours later, the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office issued its final public report, stating that Floyd died as a result of "cardiopulmonary arrest complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint, and neck compression." A spokesperson for the office, citing Minnesota laws, said they could not discuss that cause of death further.

The report noted that Floyd "experienced a cardiopulmonary arrest while being restrained by law enforcement officer(s)."

It also listed "arteriosclerotic and hypertensive heart disease," as well as fentanyl intoxication and recent methamphetamine use as "other significant conditions."

It was the most extensive description released yet of the autopsy performed by the Medical Examiner's Office on the 46-year-old Floyd, who died on May 25 after his curbside detention at E. 38th Street and S. Chicago Avenue by officers who suspected him of passing fake currency at a store.

Derek Chauvin, who was seen on video pinning his knee on Floyd's neck, was fired from the force and has been charged with third-degree murder (up to 25 years in prison) and second-degree manslaughter (up to 10 years in prison).

Three other officers who were present were also fired but had not been charged as of Monday evening.

It is too early to tell exactly what significance, if any, the differing findings could play in Chauvin's case.

"I don't even know how this goes," said Bradford Colbert, a practitioner in residence at Mitchell Hamline School of Law. "It's not exactly clear to me, because in a criminal case, it's the state vs. the defendant.

Theoretically, the victim does not have the right to be involved. That's how it rolls."

Either a prosecutor or a defense attorney could choose to enter the results of the family's autopsy into evidence at a criminal trial, but neither would be required to do so, Colbert said.

The results could also be used in a civil trial, if Floyd's family decides to sue.

Little has been publicly released about how the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office came to its conclusion on Floyd's cause of death.

In a criminal complaint supporting the charges against Chauvin, investigators wrote that "the autopsy revealed no physical findings that support a diagnosis of traumatic asphyxia or strangulation."

It also noted there were "underlying health conditions, including coronary artery disease and hypertensive heart disease."

While attorneys and doctors hired by the Floyd family did not release their written autopsy reports, saying they were still awaiting some additional results, they did describe their findings in some detail.

To come to their conclusions, they said they viewed the public videos of Floyd being pinned by Chauvin, as well as a report put together by EMT staff who worked on Floyd and examined the parts of his body to which they had access.

"The compressive pressure of the neck and back are not seen at autopsy because the pressure has been released by the time the body comes to the medical examiner's office," said Dr. Michael Baden, a forensic pathologist who performed an autopsy on behalf of the Floyd family.

"It can only be seen - serious compressive pressure on the neck and back can only be seen while the pressure is being applied or when, as in this instance, it is captured on video."

Baden said he believes that while Floyd was officially pronounced dead later, he actually died "after about 4 or 5 minutes."

Court documents filed in Chauvin's case say Floyd was pulled out of a squad car at 8:19:38 p.m., stopped moving at 8:24:24 p.m. and at 8:25:31 p.m., video "appears to show Mr. Floyd ceasing to breathe or speak."

Crump, the Floyd family attorney, said an EMT report they obtained shows that medics "performed pulse check several times, finding none, and delivered one shock ... but George's condition did not change. They delivered him to the hospital, continued ventilation, but that last report was the patient was still pulseless. The ambulance was the hearse."

Baden said that they found "rough abrasions" on Floyd's left eye and left cheek "and a little bit in the front, on the nose and mouth areas." He said they also found "scrape marks on the back side of his left shoulder."

Preliminary findings released through the attorneys later in the day indicated that the doctors also found a hemorrhage "over the vertebral bodies and in the cervical region," as well as on the outside of the carotid artery and in the wrists and forearms.

"The cause of death, in my opinion, is asphyxia due to compression of the neck," Baden said.

Baden and his colleague, Dr. Allecia Wilson, disputed the medical examiner's findings of heart disease - with Baden going so far as to say, "I wish I had the same coronary arteries that Mr. Floyd had that we saw at the autopsy."

Wilson noted that second autopsies have some limitations.

"Certain parts of the organs have been retained by the original pathologist," she said, though she didn't note which ones.

In their public statements, the Floyd family's attorneys and doctors said they believe that pressures on both his neck and his back caused Floyd's death.

Paperwork filed in Chauvin's case indicates that officer J. Alexander Kueng "held Mr. Floyd's back" and officer Thomas Lane "held his legs." A fourth officer, Tou Thao, was seen on video standing nearby while Chauvin's knee was on Floyd's neck.

Attorneys for the four fired officers either declined to speak about the family's autopsy findings or were unavailable to comment.

Attorneys for the Floyd family welcomed the appointment of Attorney General Keith Ellison to prosecute the case and said they hope he will consider a first-degree murder charge for Chauvin. Co-counsel Antonio Romanucci called for charges for the other officers as well. Not only was Chauvin's knee on Floyd's neck, Romanucci said, "but so was the weight of the other two police officers on his back. ... That makes all of those officers on scene criminally liable and, without a doubt, civilly responsible."

Liz Navratil · 612-673-4994

Paul Walsh · 612-968-2483

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

ARTICLE CLVII. BCA BEGINS INQUIRY INTO FLOYD KILLING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 6ALength: 905 wordsByline: LIBOR JANY; STAFF WRITER; CHAO XIONG; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

State investigators looking into the killing of George Floyd have requested the training records of all the former Minneapolis officers who were present, as well as access to surveillance footage that may have captured the encounter that sparked massive protests and fresh calls for reform of the city's police force.

In building their case against Derek Chauvin, the since-fired Minneapolis police officer who is charged with Floyd's death, special agents from the state Bureau of Criminal Apprehension (BCA) sought access to hospital and ambulance records, security camera footage from the hospital where Floyd died and records of the officers' de-escalation and first aid training.

"Part of the scope of the investigation is to examine the officers' use of force, and to corroborate statements of witnesses and officers," BCA special agent Matthew Lund wrote in a search warrant affidavit. "Therefore, documented verification is needed of the injuries and attempted medical intervention."

The BCA, which investigates most police shootings and in-custody deaths, made similar requests in the killing of Justine Ruszczyk Damond.

"As a part of a thorough investigation, BCA Agents are requesting authorization to obtain personnel files to include pre-employment psychological records, all training records, and internal affairs files for the above listed officers," Lund wrote in another warrant. Investigators also sought access to the officers' lockers at the Third Precinct station.

Chauvin was charged Friday with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter, after he was recorded kneeling on Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes, ignoring the handcuffed man's pleas that he couldn't breathe. A bystander recorded the encounter at E. 38th Street and Chicago Avenue on Facebook Live, where it has been viewed countless times.

What started as peaceful protests after the video spread has since erupted into rioting nationwide; dozens of buildings in Minnesota were looted or torched. Gov. Tim Walz called in the Minnesota National Guard to help quell the unrest. The protests prompted nighttime curfew orders in the Twin Cities and several other cities.

BCA begins inquiry into Floyd killing

Chauvin is the first white officer in Minnesota to be criminally prosecuted in the death of a black civilian. The maximum sentence for third-degree murder is 25 years; the maximum for second-degree manslaughter is 10 years. The other officers involved - Tou Thao, Thomas Lane and J Alexander Kueng - were also fired but have not been charged.

According to the criminal complaint against Chauvin, police were called after Floyd was suspected of passing a fake $20 bill at the Cup Foods convenience store. Lane and Kueng approached Floyd, who was in a Mercedes-Benz with two other people. At some point, Chauvin and Thao pulled up to the scene. After ordering him out of the car, police were leading the handcuffed Floyd to a squad when he collapsed, and three of the officers got on top of him, authorities say. He died later at HCMC. The hospital has also been asked to turn over all video from its ER and the operating room from the time when Floyd was brought in, court filings show.

Lund filed a search warrant affidavit Monday afternoon for "all training records, specifically related to use of force, crowd control, crisis intervention/de-escalation and first aid" for the four officers.

He also sought the names of all instructors from Minneapolis police or externally who taught the topics to the officers, and copies of all training materials.

"As part of a thorough investigation, BCA agents are seeking these documents to provide a written record to the officers [sic] level of training and also to document techniques received during training," the affidavit said.

Authorities also requested access to Cup Foods' surveillance footage. A nearby restaurant, Dragon Wok, also had cameras that may have captured part of the incident.

Earlier this week, the FBI asked any witnesses who recorded footage of the encounter to turn it over to investigators.

In an unrelated incident, police are investigating the possible theft of a Minneapolis police bulletproof vest from the Third Precinct, which last week was overrun and torched by rioters. An investigator wrote in a search warrant affidavit that police received a tip that a man was sending pictures from his cellphone showing himself in a photo wearing the vest.

"The office where the Police Vest was taken from, contained items that include ... classified case files of gang members, classified information on ongoing criminal cases, property such as Police radios/charges/GPS trackers, vehicle keys, a safe, scales, police bags, police vests, police jackets, police uniforms, documents containing police information/reports, etc.," the affidavit read.

Police sought the warrant to search a 38-year-old suspect's home and workplace in northeast Minneapolis. Court documents show that the warrant was executed and nothing was taken.

According to the affidavit, the video posted online allegedly showed the man wearing a vest emblazoned with the name of Minneapolis police officer J.B. Werner while standing next to a wall with "dozens of tools hanging on the wall."

BCA begins inquiry into Floyd killing

Jeff Werner, a decorated 20-year veteran in the department, worked in the weapons unit, which works closely with the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

Libor Jany · 612-673-4064 Twitter: @StribJany

Chao Xiong · 612-673-4391 Twitter: @ChaoStrib

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CLVIII. BROTHER OF GEORGE FLOYD VISITS SITE OF HIS DEATH, CALLS FOR PEACE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 902 wordsByline: Nick FerraroHighlight: When Terrence Floyd finally made it to the spot Monday afternoon where his brother died a week earlier, he collapsed to one knee and dropped his head. He cried, and his delegation from Brooklyn, N.Y., consoled him. The sound of clicking cameras by media from across the world soon was drowned out by chants from [...]Body

When Terrence Floyd finally made it to the spot Monday afternoon where his brother died a week earlier, he collapsed to one knee and dropped his head. He cried, and his delegation from Brooklyn, N.Y., consoled him.

The sound of clicking cameras by media from across the world soon was drowned out by chants from many of the hundreds of people who gathered at Cup Foods on Chicago Avenue and 38th Street in Minneapolis.

"What's his name?" someone from the crowd yelled. "George Floyd!" they yelled back.

Terrence Floyd raised his gloved hand to his heart, patted it twice and touched the Chicago Avenue pavement where his 46-year-old older brother died May 25 after being pinned facedown by three Minneapolis police officers for nearly nine minutes, despite his pleas to stop and that he couldn't breathe. A fourth officer stood guard.

The death sparked protests and violent rioting and looting in Minneapolis and St. Paul and other cities across the United States and the world.

On Monday, Terrence Floyd grabbed a megaphone - and called for peace.

"Hello," said Floyd, who was wearing a plain white t-shirt, a New York Yankees baseball cap and a cloth facemask with the words, "We can't breathe" and a picture of his brother. "I understand you all are upset, but like it was already said, I doubt you all are half as upset as I am.

"So if I'm not over here wilding out, if I'm not over here blowing up stuff and if I'm not over here messing up my community then what are you all doing? You are all doing nothing, because that's not going to bring my brother back all at all."

Brother of George Floyd visits site of his death, calls for peace

George Floyd's younger brother Terrence Floyd of Brooklyn on Monday afternoon ...
pic.twitter.com/YuUcKApUzt

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress) June 2, 2020

The Floyd family is a peaceful family, he said. He urged the crowd to "do this another way" and to vote.

"Let's stop thinking that our voice doesn't matter," he said. "Educate yourself and know who you're voting for."

He said his brother, who moved to Minneapolis from Houston, "loved it here," and was working as a truck driver.

"He was good," his brother said, "so I highly doubt ... no - I know he would not want you all to be doing this. I'm not saying the people here ... the people who are doing this."

Since Floyd's death, the area around Cup Foods has become a memorial for him and a place for people to gather in peace and demand a stop to death at the hands of police officers. Hundreds of flower bouquets and handmade signs with messages and drawings of Floyd have been placed at the site.

On Monday, before and after Floyd's brother spoke to the crowd, the atmosphere was lively and peaceful. People offered up free water and food for anyone to take.

A group of Native Americans held a prayer circle and called for healing and unity. Jingle dress dancers captured the attention of the crowd.

At Worldwide Outreach For Christ Ministries, located kitty-corner from Cup Foods, church members were busy carrying donated bags of groceries, diapers and basic household necessities from the basement of the building to the parking lot for people to take.

"We have a lot of people throughout this community who care about the people who are here," said Kim Hollman, church administrator. "And they are giving from the abundance of their hearts and making sure that there is no one who is going to go hungry because of the unfortunate situation with all the stores being looted and closed. So we're trying to do as much as we can as a church to give back to the community."

On 38th Street, Glen Walton and his family and friends grilled hot dogs, hamburgers and chicken sausages and gave them away for free to anyone who was hungry. He paid for the food himself and by donations from others.

The 59-year-old Washburn High School graduate grew up four blocks away, but now lives in North Minneapolis. He said he wants to "lift up the community."

"We have hungry people out here," said Walton, who works as an arborist for the city of Minneapolis. "I've been out here since Tuesday. We're spreading love - that's what we need now - and also to spread the message that we absolutely want justice for George Floyd."

His mother, Inez Walton, helped pass out the food.

"This was all his idea," she said. "I'm proud of him."

Brother of George Floyd visits site of his death, calls for peace

She said the video of George Floyd on the ground "absolutely broke my heart, especially when he asked for his momma."

Terrence Floyd flew to Minneapolis from New York with Rev. Kevin McCall and civil rights lawyer Sanford Rubenstein, among others. McCall told the crowd Monday that they came with one message.

"We're sending a message to people all over this country to stop looting and throw up the peace sign," he said. "The power is in the numbers. Don't stop protesting, but throw up the peace sign."

Former Minneapolis Police Officer Derek Chauvin, who was recorded on video with his knee on George Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes, was charged last week with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter and is currently in custody at the Minnesota Correctional Facility - Oak Park Heights. The other three officers have been fired, but not charged, despite demands from protesters and others, including McCall on Monday.

"The family has a long road ahead for justice. But just because we're doing it peacefully, that doesn't mean we don't want all four of the officers locked up," McCall said, followed by applause and cheers. "We will not rest until they get locked up."

Graphic

George Floyd's brother Terrence Floyd, in white, collapses to his knees at the spot where where his brother George Floyd, encountered police and died while in their custody, before speaking at a rally in front of the Cup Foods, on Chicago Ave. S. and 38th St. in Minneapolis, on the one-week anniversary of his brother's death, Monday, June 1, 2020. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

People rally Monday, June 1, 2020 at the site where George Floyd encountered police and died while in their custody on Memorial Day, May 25, in front of the Cup Foods on Chicago Ave. S. and 38th St. in Minneapolis, the one-week anniversary of his Floyd's death. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Terrence Floyd, at center in white, collapses to his knees at the spot where his brother George Floyd, encountered police and died while in their custody, before speaking at a rally in front of the Cup Foods on Chicago Ave. S. and 38th St. in Minneapolis, on the one-week anniversary of his brother's death, Monday, June 1, 2020. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Terrence Floyd, right, is overcome with emotion before speaking at a rally in front of the Cup Foods, on Chicago Ave. S. and 38th St. in Minneapolis, on the one-week anniversary of his brother's death, Monday, June 1, 2020. His brother George Floyd, encountered police and died while in their custody at the location on Memorial Day, May 25. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Man who drove semi into Minneapolis protest over death of George Floyd to be released from jail

ARTICLE CLIX. MAN WHO DROVE SEMI INTO MINNEAPOLIS PROTEST OVER DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD TO BE RELEASED FROM JAIL

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 344 words

Byline: Betsy Helfand

Highlight: Truck driver Bogdan Vechirko, who drove into a crowd of protesters Sunday on the Interstate 35W bridge in Minneapolis, will be released from jail. His case has been deferred, pending further investigation, Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman announced Tuesday. Vechirko, 35 of Otsego, was arrested after driving his tanker into a crowd of people who [...]

Body

Truck driver Bogdan Vechirko, who drove into a crowd of protesters Sunday on the Interstate 35W bridge in Minneapolis, will be released from jail.

His case has been deferred, pending further investigation, Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman announced Tuesday.

Vechirko, 35 of Otsego, was arrested after driving his tanker into a crowd of people who had been protesting for justice for George Floyd, who died in police custody in Minneapolis last week. Vechirko was dragged from his truck by angry protesters and briefly taken to a hospital before being booked into the Hennepin County Jail. No protesters were seriously injured in the incident in the northbound lanes of I-35W at the Mississippi River near downtown.

"From what we can tell from our interviews ... we don't have any information that makes this seem like an intentional act," Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said previously.

State officials said Vechirko had already been on the freeway system when it started being barricaded ahead of an evening shutdown to quell the civil unrest that had followed Floyd's death. Officials have said that they do not believe that Vechirko meant to intentionally injure protesters, though he was speeding at the time of the incident.

"He knew the protest was going on, but it doesn't appear that he was trying to intercept the protest," Harrington said.

Harrington said that Vechirko "panicked" when he saw the crowd and then slammed on the brakes when he saw a woman on a bicycle fall down in front of him, skidding until the tanker stopped.

Man who drove semi into Minneapolis protest over death of George Floyd to be released from jail

According to the Hennepin County attorney's office, investigators are "in the process of gathering additional information to aid in the charging decision."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Protesters hand over to the police the driver of a tanker truck after he drove into hundreds of protesters marching on 35W north bound highway during a protest against the death in Minneapolis police custody of George Floyd, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, U.S. May 31, 2020. REUTERS/Eric Miller TPX IMAGES OF THE DAY - RC210H9WFCSA

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Some hail, some bash Ellison role in Floyd case

ARTICLE CLX. SOME HAIL, SOME BASH ELLISON ROLE IN FLOYD CASE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1B

Length: 955 words

Byline: STEPHEN MONTEMAYOR; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: Long an outspoken critic of police misconduct, the AG will oversee prosecution in the racially charged case.

Body

Keith Ellison took over the Minnesota Attorney General's Office last year vowing to spend more time helping state attorneys try complex cases. He also helped lead a yearlong study into the root causes of deadly police encounters - like the one that took George Floyd's life in Minneapolis last week.

The two agendas converged Sunday when Gov. Tim Walz asked Ellison to take over the prosecution of Derek Chauvin, a fired white officer accused of choking Floyd, an unarmed black man, with a knee to his neck. Now, one of the nation's loudest civil rights voices is at the center of its most intense police brutality case in decades.

The move came after six days of protests over Floyd's death, including demands for Chauvin's immediate arrest and prosecution. Among the protest targets was Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman, who filed the murder charges after five days. But Floyd's family and some prominent supporters, including members of the Minneapolis City Council, wanted a change. After several days of deliberation, Walz announced Sunday that Ellison, a former defense lawyer and congressman, would take over the case.

If there was political pressure in the high-profile case, state Sen. Jeff Hayden, a Minneapolis Democrat who represents the area where Floyd was killed, said it came "directly from the constituents." He said some members of the community have lost faith in Freeman's office, whose record of prosecuting police officers comes down to the recent conviction of Mohamed Noor, a black officer in the 2017 shooting of a white woman who had called 911 for help. Many protesters also were outraged that Freeman didn't bring more serious murder charges against Chauvin - or bring any charges so far against the other three officers involved in Floyd's arrest.

"I know Mike very well; I don't think he's a bad person," said Hayden, who wants police reform to be a priority when the Legislature returns this month for a special session. "But I think he's very much out of touch with the community that he serves. I think you saw that play out in his news conference when he, in a very boisterous and braggadocious way, argued that he is the only person to put a cop in jail - and that cop happened to be a person of African descent."

Some hail, some bash Ellison role in Floyd case

Freeman's only statement since the unusual step of putting Ellison in charge has been that he had asked for Ellison's help. "There have been recent developments in the facts of the case where the help and expertise of the attorney general would be valuable," Freeman said.

A spokesperson for Freeman's office referred questions Monday to the Attorney General's Office. An attorney for Chauvin also declined to comment Monday.

The case surrounding Floyd also has highlighted the work Ellison and Minnesota Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington have led over the past year with a task force on police brutality. Hayden and other DFL lawmakers are now pressing for a special session of the Minnesota Legislature to take up the panel's recommendations, which had been shelved during the Legislature's regular session.

The 16-member group drew on law enforcement and community leaders - including Clarence Castile, whose nephew Philando Castile was killed during a traffic stop in Falcon Heights in 2016. Freeman at one point anchored a panel with Ramsey County Attorney John Choi, and both voiced a willingness to see the attorney general create a special prosecutor unit to handle police brutality cases.

Expanding the attorney general's footprint in criminal law was an early priority for Ellison, said Richard Allyn, a Minneapolis attorney and former supervisor who helped manage Ellison's transition into the office.

Ellison is not expected to try Chauvin personally. But Allyn and Hayden both pointed to his extensive litigation experience as a defense attorney in Minneapolis before his political career.

"He is probably the best qualified AG that I've seen in Minnesota history in terms of being able to analyze criminal law issues, prosecution issues, defense issues - because he did it so long at the Legal Rights Center," Allyn said.

Peter Wold, an attorney who represented Noor, the fired officer convicted in the 2017 killing of Justine Ruszczyk Damond, called Ellison's appointment rare. But he added he was surprised it hadn't happened sooner.

"Certainly in Minnesota it is unusual, but I don't think it should be," Wold said. "The County Attorney's Office is dealing with their own police force basically, or a police force they need to rely on from time to time. And I'm surprised it hasn't happened more often."

But some activists say Walz's move doesn't go far enough. Michelle Gross, president of Communities United Against Police Brutality, helped lead a protest outside Walz's residence on Monday to urge the governor to appoint a "special prosecutor not affiliated with the Hennepin County prosecutor's office or the Attorney General's Office because we have no faith in these agencies to vigorously prosecute police officers given their past failures."

One of the state's top Republicans also is opposed. Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake, said he favors leaving prosecutions in the hands of county attorneys. He said he's "particularly opposed" to Ellison taking over the case, citing a past photo of Ellison with a book about far-left "Antifa" activists who often engage in violent confrontations with neo-Nazis. Ellison on Sunday dismissed the photo as "a complete diversion."

Some hail, some bash Ellison role in Floyd case

Hayden argued that Ellison was uniquely qualified. "He has always been fighting, even before he was admitted to the bar. Even before he graduated. He was the young spokesperson [against] police brutality," Hayden said.

Stephen Montemayor · 612-673-1755

Twitter: @smontemayor

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CLXI. SOCIAL MEDIA, MUSIC WORLD GO DARK FOR BLACK OUT TUESDAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 814 words

Byline: Mesfin Fekadu

Highlight: Though Black Out Tuesday was originally organized by the music community, the social media world also went dark in support of the Black Lives Matter movement, joining voices around the world outraged by the killings of black people in the U.S.

Body

NEW YORK - Though Black Out Tuesday was originally organized by the music community, the social media world also went dark in support of the Black Lives Matter movement, joining voices around the world outraged by the killings of black people in the U.S.

Instagram and Twitter accounts, from top record labels to everyday people, were full of black squares posted in response to the deaths of George Floyd, Ahmaud Arbery and Breonna Taylor.

Among those joining in was Amalia Hertel of St. Paul.

"I don't generally partake in social media trends, and don't think they're effective," the Instagram user said. "It was also mostly my white friends doing it, too."

"But after scrolling a bit I saw that one of the girls I grew up next door to, who is black, had done it, and I thought 'if this makes her feel even a little less alone, it's worth it,'" Hertel said.

Most of the captions were blank, though some posted #TheShowMustBePaused, black heart emojis or encouraged people to vote Tuesday with seven states and the District of Columbia are hosting the largest slate of presidential primary elections in almost three months.

Rihanna, Alicia Keys, Radiohead, Coldplay, Kelly Rowland, Beastie Boys and were among the celebrities to join Black Out Tuesday on social media.

"I won't be posting on social media and I ask you all to do the same," Britney Spears tweeted. "We should use the time away from our devices to focus on what we can do to make the world a better place for ALL of us !!!!!"

Spotify blacked out the artwork for several of its popular playlists, including RapCaviar and Today's Top Hits, simply writing "Black lives matter." as its description. The streaming service also put its Black

Social media, music world go dark for Black Out Tuesday

Lives Matter playlist on its front page, featuring songs like James Brown's "Say It Loud - I'm Black and I'm Proud," N.W.A.'s "(Expletive) the Police," Sam Cooke's "A Change Is Gonna Come" and Childish Gambino's "This Is America."

The opening pages of Apple Music and iTunes focused on supporting Black Lives Matter, and SiriusXM said it will be silencing its music channels for three minutes at 3 p.m. EDT in tribute to "all of the countless victims of racism."

The company said it "will continue to amplify Black voices by being a space where Black artists showcase their music and talents, and by carrying the message that racism will not be tolerated."

Some on social media questioned if posting black squares would divert attention away from posts about the Black Lives Matter movement.

"this is the 4th completely different flyer i've seen for it," Grammy-nominated singer Kehlani tweeted about Black Out Tuesday. "'this is the only one without the saying go completely silent for a day in solidarity. the messages are mixed across the board and i really hope it doesn't have a negative effect."

When musician Dillon Francis posted that the hashtag for Black Lives Matter was blank on Instagram because users were posting black squares, rapper Lil Nas X responded with: "this is not helping us. bro who the (expletive) thought of this?? ppl need to see what's going on."

Emma Watson posted three white squares followed by three black squares with captions reading #blackouttuesday and #amplifyblackvoices on her Instagram account to show her support Tuesday. But she was heavily criticized, and began to trend on Twitter, for adding white borders around her black squares to match the aesthetic of her Instagram page. Others called the actress out for speaking out too late about Black Lives Matter and for not including links to guide users on where they can learn more information about the cause or donate to it.

Daily Distraction: AirJamz guitar pick lets you shred your worries away \(no guitar required\) Daily Distraction: Dial up your AirPods' audio quality with foam eartips from a local company 'Anonymous' highlights Minnesota Senate computer hacking: passwords file accessed, web pages down 'Back in the game': SpaceX ship blasts off with 2 astronauts Twitter fact-checks Trump; he threatens new regs or shutdown

Several music releases and events were postponed as a result of Black Out Tuesday. Interscope Geffen A&M Records said it would not release music this week and pushed back releases from MGK, 6lack, Jessie Ware, Smokepurp and others. Chloe x Halle said its sophomore album will come out June 12 instead of Friday, while the group Glass Animals postponed the Tuesday release of its new single "Heat Waves." Instead of being released Wednesday, singer Ashnikko will drop her song "Cry" and its video on June 17.

A benefit for the Apollo Theater will take place Thursday instead of Tuesday, and South by Southwest postponed an event planned with Rachael Ray.

"At SXSW we stand with the black community and will continue to amplify the voices and ideas that will lead us to a more equitable society," the company said.

The Pioneer Press contributed to this report.

Graphic

Music stars posted black squares on their Instagram accounts as part of #blackouttuesday. So did average social-media users. (New York Times)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

'Anonymous' highlights Minnesota Senate computer hacking; passwords file accessed, web pages down

ARTICLE CLXII. 'ANONYMOUS' HIGHLIGHTS MINNESOTA SENATE COMPUTER HACKING; PASSWORDS FILE ACCESSED, WEB PAGES DOWN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 473 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: The Minnesota Senate's servers were breached Tuesday morning, and hackers were able to access a file of passwords used by senators and staff, Senate officials said Tuesday evening. The breach prompted the Senate's information services to quickly take down the Senate's website and begin slowly rebuilding pages. As of 6 p.m., a number of Senate [...]

Body

The Minnesota Senate's servers were breached Tuesday morning, and hackers were able to access a file of passwords used by senators and staff, Senate officials said Tuesday evening.

The breach prompted the Senate's information services to quickly take down the Senate's website and begin slowly rebuilding pages. As of 6 p.m., a number of Senate web pages were still down.

In a tweet, the hacking movement Anonymous highlighted the hack, which appears to have included a defacement of a Senate web page showing an Anonymous calling card and saying "Justice For George Floyd."

Screenshot: <pic.twitter.com/50jOMwo4j0>

- Anonymous (@YourAnonNews) June 2, 2020

Who hacked the site, and whether there was an actual affiliation with Anonymous, could not be independently determined Tuesday; Anonymous is not a centralized group.

The attack succeeded early Tuesday morning, according to a letter sent Tuesday evening to senators and staff from Secretary of the Senate Cal Ludeman.

It's not clear if the Senate attack is connected to a different set of cyber attacks being launched on state computers that officials revealed Sunday. Those attacks - - are ongoing and have led to occasional outages on some state web pages. However, they don't involve anyone gaining access inside any state systems, a spokeswoman for MNIT, the state's information technology agency, said Tuesday evening.

Here's part of Ludeman's letter:

'Anonymous' highlights Minnesota Senate computer hacking; passwords file accessed, web pages down

"At 4:24 this morning, the Senate server was hacked and accessed for several minutes. ... SIS (Senate Information Services) brought down the server as a precaution and, with the help of MNIT and the FBI, they have been able to trace what was accessed within the server, namely the Passwords File.

"The Passwords File that was accessed as well as passwords to our main database server have all been reset and log files checked to assure there is no further unauthorized access to the servers. These passwords also included the Senate WiFi password. As a result, the Senate WiFi network was brought down to reset and test as another precaution. This Passwords File does NOT contain passwords to Senator or staff emails or login accounts, nor does it have access to the server that has that information. The original website breach caused SIS staff to slowly rebuild pages as they confirmed them to be secure. This will be an ongoing process"

Pushing for race and police reforms, Walz fires shot at Republicans in Senate distributed denial of service attacks MN top Republican: 'Leadership failed badly'; Sen. Paul Gazelka wants to end Walz emergency powers and 'pandemic fear' Police, criminal justice reform bills introduced at Minnesota Capitol Report: Homeland security warned of 'anarchist and militia extremists' plan to storm MN Capitol and burn it Lawmakers call for state aid for Twin Cities properties damaged in riots

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CLXIII. TENSION WANES ON STREETS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1159 wordsByline: PAM LOUWAGIE; JESSIE VAN BERKEL; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Minnesota leaders hoped cautiously Monday for continued de-escalation of tensions in the aftermath of George Floyd's deadly encounter with Minneapolis police, even as President Donald Trump threatened to mobilize the military to tamp down unrest elsewhere in the country.

Gov. Tim Walz talked of pulling back a portion of more than 7,000 National Guard members that had been called in to help quell violence in the metro area. Hours were reduced on a Twin Cities curfew first issued days earlier, and officials planned to leave freeways open, unlike previous nights.

The state was in "a much more stable position," National Guard Maj. Gen. Jon Jensen said Monday, though he emphasized that the Guard's presence in the Twin Cities would look the same as it had over the weekend. Other units, which had been waiting at armories to step in if needed, could return home if leaders deemed it OK, he said.

The day marked a week of protests demanding justice for Floyd, who pleaded that he couldn't breathe and fell unresponsive while a Minneapolis officer knelt on his neck for nearly 9 minutes - an incident filmed by a bystander. Local and state leaders continued to urge peaceful protests while promising to work for change.

As the 10 p.m. curfew came and went, police moved in on a group of peaceful demonstrators who spent the evening at the Minnesota State Capitol. At Cup Foods, the site of Floyd's fatal encounter with police that has become a memorial, the crowd grew slightly agitated awaiting the arrival of police, who by 10:30 had not made an appearance. A bus was parked a couple blocks away, and it was unclear whether police were preparing to make arrests. Helicopters flew overhead.

Thousands of demonstrators had gathered outside the governor's residence Monday afternoon in St. Paul, demanding that all four officers on the scene of Floyd's arrest be jailed and prosecuted. Though all four officers had been fired, only officer Derek Chauvin had been arrested and charged, with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. The case was turned over Sunday to state Attorney General Keith Ellison.

About 30 St. Paul police officers took a knee on the outskirts of the crowd, including black officer Antwan Denson, who shed tears while he knelt with his fist in the air as protesters chanted Floyd's name. The protesters then asked the officers to leave, saying they made their point.

Loretta VanPelt, with Twin Cities Coalition for Justice 4 Jamar, said she is tired of protesting for the same change nearly five years after Jamar Clark was killed by Minneapolis police officers who were not prosecuted.

"We feel like we've done this over and over again and we've had enough of it, really, but you know, the fight has to continue because we're not seeing that justice," she said. "They have to start listening to us now. I mean, your city's burned into the ground. They have to listen to us."

Floyd's niece, Angel Buechner of St. Paul, said she'd been shouting for justice on the street for five days.

"People loved him," she said. "Twenty ... dollars is not a death sentence."

At the State Capitol, hundreds of protesters gathered after the demonstration at the governor's residence ended.

Fiery speeches on the Capitol lawn called for revolution. At one point, the crowd knelt silently for 60 seconds in memory of Floyd.

Outside Cup Foods, about a thousand people applauded and chanted while listening to speakers.

Larry Thomas had hopped on a plane from Sacramento, Calif., to be part of the movement in Minneapolis. Thomas, who works in private security, said he feels sorry for law enforcement as well as for the public. He said the violent protests have sometimes taken away "the meaning of why people are showing up. It's causing rifts.

"This is how it should be," he said, gesturing to the peaceful but passionate crowd.

Rose McGee, founder of Sweet Potato Comfort Pies, arrived with about 20 pies, each baked by a different volunteer. McGee, of Golden Valley, started her outreach by bringing pies to Ferguson, Mo., in the aftermath of the 2014 shooting of Michael Brown by a white police officer.

"Right now, black people are in a lot of pain," McGee said. "I consider the sweet potato pie the sacred dessert of black people. It was there all throughout the civil rights movement."

In a speech at the Rose Garden, Trump called for an end to rioting and lawlessness that had spread across the country, as police used tear gas and other force against protesters outside the White House gates.

"We will end it now," Trump said, and recommended that every governor deploy the National Guard to "dominate the streets."

"If a city or state refuses to take the actions that are necessary to defend the life and property of their residents, then I will deploy the United States military and quickly solve the problem for them."

Walz said he had been getting calls from other state leaders as some protests across the nation had turned violent.

He said he told them they would need a large-scale coordinated response from law enforcement to stem violence, but that that would not solve the real problem of systemic racism.

Walz said that was discussed during a Monday call with Trump and other governors, where Trump called governors "weak" for failing to use force to confront protesters and said if they didn't "dominate" the streets, "they're going to run over you. You're going to look like a bunch of jerks."

Trump called Minnesota "a laughingstock all over the world" for the way it handled protests earlier, according to audio of the call obtained by news organizations.

Walz said his point to the president was, "Saying the world was laughing at the states who aren't taking action - I said, 'No one's laughing here. We're in pain, we're crying. We saw a man lose his life in front of them.' "

While many Twin Cities residents had been on edge Sunday night as rumors circulated of extremists coming in from elsewhere, Walz said Monday that he got "out over my skis" when he had said that most of the destructive rioters were people coming from outside the area. He said officials were still trying to get a better understanding of the situation.

State Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said police documented only two vehicles without license plates in the metro - though community members and reporters have seen more. Harrington said they did have evidence of some propane tanks, like those used for grilling, stashed around Minneapolis.

Wearing a cap and gown, Rachel Garrison, 17, carried a handwritten protest sign in front of the burned-out Minnehaha Liquors on Lake Street. Days before, she graduated as valedictorian from North Education Center in Robbinsdale.

"This is how adulthood started for me," she said, adding that she grew up in the area. "For once our city stood up for what was right."

Staff writers John Reinan, Kim Hyatt, Rochelle Olson and Eric Roper and the Washington Post contributed to this report.

Pam Louwagie · 612-673-7102

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

Roundup: Tensions ease; Cops join peaceful demonstration; Chicago arrest; Department's challenge

ARTICLE CLXIV. ROUNDUP: TENSIONS EASE; COPS JOIN PEACEFUL DEMONSTRATION; CHICAGO ARREST; DEPARTMENT'S CHALLENGE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 437 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

Minneapolis/St. Paul enjoyed a third night of relative calm Monday, as curfew orders were pushed back and protest-related arrests were made largely peaceably.

Minnesota Public Radio writes that about 65 people were arrested on curfew violations at the State Capitol following a large protest there, but there were relatively few reports of violence.

The calm followed an announcement Monday by Gov. Tim Walz, who had called out the Minnesota National Guard last week to quell the violence, that the situation had stabilized well enough to begin scaling back. But a curfew is still in effect Tuesday night, and Metro Transit won't resume operations today.

RELATED: Curfew eased, not ended

Roundup: Tensions ease; Cops join peaceful demonstration; Chicago arrest; Department's challenge

The Star Tribune also reports on the easing of tensions, even during several demonstrations during the day. At a protest at the Governor's Residence in St. Paul, dozens of police officers knelt alongside protesters for a time.

In Minneapolis, thousands gathered at the street where George Floyd died a week ago during an arrest by Minneapolis Police; four officers were fired, one has been charged with third degree murder and manslaughter. Floyd's brother, Terrence Floyd, called out the violence that followed: "I doubt you are half as upset as I am. So if I'm not over here wilding out, if I'm not over here blowing up stuff, if I'm not over here messing up my community, then what are you all doing? ... That's not going to bring my brother back," he said.

Also Monday, Floyd's family released the results of a private autopsy investigation by two third-party doctors that found he died of asphyxia. That disagrees with an autopsy by the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office, which said the cause was "cardiopulmonary arrest complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint, and neck compression." But both autopsies ruled the death a homicide, the Star Tribune notes.

In Chicago, meanwhile, a man was arrested in connection with days of violent riots last week. Matthew Lee Rupert, 28, faces charges of rioting and of possession of explosives after allegedly livestreaming himself apparently setting stores ablaze in Minneapolis. The Chicago Sun-Times has details.

The protests put an unflattering spotlight on the Minneapolis Police Department, which has struggled for years to improve relations with the city it watches over. The Wall Street Journal reports on the challenges facing Chief Medaria Arradondo, who took the post after his predecessor resigned following the shooting death of an unarmed woman by an officer.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 2, 2020

ARTICLE CLXV. BANKS THAT LOST BRANCHES TO RIOTS ASSESS DAMAGE - AND LOCATIONS' FUTURE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 452 words

Byline: Patrick Rehkamp

Body

Protests turned into riots in the wake of George Floyd's death in police custody last week, leaving at least a dozen bank branches in Minneapolis and St. Paul damaged or lost entirely. Bank leaders are now mulling over what to do next.

Wells Fargo & Co. suffered significant damage to its branch network in Minneapolis. Among the damaged locations:

- 3030 Nicollet Ave. in Minneapolis, just south of East Lake Street where many businesses suffered extensive damage
- 2218 E. Lake St. in Minneapolis
- 4141 Lyndale Ave. N in Minneapolis

Banks that lost branches to riots assess damage - and locations' future

The Nicollet Avenue branch, located kiddie-corner to Minneapolis Police Department's Fifth Precinct, was destroyed by fire during Friday night's protest at the precinct. The police precinct survived since it was heavily guarded.

The bank plans to open new branches if the riot-damaged structures can't be salvaged, said Laurie Nordquist, Wells Fargo Minnesota's CEO and lead region president for the Upper Midwest.

"The two locations on Lake Street suffered extensive damage," she said. "We are committed to those neighborhoods. We are not considering not reopening in those neighborhoods."

Nordquist added that staffers at the damaged branches have been given paid leave and will be offered positions at other locations in the future.

Minneapolis-based U.S. Bancorp had at least two locations in South Minneapolis that suffered serious damage, said spokesman Jeff Shelman. They are:

- 919 E. Lake St. in Minneapolis
- 2800 E. Lake St. in Minneapolis

Shelman said it's too early to say what will happen with those locations.

"Our crews haven't been able to get into the branches to fully assess the damage, and that's the first step we need to take," he said in an email.

TCF Financial Corp. had five branches that suffered damage. They are:

- A branch located inside a Cub Foods at 2850 26th Ave. S in Minneapolis
- 3118 E. Lake St. in Minneapolis
- 1444 W. Lake St. in Minneapolis
- 459 Lexington Pkwy. in St. Paul
- 705 W. Broadway in Minneapolis

"Our official stance would be we fully intend to be back in those neighborhoods," TCF spokesman Tom Wennerberg said. "We want to be part of the rebuild and the healing."

BMO Harris Bank also had two branches damaged. They include:

- 320 E. Lake St. in Minneapolis
- 522 Snelling Ave. S in St. Paul

The bank couldn't say what the future holds for those locations.

"We are deeply saddened by the death of George Floyd, and the anguish it has created for the entire community," spokesman Patrick O'Herlihy said. "No employees or customers were injured as a result of either incident. We are in the early stages of assessing the damage to each branch."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Banks that lost branches to riots assess damage - and locations' future

Load-Date: June 2, 2020

End of Document

Floyd's memorial service set for Thursday in Minneapolis

ARTICLE CLXVI. FLOYD'S MEMORIAL SERVICE SET FOR THURSDAY IN MINNEAPOLIS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 422 wordsByline: Nick FerraroHighlight: It is unclear if the public is going to be able to view the service. Planning continues.Body

The family memorial service for George Floyd, the 46-year-old who died during an encounter with four police Minneapolis police officers, will be held Thursday.

North Central University along Elliot Avenue in South Minneapolis will host the gathering from 1 to 3 p.m. Thursday in the Frank J. Lindquist Sanctuary, with the Rev. Al Sharpton delivering the eulogy and participation of family members from across the country, his civil rights organization announced.

On Thursday, Sharpton, Eric Garner's mother and Minneapolis City Council Vice President Andrea Jenkins visited the South Minneapolis site at 38th Street and Chicago Avenue where Floyd died and said that they stand with community members demanding justice and prosecution of the police involved. Sharpton said he planned to stay in town to attend Floyd's funeral services at the request of his family.

The event will be private for family, friends and those invited by the Floyds. The service will be live-streamed by local media. Links will be available at the school's website, www.northcentral.edu.

On Monday, Floyd's younger brother Terrence, who lives in New York, visited the site with the Rev. Kevin McCall and civil rights lawyer Sanford Rubenstein, among others. They called for peace.

George Floyd's May 25 death sparked protests and violent rioting and looting in Minneapolis and St. Paul and other cities across the United States and the world.

Former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, who was recorded on video with his knee on Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes, was charged last week with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter and is currently in custody at the Minnesota Correctional Facility - Oak Park Heights. The other three officers have been fired, but not charged, despite demands from protesters and others.

The Hennepin County medical examiner's office on Monday classified George Floyd's death as a homicide, saying his heart stopped as Minneapolis police restrained him and compressed his neck. That differs from a separate autopsy commissioned for Floyd's family that also called his death a homicide but concluded that he died of asphyxiation due to neck and back compression.

Floyd's memorial service set for Thursday in Minneapolis

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

The kindest cut may be one that's months overdue

ARTICLE CLXVII. THE KINDEST CUT MAY BE ONE THAT'S MONTHS OVERDUE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1D

Length: 570 words

Byline: NICOLE NORFLEET; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

Salons and barber shops across the Twin Cities began to reopen Monday with new procedures and limits on their customer capacity.

The shops have been closed for more than two months after the state imposed stay-at-home orders to stop the spread of COVID-19. With the restrictions, they were allowed to reopen on Monday, along with tattoo parlors, campgrounds and restaurants with outdoor seating.

For shops near the urban cores of Minneapolis and St. Paul, owners have had to weigh the safety challenges of reopening in light of the recent riots and vandalism of some businesses following the death of George Floyd in police custody last week.

"It is tough," said Javier Soliz, owner of VIP Cutz on Arcade Street in St. Paul's Payne-Phalen neighborhood. "I was thinking of not opening. ... But how was I going to make money and save? We got to stay East Side strong. We got to stay Twin Cities strong."

Even some salons in the suburbs postponed reopening because of the unrest.

Soliz boarded up the windows of his shop Saturday and spray-painted messages to deter prospective vandals. He painted "R.I.P. George," a slogan in support of Black Lives Matter, and a note that children live in apartments above the shop.

Monday afternoon, Soliz's shop had a steady stream of clients, and he had to turn away walk-ins. The shop was at capacity with two customers, Soliz and another barber.

"Hey, you need a mask!" Soliz yelled to a scheduled client as he directed him to a box of masks and sanitizer by the door.

Boards will remain on VIP Cutz's windows as a precaution, Soliz said. Clients and barbers have to wear masks, and appointments that could have taken 30 minutes before will take a full hour to allow for staff to disinfect stations.

The kindest cut may be one that's months overdue

He renovated his shop last year and said the barber chairs were already well spaced and will comply with social distancing standards, plus he disinfects his barber chair and clippers after every customer.

Emilio Ortiz brought his 10-year-old son to the barber shop for a haircut before getting one for himself. He said that, as the owner of a construction business, he wanted to get a haircut to make sure he looked presentable and also to help out another small business.

"The way Javier does [his cleaning] I feel really comfortable," Ortiz said.

Salons and barber shops were told they would be allowed to operate at 25% capacity, and stylists and customers would need to wear masks.

However, the State Fire Marshal Division of the Minnesota Department of Public Safety released additional guidance for salons in recent days on how to determine how many people they could have in their shops at one time.

For an existing salon, each person is allotted 100 square feet of space to calculate the occupant load of an entire space, and then 25% of that amount is the number of people able to be in the salon, not including employees. So for a 1,500-square-foot shop, the salon would only be able to have four customers at a time.

For salon owners like Brian Stevens, who owns 25 Great Clips salons in the Twin Cities, the rules on the occupant load mean he has to have fewer customers in his shops than he previously thought.

"We already had people scheduled," Stevens said. "It was too late for me to go back and say, 'No.' "

Stevens said 23 of his 25 shops were planning to open Monday, and most of his employees were coming back to work this week.

Nicole Norfleet · 612-673-4495

Twitter: @nicolenorfleet

Load-Date: June 2, 2020

Report: Homeland security warned of 'anarchist and militia extremists' plan to storm MN Capitol and burn it

ARTICLE CLXVIII. REPORT: HOMELAND SECURITY WARNED OF 'ANARCHIST AND MILITIA EXTREMISTS' PLAN TO STORM MN CAPITOL AND BURN IT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 292 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: For days, a robust host of National Guard and law enforcement have been guarding the Capitol in St. Paul, although their numbers are unclear and often not visible from the outside.

Body

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security on Friday warned in a memo that "suspected anarchist extremists and militia extremists allegedly planned to storm and burn the Minnesota State Capitol," Politico reported Monday.

The Pioneer Press was unable to independently confirm the warning, which cited FBI information and was contained in a Friday memo sent to law enforcement officials across the country, according to Politico.

Asked Monday evening about the reported memo and threat, Minnesota Department of Corrections Commissioner Paul Schnell neither confirmed nor denied it specifically, saying "Threats do exist ... I can't get into specifics."

For days, a robust host of National Guard and law enforcement have been guarding the Capitol in St. Paul, although their numbers are unclear and often not visible from the outside.

The St. Paul information, according to Politico, was part of a wider warning that "domestic terrorist actors" might try to exploit First Amendment-protected demonstrations in response to George Floyd, an unarmed black man who died following actions by a white police officer, to launch attacks.

Parts of the memo quoted by Politico suggest the suspected threats come from both extremes of the political spectrum: anarchists are generally associated with ideologies of the left, while militia groups with the right. Both, however, see various parts of establishment as a threat.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Report: Homeland security warned of 'anarchist and militia extremists' plan to storm MN Capitol and burn it

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

He needed to hear his brother's name again

ARTICLE CLXIX. HE NEEDED TO HEAR HIS BROTHER'S NAME AGAIN

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1A

Length: 589 words

Byline: MATT McKINNEY; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

In a raw, heartbroken appeal for peace following his brother's death, Terrence Floyd on Monday stood near the spot where George Floyd was held to the ground by police officers and urged people to turn away from violence.

"Let's do this another way!" he shouted to hundreds of people who had come to see the memorial at E. 38th Street and Chicago Avenue.

It was Floyd's first visit to the south Minneapolis intersection where his older brother died in police custody just one week before. With the help of several men, he staggered, step after unsteady step, to the chalk outline of where his brother had gasped for breath.

Then Terrence Floyd collapsed to his knees, and the crowd hushed as he let out an anguished scream.

He had traveled from Brooklyn, N.Y., with several others, including the Rev. Kevin McCall, who told the crowd that the Floyd family has "a long road ahead of justice."

"Just because we're doing it peacefully, that doesn't mean we don't want all four of the officers locked up," said McCall, drawing cheers.

Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman filed charges Friday of third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter against former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, who was taken into custody that same day. Chauvin is being held at the state prison in Oak Park Heights.

Public pressure to file charges against the other three officers involved in Floyd's arrest and death has grown. On Sunday, Gov. Tim Walz said he had asked Attorney General Keith Ellison to lead the prosecution with Freeman's assistance.

The protests and riots that began in Minneapolis last week have since spread to cities across the country and around the world.

He needed to hear his brother's name again

Some 250 U.S. Army troops patrolled the streets Monday in Washington, D.C., the first such deployment since the 1992 riots in Los Angeles.

In Minnesota, three nights of curfew and scores of arrests have quelled a spasm of violence that over the course of the week saw hundreds of buildings looted, destroyed and in some cases burned to the ground.

One person died Friday in a shooting on E. Lake Street near the riots, and dozens of others have been injured.

The site of George Floyd's arrest at 38th and Chicago has seen less violence, and on many nights last week didn't even have a police presence as mourners and neighbors constructed memorials made of flowers, posters and chalk art.

A striking mural painted on the Cup Foods convenience store at the intersection depicts Floyd and the words, "I can breathe now."

Speaking on Monday to onlookers and a crush of international media, Terrence Floyd took to task those people who have rioted in his brother's name, saying his brother loved Minneapolis.

"I understand you all are upset. But I doubt you are half as upset as I am. So if I'm not over here wilding out, if I'm not over here blowing up stuff, if I'm not over here messing up my community, then what are you all doing? ... That's not going to bring my brother back," he said.

As he did when he appeared on "Good Morning America" calling for "destructive unity," Floyd told the Minneapolis crowd that people should band together at the ballot box.

"Let's stop thinking that our voice doesn't matter and vote," he said, drawing cheers. "Educate yourself."

Floyd, wearing a face mask with his brother's image, finished his remarks, thanked the crowd on behalf of his family, and asked them to keep his brother's name ringing out.

"Now before I go, I just want to hear this again. What's his name?" yelled Floyd.

The crowd roared back: "George Floyd!"

Matt McKinney · 612-673-7329

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

19 people shot since unrest began

ARTICLE CLXX. 19 PEOPLE SHOT SINCE UNREST BEGAN

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 4BLength: 591 wordsByline: LIBOR JANY; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Two were fatal; but only one was linked to protests.Body

At least 19 people have been shot in Minneapolis since widespread unrest began over the death of George Floyd in police custody, raising concerns with police officials and residents about the crime-heavy summer months ahead.

While only one of the shootings has been publicly linked to the protests, department statistics show that shooting tally was nearly five times greater than during the same span last year, when there were just four shootings.

Police say they received 131 shots-fired calls and ShotSpotter activations over a 24-hour period ending at 8 a.m. Saturday, during which at least six people were struck by gunfire.

The incidents were spread across the city and included a woman who was killed in an unexplained shooting on Friday at N. Bryant and 17th avenues. Police are looking into the possibility that the victim, who was found inside a vehicle with a gunshot wound to the back of the head, may have been sexually assaulted before her death.

The other homicide - and the only incident tied to the rioting - occurred Wednesday when a pawnshop owner shot and killed 43-year-old Calvin L. Horton. The owner, 59, was later booked into jail on suspicion of murder. A spokesman for the county attorney's office said that prosecutors have 36 hours to hold a suspect without charges, but that in this case they had obtained an extension. He was released from jail Monday evening as the investigation continues. He is not being named because he has not been formally charged, in keeping with the Star Tribune's policy.

Nine of the shootings last week happened on the city's North Side, while another nine occurred in the Third Precinct, which has been the epicenter of the massive protests. Police are still working to determine whether another shooting occurred, but the victim is being uncooperative, said department spokesman Garrett Parten.

19 people shot since unrest began

M. Michaux Parker, an associate professor of criminal justice at Indiana University East, said that other cities experienced surges in violent crime in the wake of a controversial police killing, including, notably, Baltimore after the death of Freddie Gray in 2015.

"It's fairly common to see upticks in violent crimes after police shootings that don't appear to conform to the laws of deadly force," said Parker, a former police officer. He said that when people witness "state-sponsored violence, it communicates the idea that any violence is OK."

Police abuse can undermine law enforcement's claims of legitimacy and encourage people to take the law into their own hands, he said. "Even with the charges against the one officer, from a citizen's perspective this is not over," he added.

State leaders admitted to being caught off guard by the size and ferocity of the protests that have shaken parts of south Minneapolis, saying that the hundreds of law enforcement officers deployed on city streets Friday were quickly outnumbered by "tens of thousands" of rioters. Dozens of area businesses and buildings have been looted or destroyed.

Now-fired police officer Derek Chauvin has been charged with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter in connection with the death of Floyd, whose final minutes captured on a bystander's video prompted protests and growing unrest across the country. Chauvin had Floyd pinned under his knee for minutes, ignoring Floyd's pleas that he couldn't breathe, after police arrested him for reportedly using a fake $20 bill at a convenience store. The three other fired officers involved haven't yet been arrested.

Libor Jany · 612-673-4064 Twitter: @StribJany

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

LAW ENFORCEMENT

ARTICLE CLXXI. LAW ENFORCEMENT

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 9ALength: 680 wordsByline: SANDRA LARSON, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Too much violence, too little accountability // Fifty years ago I served on a police planning division for Minnesota. Fifty years and the issues haven't changed.Body

It has been almost half a century since I spent five years working on police community relations in the 1970s, first in Maryland, and then three years here in Minnesota from 1973-76. In my last year I headed the police planning division of the Minnesota Commission on Crime Prevention and Control.

This was a citizens' commission under the direction of Robert Crew, who was appointed by Gov. Wendell Anderson. It was set up to administer the significant federal funds for the criminal justice system allotted under the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 passed by Congress.

The purpose of the legislation was to improve all aspects of the criminal justice system throughout the country through a bureau in the U.S. Justice Department called the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA).

An important impetus for that effort was widespread and destructive rioting in the summer of 1967 that engulfed many major cities throughout America, almost all incited by the killing of African Americans at the hands of their local police. Given the national backdrop of these tensions, our focus, as it pertained to police, lay heavily on improving how police interacted with the community.

While many visionaries in law enforcement leadership agreed with this emphasis, there was huge resistance by many police and sheriff associations to any funding that was not strictly for upgrading equipment and enforcement training. However, programs to improve the caliber of officers and their effectiveness in the community also were funded and institutionalized.

This rather short-lived influx of federal funds for law enforcement died in 1982. And clearly, we can see today that whatever efforts made then and since have fallen short of creating the kind of policing of which we can all be proud.

I believe there are four major problems we identified then that are still problems today:

LAW ENFORCEMENT

1) Accountability for unacceptable performance remains a problem. Police conduct must be accountable to elected officials, with internal systems that expose and correct problems. In the 1970s, I witnessed numerous training sessions where some of the participants (certainly not all) had wildly unsuitable responses to situations with people in distress. But police unions could prevent any weeding out of personnel based on suitability of personality for the work, even after management became aware of these problems.

It appears past problematic behavior is still not accountable, given what we know of the officers involved in the George Floyd killing.

2) The second issue is the paramilitary culture of law enforcement. While no longer true today, police departments historically excluded or impeded nonveterans from joining the force, and there was no emphasis on hiring women or people of color. This has changed, but not entirely.

A few years back, I saw a recruitment video of a local police department in which the opening image was of a gun barrel, as if this would appeal to the target audience. While we know some progress has been made to change this mentality, I would submit that those who might want a career in community service most likely do not consider a law enforcement career as a first choice.

3) The third systemic issue is even a bigger challenge. Police must operate in a surrounding culture of violence, amid the presence of guns. An armed populace creates a problem for a law enforcement organization, even as it earnestly may try to turn away from a war mentality. This is our fault, not the police's fault.

4) The fourth problem is systemic racism and the growing inequity among our population. Social ills create social needs that must be met with empathy and a search for solutions, not violence.

Perhaps the terrible upheaval we are going through now will motivate the community to begin to address these four issues: personnel accountability, paramilitary thinking, community violence and racism. If not, all of us will be diminished. We are all responsible for this violence, not just our police. We must step up and say, no more.

Sandra Larson lives in Minnetonka.

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

After being looted and then destroyed by arsonists, Lloyd's Pharmacy plans to rebuild

ARTICLE CLXXII. AFTER BEING LOOTED AND THEN DESTROYED BY ARSONISTS, LLOYD'S PHARMACY PLANS TO REBUILD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1036 words

Byline: Mary Divine

Highlight: "I want the community to know that we forgive the people who did this," the owner said.

Body

To say that Lloyd's Pharmacy in St. Paul's Hamline-Midway neighborhood has a loyal clientele is putting it mildly.

When news broke on Thursday night that the neighborhood's pharmacy at Snelling and Minnehaha avenues had been looted and destroyed during a riot, hundreds of customers began reaching out.

They called. They stopped by with flowers. They left notes. They organized a fundraising campaign. As of Tuesday, they had raised more than $63,000.

"It's been incredible," owner Jim Stage said Monday. "I grew up in the Midway neighborhood. A lot of customers we've had for 30, 40, 50, 60 years. There are hundreds of people who have reached out, and it's just a wonderful thing."

The pharmacy and compounding center served about 8,000 patients, an extraordinary number for an old-fashioned pharmacy that had been in the same building since 1918. Lloyd's employs 35 people.

"It's a neighborhood staple," said Stage, who purchased the business in 2014 from longtime former owner Ron Johnson. "It's small, but we did a lot of business out of this space."

TENDING TO THE CUSTOMERS

Stage said Monday that he plans to rebuild on site. In the meantime, he is serving customers through Setzer Pharmacy on Rice Street, which he also owns. He plans to open a temporary satellite pharmacy on Snelling, just a few buildings down from the original location, as soon as possible, he said.

That news made customer - and former Lloyd's employee - Michael Glasgow happy on Monday.

"We rely on it," said Glasgow, whose family has owned Glasgow Automotive Services, a Volvo repair shop on University Avenue, since 1946. "I've been going to this pharmacy since I was an infant. My dad lives in Mendota Heights, but he still comes here. It's a generational thing."

After being looted and then destroyed by arsonists, Lloyd's Pharmacy plans to rebuild

When Glasgow spotted Stage at the corner of Snelling and Minnehaha on Monday, he stopped to offer his condolences.

"This is terrible. I'm so sorry," said Glasgow, 47, who worked as a clerk and a delivery driver at the pharmacy in the late 1980s and early 1990s. "There are people who work here who worked here when I worked here."

Customers rely on Lloyd's and remain loyal because the pharmacists know them, said pharmacist Tracy Taubert, who has worked at Lloyd's for 10 years.

"It was connected to the people it serves," Taubert said. "It was a foundational business in the community - a bustling, vibrant business. Patients that utilize an independent community pharmacy are looking for more than prescription. They're there to create a relationship, to have someone care for them and communicate with them."

SINCE 1918

Florian Ritschel, the son of German immigrants, opened Floyd's Pharmacy in 1918 after purchasing the building, which was built in 1914 and had previously housed a millinery shop. Lloyd Jensen purchased the pharmacy in 1949 and renamed it.

Johnson, who owned Lloyd's from 1974 to 2014, said he never considered changing the name.

"I just decided Lloyd was probably one of the nicest people I had ever met," Johnson said. "He was kind. He was salt of the earth. People loved him. Everybody knew Lloyd, so I just left it."

When Stage learned that rioters protesting the death of George Floyd were heading north on Snelling Avenue from University Avenue on Thursday afternoon, he had employees close the business around 3:15 p.m., he said.

'THEY FOUGHT IT ALL NIGHT'

Around 5 p.m., the building's security company notified him that the store had been broken into. Via an app on his phone, Stage watched looters ransack the store's drug supply and destroy computers and other equipment, he said.

"Neighbors came by and boarded it up," he said. "We really want to thank them. A guy that I know boarded it up after that."

Arsonists struck around midnight, and firefighters arrived about 10 minutes later. "They fought it all night," Stage said.

No other nearby businesses were damaged by the fire, and no one was injured, he said. "No one was hurt - that's what we're most thankful for," he said. "Buildings come and go."

Century-old Lloyd's Pharmacy is fully engulfed pic.twitter.com/R13x9OqMuq

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress) May 29, 2020

"I want the community to know that we forgive the people who did this," Stage said.

After being looted and then destroyed by arsonists, Lloyd's Pharmacy plans to rebuild

"We forgive those who make mistakes," added Mark Stage, his father, who does maintenance work at the pharmacy. "People want justice, and by God's grace, we'll have justice."

'WE NEED PHARMACIES LIKE LLOYD'S'

The business included the Menopause Clinic of Minnesota and a state-of-the-art compounding lab where employees would manufacture prescriptions that were not available commercially, Johnson said. "We could take a heart medication and turn it into a pediatric dose by making it a liquid," he said.

"Eight years ago, Lloyd's was able to compound medicine, which saved my daughter's eyesight," wrote a woman who donated $50 to the "Lloyd's Pharmacy Rebuilding Fund" on GoFundMe.com.

Another wrote: "After calling all chain and hospital pharmacies in our area to fill a prescription for our infant son, Lloyd's came through and compounded it for us. We were so incredibly grateful. We need pharmacies like Lloyd's in our community."

Philip Hommerding is the owner of Hunt's Silver Lake Drug & Gift in Rochester, Minn., and a friend and business partner of Stage's. He helped organize the fundraiser.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest "The neighborhood really values their independent pharmacy because it takes care of the community," Hommerding said. "It's not a big corporate machine that is trying to please shareholders. It's just trying to take care of patients and doing what it can to do that. I'm amazed by how many people have reached out."

Close to 1,000 people had donated to the fund by noon Tuesday; donations have ranged from $5 to $2,500.

"When you go through something like this, you realize what you mean to the community," Jim Stage said. "We're really grateful to be here."

Isabel Saavedra-Weis contributed to this report.

Graphic

Jim Stage, right, owner of Lloyd's Pharmacy, talks with long-time customer Sterret Morrison at the remains of his business in St. Paul on Monday, June 1, 2020. The St. Paul institution, on the corner Snelling Ave. and Minnehaha Ave., was looted and burned in violent protests Thursday, May 28, part of the reaction to the death of George Floyd, a black man who died after being restrained by Minneapolis police officers on May 25. (John Autey/ Pioneer Press)

The exterior of Lloyd's Pharmacy, 720 Snelling Ave. North, on Friday, Oct. 28, 2005. (Jean Pieri / Pioneer Press)

After being looted and then destroyed by arsonists, Lloyd's Pharmacy plans to rebuild

Florian's Pharmacy, located at 720 North Snelling in St. Paul is seen in a black and white photo, circa 1930. (Courtesy of the Minnesota Historical Society)

As firefighters spray water on the ruins, an excavator demolishes Lloyd's Pharmacy in St. Paul on Friday, May 29, 2020. The independent, family-owned pharmacy was looted and burned to the ground in early morning rioting following the Monday death of George Floyd while in police custody in Minneapolis. (John Autey/ Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CLXXIII. UNIVERSITY OF ST. THOMAS TO CLOSE FOR GEORGE FLOYD SERVICE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 211 words

Byline: Josh Verges

Highlight: The University of St. Thomas will close and classes will be canceled Thursday and Friday for the George Floyd memorial service. The service is being held at 1 p.m. Thursday at North Central University, not far from St. Thomas's Minneapolis campus. "This is important to allow our community members space to view the memorial or [...]"

Body

The University of St. Thomas will close and classes will be canceled Thursday and Friday for the George Floyd memorial service.

The service is being held at 1 p.m. Thursday at North Central University, not far from St. Thomas's Minneapolis campus.

"This is important to allow our community members space to view the memorial or otherwise participate in related activities and events honoring and demanding justice for Mr. Floyd," St. Thomas President Julie Sullivan said in a message to students, faculty and staff.

"Equally important, it will allow our community additional time to process, pray about and reflect upon all that has occurred and to better recognize the inequities and social injustices that have become part of our community fabric at St. Thomas and within our state and nation."

The Twin Cities have seen large protests each day since Floyd, who was black, died May 25 in Minneapolis police custody. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CLXXIV. A WEEK OF UNREST DEVASTATES MINNEAPOLIS' LANDMARK STREET OF DIVERSITY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1266 wordsByline: Tim Sullivan, Kathleen HennesseyHighlight: Along the miles-long Minneapolis street where more than a century of migrants have found their American footholds - Germans, Swedes, Vietnamese, Somalis, Mexicans - a new history can be traced. There's the smoldering police station torched early Thursday morning by protesters enraged by the death of George Floyd while in custody. There's the Wells Fargo [...]Body

Along the miles-long Minneapolis street where more than a century of migrants have found their American footholds - Germans, Swedes, Vietnamese, Somalis, Mexicans - a new history can be traced.

There's the smoldering police station torched early Thursday morning by protesters enraged by the death of George Floyd while in custody. There's the Wells Fargo bank branch two miles away that mobs stormed through the next night, leaving behind a carpet of shattered glass and strewn paperwork. "Kill Bankers" reads the graffiti now spray-painted on an outside wall.

Go farther up Lake Street and there's more fresh history: the Somali restaurant with the broken windows, the empty hulk of a burned sneaker store, the boarded-up party supply store owned by a Mexican immigrant who had been praying for the coronavirus lockdown to end so he could reopen.

The protests that have roiled Minneapolis night after night didn't inflame just a single neighborhood: Much of the violence raged up Lake Street, an artery of commerce and culture that cuts across a broad swath of the city.

For residents, for businesspeople, for artists, the Lake Street corridor has long been a symbol of the city's complex history, a block-by-block study in immigration, economic revitalization and persistent inequality.

On one end is a trendy district of bars and shopping. On the other are quiet neighborhoods atop the Mississippi River bluff. Between the two is a timeline that spans almost five miles marking each wave of arrivals, along with a tangle of languages spoken in each group's markets, restaurants, churches and community groups.

A week of unrest devastates Minneapolis' landmark street of diversity

The Lake Street businesses owned by Suad Hassan's family are now boarded up, bearing messages like "black owned - solidarity." Each night, the family has stood guard, successfully begging the mobs to pass them by.

The 35-year-old was born in Somalia, but her family fled the country to escape war when she was a child.

"When I saw the fire two nights ago, it was like a trauma that was triggered again for me," she said. "I had put that away in my life a long, long time ago ... I told my mom, 'This is a war zone.'"

It's Lake Street's minority-owned small businesses that may suffer the most from the racial firestorm that hit the city last week. As thousands of people protested a police force with a history of violence against people of color, the collateral damage spread wide - from immigrant-owned restaurants to a center for Native American youth to a 190-unit affordable housing complex under construction.

"What happened with Mr. Floyd is a horror," said Eduardo Barrera, the general manager of Mercado Central, a cooperative of largely Latino-owned businesses that helped spark economic revitalization along the street when it opened 20 years ago. The mural-festooned corner building was broken into twice during the unrest, with some of its goods stolen.

"Nothing changes and people feel they've lost everything," Barrera said. "There's nothing to lose for them anymore. When there's no justice, no fairness and no equity, they lose hope."

"But we are hurting ourselves," he said.

Many speculate that Lake Street was hit so hard because its eastern stretch includes the police station associated with the white officer now charged with murdering Floyd. The destruction is particularly painful because Lake Street had become a success story, an achievement people took pride in.

Residents and business owners say they've spent the last 20 years working to revive its chain of neighborhoods - many blighted by years of neglect, suburban flight and disinvestment.

Deb Frank moved into the Longfellow neighborhood just off East Lake Street 25 years ago, buying a two-bedroom, 100-year-old home for $40,000. The mail carrier and her neighbors teamed up to rid the area of two brothels by calling in license plates to the police and embarrassing the patrons.

Frank and her husband became used to walking to restaurants and coffee shops. "It was a really big transformation," she said.

Today, she wonders: Is it all fleeting?

"It took years to get where we were and here we're back in square one," she said, noting even the local post office had been damaged enough to disrupt mail service. "No, we're worse than square one."

By all accounts, immigrant entrepreneurs have been the engine of Lake Street's repeated resurgences. The stretch, which runs east-west through the city's south side, has long been a landing pad for recent arrivals to the city.

Early in the last century, it was Germans like Emil Schatzlein, who opened a saddle shop on West Lake Street in 1907 that still sells cowboy boots today. And the Scandinavians whose imprint is still visible in the nearly 100-year-old Ingebretsen's Nordic Marketplace, a local institution known for its lefse and herring.

A week of unrest devastates Minneapolis' landmark street of diversity

Today, within a couple blocks of Ingebretsen's, you can buy a bottle of fresh camel milk in an East African grocery and fried tortillas at Taqueria La Poblanita.

Just like many American cities, the 1960s saw a stream of white residents and businesses leave Lake Street for the suburbs. Buildings emptied out. By the time the Sears department store abandoned its towering building in the mid-1990s, much of the corridor was desperate for an economic infusion.

"It reinvented itself as an immigrant gateway," said Bill Convery, director of research at the Minnesota Historical Society. "The economic blight led to opportunity."

Somali immigrants fleeing war were among those who soon took advantage of the affordable rents to build businesses. Community organizations reopened the Sears building as the Midtown Global Marketplace, a showcase for international food and crafts.

Still, the economic progress did not erase the stubborn poverty, the racism or the striking inequality.

The corridor's neighborhoods, along with city's north side and core, know about police tensions all too well. An ACLU study of city arrests from 2012-2014 found black and Native American people more than eight times more likely than white people to be arrested for low-level offenses.

Minneapolis also has wrestled with its growing racial segregation - a division uncomfortably illustrated by driving east on Lake Street, which begins in the overwhelmingly white, quiet and leafy neighborhoods near the Chain of Lakes and Uptown before shifting into largely black or mixed neighborhoods.

Businesses already were suffering from the pandemic's stay-at-home orders when the protests started.

Gregorio De La Cruz, a Mexican immigrant, was just starting to reopen his two East Lake Street businesses - a party supply and candy store, and a commercial cleaning business - when the violence erupted. Less than a mile from the torched police precinct, he has closed shop again.

"I never imagined there would be so much violence in this neighborhood," he said, his eyes welling up as his 19-year-old daughter translated his Spanish words into English.

"We understand what's going on and we get that this is important. They have a right to protest. I wish they'd do it peacefully," he said.

De La Cruz hung a sign on his boarded-up door - "Justicia Por George Floyd" - one of scores of pleas emblazoned on Lake Street's plywood-lined storefronts. Two doors down, Ingebretsen's offered another: "One Human Family."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

A week of unrest devastates Minneapolis' landmark street of diversity

End of Document

Charges: St. Paul man shot at 2 Minneapolis police officers during George Floyd unrest

ARTICLE CLXXV. CHARGES: ST. PAUL MAN SHOT AT 2 MINNEAPOLIS POLICE OFFICERS DURING GEORGE FLOYD UNREST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 438 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: Prosecutors charged a St. Paul man with attempted murder Tuesday, saying he shot at two Minneapolis police officers during unrest in the city after George Floyd died in Minneapolis police custody. Over the weekend, there had been peaceful protests in the area of 15th Avenue South and Lake Street, but there had also been earlier [...]

Body

Prosecutors charged a St. Paul man with attempted murder Tuesday, saying he shot at two Minneapolis police officers during unrest in the city after George Floyd died in Minneapolis police custody.

Over the weekend, there had been peaceful protests in the area of 15th Avenue South and Lake Street, but there had also been earlier property damage, including the burning of the 3rd police precinct. Officers had rocks, debris and bottles of bodily fluids thrown at them.

On Saturday about 10:55 p.m., uniformed officers wearing SWAT vests and helmets were in an unmarked van, with the door open, and two were assigned to deploy 40-mm marking rounds to disperse crowds. The van was driving down Lake Street, flanked by two marked squad cars.

As they approached 14th Avenue South, a group of people were in a parking lot. Several ran away, but a man - later identified as Jaleel Kevin Stallings, 27 - walked toward law enforcement. He crouched down as if he was picking something up.

Officers said they were concerned something was going to be thrown at them and deployed one marking round at Stallings.

An officer "almost immediately ... saw three to four gunshot muzzle flashes from Stallings' chest toward law enforcement," according to the criminal complaint. "One round sparked and ricocheted in front of officers." The officer believed a separate officer in front of him had been shot.

Another officer saw Stallings fire the shots from hip level at law enforcement; the officer reported fearing for his life and also believed his partner had been shot, the complaint said. Body camera footage corroborated the two officers' statements.

Charges: St. Paul man shot at 2 Minneapolis police officers during George Floyd unrest

Stallings ran and took cover behind a vehicle and officers approached it from all sides. Stallings resisted arrest and an officer, using physical force, took him into custody, the complaint said. The officer saw an AK-47-style Mini Draco Style pistol near the vehicle's bumper.

Police took a statement from Stallings on Sunday. He asked if anyone had been killed and, when he was told no, said he wanted to speak with an attorney, according to the complaint.

The charges against Stallings include two counts of attempted second-degree murder and four counts of assault. An attorney for Stallings was not listed in the court record. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Graphic

Jaleel Kevin Stallings (Courtesy of the Hennepin County Sheriff's Office)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

87 fires in 5 days in Twin Cities. Task force formed to track down arsonists.

ARTICLE CLXXVI. 87 FIRES IN 5 DAYS IN TWIN CITIES. TASK FORCE FORMED TO TRACK DOWN ARSONISTS.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 365 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: The Twin Cities witnessed 87 fires in five days during the heat of recent unrest, officials said Tuesday in announcing a new task force to track down arsonists believed to be responsible for a large portion of them. "Eighty-seven's an enormous number," Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said at an afternoon news conference, citing figures [...]

Body

The Twin Cities witnessed 87 fires in five days during the heat of recent unrest, officials said Tuesday in announcing a new task force to track down arsonists believed to be responsible for a large portion of them.

"Eighty-seven's an enormous number," Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said at an afternoon news conference, citing figures from the state fire marshal's office. Under normal circumstances, that period might see one or two fires, he said.

Fires have blazed across St. Paul and Minneapolis over the past week as rioting, arson and looting punctuated mass protests over last week's death of George Floyd, a black man who died when a white Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck for more than eight minutes.

Harrington said the task force consists of personnel from the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, St. Paul and Minneapolis fire departments, arson investigators from the two cities' police departments, and the state fire marshal's office.

"Today they are starting to work that list of fires to find where are commonalities, where are the common criminal threads, and they are also going out to collect those incendiary devices - those bottles of gasoline that we've been hearing stories about but, frankly, had not physically gotten our hands on," he said. "So now we have folks out there picking those up. ... We know that so many of those fires were deliberately set."

Harrington said tracking down the arsonists isn't just a matter of investigating a statutory crime, but part of the broader issue of seeking justice in the aftermath of the riots.

87 fires in 5 days in Twin Cities. Task force formed to track down arsonists.

"It was not just stuff," Harrington said, noting that many of the fires have left small-business owners with little prospects for rebuilding, workers without jobs, and communities without access to food, medicine and other goods and services.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Police: Retired St. Louis police captain killed amid unrest

ARTICLE CLXXVII. POLICE: RETIRED ST. LOUIS POLICE CAPTAIN KILLED AMID UNREST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 533 words

Byline: Jim Salter

Highlight: ST. LOUIS (AP) - A retired St. Louis police captain killed by people who broke into a pawn shop after protests turned violent was a gregarious and outspoken leader who mentored youths and insisted on strict ethical conduct among his employees, a longtime colleague said Tuesday.

Body

ST. LOUIS - A retired St. Louis police captain killed by people who broke into a pawn shop after protests turned violent was a gregarious and outspoken leader who mentored youths and insisted on strict ethical conduct among his employees, a longtime colleague said Tuesday.

David Dorn, 77, was found dead on the sidewalk in front of Lee's Pawn & Jewelry about 2:30 a.m. Tuesday. No arrests have been made.

The shooting and theft apparently was posted on Facebook Live, but the video has since been taken down. It came on a violent night in St. Louis, where four officers were shot, officers were pelted with rocks and fireworks, and 55 businesses were burglarized or damaged, including a convenience store that burned. Police also shot and gravely injured a burglary suspect who they say shot at officers.

Cities across the U.S. have seen protests and violence since George Floyd died May 25 after a white Minneapolis officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck for several minutes even after the handcuffed black man stopped moving and pleading for air.

Dorn, who was black, was a friend of the pawn shop's owner and frequently checked on the business when alarms went off, his wife, St. Louis police Sgt. Ann Marie Dorn, told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

David Dorn served 38 years on the St. Louis police force before retiring in October 2007. He then became chief of Moline Acres, a small town in St. Louis County.

Former St. Louis County police Chief Tim Fitch knew Dorn for 30 years and said they became close friends when Dorn and his wife were leading the St. Louis police department's Explorers program for young people interested in law enforcement careers, while Fitch was leading the county's program.

Police: Retired St. Louis police captain killed amid unrest

"He was very dedicated to youth, especially disadvantaged youth," said Fitch, who led the St. Louis County Police Department from 2009 to 2014. "He wanted to see them succeed. He wanted to be a role model for those young men and women to go into law enforcement."

Dorn's personality was "bigger than life," Fitch said. "He was a fun guy, a happy guy. You never had to wonder what he was thinking when somebody did something incredibly stupid like a crime because he would just say it as he saw it."

When he took over as chief in Moline Acres, Dorn made it clear that his officers would be held to the strictest of standards, Fitch said.

"He wanted them to do the right thing all the time," Fitch said.

The Ethical Society of Police, which represents black officers in St. Louis, said in a news release that Dorn was "the type of brother that would've given his life to save them if he had to."

St. Louis police Chief John Hayden called Dorn a "fine captain."

"Many of us, the other officers, looked up to him," Hayden said. "Was very well-liked, very pleasant. And his wife still works here. So a very sad time for our agency. We will honor him." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

St. Paul police chief: Peaceful protesters should be protected, but not anyone bent on destruction

ARTICLE CLXXVIII. ST. PAUL POLICE CHIEF: PEACEFUL PROTESTERS SHOULD BE PROTECTED, BUT NOT ANYONE BENT ON DESTRUCTION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 680 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: St. Paul's police chief said Tuesday he hears the community members who are filled with anguish and also those who are scared after acts of destruction.

Body

St. Paul's police chief said Tuesday that he hears the community members who are filled with anguish and also those who are scared after acts of destruction.

Todd Axtell said he wanted to convey that message in the wake of people looting businesses and setting them on fire in St. Paul on Thursday and into Friday. Since then, he said, "the tide seems to have changed."

He and the state's public safety commissioner credit the nighttime curfew in St. Paul and Minneapolis with helping to keep the peace.

Corrections Commissioner Paul Schnell, who is helping lead the Minnesota Multi-Agency Command Center, said Tuesday night that increased security measures would remain in place until "restoration of general order is solid." He said "it would not be surprising" to see the curfew extended.

There have been peaceful protests in the Twin Cities that have drawn thousands of people who are voicing their anger and distress about the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody on May 25.

"We take care of our peaceful protesters and we have done that historically throughout our department, and my heart breaks for our entire community who has been tragically impacted by this outrageous incident," Axtell said. "But we will never take care of or coddle people who want to terrorize our community by looting, setting our businesses on fire and injuring our officers who are out there to protect us all. I truly believe that it's a false choice to say that destruction and danger is the only path to change. They can help by making their voice heard peacefully under the curfew."

Axtell said the curfew "helps our officers focus more on the people who are potentially out to terrorize our community."

ARRESTS CONTINUE

St. Paul police chief: Peaceful protesters should be protected, but not anyone bent on destruction

There were 123 arrests Monday and early Tuesday - 57 people at the state Capitol and 66 people in Minneapolis, according to the Public Safety Department. Most were cited for curfew violations and released, though Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said 13 guns were found.

The arrests at the Capitol on Monday night came after people peacefully marched there earlier and then some stayed after curfew in an act of "civil disobedience to make their point that racism and brutality has to stop," Harrington said.

Axtell noted a few had helmets - "normally a sign that they are expecting a conflict with police," he said.

St. Paul police found a baseball bat wrapped in barbed wire in a van marked as a community "medic" vehicle near the Capitol, according to the department.

Arrest update:

48 people were arrested at the Capitol.

A protester support vehicle was towed. The van was marked as a "medic vehicle," and inside there were milk containers, helmets and a baseball bat wrapped in barbed wire.

Go home, stay safe and help us keep St Paul secure. pic.twitter.com/OcbNlu7NYZ

- Saint Paul Police Department (@sppdmn) June 2, 2020

There were three or four instances of people ramming vehicles into squad cars overnight, Harrington said Monday. No officers were injured and some people were arrested.

REMAINING VIGILANT

"Our posture today ... remains vigilant," Harrington said Tuesday. "You will see high-visibility patrols continue to go out there ... to try and make sure that bad things don't happen and we can respond quickly if they do."

But Harrington said law enforcement has hardly needed to use tear gas over the past couple of days: "We have really seen the temperature change in terms of the kind of protests that we've been seeing now."

More than 170 businesses were damaged or looted in St. Paul last week, according to police. The fire department reported there were 55 fires, primarily to commercial buildings, in St. Paul between Thursday and Friday morning.

Nick Woltman contributed to this report.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

St. Paul police chief: Peaceful protesters should be protected, but not anyone bent on destruction

St. Paul Police Chief Todd Axtell. (John Autey / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Two MN men charged with throwing Molotov cocktails into Dakota County courthouse

ARTICLE CLXXIX. TWO MN MEN CHARGED WITH THROWING MOLOTOV COCKTAILS INTO DAKOTA COUNTY COURTHOUSE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 491 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: Two men threw Molotov cocktails into a Dakota County courthouse last Friday as unrest spilled into the Twin Cities suburbs in the aftermath of George Floyd's death in police custody, according to the United States Attorney's Office Fornandous Cortez Henderson, 32, and Garrett Patrick Ziegler, 24, from Savage and Long Lake, respectively, have been charged [...]

Body

Two men threw Molotov cocktails into a Dakota County courthouse last Friday as unrest spilled into the Twin Cities suburbs in the aftermath of George Floyd's death in police custody, according to the United States Attorney's Office

Fornandous Cortez Henderson, 32, and Garrett Patrick Ziegler, 24, from Savage and Long Lake, respectively, have been charged with arson and possession of Molotov cocktails. They made their initial court appearance Tuesday before Magistrate Judge Becky R. Thorson in U.S. District Court in Minneapolis.

Apple Valley police responded to a fire alarm at the Western Service Center in Apple Valley last Friday, according to a criminal complaint, and found broken windows, smoke, and flames coming from the building. Located at the scene were items consistent with those used in Molotov cocktails, including broken glass jars and liquor bottles, pushpins, intact glass jars containing ignitable liquid, and a charred red bandana.

They also found a set of car keys in the grass near the Western Service Center belonging to a Ford Fiesta parked in a nearby parking lot. They later executed a search warrant on the vehicle, which was registered to Ziegler, and found liquor bottles, a store receipt from last Thursday for three bandanas, an empty cardboard box for 12 mason jars, an empty Kingsford brand lighter fluid bottle, alcohol bottles, a plastic jar containing a clear unidentified liquid and a store receipt from last Wednesday for nail polish remover.

After putting out there fire, officers spotted Henderson and Ziegler on a nearby road and arrested them. According to a criminal complaint,, Henderson fled and was apprehended a short distance away, and Ziegler repeatedly resisted arrest.

Two MN men charged with throwing Molotov cocktails into Dakota County courthouse

After being apprehended, Ziegler informed officers that he lost his glasses near the Western Service Center and requested that officers retrieve them. They did and provided them to him at the police station.

Both men also gave false statements to the officers, according to a criminal complaint, stating they used Metro Transit to travel to 38th Street and Chicago Avenue last Friday to participate in protests following the death of Floyd. Metro Transit, though, had temporarily ceased operations last Thursday.

Early this morning, Apple Valley Police got a fire alarm call at the Western Service Center. When they arrived, they located multiple broken windows. There was significant fire and water damage. Due to their quick response AVPD arrested 2 individuals during a perimeter search. pic.twitter.com/JY8nvDHFyY

- Dakota County SO (@DakotaMNSheriff) May 29, 2020

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Graphic

Garrett Patrick Ziegler

Fornandous Cortez Henderson

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

As Vikings work to facilitate change, Eric Kendricks, Anthony Barr call on NFL to do the same

ARTICLE CLXXX. AS VIKINGS WORK TO FACILITATE CHANGE, ERIC KENDRICKS, ANTHONY BARR CALL ON NFL TO DO THE SAME

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 539 words

Byline: Jace Frederick

Highlight: Vikings linebacker Eric Kendricks tweeted out a thread, later shared on teammate Anthony Barr's Twitter account, on Tuesday afternoon that served two purposes. One was to let people know the team has "opened a dialogue" with players and that all involved are working toward solutions in the wake of George Floyd's death at the hands [...]

Body

Vikings linebacker Eric Kendricks tweeted out a thread, later shared on teammate Anthony Barr's Twitter account, on Tuesday afternoon that served two purposes.

One was to let people know the team has "opened a dialogue" with players and that all involved are working toward solutions in the wake of George Floyd's death at the hands of Minneapolis Police Officers. They asked for suggestions on how to support the city.

"Our team doesn't just want to donate - we want to work with local organizations and get out there to help facilitate change," Kendricks tweeted.

That has long been the aim of players like Kendricks, who serves in a leadership role on the Vikings' social justice committee. He also works with the Sheridan Story to battle childhood hunger in Minnesota. If there's something to be done to help those in need, Kendricks will do it.

"But we want answers at the league level," he tweeted Tuesday. "That's where change can happen, and we've seen none. Because right now, it seems like nothing. And nothing is unacceptable."

Enter point No. 2.

NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell released a statement Saturday that expressed condolences to the families of George Floyd, Breonna Taylor and Ahmaud Arbery, while adding the "NFL family is greatly saddened by the tragic events across our country. The protesters' reactions to these incidents reflect the pain, anger and frustration that so many of us feel.

"As current events dramatically underscore, there remains much more to do as a country and as a league. These tragedies inform the NFL's commitment and our ongoing efforts," the statement read. "There remains an urgent need for action. We recognize the power of our platform in communities and as part of the fabric of American society. We embrace that responsibility and are committed to continuing the important work to address these systemic issues together with our players, clubs and partners."

As Vikings work to facilitate change, Eric Kendricks, Anthony Barr call on NFL to do the same

That statement, Kendricks said, "said nothing."

"What actual steps are you taking to support the fight for justice and system reform?" Kendricks tweeted. "Your league is built on black athletes. Vague answers do nothing. Let the players know what you're ACTUALLY doing. And we know what silence means."

Dalvin Cook reportedly set to hold out in search of contract extension Vikings' front office employees back in Eagan. When will the players be? Roger Goodell says NFL was wrong for not listening to players Minnesota athletes and coaches combine to help the community, and perhaps spark change Jake Lacina hopes to make big leap to his dad's former team, the Vikings

The NFL doesn't have much of a leg to stand on when it comes to issues surrounding social injustice or police brutality, and the protests of them. Not with the way the league handled the peaceful on-field protests in 2016 started by Colin Kaepernick, that eventually spread across the league.

How it approaches the issue this time around appears to be under close watch from the very players on which the league relies.

"You can't bring in people to teach us how we should interact with police but not work towards changing the behavior of the police themselves," Kendricks said. "Silence will not make this go away. @NFL #WeWantAnswers #BlackLivesMatter."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CLXXXI. PROTESTS IN TOP 25 VIRUS HOT SPOTS IGNITE FEARS OF CONTAGION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1113 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: As demonstrators flooded streets across America to decry the killing of George Floyd, public health experts watched in alarm - the close proximity of protesters and their failures in many cases to wear masks, along with the police using tear gas, could fuel new transmissions of the coronavirus.Body

By MICHELLE R. SMITH and NICKY FORSTER

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - As demonstrators flooded streets across America to decry the killing of George Floyd, public health experts watched in alarm - the close proximity of protesters and their failures in many cases to wear masks, along with the police using tear gas, could fuel new transmissions of the coronavirus.

Many of the protests broke out in places where the virus is still circulating widely in the population. In fact, an Associated Press review found that demonstrations have taken place in every one of the 25 U.S. communities with the highest concentrations of new cases. Some have seen major protests over multiple days, including Minneapolis-St. Paul, Chicago, Washington, D.C., and Los Angeles.

The protests have come just as communities across the nation loosen restrictions on businesses and public life that have helped slow the spread of the virus, deepening concern that the two factors taken together could create a national resurgence in cases.

"As a nation, we have to be concerned about a rebound," Washington Mayor Muriel Bowser warned Sunday after days of protests rocked the nation's capital. New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo bemoaned the crowds, saying that hundreds could potentially have been infected, undoing months of social distancing.

A fresh outbreak in the places where protesters gathered could lead to reinstating shutdowns.

The AP's review focused on large metro counties - the central counties within metro areas with more than 1 million people - that showed the highest rates of new cases per capita over the past 14 days.

While case numbers and deaths have been trending down in several of the cities where the largest protests have occurred, the number of people in those places infected with the virus - and with the ability to spread it - remains high. And in some of the communities, such as Minneapolis, the number of people hospitalized with COVID-19 has been rising.

Protests in top 25 virus hot spots ignite fears of contagion

Floyd died May 25 after a Minneapolis police officer pressed a knee into his neck for several minutes, even as he pleaded that he couldn't breathe. Minneapolis has been ground zero for the sprawling protests, which have crossed the Mississippi River into neighboring St. Paul.

The unrest has coincided with "the very worst days of the pandemic so far" in the Twin Cities metropolitan area, said Michael T. Osterholm, director of the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota.

"Our ICU bed care is at its all-time high and is really on the edge," he said.

Ramsey and Hennepin counties, home to the Twin Cities, ranked seventh and eighth for the highest per capita new cases in the AP analysis. Each has seen more than 250 cases per 100,000 population in the past two weeks, together reporting nearly 2,000 new cases in the last week alone.

Experts point out that other factors associated with protests could accelerate the spread of the virus. For instance, tear gas can cause people to cough and sneeze, as can the smoke from fires set by people bent on destruction. And both also prompt protesters to remove their masks.

Crowding protesters who have been arrested into jail cells can also increase the risk of contagion. An AP tally found that, thus far, more than 5,600 people have been taken into custody.

Protesters and police shouting at one another nose-to-nose also is raising alarms.

Osterholm and other public health experts note, however, that the protests aren't necessarily as alarming as other events that could fuel new cases because they take place outside and many people are wearing masks. In some cases, hand sanitizer also is being informally distributed.

And Dr. David Eisenman, director of the Center for Public Health and Disasters at the UCLA Fielding School of Public Health, said he feared partisan forces might accuse cities of bringing fresh cases on themselves.

"I'm actually more worried about how, if those spikes occur, how that information will be weaponized against the notion of protests," he said.

Eisenman called protesting an "essential activity," possible to practice with reduced risk. He said his grown children protested in Los Angeles and are taking safety precautions now, including isolating themselves at home. They plan to get tested for COVID-19 in about a week.

Dr. Leana Wen, an emergency physician and public health professor at George Washington University, said the hospitalizations for coronavirus in the Washington metro area have been on the decline but that she knows that could change.

"There are a lot of unknowns about what happens next," she said.

Wen was the health commissioner for the city of Baltimore during the 2015 uprising after the death of Freddie Gray in police custody and said many health clinics were closed and pharmacies burned down, making it difficult for members of disadvantaged communities to access health care.

Protests in top 25 virus hot spots ignite fears of contagion

It's a concern for her now, too.

"You will have compounded health issues that go beyond COVID-19," she said.

Public health experts said it will take two to three weeks to know whether the protests cause a surge in coronavirus cases. And even then, they can't definitively tie it to the demonstrations.

The unrest is happening in tandem with the reopening of gyms, hair salons, restaurants, parks and beaches. It also comes on the heels of the Memorial Day weekend, when many people attended large gatherings, so experts already were bracing for a case increase, said Jennifer Nuzzo, an epidemiologist at Johns Hopkins University.

In Los Angeles, barbershops and in-person dining were allowed to resume last weekend, just as protests descended into destruction and more than 1,000 people were arrested. Nearly 10,000 new cases have been reported in Los Angeles County in the past week.

Hundreds of people also were arrested in Chicago, where Cook County has had among the highest per capita rates of new cases of any large county in the nation, with 283 new cases per 100,000 population in the past two weeks.

"The absolute number of cases is still high. We feel good about the fact that we've established a decreasing incidence, but we have a ways to go," said Dr. Ronald Hershov the director of the Division of Epidemiology and Biostatistics at the University of Illinois-Chicago.

Hershov and others noted that the racial disparities laid bare by coronavirus - with communities of color bearing a disproportionate burden of infections and deaths - overlap with the issues being protested on streets across America and around the globe.

"Racism kills," Hershov said. "Sometimes that's direct, as in the case of George Floyd. And sometimes it's through a virus like COVID-19."

Forster reported from Berkley, Massachusetts.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CLXXXII. READERS WRITE POLICE UNION HEAD MUST GO

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 8ALength: 1256 wordsBody

LEADERSHIP

Lt. Bob Kroll, head of the Police Officers Federation of Minneapolis, is a shining example of exactly what is wrong with policing in 2020 ("Kroll, Minneapolis police union head, blasts city's riot response in letter to officers," StarTribune.com, June 1). In a letter to union membership shared by the media on Monday, he quickly and repeatedly attempted to remove any culpability from himself and his brethren and rather placed it at the feet of city politicians, Minneapolis citizens and even George Floyd - going so far as to say the four terminated officers lost their jobs without "due process."

The "us vs. them" position presented by Kroll is supremely emblematic of the existing underlying issues with the city police, which culminated the past week in unprecedented civil unrest. It also demonstrates an unwillingness to engage in the type of community policing that will be needed in order to restore the city's faith in the department.

While the Police Officers Federation of Minneapolis is a private group and is free to elect its leaders as it likes, the collective bargaining agreement between the Police Officers Federation and the city of Minneapolis expired on Dec. 31, 2019.

I call upon the mayor and City Council to communicate to the Police Officers Federation that no future agreement shall be ratified until Kroll resigns from his leadership position within the union.

Archie Pickerign, St. Paul

...

In many ways state Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, a Republican, was right when he said that what we're witnessing now is "a failure of leadership." But it's a leadership failure of historical proportions, not simply a recent failure. It's a failure of leadership to provide equality in education, equality in opportunity, equality in wealth and income. It's a failure of leadership to provide early child education, affordable child care and access to affordable health care. It's incumbent upon Gazelka and his fellow legislators to step up and provide leadership that leads to greater equality, not partisan posturing and benefits simply to those who already occupy positions of privilege.

John E. Fredell, Minneapolis

POLICING BY CONSENT

Unworkable with so many guns

The letter in Monday's paper, "Rethink our policing model," made some "policing by consent" comparisons with other countries. The London example of many police officers without guns relying on the community's trust for their authority sounds wonderful. There is one major difference between England and the United States. Our reality is a culture of guns and violence.

England has 4.6 guns per 100 residents. The U.S. has 120 guns per 100 residents. Similarly, the number of police officers killed in Britain, a country with about a fifth the population of the U.S., is less than three per year. We average about 150 per year.

Being a police officer is a dangerous and highly stressful job, and the vast majority deserve our respect and thanks. This does not excuse over-the-top violence by the officers who are paid to protect us. However, until we change our irrational infatuation with guns, I am afraid that policing by consent is a pie-in-the-sky concept.

Bruce Lemke, Orono

CLEANING UP

In those brooms, I saw hope

I was born in Minneapolis, Fairview Hospital, 1942. When I turned on my television Friday morning and saw the devastation to our community my first thought was, how could this happen in our beautiful city? The next thought: What could I, a 77-year-old, do to help clean up debris, make some effort to be useful? Imagine my shock when I saw young person after young person walking amid other peaceful demonstrators bringing brooms, garbage bags, shovels and purposefulness to the task at hand - the broom brigade. As I watched them tears came unexpectedly, uncontrolled.

Never before in all my years and experience have I seen anything like it. I took part in the 1960s marches when Plymouth Avenue was burned to the ground. We protested. We marched. We chanted, but we didn't carry brooms and bags. Perhaps this generation, knowing change must finally occur to start meaningful steps forward, will be the agents for change - to begin to sweep away deeply held, entrenched and unnamed racial prejudices. Thank you, extraordinary, young Minnesotans. Thank you. Keep your brooms at the ready.

Sara Meyer, St. Mary's Point

. . .

Hearts are broken and grieving. Beloved restaurants, service providers and businesses are burning. And, there is beauty that seized my heart and squeezed my throat this weekend. We were with the thousands of people of all races and ages who took to the streets with brooms, shovels, gloves and masks to clean up. It was a huge group of people lasting all day. I've never experienced a cleaner Lake Street. The now-famous intersection at Cup Foods where George Floyd was killed is filled with a circle of flowers and positive messages. Burning sage rose above the acrid smell as Aztec dancers' music and regalia brought healing to those quietly gathered there.

READERS WRITE Police union head must go

Thank you, fellow Twin Citians, for your humanity.

Linnea Swenson Tellekson, Minneapolis

...

As if the fear and mourning were not enough this week, there have been media reports of insurance agents stating there is no coverage for damage caused by rioting, vandals and thugs ("Toll of our unrest," May 31). Having spent 30 years in insurance claims, I am here to tell you that there absolutely is coverage for damage and business interruption caused by these events. Homeowners and automobile owners also have coverage. If you are given any problems from your agents, you need to immediately file a written complaint with the insurance commissioner's office at the Minnesota Department of Commerce. Agents who falsely deny claims are subject to large fines and actions against their licenses.

Please don't risk your life defending a piece of property; that is what you paid insurance to do.

Curt Rahman, St. Louis Park

POLICING

I know the Floyd family's pain. Seeking justice must come next.

I don't have to imagine how the family of George Floyd feels. I know how it feels to have your unarmed loved one die in police custody. My heart breaks for the Floyd family, because they are entering a journey of pain that will remain with them forever. My son, Leslie Prater, was killed in Chattanooga, Tenn., on Jan. 2, 2004.

The cause of death, from actions of four police officers, was homicide by positional asphyxia. There were similarities between Mr. Floyd's death and Leslie's. One major difference is that no video captured Leslie's killing. There were eyewitnesses, but cellphones were without video capability. Another difference between the two is that our mayor never spoke out publicly. Citizens of Minneapolis are so fortunate to have Mayor Jacob Frey. Not only did he speak out, but his response was immediate and courageous. When he announced that the four officers were fired, I was so proud of him.

Now, the next challenge is to seek justice. It is not over yet. Justice can only occur if all four officers are convicted and sentenced to prison terms. Like most families, we received no justice. The officers were "punished" with a week off with pay. As a former university administrator, with oversight of a criminal justice department and police academy, I have conducted sensitivity training for future officers. I believe employing the "right" people and training them sufficiently can contribute to the complex solution to address police brutality.

Loretta Prater, Cape Girardeau, Mo.

We want to hear from you. Send us your thoughts here.

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

READERS WRITE Police union head must go

End of Document

UnitedHealth gives $10M to Floyd family, rebuilding

ARTICLE CLXXXIII. UNITEDHEALTH GIVES \$10M TO FLOYD FAMILY, REBUILDING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3BLength: 270 wordsByline: DEE DePASS; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

UnitedHealth Group said it will pay for the college education of George Floyd's children and donate more than $10 million to help Twin Cities neighborhoods hurt by the riots of the past week.

After Floyd died while in Minneapolis police custody, an offshoot of peaceful protests turned violent, resulting in days of looting and destruction in both Minneapolis and St. Paul.

UnitedHealth said it would donate $5 million and up to 25,000 hours of its employees' volunteer time to help businesses - many of them small and minority-owned - to rebuild.

The Minnetonka-based health care giant also said it needed to "address the larger societal issues at the root of George Floyd's death," so it is donating another $5 million to the YMCA Equity Innovation Center of Excellence in Floyd's memory.

"George Floyd's death is an unspeakable tragedy. Communities all across America are struggling to make sense of what's happened and how we as a society pull together to move forward, heal, learn and grow," said UnitedHealth CEO David Wichmann in a statement.

UnitedHealth, he said, is committed to building a culture of inclusivity and diversity.

The insurance company's effort is one of many acts of goodwill following several violent days. Individuals in neighborhoods stepped up to help protect businesses, and others raised money, gathered food to give out or started scrubbing graffiti off storefronts.

United Way of Minneapolis spokeswoman Kelly Puspoki said other Minnesota companies and citizens are also reaching out to see how they can support the Floyd family and various community rebuilding efforts.

Dee DePass · 612-673-7725

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

UnitedHealth gives $10M to Floyd family, rebuilding

End of Document

ARTICLE CLXXXIV. \$2.5M POURS IN TO HELP REBUILD LAKE ST. BUSINESSES

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 405 wordsByline: TIM HARLOW; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Neighborhood council will also make donation to the family of George Floyd*Body

Donors have given more than $2.5 million to help small businesses on Lake Street rebuild in the aftermath of last week's riots that caused widespread destruction.

By Monday afternoon, just four days after the fundraiser launched by the Lake Street Council went live, more than 32,000 people had given money, with donations coming in furiously from the metro area and from across the country, said Matt Kazinka, senior strategic initiatives manager for the nonprofit, which advocates for hundreds of small businesses and organizations along the busy south Minneapolis corridor.

"It's incredible to see how much care about Lake Street and a community like ours," said Kazinka, noting that a majority of businesses are owned by immigrants and people of color. "These businesses serve so many people and are home for so many people. It's not just the goods and services they provide, but they are community centers."

The council said it will take millions of dollars to rebuild the scores of businesses damaged during the riots of the past few days, which erupted after the death of George Floyd, the 46-year-old black man who died May 25 after he was restrained during an arrest.

Kazinka said the council will be drawing up guidelines in the coming weeks to determine how to disburse the money.

To recognize the generosity, the council said it will use its own general operating funds to make a "significant gift" to Floyd's family. All donations that come in will be allocated to businesses to help them rebuild storefronts and reopen, the council said.

Many businesses had already been struggling economically in the wake of COVID-19 closures. Then the riots hit and delivered more devastation. But thousands are stepping up, Kazinka said.

"I can't believe it," he said. "I'm thrilled about what this means for our community."

Donations can be made on the council's website or at givemn.org.

$2.5M POURS IN TO HELP REBUILD LAKE ST. BUSINESSES

Checks can be mailed to the council's office at 919 E. Lake St., Minneapolis, MN, 55407. But the council warns it may not receive them for "some time" because mail delivery in the area has been temporarily halted.

In a separate fundraiser for the Lake Street Business Association, Edina-based Inclusivi-Tee will hold an online auction June 25-28. "Artists Who Share" will feature work from more than 40 established and new artists from the United States, as well as from Colombia, Kenya, the Netherlands, Argentina and England.

Tim Harlow · 612-673-7768

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

Customers start trickling in

ARTICLE CLXXXV. CUSTOMERS START TRICKLING IN

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1DLength: 1129 wordsByline: SHARYN JACKSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: But restaurants hit another barrier as violence forces them to closeBody

They came for a beer. They came to celebrate an anniversary. They came seeking momentary reprieve from a pandemic.

Customers trickled in to Minnesota restaurants and breweries Monday, the first day patio dining was allowed to open under orders from the state.

"For some reason, this was my milestone for feeling more normal - to go out and have lunch again," said Sean Gilbertson of Edina, who was having a venison and Kobe beef Juicy Lucy and fries on the dock at 6Smith in Wayzata.

The restaurant was his second choice; his first made a last-minute call not to open after days of violence and looting swept Minneapolis in the aftermath of the death of George Floyd while in police custody.

Did having a meal outside his home for the first time in months help Gilbertson feel "normal"?

"No," he said. "I don't know what would make things more normal."

The state ordered dining rooms to close beginning March 17 to slow the spread of the coronavirus in Minnesota. Later, they were given a June 1 reopening date - with the caveat that all dining must take place outdoors, with no more than 50 guests at a time, on a reservation-only basis.

Many restaurants chose not to reopen yet, whether due to the ongoing pandemic, a lack of outdoor seating or the economic hardship of opening to serve only a fraction of their usual capacity.

Then, with a week of unrest across the metro that saw several Twin Cities restaurants vandalized or damaged, more restaurants decided to put off their scheduled patio openings.

Customers start trickling in

But after nearly three months without a seated customer, others were ready to welcome guests back to their patios and rooftops on a sunny day with temperatures in the high 80s.

It wasn't business as usual.

At Pub 42 in New Hope, there was one significant barrier for entry to the deck overlooking the parking lot and N. 42nd Avenue. General manager Rob Gossard stood at the hosts' stand, pointing a white thermometer at guests' foreheads for a touchless temperature reading. Anyone over 99.5 degrees would be sent away.

"We're trying to keep fever out of the restaurant," he said.

At 6Smith, a timer went off every 15 minutes to let staffers - in matching gray masks - know it was time to wash their hands.

A bagpiper was on hand to welcome guests to Utepils Brewing's tucked-away beer garden along Bassett Creek in north Minneapolis. When the first song ended, a man seated on an Adirondack chair with a beer in hand yelled out, "Are you playing that thing with a mask on?"

The bagpiper's second number was taps, to honor Floyd.

The brewery had a total of 56 bookings for the day, a slow start, said owner Dan Justesen.

Still, he was "pretty excited" as he watched over about a dozen customers at picnic tables. "We live to do this," he said.

Jacob Bell and Sara Marie Sorenson are regulars at Sir Benedict's Tavern on the Lake in Duluth and were with co-owner Josh Stotts until the restaurant's last call before the stay-at-home order took hold in March.

"There's definitely been a piece of our lives that's been missing the last two months," Bell said.

Stotts said his patio can usually seat 119 customers, but he's spread out tables to make room for social distancing. Almost all 50 seats available were filled Monday afternoon.

"We're taking things one day at a time," he said.

Tavern on the Hill in Duluth filled all its reservation slots for Monday.

"Our phone's been ringing off the hook," said co-owner Julie Thoreson. "I wish we had more room. ... Fifty seats fill pretty darn quick."

More restaurants and bars will be rolling out their patios in the week ahead.

After its April debut was delayed by the coronavirus pandemic, the Grocer's Table is opening in downtown Wayzata on Wednesday on a newly expanded patio that takes advantage of sidewalk footage.

Over the past two months, owner Lindsay Pohlada has made alterations to her original cafe-wine bar-market business plan by emphasizing the market aspect of her enterprise. Banquettes have been replaced with coolers stocked with all kinds of pantry staples, including locally sourced eggs, butter, yogurt and cheese.

Customers start trickling in

Pohlad added that the Grocer's Table will follow now-standard protocols: a separate entrance and exit, disposable menus, cashless transactions and masked and gloved staffers.

Although opening a restaurant during a global pandemic is "surreal," Pohlad is accentuating the positive. "I feel that we've been stressed and challenged in every way possible before we even opened, so that's a silver lining," she said.

Other restaurant and bar operators made the last-minute call not to open as planned. Finnegans Brewery was prepared to open its taproom Monday, until a Sunday night decision to postpone. "In light of what is happening in our city, now is not the right time to reopen," said an announcement on social media.

Three of Craft & Crew Hospitality's four restaurants opened their patios - but their Howe Daily Kitchen & Bar in south Minneapolis is delaying.

The online reservation system Open Table was still taking bookings midmorning Monday for the News Room on Nicollet Mall. General manager Brad Schwichtenberg had to call customers to let them know those reservations were canceled.

The restaurant, like others on the mall, is still boarded up and it will take almost 48 hours to take the boards down and prepare the restaurant for customers, Schwichtenberg said. They're hoping to open by Thursday.

Tables were set up at 6 a.m. on the patio outside French Meadow Bakery & Cafe on S. Lyndale Avenue in Minneapolis for the long-awaited opening of its patio.

But French Meadow founder Lynn Gordon changed course minutes before the first seating, suspending service to those tables. (People can sit there with their takeout.) The cafe's hand-carved wooden front doors were damaged over the weekend in a break-in.

In St. Paul, Afro Deli opened its patio on the pedestrian-only West 7th Place. Even with social distancing restrictions, it has enough room to seat 30 to 40 people.

Opening Monday was important to owner Abdirahman Kahin, despite the destruction of businesses from riots and arson over the last week.

"We want to be a solution for the unrest," Kahin said. "We are sympathizing with George Floyd and his family and we also support people who are demanding justice. We want to make sure life goes on, despite the atmosphere."

Over the weekend, Afro Deli prepared 1,200 meals to distribute to citizens cleaning up Lake Street, and partnered with Meals on Wheels and Frontline Foods throughout the pandemic to get meals to seniors and children.

Opening the patio gives back to the community in another way, Kahin said.

"Some people feel better when they see businesses that are open," he said. "We want to show hope."

Staff writer Katie Galioto contributed to this report.

Sharyn Jackson · 612-673-4853

Customers start trickling in

@SharynJackson

Load-Date: June 2, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CLXXXVI. MACY'S HIT AS NEW YORK IMPOSES CURFEW AMID FLOYD PROTESTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1067 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: NEW YORK (AP) - New York City imposed a late-night curfew Monday that failed to prevent another night of destruction, including arrests after a break-in at the iconic Macy's store on 34th Street, following protests over George Floyd's death.Body

By BRIAN MAHONEY and JENNIFER PELTZ

NEW YORK (AP) - New York City imposed a late-night curfew Monday that failed to prevent another night of destruction, including arrests after a break-in at the iconic Macy's store on 34th Street, following protests over George Floyd's death.

As the 11 p.m. deadline to get off the streets approached, bands of protesters marched peacefully through Manhattan and Brooklyn, but police simultaneously responded to numerous reports of roving groups of people smashing their way into shops and emptying them of merchandise.

The doors of Macy's flagship Manhattan store were breached. Police pulled two handcuffed men out and put them in a van.

People rushed into a Nike store and carried out armloads of clothing. Near Rockefeller Center, storefront windows were smashed and multiple people arrested. Bank windows were smashed. Wreckage littered the inside of an AT&T store.

Video posted on social media showed some protesters arguing with people breaking windows, urging them to stop, but instances of vandalism and smash-and-grab thefts mounted as the night deepened.

"We worked hard to build up the business, and within a second, someone does this," said the owner of a ransacked Manhattan smoke shop, who identified himself only by the name Harri. "Really bad."

New York joined other cities around the country in imposing a curfew after days of unrest. It comes on top of months of restrictions on public gatherings already imposed because of the coronavirus pandemic.

Enough mayhem happened before the curfew took effect that Mayor Bill de Blasio tweeted that it would move up to 8 p.m. Tuesday. The curfew lifts at 5 a.m.

Macy's hit as New York imposes curfew amid Floyd protests

De Blasio and Gov. Andrew Cuomo said the outbreaks of violence the previous two evenings - which left stores ransacked and police vehicles burned - gave them no choice to impose a curfew and boost police presence, even as they insisted they stood with the throngs of peaceful demonstrators who have spoken out for several days against police brutality and racial injustice.

"We can't let violence undermine the message of this moment," de Blasio said in a statement. He and Cuomo are Democrats.

Big crowds rallied in Times Square and Brooklyn on Monday afternoon and marched through the streets for hours. As in previous days, the demonstrations in daylight were peaceful, with officers mostly keeping their distance from marchers. A nighttime march through Brooklyn was also peaceful, and police let it continue for hours after the 11 a.m. curfew passed.

But midtown Manhattan descended into chaos as night fell. There were dozens of arrests, police said.

De Blasio tweeted at 1 a.m. that there were also "real problems" in the Bronx, which had largely escaped previous nights of unrest unscathed.

Video posted on social media showed multiple piles of rubbish on fire on a debris-strewn street and people smashing into stories.

Another video showed a group of men beating a police officer who was alone and down on the ground, smashing him with pieces of wreckage until he pulled his gun and they ran.

After the curfew took effect, police moved more actively to clear the streets, chasing after and knocking down some people who wouldn't comply as they streamed toward Times Square.

At the same time, the city's elected public advocate, Jumaane Williams, and some other officials held a news conference in Brooklyn criticizing the curfew.

"In the black community, every time we ask for resources or assistance, they send police," said Williams, a Democrat.

Earlier in the day, one Times Square demonstrator, Giselle Francisco, considered the curfew necessary.

"There are people who have ulterior motives, and they're trying to hijack the message," the New Yorker said.

Police Commissioner Dermot Shea expressed doubts earlier Monday about whether a curfew would be heeded. Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams, a retired police captain whose borough has been a focal point for demonstrations and some damage, also had doubts.

"There are real deep, legitimate wounds, and if we're not going to put the same level of energy into correcting those wounds as we're going to put into telling people not to come out at 11, then we're going to fail, and this is going to prolong the problem," said Adams, a Democrat.

Bystander Sean Jones, who watched as people ransacked luxury stores in Manhattan's chic Soho neighborhood Sunday night, explained the destruction this way: "People are doing this so next time, before they think about trying to kill another black person, they're going to be like, 'Damn, we don't want them out here doing this ... again.'"

Macy's hit as New York imposes curfew amid Floyd protests

Monday marked the fourth night in a row of mainly peaceful daytime demonstrations, chaotic nights, hot spots of violence and arrests, with the mayor's daughter among those arrested over the weekend.

Chiara de Blasio, 25, refused to leave a Manhattan street officers were clearing Saturday because people were throwing things. She was released with a court summons.

Her father said Monday she told him she'd behaved peacefully and believed she had followed officers' instructions.

Thousands of people have taken to the streets around the nation to express outrage over Floyd's May 25 death and other killings of black people, particularly by police. Floyd, who was black, died after a white Minneapolis police officer pressed a knee on his neck.

On Sunday, some New York City police officers knelt with protesters. But officers have also clashed with demonstrators.

Shea said the department is investigating officers' behavior in about six confrontations, including one in which two police vehicles plowed through a group of protesters Saturday in Brooklyn.

During Sunday night's demonstration, video posted to social media showed a police officer pulling a gun and pointing it at demonstrators on a debris-littered Manhattan street moments after a protester used an object to deliver a crushing blow to another officer's head a few yards away.

"That officer should have his gun and badge taken away today," de Blasio said.

Cuomo said some officers had exacerbated tensions with some "very disturbing" actions. Police union president Patrick Lynch said Cuomo was "wrongly blaming the chaos on the cops."

Contributing were Associated Press writers Larry Neumeister, Jake Seiner, Maria Sanminatelli, Michael R. Sisak, Karen Matthews and Deepti Hajela and video journalist Robert Bumsted in New York and Marina Villeneuve in Albany.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CLXXXVII.

MN DFL ENDORSES SEN. TINA SMITH FOR RE-ELECTION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 167 wordsByline: Bill Salisbury

Highlight: The Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party announced Tuesday it has endorsed U.S. Sen. Tina Smith for re-election. Smith won the DFL's backing in electronic balloting conducted over the past week after the party's convention scheduled for last weekend was postponed following the murder of George Floyd and the subsequent civil unrest that swept the Twin Cities. Smith, [...]

Body

The Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party announced Tuesday it has endorsed U.S. Sen. Tina Smith for re-election.

Smith won the DFL's backing in electronic balloting conducted over the past week after the party's convention scheduled for last weekend was postponed following the murder of George Floyd and the subsequent civil unrest that swept the Twin Cities.

Smith, 62, of Minneapolis was lieutenant governor of Minnesota from 2015 to 2018, when then-Gov. Mark Dayton appointed her to the Senate seat vacated by Al Franken. She won the 2018 election to fill the remainder of Franken's term.

Republicans last weekend endorsed former congressman and radio talk show host Jason Lewis to challenge Smith. But before they face off, Lewis must win the Aug. 11 GOP primary against four other Republican candidates, and Smith has a DFL primary contest with four other Democrats.

DFL endorses incumbent Ilhan Omar for congressional seat Lewis sues Walz, saying coronavirus orders hindering his Senate campaign

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

More Hudson restaurants reopen, campaign to help rebuild Midtown

ARTICLE CLXXXVIII.

MORE HUDSON RESTAURANTS REOPEN, CAMPAIGN TO HELP REBUILD MIDTOWN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 473 words

Byline: Nancy Ngo

Highlight: After the Wisconsin Supreme Court ruling in mid-May that overturned the state's "Safer at Home" order, Hudson restaurants continue to reopen their dining rooms. RELATED: Hudson bars and restaurants slowly reopen for dine-in following court ruling Some of the latest to reopen: Barker's Bar and Grill, 413 Second St.; 715-386-4123; barkersbarandgrill.com Pier 500, 500 First [...]

Body

After the Wisconsin Supreme Court ruling in mid-May that overturned the state's "Safer at Home" order, Hudson restaurants continue to reopen their dining rooms.

RELATED: Hudson bars and restaurants slowly reopen for dine-in following court ruling

Some of the latest to reopen:

Barker's Bar and Grill, 413 Second St.; 715-386-4123; barkersbarandgrill.com Pier 500, 500 First St.; 715-386-5504; pierfivehundred.com San Pedro Cafe, 426 Second St.; 715-386-4003; sanpedrocafe.com

Barker's and San Pedro Cafe owner Pete Foster said he, like several downtown Hudson restaurants, are following recommended guidelines from the CDC, St. Croix County Health Department and Wisconsin Restaurant Association. That includes tables spaced six feet or more apart, reducing capacity.

"While there are no limits on capacity (in Wisconsin currently), with social distancing, we're down to 50 to 60 percent," he said.

Foster said while dine-in service has started up again, he expects there to still be a strong pickup and delivery operation, which has amped up during the coronavirus pandemic.

A GoFundMe page has been set up for Midtown Global Market to repair damages following unrest after the death of George Floyd. Funds will go toward repairing and rebuilding the Lake Street market and cultural center housing 45 independently owned restaurants, retailers and other small businesses. To donate or for more information, visit "Midtown Global Market Mend" at gofundme.com/f/midtown-global-market.

More Hudson restaurants reopen, campaign to help rebuild Midtown

Fig + Farro, the plant-based restaurant in Uptown Minneapolis with an environmentally conscious mission, closed May 31.

"It's with deep sadness that we are announcing we'll be closing our restaurant permanently. With uncertainty of when we can reopen our dining room safely, we have decided to turn our mission of food and climate into a foundation," Fig + Farro founder Michelle Courtright stated in a news release. "More to come on this in the coming weeks...Thanks for your support over the years."

Fig + Farro in Calhoun Square was known for its plant-based comfort food with global influences. In 2019, Forbes Magazine named the spot one of its "Top 50 Vegetarian Restaurants in America." In addition to serving up plant-based foods as part of its mission to fight climate change, Fig + Farro donated one tree for every customer. Since December 2018, more than 71,000 trees have been planted through the restaurant and its program partner, Trees For The Future.

Restaurant News: Amid closings, say hello to restaurant openings in the time of the coronavirus Pandemic, protests and ice cream. 2 Scoops Ice Cream Eatery seeks to heal us. W.A. Frost preps to reopen patio with new philosophy Watch: Walz announces opening of indoor dining, gyms, movie theaters, bowling alleys Midtown Global Market evicts Holy Land over employee's past social media posts

Graphic

A pop-up food collection and food shelf to feed the community held on Saturday, May 30, 2020, at Midtown Global Market. The Lake Street market and area businesses suffered damages amid unrest after George Floyd's death. (Photo Courtesy of Neighborhood Development Center)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Protesters urged to get tested for virus

ARTICLE CLXXXIX. PROTESTERS URGED TO GET TESTED FOR VIRUS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 1227 wordsByline: JEREMY OLSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: State health officials say such mass gatherings could be breeding grounds for COVID-19, though outdoor air could lessen the risk.Body

State health officials will be encouraging people protesting the death of George Floyd to seek COVID-19 testing - regardless of whether they feel sick - due to the increased risk of the disease spreading at mass gatherings.

A surge in COVID-19 cases among protesters isn't a given - many are wearing masks, and protests are outside, which can diffuse the virus. But health officials on Monday said they are expecting that the gatherings will counteract some progress.

"Concentrated gatherings and loud talking, singing, yelling, you know, all of those loud vocal expressions, exacerbate the risk of spread," said Jan Malcolm, state health commissioner, though it is "mitigated ... by the fact that this is outdoors."

Minnesota reported 361 COVID-19 lab-confirmed cases on Monday, which was the first day since April 28 when the daily count was below 400. The number was likely deflated by the lower reporting that has happened on most Mondays in this pandemic, and by the closure over the weekend of the state's public health lab, which didn't contribute results on Monday.

And yet this also coincided with the Covid Exit Strategy website changing Minnesota's status in the pandemic from "trending poorly" to "making progress" - based largely on the reduction in the growth in cases over the past two weeks. Ten deaths reported on Monday brought the state's total to 1,050 but also was the lowest single-day count in two weeks.

The threat of a new wave of cases among protesters prompted state health officials to recommend COVID-19 testing for all of them. One reason for concern is that 80% of infected people suffer mild or no symptoms, meaning protesters could spread the novel coronavirus that causes COVID-19 without knowing they have it.

Protesters urged to get tested for virus

The Minnesota Department of Health will soon issue guidance about asymptomatic testing of protesters, because until now it had asked doctors to prioritize testing supplies for patients with symptoms.

A key recommendation will be when asymptomatic protesters should seek testing, because the incubation period of the virus following infection is around five days - with a range of two to 14 days. Testing too soon could miss developing infections, Malcolm said.

Masks have been common, but not universal, at demonstrations, as some protesters wore them for protection while others used them to conceal their identities.

"Obviously, it's something to be nervous about and thoughtful of," said Jessica Tomann of St. Louis Park, who wore a mask at a memorial on Monday for Floyd. "It's also like there's two viruses fighting this nation right now, and it's like, 'What's more important?' It's a double-edged sword, but you've got to pick the justice you really are going to fight for, you know?"

Maria Smith drove with her daughter to E. 38th Street and S. Chicago Avenue on Monday so that her daughter, a jingle dancer, could perform with others. COVID-19 is a risk, but the memorial "is taking a little more precedence than that," said Smith, who wore a mask while standing shoulder to shoulder with other women at the event.

Stocking clinics

Social distancing and a 51-day statewide stay-home order, which ended May 18, had been credited with slowing the growth of COVID-19 in Minnesota, which is one reason health officials believed the pandemic was still peaking here compared with other states.

Modeling by University of Minnesota and state health researchers showed that adherence to the order had reduced disease transmission by 55%, though initially they had predicted a reduction of 80%. But no modeling accounted for the death of George Floyd during an arrest by Minneapolis police officers - and the outrage that sent people crowding into the streets.

Upon learning of the likely protests, the state Department of Health made sure masks were available through community clinics and partners if protesters wanted them, said Kris Ehresmann, state infectious disease director.

Studies have shown that cloth, nonmedical-grade masks reduce the chance that wearers spread the coronavirus to others. These masks don't protect the wearers from being infected by others, though, unlike fitted N95 masks that are being largely held in reserve for hospitals treating COVID-19 patients.

State health authorities will make sure that clinics are well-stocked with collection kits for COVID-19 tests of asymptomatic protesters, said Dr. Ruth Lynfield, state epidemiologist.

Protesters can help by monitoring their own health and calling their doctors right away if they experience dry cough, difficulty breathing, fever, loss of taste or other classic COVID-19 symptoms, she added.

When it comes to the infection risk at a protest, "being outdoors is better than being in a very closed, confined indoor-type of setting," Lynfield said. "However it is hard to maintain a 6-foot distance at a rally."

Toll on black community

The potential spread of cases among protesters could be a double whammy, even though many of them are in the younger age demographic that has seen far fewer severe COVID-19 cases. Minnesotans 30 and under make up 74% of known infections but only six total deaths.

Further, many of the protesters are black, and people in this racial demographic suffer higher rates of chronic disease, which raises the likelihood of severe or even fatal COVID-19 cases. An initial state analysis showed that 23% of COVID-19 hospitalizations involved black people, even though they make up 6% of Minnesota's population.

Another problem is that black people make up a substantial share of the workforce in long-term care facilities - and residents of these facilities have suffered 855 of the COVID-19 deaths so far.

An outbreak late last month of COVID-19 in Minneapolis' largely black Cedar-Riverside neighborhood showed how infection risks work together. Health officials believe the outbreak was sparked by long-term care workers bringing the virus from work to friends and relatives in that community.

Assessing the impact of the protests on the pandemic in Minnesota will be challenging, because it is coming at the same time as other changes in state policies and restrictions. That includes the allowance as of Monday for restaurants and bars to resume outdoor dining service, and for salons to offer limited appointments at 25% of their usual capacities.

Contact tracing by state health investigators will be challenging as well when identifying sources of COVID-19 infection for people who participated in mass protests.

Finding the sources of infections for sick individuals is only one purpose of contact tracing, though, Ehresmann said. The other is to identify their close contacts around the time they developed symptoms, so that those contacts can quarantine themselves and avoid spreading the virus further.

Staff writer Matt McKinney contributed to this report.

Jeremy Olson · 612-673-7744

TRACKING CORONAVIRUS

Minnesota cases, daily change*

25,208 -- Total cases

361 -- June 1 new cases

*Chart data is a net count of new confirmed cases minus previously announced cases that were removed by MDH on that date.

Minnesota deaths, new daily

1,050 -- Total deaths

10 -- June 1

U.S. cases, new daily

Protesters urged to get tested for virus

1,798,764 -- Total cases

20,634 -- May 31

U.S. deaths, new daily

104,381 -- Total deaths

606 -- May 31

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

Sources: New York Times, Minnesota Dept. of Health

Note: U.S. data lags a day behind Minnesota

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CXC. RAMSEY COUNTY DECLARES 2ND STATE OF EMERGENCY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 5BLength: 467 wordsByline: SHANNON PRATHER; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

The Ramsey County Board declared a monthlong state of emergency Monday after the civil unrest, looting and arson following the death of George Floyd, a black man who died last week in Minneapolis police custody.

The declaration, which is in effect until June 30, overlaps the county's other ongoing state of emergency for the COVID-19 pandemic response.

"Significant threats to the health and safety of Ramsey County residents, first responders and businesses have been present throughout the violence, theft and property damage," according to a county report.

Commissioners unanimously supported the emergency declaration.

"My whole district is really reeling in these times. There is a lot of concern, fear and emotion - all of which is justified," said Commissioner Trista MatasCastillo.

Board Chairwoman Toni Carter had declared an emergency for the past weekend, but board action was required to extend it longer.

Emergency declarations grant county leaders more nimbleness in terms of spending and response. It also makes it possible for the county to seek state and federal aid.

In addition, the declarations are critical for businesses filing insurance claims and other assistance.

County Manager Ryan O'Connor told commissioners the community is facing the biggest health crisis since the flu pandemic of 1918, the largest economic crisis since the Great Depression of 1929 and the greatest social unrest since the late 1960s.

"We have been working around the clock to ensure the safety of those who want to speak out loudly and vocally about the killing of Mr. George Floyd and also to protect the community," O'Connor said.

Ramsey County declares 2nd state of emergency

The county's response to the protests and violence includes deploying the Sheriff's Office to keep the peace, assisting businesses damaged by looting and fires, and launching a community resiliency project.

The resiliency project includes 18 trusted grassroots community leaders who are speaking with residents to encourage peaceful forms of expression and connect them with resources including food and basic needs.

O'Connor said the county spent $37,000 this past weekend on its response to the civil unrest.

MatasCastillo said the turmoil must be a catalyst for immediate and long-term changes.

"This cannot be as it was before. This was a system that wasn't working," she said.

She added that government stakeholders also must resist the urge to take over or duplicate work to change systems already happening at the grassroots level.

"We did a much better job in St. Paul and Ramsey County and that is because of the work and partnerships we've been building over time," she said.

Ramsey County's criminal justice reforms include shuttering its juvenile correctional facility and eliminating fines and fees for defendants and those serving probation.

Shannon Prather · 651-925-5037

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CXCI. SEEING THE HELPERS IN MPLS., ST. PAUL

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 8ALength: 476 wordsHighlight: With their cities hurting, community builders arrived to clean up and start the rebuilding.Body

As the fires smoldered, the helpers came.

Since Friday morning, thousands of volunteers have arrived with brooms, shovels and garbage bags - especially along a 5-mile stretch of Lake Street in Minneapolis and a 1-mile stretch of University Avenue in St. Paul - to clean up the damage done by several nights of rioting in the Twin Cities.

During the same period, 27,000 people have contributed more than $2 million to a fund coordinated by the Lake Street Council, a nonprofit that advocates for small businesses and organizations.

And understanding that the extensive damage has left some neighborhoods without grocery stores and other needed services, many have opened pop-up food shelves, while in smaller-scale efforts to feed the hungry some simply fired up grills and handed out free food to their grieving neighbors.

Showing strong support for justice and community building, those were some of the inspiring ways Minnesotans and others have responded to the looting and property damage sparked by the death of George Floyd, the 46-year-old African-American man who died on Memorial Day while in police custody.

While condemning violence and property damage, many who are helping with the cleanup say they understand the anger caused by Floyd's death. Rushing in to help clean up and rebuild, and provide for those harmed by the violence, are positive ways to honor Floyd's memory and live up his family's plea for peace.

As of Sunday, an estimated 270 businesses across the Twin Cities had been burned out, vandalized, looted or had doors and windows smashed. Some have been destroyed by fire, while others suffered water and fire damage.

The response from peace-loving citizens brings a bright light of comfort and hope for the future.

Seeing the helpers in Mpls., St. Paul

For those who still want to help, opportunities abound. You can still donate money and food to organized efforts in the affected communities. Contributions of brooms and other cleaning supplies are welcome. With public transportation suspended, giving rides to those who need them can help.

"Many of our local small businesses are being adversely impacted by the protests related to the murder of George Floyd," the Minnesota Rapid Response Coalition said in a statement. "This coalition has joined together to help with the cleanup, in efforts to lower their unforeseen expenses so that they can get back to work and thrive. We will start with businesses along the Lake Street, Midway and East St. Paul business corridors, then allocate resources throughout the Twin Cities."

All Minnesotans should be proud and grateful for the positive response from so many parts of the community, including nonprofits, businesses, faith communities, neighborhood groups and colleges. The generous outpouring of help and support will go a long way toward repairing not only the damaged property, but wounded hearts and spirits as well.

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CXCII. THEATER PRODUCTION PROS PITCH IN TO BOARD UP BUSINESSES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 696 wordsByline: Kathy Berdan

Highlight: Theater production wizards can create new worlds on stage. A group of Twin Cities production people are using those skills these days to create community - in the neighborhoods ravaged by fire and riots following the death of George Floyd. "University Rebuild" is a theater-based group helping businesses throughout the Twin Cities to board up [...]

Body

Theater production wizards can create new worlds on stage.

A group of Twin Cities production people are using those skills these days to create community - in the neighborhoods ravaged by fire and riots following the death of George Floyd.

"University Rebuild" is a theater-based group helping businesses throughout the Twin Cities to board up and protect property. They know their way around tools of construction, and are using them to combat destruction.

"A lot of people were looking for ways to support the community," says Daisuke Kawachi, a freelance director and former Guthrie Theater employee. "There was a high degree of technical knowledge lying fallow."

Theater productions were shut down, postponed and canceled because of the coronavirus in mid-March. The people who worked at Twin Cities theaters are out of work.

More than 100 of the same folks who make sets and props and lighting and a lot of backstage magic - and know how to use a drill and what a masonry bit looks like - are volunteering in the project, said Kawachi, one of the organizers of University Rebuild.

The group is running operations out of Mixed Blood Theatre in Minneapolis' Cedar-Riverside neighborhood. There's also a food bank at the theater (1501 S. Fourth St.).

There's a formal intake and request process through the group's Facebook page, Kawachi said. They provide assistance only at the "explicit request" of the property owner, but scouts have also been going out to assess needs in areas that are hard-hit, he said.

Theater production pros pitch in to board up businesses

Kawachi figures University Rebuild has helped about 200 businesses. Often as they're working at one location, neighbors will ask for assistance. Or offer assistance.

Materials have come from Twin Cities theaters, private and nonprofit groups and corporations, Kawachi said. University Rebuild is also repositioning itself to help take down the boards and barriers as tensions ease.

They don't charge for their help, though they're often offered food and cash, Kawachi said.

Twin Cities production manager and freelance technician Merritt Rodriguez, who also used to work at the Guthrie, got things rolling after she saw a Facebook request from theater friends saying Ananya Dance Theatre on University Avenue in St. Paul was looking for lumber after the first night of protests over the death of Floyd.

She started the Facebook group, naming it University Rebuild, though they're working throughout the Twin Cities. "It kind of started by accident," she said. Numbers have grown quickly, with nearly 1,000 Facebook followers a week later.

The group sent out "carpenters, technical directors, electricians, scenic designers, lighting designers, production managers, sound designers and many more with plywood and their own tools and vehicles to scores of storefronts and more," Mixed Blood's artistic director Jack Reuler said in an email.

Theater-makers are familiar with working in teams with people they don't know when mounting a new production, Rodriguez said on Monday. They're also teachers.

"We're always doing something different and new. It's always a puzzle," said Rodriguez, who has been working in Twin Cities theater since 2012.

"A lot of what we do in the arts is tell people's stories. A lot of what we do is lift up voices," Rodriguez said. "It was time to do something. To stand in solidarity."

Props designer Abbee Warmboe and lighting designer Tony Stoeri are also part of University Rebuild's organizing team.

Kawachi said he's hoping the energy that the group is creating will carry forward.

"Theater people are really good at organizing quickly to build something beautiful," Kawachi said. "We're here as long as they need us."

A form to request assistance is on the group's University Rebuild Facebook page. Donations to help with their work can also be arranged there. Or email .

Second City CEO steps down amid claims of racism at theater merritt.j.rodriguez@gmail.com Twin Cities theater artists premiere 'A Breath for George' at outdoor screenings McKnight awards \$25,000 fellowships in dance and music History Theatre postpones 'Glensheen' and statewide tour due to coronavirus Guthrie Theater announces layoffs that take its staff from 262 down to 55

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Theater production pros pitch in to board up businesses

End of Document

UnitedHealth commits $10M to support Floyd family, local businesses

ARTICLE CXCI. UNITEDHEALTH COMMITS $10M TO SUPPORT FLOYD FAMILY, LOCAL BUSINESSES

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 324 words

Byline: Carter Jones

Body

UnitedHealth Group Inc. said Monday it's donating $10 million to address societal issues at the root of George Floyd's death, and to rebuild Twin Cities' businesses that were destroyed by days of rioting.

Minnetonka-based UnitedHealth Group (NYSE: UNH) is establishing a dedicated Diverse Scholars trust fund to support Floyd's children's education through college. The Diverse Scholars Initiative is a United Health Foundation charity that creates a diverse healthcare workforce, particularly in underserved communities.

"George Floyd's death is an unspeakable tragedy. Communities all across America are struggling to make sense of what's happened and how we as a society pull together to move forward, heal, learn and grow," said UnitedHealth Group CEO David Wichmann. "The 325,000 people of UnitedHealth Group remain steadfast in our commitment to not only build a culture of inclusivity and diversity within our own organization, but to ensure our actions help create a more equitable society for the people we serve."

UnitedHealth commits $10M to support Floyd family, local businesses

United is also donating $5 million and 25,000 volunteer hours to restore numerous minority-owned businesses that were destroyed across the Twin Cities.

The additional $5 million will go towards the YMCA Equity Innovation Center of Excellence in Floyd's memory. The Innovation Center, a collaborative effort serving the Twin Cities and beyond, is dedicated to advancing equity, inclusivity and systemic change.

"We all have a lot of work ahead of us to address long-standing inequities, and it's going to take individuals, governments and private enterprises like UnitedHealth Group to achieve our goals of a more inclusive society," said YMCA of the Greater Twin Cities CEO Glen Gunderson. "We're grateful for this contribution, which will help us accelerate our efforts to drive positive change in our communities."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 2, 2020

End of Document

'Hate just hides': Biden vows to take on systematic racism

ARTICLE CXCIV. 'HATE JUST HIDES': BIDEN VOWS TO TAKE ON SYSTEMATIC RACISM

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 946 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) - Joe Biden vowed to address institutional racism in his first 100 days in office as he sought to elevate his voice Monday in the exploding national debate over racism and police brutality.

Body

By ALEXANDRA JAFFE, STEVE PEOPLES and WILL WEISSERT

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) - Joe Biden vowed to address institutional racism in his first 100 days in office as he sought to elevate his voice Monday in the exploding national debate over racism and police brutality.

The presumptive Democratic presidential nominee offered emotional support and promised bold action during an in-person discussion with black leaders in Delaware and a subsequent virtual meeting with big-city mayors who are grappling with racial tensions and frustrated by a lack of federal support.

"Hate just hides. It doesn't go away, and when you have somebody in power who breathes oxygen into the hate under the rocks, it comes out from under the rocks," Biden told more than a dozen African American leaders gathered at a church in downtown Wilmington, his face mask lowered around his chin as he spoke.

Without offering specifics, he promised to "deal with institutional racism" and set up a police oversight body in his first 100 days in office, if elected. The former vice president also said he'd be releasing an economic plan focused on education, housing and "access to capital" and investments, especially for minority Americans, later this month.

"I really do believe that the blinders have been taken off. I think this tidal wave is moving," Biden told the mayors of Atlanta, Chicago, Los Angeles and St. Paul, Minnesota. "I realize we've got to do something big, we can do it, and everyone will benefit from it."

Largely sheltering in place amid the coronavirus, Biden has struggled in recent weeks to be heard from his makeshift home TV studio over the noise of dueling national crises. But after another night of violent protests, he ventured out into public for the second time in two days and just the third time since the pandemic arrived in mid-March.

'Hate just hides': Biden vows to take on systematic racism

His hopeful and collaborative approach marked a sharp contrast to that of President Donald Trump, who has made little effort to unify the country. The Republican president slammed governors as "weak" during a video teleconference on Monday and demanded tougher crackdowns on protesters. Trump also lashed out at Biden on Twitter, writing that "Sleepy Joe Biden's people are so Radical Left that they are working to get the Anarchists out of jail, and probably more."

Biden's softer style may foreshadow how he presents himself in the five months before the presidential election, emphasizing calm and competence as a contrast to a mercurial president. It is an approach that carries the risk of being drowned out by Trump's much louder voice.

On Monday evening, Trump declared himself "the president of law and order" from the White House as military police and law enforcement fired tear gas and cleared protesters from nearby Lafayette Park. Biden made no mention of the unfolding events during an online fundraiser that took place at the same time, though he talked at length about persistent racism in the U.S.

He plans to deliver remarks on the unrest gripping the U.S. on Tuesday in Philadelphia.

In the early moments of Monday's gathering at the Bethel AME church in Wilmington, Biden listened quietly and took notes. All the attendees, including Biden, wore face masks but lowered them as they spoke.

"The vice president came to hear from us. This is a homeboy," pastor Sylvester Beaman said before everyone bowed their heads in prayer.

Biden's standing with the black community weighs heavily as he works to deny Trump a second term. African Americans rescued Biden's flailing primary campaign, but it's unclear if they will turn out for him in large numbers in November.

"I want to make something clear. I don't expect anything from the black community," Biden said Monday, insisting he has never taken its support for granted. The former vice president has been doing cleanup since telling a prominent black radio host a week and a half ago that African Americans who back Trump "ain't black."

Yet the mayors who spoke with Biden, three of whom are black, were clearly frustrated and angry with Trump, who has offered military support to address violent protests while denying them federal support to address the coronavirus fallout and repeatedly attacking them on social media.

"To see the president of the United States say that he's going to send the military into our communities but hadn't mentioned sending a single dime of support into our communities, speaks to where we are in America," said Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms.

Much of Biden's campaign strategy centers on trying to draw a contrast with Trump on temperament and values. He has called the White House contest a battle for the soul of the nation and has been particularly forceful in condemning Trump's handling of moments of racial tension.

In an election that is likely to be a referendum on the sitting president, some Biden aides say privately that the best plan may be to let Trump do himself in.

'Hate just hides': Biden vows to take on systematic racism

Yet there is also a recognition that Biden needs to do more than simply wait for voters who may be turned off by Trump to turn toward him. Some Democrats who have criticized Biden for not being more visible during the onset of the coronavirus said he is making the right moves now.

"I'm sure they have some reluctance, understandably, right now to politicize it. That's not who he is," said Democratic strategist James Carville. "There might be a time for eloquence, but I think that simplicity is eloquence right now."

Jaffe reported from Washington; Peoples reported from Montclair, New Jersey. Associated Press writer Brian Slodysko contributed from Washington.

Catch up on the 2020 election campaign with AP experts on our weekly politics podcast, "Ground Game."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CXCIV. BIDEN BLASTS TRUMP'S 'NARCISSISM' IN NEW PHASE OF CAMPAIGN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 985 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Joe Biden mounted one of his most aggressive attacks against President Donald Trump on Tuesday, deriding the commander in chief's disregard of core constitutional values and blistering him for being "more interested in power than in principle."Body

By STEVE PEOPLES and WILL WEISSERT

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Joe Biden mounted one of his most aggressive attacks against President Donald Trump on Tuesday, deriding the commander in chief's disregard of core constitutional values and blistering him for being "more interested in power than in principle."

"He thinks division helps him," the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee said in a speech at Philadelphia's City Hall. "This narcissism has become more important than the nation's well-being."

Biden seized on police driving back peaceful protesters near the White House on Monday so Trump could briefly pose with a Bible in front of nearby St. John's Church.

"If he opened it instead of brandishing it, he could have learned something," Biden said as he chided authorities for using "tear gas and flash grenades in order to stage a photo op."

Biden said Trump "might also want to open the U.S. Constitution. If he did, he'd find the First Amendment. It protects the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Trump senior advisor Kellyanne Conway denied that the president directed authorities' actions to move back the protesters and bristled at suggestions the church visit was merely a photo op. She countered that Biden and other critics had no basis to second-guess what was in the president's heart and his intentions.

Still, Biden's address marked a new phase of a presidential campaign that had been effectively frozen for more than two months by the spread of the coronavirus. The former vice president is now emerging from his Delaware home to confront Trump and using in-person appearances to offer direct competition with the president, rather than relying on virtual events that often failed to garner a lot of attention.

Biden blasts Trump's 'narcissism' in new phase of campaign

It was the third consecutive day that Biden made a public appearance and the first time he's been out of the state since March. His remarks were carried live on the three major cable news networks.

Biden spoke as upheaval in the wake of George Floyd's death has spread around the country. While Biden spoke, the National Guard maintained a visible presence to defend public buildings as Philadelphia continues to face sustained violent protests. Several buildings adjacent to City Hall, including banks, convenience stores and hotels, were boarded up.

He spoke of the "tug of war between the American ideal that we are all created equal and the harsh reality that racism has long torn us apart."

"The honest truth is both elements are part of the American character," he said.

Since the early days of his candidacy, Biden has framed the election as a "battle for the soul of the nation." He went into greater detail on Tuesday about what that meant and the questions voters should ask themselves.

"I ask every American to look at where we are now and think anew: Is this who we are?" he said. "Is this who we want to be? Is this what we pass on to our kids' and grandkids' lives? Fear and finger-pointing rather than hope and the pursuit of happiness? Incompetence and anxiety? Self-absorption and selfishness?"

The tone was part of Biden's effort to cast himself as a "consoler in chief" in stark contrast to Trump's blunt, confrontational style. While he noted that his anguish over the death of his son Beau five years ago from cancer isn't the same as the sadness felt by those protesting police brutality, he said he understood the hopelessness that can come with grief.

"Like many of you, I know what it's like to grieve," Biden said. "I know what it feels like when you're thinking you can't go on."

He said "bad cops should be dealt with severely and swiftly" and offered examples of how he might ease racial tensions and govern.

The former vice president called on Congress to act now on legislation that would place a federal ban on police using chokeholds. Biden also promised that, if elected, he would increase access to health care and improve the pay of first-responders and other workers who have stayed on jobs deemed essential during the pandemic.

But Biden's speech was perhaps most notable for its ferocity, even though his criticism of Trump is common. He accused the president of being more worried about himself than the nation at a time when it "is crying out for leadership."

"This president today is part of the problem and accelerates it," Biden said, adding that Trump is "consumed with his blinding ego."

Biden offered a stark departure from Trump, who tweeted Tuesday that Washington "had no problems last night" and cited "many arrests," as well as "overwhelming force" and "Domination," for which he thanked himself.

Biden blasts Trump's 'narcissism' in new phase of campaign

Trump has embraced the language of confrontation and war, seeking to be a "president of law and order," and betting that voters will want a more forceful approach at a time of national tumult and racial unrest.

Katrina Pierson, a senior adviser to the president's reelection campaign, said Biden's speech "obviously made the crass political calculation that unrest in America is a benefit to his candidacy."

"President Trump is restoring the nation to order and is clearly the leader we need to return the country to peace and prosperity," Pierson said in a statement.

Despite his more confrontational approach, Biden was direct about the limits of his ability to singularly reconcile the nation's differences. He was careful to note that his administration won't be able to fix everything, especially not all at once.

"I know that the presidency, that's a very big job," he said. "Nobody will get it right every time, and I won't either."

But he vowed not to "traffic in fear and division."

"I won't fan the flames of hate," Biden said. "I'll seek to heal the racial wounds that have long plagued our country, not use them for political gain."

—

Weissert reported from Washington.

—

Catch up on the 2020 election campaign with AP experts on our weekly politics podcast, "Ground Game."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

For young athletes, it's a start

ARTICLE CXCVI. FOR YOUNG ATHLETES, IT'S A START

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: SPORTS; Pg. 2C

Length: 750 words

Byline: MEGAN RYAN; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: It was a welcome site: Group participation, but with restrictions.

Body

For three months, Callie Patraw has worked alone.

On her footwork in her basement, dribbling around cones, kicking a ball against a tall net at a soccer field near her house. Again. And again. And again.

"It's not my favorite thing to do," the rising Elk River senior said. "It gets lonely, and it gets really hard just motivating yourself every day."

So when she heard the news about two weeks ago that Gov. Tim Walz would allow youth sports, including her Under-17 BoReal FC team, to resume practices on Monday provided they follow the Minnesota Department of Health's social-distancing guidelines during the coronavirus pandemic, she couldn't quite believe it. No more video-chat training sessions or solo workouts. She would finally be back with her team.

Well, for the most part.

Patraw returned to a new-look practice Monday night. While it takes 11 players to make a full lineup, guidelines require teams to split into groups of 10 or fewer, including coaches, meaning her soccer team can have four groups at most on separate areas of the field. Those groups won't mix, and there won't be any physical contact within the group. That had Patraw expecting a lot of individual skill development, passing drills and the dreaded fitness work.

Sanitizing equipment, recommended mask-wearing and maintaining that six feet of space between people will look very different from the tackling drills and other one-on-one action the defender is used to on the field. Her coach, Brady Johnson, said with all the restrictions, these practices will be minimally effective compared with what his elite players have done all their lives.

Johnson expects much more participation on his older, more competitive teams than the more recreation-focused ones because the girls he coaches, such as Patraw, are hoping for varsity roster spots and college scholarships. Training with no games in sight - minus the potential for some type of scrimmage eventually - is easier for them to understand.

For young athletes, it's a start

Especially since the urge to practice isn't just about improving.

"It's been really hard, just being a kid, being a sophomore, junior in high school and having the majority of your childhood be revolving around just sports," Johnson said. "And to kind of be taken away or out of that is super hard. So I think the players were really excited to get back. ... Especially right now in Minnesota with everything that's happened in the last week, it's just super important for the kids to be able to just have an escape."

But not everyone has that opportunity. While youth sports have the OK to practice, leagues and clubs around the state are still grappling with the logistics. For example, the Minnesota Youth Athletic Services' (MYAS) Gopher State and North Star baseball league teams have been "in limbo," as Elk River Baseball travel director Jason Herzog put it.

Several communities that participate in the league have already canceled their baseball seasons, MYAS program director Bobby Strickland said. Others need to know if games will go on so they can figure out refunds for players. Strickland said MYAS sent a petition to the governor's office weeks ago, hoping for clearance to start play June 15. If MYAS doesn't hear back by 4 p.m. Tuesday, or if the answer is no, the organization will cancel summer baseball and look toward planning a fall season, he said.

Of his about eight travel teams, Herzog said only one or two would take advantage of Monday's ability to practice, even if that meant just one session before a potential full cancellation Tuesday.

"It is difficult, but I think everybody understands," Herzog said. "I think everybody in our association just wants, at this point, an answer."

Last week concerns about building readiness to hold practices and workouts factored into the Minnesota State High School League delaying the start of the summer workout period for high school coaches to work with athletes by two weeks, until June 15.

Allowing practicing - albeit in an altered fashion - was the first step to youth sports returning to usual business amid a global pandemic and now civil unrest in the Twin Cities and nationally after the death of George Floyd in police custody. That small progress is what Patraw has been craving.

"It's the distraction that I need," she said. "Soccer is kind of just my distraction from anything. If something would go bad at school, I'd still have soccer. Or something was bad at home, I'd have soccer. But now I haven't had that. So I'm just excited [to practice again]."

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

His bookstores burned. Don Blyly wants to keep selling

ARTICLE CXCVII. HIS BOOKSTORES BURNED. DON BLYLY WANTS TO KEEP SELLING

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 729 words

Byline: Dylan Thomas

Body

Don Blyly has owned and operated a bookstore for 46 years. Whether there's a 47th depends on what he hears from his insurance agency.

Blyly's twin bookstores, Uncle Hugo's and Uncle Edgar's, were among the Minneapolis businesses destroyed amid the unrest that followed the police killing of George Floyd on Memorial Day. Burned to the ground five days later in what appeared to be an intentionally set fire, the bookstores were located on Chicago Avenue just one block north of Lake Street and about nine blocks north of the intersection where Floyd died.

It was 3:30 a.m. Saturday when Blyly got a call from the security company about a break-in at the bookstore. It didn't take him long to drive there, but it was already too late.

"As soon as I was within a block, I could tell it was bad," he said, recalling flames up and down the block and rioters dancing in the streets.

His bookstores burned. Don Blyly wants to keep selling

Uncle Hugo's and Uncle Edgar's specialized in science fiction and mystery books, respectively, and were two sides of one business that occupied a century-old commercial storefront that had been expanded with a 1950s-era addition. Pulling into the dentist's office parking lot next door, Blyly could see flames shooting out the broken front windows of his business.

He ran around to the back door and pulled it open in hopes of finding the fire extinguisher just inside. Met with thick smoke, he turned back.

Blyly hurried next door to the dentist's office, entering through an open garage door in back. He thought he might be able to save that building. Pushed back outside by more smoke and flames, Blyly returned to his car and drove home.

"I was not especially interested in watching my business burn to the ground," he said.

In a letter to his customers and employees, Blyly described driving down Lake Street and passing building after building on fire. "No sign of any cops, national guard troops, or any help," he wrote after returning home.

Blyly said he's been told there are images of the possible arsonist who torched his business online.

"A white guy with a mask," he said. "Apparently, out there on the internet there's video of him doing it."

"The Uncles," as Blyly refers to the stores, contained over 100,000 used and new volumes when they burned. There were rare signed editions and decades of collectibles. He estimated the retail value at around $1 million.

Both his inventory and his building were insured, and Blyly said he's been assured by his attorney that the policy will cover the loss. But that hasn't erased his worries.

Blyly's old policy expired May 23, and while he renewed the policy, he hadn't yet received an invoice for his first payment when the fire hit.

"So I'm rather nervous about this," he said.

Like many retailers, Blyly was already struggling due to the coronavirus pandemic, which had prevented him from opening his stores to walk-in traffic since March. Four of his six employees had gone on unemployment, returning to work not long before the stores were destroyed.

While Blyly worked long hours to fill mail orders alone during the shutdown, cashflow was limited. He estimated he owes publishers about $50,000 for books delivered before the fire.

"I have completely given up on the idea of finding a place to rent to get back into operation quickly," Blyly added, expecting that vacant commercial storefronts will soon be in high demand.

Ultimately, he'd like to rebuild in the same locations he's occupied since 1984.

"I'll have to see whether or not the insurance company's estimate of what it would take to rebuild it is close enough to the architect's estimate," he said.

In the meantime, Blyly plans to run a small mail order business out of his home. He'll start by selling Uncle Hugo's and Uncle Edgar's branded T-shirts and sweatshirts; he recently ordered a two-year supply.

His bookstores burned. Don Blyly wants to keep selling

It will give him something to live on until he rebuilds. If he rebuilds.

"A lot of authors have offered to send me signed books, so I'll be selling signed books on the internet," he added. "And I'm going to start selling off my personal library one book at a time."

Correction:

The original version of this story incorrectly described the employment status of four of Blyly's six employees. Temporarily laid off because of the pandemic, they had returned to work before the fire.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

Illinois man came 'to riot' in Minneapolis, charges say

ARTICLE CXCVIII. ILLINOIS MAN CAME 'TO RIOT' IN MINNEAPOLIS, CHARGES SAY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3B

Length: 628 words

Byline: ANDY MANNIX; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

An Illinois man who came to Minneapolis to riot over the weekend livestreamed himself handing out explosives, destroying property and appearing to set a Sprint store on fire, according to charges filed in the U.S. District Court of Minnesota on Monday afternoon.

Matthew Lee Rupert, 28, is charged with civil disorder, possession of unregistered explosives and participating in and organizing riots, making him the first to face federal prosecution for allegedly taking part in the fires, looting and other violence that engulfed the Twin Cities since the death of George Floyd in police custody.

Last Thursday night, Rupert, of Galesburg, Ill., posted on his public Facebook page an invitation for "goons" to join him in traveling to Minneapolis, where he said he was renting hotel rooms and planned to wreak havoc and "take hella good videos."

The livestreamed videos, cited as evidence by FBI investigators in the complaint, show his role in the riots on Friday night and early Monday, including distributing explosives and then announcing, "He's throwing my bombs ... they're going to bomb the police with them."

"Good shot, my boy," he shouted after one of the explosions, according to the complaint. "We came here to riot," he declared later.

Later in the night, Rupert asked for lighter fluid and entered a Sprint store, according to the complaint. "I lit it on fire," he said, before entering an Office Depot and stealing items from it.

In the comments section of one video, viewed more than 4,000 times, several people criticize Rupert for his actions.

"If writing a bad check gets you killed, how do you think this guy will end up," writes one, a reference to the reason Minneapolis police originally detained Floyd after a clerk reported that he tried to pass a counterfeit bill.

"Nothing like snitching on yourself like a Facebook live video," writes another.

Illinois man came 'to riot' in Minneapolis, charges say

"I love all my haters lmao," comments Rupert.

Another image posted to Facebook shows a blistered hand, under the caption, "I tried to pick up a tear gas bomb!"

On Saturday night, Rupert posted to Facebook his plans to return to Chicago and riot there. "[Let me know] who's on board I got cars we got this," he wrote, updating later that he would arrive in Chicago in two hours.

More videos show Rupert walking through Chicago hollering to people he seems to know as they drove by. In one 10-minute video, he stops in front of what appears to be a darkened cafe with a broken window.

"There's gotta be a register in there," he says. Then, spotting one, he urges someone to go in after it, and a person jumps through the broken window as glass rains down behind him. The camera moves inside, then quickly back outside. A moment later, it continues in what appears to be the inside of a smoke shop.

Videos show him proclaiming, "Let's start a riot" and "I'm going to start doing some damage," according to the complaint.

The charges say Rupert crossed state lines to participate in the riot, which makes it a federal crime. Chicago police officers arrested him at 2:21 a.m. They searched his car and recovered several "destructive devices," along with a heavy-duty flashlight, hammer and cash, according to the charges.

In a telephonic hearing Monday afternoon, a judge ordered his transfer to Minnesota to face future case proceedings. When the judge read his charges, Rupert appeared surprised at the count related to illegal explosives.

"A firework? I don't know, ma'am," he said.

A spokeswoman for the Minnesota U.S. Attorney's Office said that, while it will continue to pursue charges against rioters, their top priority will remain on the civil rights investigation into the events surrounding the death of Floyd.

Staff writer Dan Browning contributed to this report.

Andy Mannix · 612-673-4064

Twitter: @andrewmannix

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

In Duluth, protesters weren't outside agitators; 'That is us'

ARTICLE CXCIX. IN DULUTH, PROTESTERS WEREN'T OUTSIDE AGITATORS; 'THAT IS US'

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 5B

Length: 392 words

Byline: BROOKS JOHNSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

DULUTH - Rumor had it there would be busloads of protesters importing violence to Duluth this past weekend during the protests over the death of George Floyd.

The rumors were wrong.

"It's so much easier for us to want that to come from somewhere else than for that agitation and fear and hurt to be our own," Mayor Emily Larson said Monday. "That is us. That anger is this community, and so are the beautiful parts and the healing and the hard work that is to come."

More than a thousand people gathered for peaceful protests on Saturday in downtown Duluth. Later that night a much smaller crowd continued to march and drive around town and eventually started causing property damage and injuries, including an assault on an officer and a Kwik Trip employee.

Warnings of outside agitators coming to town were spread throughout the day Saturday and stoked anxiety as violence raged in the Twin Cities and elsewhere; some protesters said they were concerned that troublemakers would show up uninvited.

Yet of the 11 people arrested during the late-night gathering Saturday, just one was from outside the area. There were seven arrests and 15 citations Sunday relating to curfew violations, but those were also mostly local residents.

"We want to place that anger somewhere else that's not us. But it's us," Larson said. "Many people who went out on Saturday night were young people who are clearly experiencing pain and trauma."

Duluth Police Chief Mike Tusken said the department has analysts tracking and verifying social media rumors and did not take them at face value.

"Ultimately what we have our officers respond to is what is actionable, accurate intelligence," he said.

In Duluth, protesters weren't outside agitators; 'That is us'

After two nights of curfew, the mayor said there would not be another one Monday night. There will continue to be an increased police presence, which Tusken said comes at a great expense to the city - but the alternative was not an option.

What comes next, Tusken said, is "substantial change." He said that means bringing together police officers and communities of color "who have issues of fear and distrust, who are angry, who feel marginalized by police, and have an opportunity for them to have their voices heard."

"It can't just be something that in two weeks we say, 'Well that's over, we're gonna move on,' " he said. "We need to be committed to this."

Brooks Johnson · 218-491-6496

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CC. INSIDER TIPS AND TIDBITS AS TWIN CITIES RESTAURANTS REOPEN FOR OUTDOOR DINING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 973 words

Byline: Nancy Ngo

Highlight: Here are insider tips and tidbits that will be good to know as restaurants reopen for outdoor dining.

Body

Time limits when dining. Special patio menus. Earlier closing times.

These are some of the additional things you can expect to see at various restaurants as outdoor dining spaces reopen this week.

After the governor announced eating establishments could reopen June 1 for dining for the first time since March 17 amid the coronavirus pandemic, restaurateurs started rolling out the welcome mat this week.

But it's not business as usual. Restaurateurs are working within new guidelines and restrictions that include outdoor dining only, tables spaced six feet or more apart, reservations only, no more than 50 people on a patio or other outdoor dining space and limits of groups of four, or six to a family.

RELATED: Restaurants can reopen June 1 for reserved, outdoor dining only

In addition to state guidelines, restaurateurs are implementing their own best practices beyond state guidelines, from how to best handle reservations to added safety measures, to make things run as smoothly as possible.

Here are insider tips and tidbits that will be good to know as restaurants reopen for outdoor dining.

Things continue to be fluid in the restaurant world these days, so check in with your favorite establishments to see what reopening plans are, as things can change hourly. Several restaurants we checked in with originally planning to reopen this first week have switched gears at the last minute, some delaying rollouts because of the coronavirus as well as unrest after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

Since reservations are required, several restaurants are putting in timing caps when you dine. The time limits on dining allows for staff to have enough time to turn over and sanitize tables for the next group of diners, limited to four people, six for families, per dining group under state mandate. El Burrito Mercado plans to place a 75-minute dining cap on tables. We're finding more commonly 90-minute caps implemented at restaurants, such as Saji- Ya and Emmett's Public House on Grand Avenue in St. Paul.

Insider tips and tidbits as Twin Cities restaurants reopen for outdoor dining

While some places such as St. Paul's McGovern's, which opened at 11 a.m. Monday, plan to serve full-fledged menus on their patio, others will offer a trimmed-down or alternative version. Some places are getting creative and introducing new menus. El Burrito Mercado in St. Paul, which was planning to open Friday the last we checked, will feature a patio menu with two options: Tacos Callejeros (made-to-order fresh taco stand, order from server, weekends only) and La Placita Patio (burritos, ceviche, guisados and more), according to El Burrito Mercado's Milissa Silva-Diaz. And when Surly Brewing reopens its beer garden (date to be determined), expect a new menu that is a combination of new items and top sellers.

Reservations are required under the new state guidelines for dining at restaurants. Depending on the restaurant, reservations are mostly being taken online. Or, at places such as The Lex in St. Paul, reservations will be taken by phone only. If there is space, some restaurants - but, be warned, not all - will even take "walk-in reservations." Brent Frederick of Jester Concepts hopes to open the outdoor seating areas at his Parlour St. Paul as well as Minneapolis restaurants (Parlour Minneapolis, Borough and Monello) by the end of this week. "Obviously we're going to steer them more toward online reservations. But if someone's walking by and they want to eat at one of our restaurants and we have space, then we're going to take their reservation on the spot and seat them," Frederick said, adding that mainly the state wants diner information for contact tracing, which the restaurant can still do with on-the-spot reservations.

Social distancing means fewer people on the patios, with less staff and less business. That means restaurants are limiting hours to make it cost-effective. Pretty much every restaurant we've checked in with has reduced hours, mostly still opening when they do normally, but closing early. Expect this to be widespread.

Some restaurants will not be accepting cash or checks, but debit or credit cards only, so have one on hand. If you've been ordering takeout regularly since the pandemic, you should be used to this. As with takeout, some places may now require you to pre-pay when you order.

In addition to tables being spaced six feet or more apart, several restaurants have put up physical barriers between cashiers and customers. This includes outdoor dining spaces. Restaurants are asking - some even requiring - diners to wear masks during times when you're not eating or drinking, such as when walking through the restaurant and/or patio space, whether to enter or exit the establishment or use the restroom. Some will even make masks available for purchase if you forget to bring yours or don't have one.

Many restaurants have safety preparedness plans that let you know what staff are doing to keep diners safe. At the same time, they want to keep their staff and other diners safe. That means staying home if you're not feeling well and if there are things such as time caps when dining there. Check out restaurant websites before heading there to see what is expected.

When restaurants were forced to close for dining in mid-March, restaurants began amping up carryout and delivery operations. So if one of your favorite restaurants is not yet open for outdoor dining, you can still get dishes you are craving, as many continue to offer carryout and/or delivery services. Even restaurants that do reopen outdoor spaces plan to continue full-fledged takeout operations, as they realize some patrons may still be uneasy about dining onsite.

Insider tips and tidbits as Twin Cities restaurants reopen for outdoor dining

Sandwiches from local delis perfect accompaniment for that walk or hike Get out in that sunshine and grill with these clever kits from restaurants Twin Cities reheat-and-eat takeout options are heating up

Graphic

The socially distanced patio at El Burrito Mercado in St. Paul during the pandemic. (Courtesy El Burrito Mercado)

The socially distanced beer garden set up at Surly Brewing Co. during the pandemic. The reopening date is yet to be determined. (Courtesy Surly Brewing Co.)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Metro Transit to resume bus service on Wednesday, light-rail service possibly by Thursday

ARTICLE CCI.

METRO TRANSIT TO RESUME BUS SERVICE ON WEDNESDAY, LIGHT-RAIL SERVICE POSSIBLY BY THURSDAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 256 words

Byline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: Metro Transit will resume bus and Northstar rail services Wednesday and light-rail service as early as Thursday. A statement - by Metro Transit general manager Wes Kooistra - said that bus and Northstar commuter rail services will return at 4 a.m. Wednesday. Metro Blue and Green Line light-rail service will resume on Thursday at the [...]

Body

Metro Transit will resume bus and Northstar rail services Wednesday and light-rail service as early as Thursday.

A statement - by Metro Transit general manager Wes Kooistra - said that bus and Northstar commuter rail services will return at 4 a.m. Wednesday. Metro Blue and Green Line light-rail service will resume on Thursday at the earliest. Once running again, transportation services will continue to operate at reduced levels because of the COVID-19 pandemic, the statement said.

Due to the past week's unrest over the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody, ongoing and changing detours are to be expected for many bus routes, including 5, 7, 11, 18, 21 and 23. Information regarding these routes can be found on Metro Transit's website.

The statement emphasized that staff have been working quickly to move to resume service while also prioritizing safety.

"We acknowledge that many of the neighborhoods that rely heavily on transit are also those that were hardest hit by these events. People who use transit to secure groceries and medicine, to get to their jobs, or to make other essential trips suffered twin impacts - the loss of neighborhood businesses and services they rely on and the experience of being stranded because transit was unavailable," the statement read.

Metro Transit remains shut down over unrest, but service tentatively slated to resume this week Metro Transit suspending service through weekend because of safety concerns Metro Transit requiring face coverings on all riders starting Monday

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Metro Transit to resume bus service on Wednesday, light-rail service possibly by Thursday

End of Document

Police clear protesters with tear gas and rubber bullets so Trump can pose by a church

ARTICLE CCII. POLICE CLEAR PROTESTERS WITH TEAR GAS AND RUBBER BULLETS SO TRUMP CAN POSE BY A CHURCH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 726 words

Byline: Katie Rogers

Highlight: WASHINGTON - People who gathered outside the White House to protest police brutality spent Monday waving signs and screaming for justice. They watched as police officers and National Guard units flooded Lafayette Square, delivering on a threat made by President Donald Trump. And just before the city's 7 p.m. curfew went into effect, they were [...]

Body

WASHINGTON - People who gathered outside the White House to protest police brutality spent Monday waving signs and screaming for justice. They watched as police officers and National Guard units flooded Lafayette Square, delivering on a threat made by President Donald Trump. And just before the city's 7 p.m. curfew went into effect, they were hit with flash-bang explosions and doused with tear gas.

It was because the president, who spent part of the weekend in a secure bunker as protests roiled, wanted to have his picture taken holding a Bible at a battered church just beyond the gates.

St. John's Episcopal Church - the so-called Church of the Presidents because every one since James Madison has attended - had been briefly set ablaze as the protests devolved on Sunday evening. After Trump's aides spent much of the day Monday expressing outrage over the burning of a place of worship, Hope Hicks, a presidential adviser, eventually hatched a plan with others at the White House to have the president walk over to the building, according to an official familiar with the events.

As Trump delivered a speech in the Rose Garden vowing to send the military to states where governors could not bring rioting under control but calling himself "an ally of all peaceful protesters," the sound of explosions and the yells of demonstrators could be heard. After receiving repeated warnings to disperse before the city's curfew, the crowd was tear-gassed.

Trump began his walk to the church at 7:01 p.m. for a photo session that lasted about 17 minutes. On his way over, after protesters had been driven from the park, he was trailed by a group of aides, including Attorney General William Barr. The attorney general had strolled to the edge of the police line to observe the crowd in the minutes before the tear gassing began.

Barr walked alongside Jared Kushner, the president's son-in-law and adviser, and Ivanka Trump, his daughter and adviser. Ivanka Trump was wearing a mask, one of the few visible reminders on Monday that the administration is in the midst of battling a public health crisis. Kayleigh McEnany, the White House press secretary, Hicks and Mark Meadows, Trump's chief of staff, were also among the cadre of aides.

Police clear protesters with tear gas and rubber bullets so Trump can pose by a church

As police sirens blared in the background, the president, his lips set in a thin line, stood with his back to the boarded-up, graffiti-laden facade of the buttermilk yellow church.

He cradled a Bible, bouncing it in his hands as if testing its weight.

"Is that your Bible?" a reporter yelled.

"It's a Bible," Trump responded, and hoisted the book up so reporters could see.

The bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington, who watched the scene unfold while away from the church visiting with her mother, said church officials were not told of the plan and expressed outrage at the White House's use of riot-control tactics on a generally peaceful crowd to clear a path for the president to visit the church.

"He did not pray," the bishop, Mariann E. Budde, said in an interview. Referring to the death of the black man in police custody that set off the protests, she added: "He did not mention George Floyd, he did not mention the agony of people who have been subjected to this kind of horrific expression of racism and white supremacy for hundreds of years. We need a president who can unify and heal. He has done the opposite of that, and we are left to pick up the pieces."

In Lafayette Square, one of the visiting priests attending to St. John's was sprayed with tear gas as she attempted to help scared demonstrators leave the area, said Budde, who was not at the church when Trump visited.

Budde denounced the way the president held up a Bible during his visit, a move she interpreted as a political prop.

"The Bible is not an American document," she said. "It's not an expression of our country. It's an expression of the human struggle to serve and love and know God."

Trump has been an infrequent visitor to St. John's, but attended a church service there on the day of his inauguration. Since his election, the church has been dragged into the backdrop of some of Trump's most partisan fights. Last spring, Robert Mueller, the special counsel who led the investigation surrounding the Trump campaign's ties to Russian interference in the 2016 election, drew a gawking crowd outside St. John's before his report was released.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCIII. RIOTING'S AFTERMATH LEAVES FOOD DESERT

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 605 wordsByline: JOHN EWOLDT; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

With Cub, Target, two Aldi stores and many small markets damaged by rioting over the past week, Longfellow and about eight other neighborhoods have nearly become a food desert.

"I consider the loss of these businesses devastating," said Melanie Majors, executive director of the Longfellow Community Council. "Besides just the food, there's a lack of retail for diapers, formula, household goods, even clothing."

Many residents of the area shop lower-priced stores such as Aldi or dollar stores. Two of those dollar stores - including Family Dollar on Lake Street - were destroyed in last week's looting and violence that arose after George Floyd was killed in Minneapolis police custody.

One Aldi store on E. Franklin Avenue in Minneapolis reopened Monday after power was restored to it. The frozen foods section had been cleared out due to the outage that started late last week, but shelves were being restocked Monday.

Shashana Craft of Maple Grove purchased groceries there Monday for Headway Emotional Health Services, where she works with Indigenous families.

"I've never seen the shelves this empty," she said. "If people can't get to their grocery store, they should check with churches or support groups offering free food and groceries."

Majors said a few places were offering free food and supplies: Holy Trinity Lutheran Church near 31st Street and Minnehaha Avenue; Heart of the Beast Theatre at S. 15th Avenue and E. Lake; and Sanford Middle School at E. 35th Street and S. 42nd Avenue.

Amplifying the problem over the weekend and again on Monday was the fact that Metro Transit was not operating buses or trains. Public transportation will again be shut down on Tuesday.

Sylvester Hudson walked about 40 minutes from Fort Snelling Apartments to the Cub Foods at E. 46th Street and Hiawatha Avenue.

Rioting's aftermath leaves food desert

It is the only supermarket left in the Longfellow neighborhood along the light-rail line after four other supermarkets closed because of destruction during the protests.

"I don't know if I'll be able to catch a cab, so I'll probably have to walk," said Hudson, 70, who brought a two-wheeled cart for grocery transport, as he finished shopping at Cub Foods. "This is the only store left open in the neighborhood that I can walk to."

Area residents with a vehicle could find open supermarkets nearby at Longfellow Market, S. 38th Avenue and E. Lake, and Lunds & Byerlys in St. Paul's Highland Park neighborhood.

Although shorter on Monday, there were lines out the door at several of the city markets on Sunday, similar to when Gov. Tim Walz first issued the stay-at-home order to combat the spread of COVID-19.

Business has been up more than 60% at Longfellow Market since the other stores were forced to close, according to manager Terry Mahowald.

"We never planned to be this busy," he said. "Everyone's stressed. This is certainly not the way we wanted to increase traffic."

He plans to add more lower-priced, generic items to help keep prices reasonable for shoppers at the natural and organic grocery.

Home delivery through Shipt or Instacart isn't an option for the neighborhoods, either.

Delivery services usually pick from stores nearby. With four of them closed, other arrangements are being made.

Target owns Shipt and is working on arrangements to fill delivery orders through other Targets, a spokeswoman said. The Minneapolis-based retailer also has pledged to rebuild the Lake Street store, hopefully by the end of the year.

Mahowald thanked neighborhood volunteers for saving the Longfellow Market.

"We've had nearly 25 people from the neighborhood guarding it every night since Tuesday," he said.

John Ewoldt · 612-673-7633

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

They gave a sitting ovation

ARTICLE CCIV. THEY GAVE A SITTING OVATION

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: VARIETY; Pg. 1E

Length: 1091 words

Byline: JON BREAM; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: A drive-in concert at Crooners Monday evening brought live concerts back to the Twin Cities.

Body

They came in sedans, SUVs and even a vintage 1958 Chevy Impala convertible. They rolled down their windows to listen to live music Monday in a Fridley parking lot, and they honked their horns in appreciation after every song.

"This is the first time I'm not offended by people honking at me," singer Joyann Parker told 43 carloads outside Crooners Supper Club, on the shores of Moore Lake.

This was the first live ticketed Twin Cities concert since March 15, when Gov. Tim Walz closed venues and ordered Minnesotans to stay at home because of the coronavirus pandemic.

As with any other public gathering, it's hard to practice social distancing at concerts. At Crooners, vehicles were situated 10 feet apart, staggered throughout the parking lot.

Other protocols were in place. No alcohol was allowed. Concertgoers had to stay in their vehicles except to use the supper club's restroom - but only one person at a time. Food was served, drive-in style.

The music was broadcast on a FM channel that concertgoers could tune into on their car radios.

"This is like when I was a little girl at the drive-in movie in Faribault," said Val Cohn of St. Paul. "I love it. It's a familiar feeling. Except my dad isn't here."

Lloyd Larson of Coon Rapids, driver of the vintage Chevy, appreciated the resourcefulness of Crooners' staff.

"I've been to drive-in movies, drive-in restaurants and this is my first drive-in concert," he said. "It's good to be outdoors. This is working."

All except the scorching 90-degree sun beating down, which compelled his wife to move from shotgun to the back seat.

They gave a sitting ovation

Some concertgoers improvised by shielding the sun with umbrellas. Crooners owner Mary Tjosvold distributed tablecloths for people to use as impromptu window sunscreens.

Concertgoers came in couples, a few foursomes and some solo, including Bette Ashcroft of Edina, who left her husband and their black Lab at home because of the heat.

"It's wonderful to hear live music again," she said. "This is great. The sound is good coming over my car radio. This would be better if I could be outside my car in a lawn chair."

There were some other complaints in the first show of Crooners' Lakeside Drive-in Concert Series.

Mike Urgo of Brooklyn Park couldn't see the stage clearly, his view blocked by a tall Honda Pilot in the middle of the parking lot.

"They should move that behemoth," he said during the concert.

Urgo and his wife "couldn't wait to come for the first show. We're so used to seeing movies. We're starved for entertainment. We might be coming back tomorrow."

There were two separate shows Monday, at 4 and 7 p.m. By the second, Crooners was already making changes. Parking spots were newly numbered, making food service more efficient, and taller vehicles were parked on the sides of the lot to improve sightlines down the middle.

Tjosvold was happy, especially after having to postpone the series in early May because of the governor's directives.

"We're glad we didn't give up," she said. "Even though people were in their cars, it felt like a lot of good energy out there."

Crooners regular Steve Zenz of New Brighton admits to going "stir crazy, being cooped up for a couple of months." So he was excited to see live music again even though he was caught up in what was happening after the death of George Floyd last week.

"Our daughter was marching Sunday. We donated to the Lake Street Council," he said. "We needed to take a break from that."

Cohn was torn about being at Crooners.

"There are so many things to mourn. The heart is heavy," she said. "I was feeling guilty, sitting and listening to Joyann sing Patsy Cline songs in a breeze, and seeing an oriole fly in the trees. I'm feeling pulled in the direction of being at the governor's residence [protesting Monday afternoon]. But musicians put things in perspective. With live music, there is love in there."

After her afternoon performance, singer Parker said she and other people need a break from both the Floyd and COVID-19 situations.

"It's healing for us to play music," said the Twin Cities R&B/blues favorite, who hadn't seen most of her band members for a few months, though she and guitarist Mark Lamoine have done live streams as a duo.

They gave a sitting ovation

Since Monday afternoon's show was a salute to country legend Cline filled with lots of back stories, Parker didn't think it was appropriate to preach, other than saying "love conquers all" at show's end.

"I'm an empath," the often emotional Parker said backstage. "I can feel the room. It's harder when people are in their cars. You can't see their faces. It's harder to emotionally connect. I felt like I'm on a movie screen."

A global phenomenon

While maybe not yet a trend, drive-in concerts have become a thing during the pandemic.

The first was in late March in Los Angeles' Echo Park with some underground musicians performing to about 50 cars. Drive-in shows started taking off in Denmark, the Czech Republic and elsewhere in Europe.

The first U.S. drive-in concert to make a splash was by country superstar Keith Urban, who performed May 14 at an actual drive-in movie theater outside Nashville for about 200 front-line medical workers.

In Miami, DJ-Nice had people dancing in the back of their pickup trucks - socially distanced at 20 feet. Shows are now scheduled everywhere from a pub's parking lot in Lima, N.Y., to the massive space outside the Texas Rangers' baseball stadium, with a sold-out four-night, two-shows-daily series for 400 cars, starting with country's Eli Young Band.

With room for 74 vehicles, Crooners has 16 more drive-in concerts scheduled so far, featuring such Twin Cities mainstays as Debbie Duncan, Daisy Dillman Band and Mick Sterling. Tickets are priced from $15 to $30 per person.

Even though Monday's inaugural show may not have been live music as usual, it felt a little bit like making lemonade out of lemons. And lemonade never tasted so sweet.

612-673-1719 · @JonBream

Lakeside Drive-In Concert Series

Tuesday: Michael Monroe, 4 & 7 p.m., $20.

Wednesday: Cafe Accordion Orchestra, 7 p.m., $25.

Thursday: Ginger Commodore and Jesse Larson, 7 p.m., $25.

Friday: Jennifer and Reed Grimm at 4 & 7 p.m., $15.

Saturday: Andrew Walesch Big Band, 4 & 7 p.m., $30.

Sunday: Arne Fogel, 4 p.m. $15; Debbie Duncan, 7 p.m., $15.

Monday: Prudence Johnson & Dan Chouinard, 4 p.m. $15; Dane Stauffer & Dan Chouinard, 7 p.m., $15.

June 9: Pat Donohue, 7 p.m., $20.

June 10: Mick Sterling salutes to Van Morrison at 4 p.m., Billy Joel at 7 p.m., $30.

They gave a sitting ovation

Aug. 15: Daisy Dillman Band, 7 p.m., $20.

Where: Crooners Supper Club, 6161 Hwy. 65, Fridley.

Info: croonersmn.com

Load-Date: June 2, 2020

End of Document

Tone turns friendly during mass arrest

ARTICLE CCV. TONE TURNS FRIENDLY DURING MASS ARREST

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 342 wordsByline: JOHN REINAN; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

After a tense standoff lasting nearly an hour - with concussive devices and tear gas - police boxed in the protesters on all four sides and arrested them at Bobby & Steve's Auto World on the edge of downtown Minneapolis.

But as the protesters waited for the buses that would take them to jail, hands restrained behind their backs with flex cuffs, the tension turned to a surprising fellowship.

The detainees and the Minnesota State Patrol officers guarding them chatted, smiled and joked. One patrol officer held the skateboard of an arrested protester; other officers went around offering water to the detainees.

It had the air of a casual summer party - except hours earlier, one group of guests had been shouting and swearing at the other, which returned the favor by firing tear gas and projectiles at them.

"We're buddies," said P.J. Noble of Minneapolis, jerking his head at the patrol officer guarding him.

"Not Facebook buddies, though," the officer said, smiling.

Thousands of demonstrators arrived in downtown Minneapolis on Sunday night to protest the death of George Floyd, eventually violating the 8 p.m. curfew imposed by Gov. Tim Walz.

Some of the arrested were quiet as they were loaded on the buses. But soon, they were singing and chanting inside the bus, whose digital destination display read, "Have A Nice Day."

One arrestee joked about jail food.

"You want chicken? You want some chicken?" he said to another detainee. "You're gonna get a dry bologna sandwich," he said, laughing as officers looked on quietly.

Dakota Shelton-Norrunner said that his arrest failed to blunt the positive vibe of the night, and that he had no hard feelings toward the authorities who arrested him.

Tone turns friendly during mass arrest

"He's pretty cool," Shelton-Norrunner said of the state patrolman next to him.

Once the drama and tension broke, the mood of the area changed as those arrested filed onto buses to take them away.

"We're human, too," said one State Patrol officer. "We'd rather be home with our wife and kids."

Staff writer Maya Rao contributed to this report.

John Reinan · 612-673-7402

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

Trucker on 35W possibly confused, officials say

ARTICLE CCVI. TRUCKER ON 35W POSSIBLY CONFUSED, OFFICIALS SAY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 7ALength: 745 wordsByline: PAUL WALSH; JESSIE VAN BERKEL; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

State authorities said Monday that the driver of a tanker truck did not intend to hit anyone when he drove onto the Interstate 35W Bridge in Minneapolis and sent protesters running for their lives.

Government officials say trucker Bogdan Vechirko may not have realized that I-35W and other metro interstates had been closed as part of the ongoing unrest sparked by the death of George Floyd last week in police detention.

State Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said Vechirko, driving an empty fuel tanker truck from Interstate 94 onto northbound 35W, was speeding but did not go around any barricades and was not acting intentionally while narrowly missing everyone in the crowd.

As Harrington was making his comments at a midday news conference, Vechirko, 35, of Otsego, remained jailed on suspicion of assault but had not been charged.

The driver "panicked, and he just kept barreling forward," Harrington said. When Vechirko saw a woman on her bike fall in front of him, he slammed on his brakes and came to a sliding stop, the commissioner said.

"We don't have any information that makes this seem like this was an intentional act," he said. "It wasn't that he went around the barricades to get to the protest."

Harrington's conclusion about Vechirko's motives runs counter to that of several people on the bridge, including Drew Valley, who said, "He wasn't stopping. He was beeping loudly and driving into a crowd of people.

"That's the same kind of malice that brought us here. It's a callous disregard for someone's humanity."

Another marcher, who was nearly hit, said the driver's actions makes him suspect he meant to keep going but may not have been trying to hit anyone.

Trucker on 35W possibly confused, officials say

Charlie Garney said he spotted the truck about 150 yards from where he was standing. Garney said the driver began maneuvering around vehicles ahead of him that were trying to turn around after being unable to cross the bridge.

The truck driver "began accelerating from a low speed to a high speed while blaring his horn," Garney said. "It was clear ... he knew we were there and accelerating toward us."

Garney said the truck came within 15 to 20 feet of him on the bridge while going "deeper into the crowd. ... I was in fear of my life with no place to go."

Garney acknowledged being uncertain about Vechirko's motives.

"If he did have the intent to kill people, he had a change of heart," Garney said.

Gov. Tim Walz said he watched the incident live on highway cameras, and "I was breathless ... because I thought I was going to witness dozens or hundreds killed."

He also praised the protesters who protected the driver, who was pulled out of the cab when he stopped halfway across the Mississippi River span and attacked.

"He got beat up pretty bad," said Justin Goeman, who came to the driver's defense until police reached him. "If we hurt this man, it defeats our purpose. ... I cannot imagine what the narrative would be if we hurt that man."

The barriers were meant to be up in time to enforce an 8 p.m. curfew, but the Minnesota Department of Transportation was directed to have its barricades and big trucks in place earlier as 5,000 to 6,000 protesters marched from to the bridge, Harrington said.

At least in Minnesota, Vechirko's driving record is nearly spotless.

He was convicted of a seat belt violation in 2009 and has had dismissed one citation for speeding and two for failure to produce proof of insurance.

The driver's employer, Ohio-based Kenan Advantage Group, declined to answer questions about the incident after releasing a statement that said in part: "Our hearts go out to all those who are grieving the events of this past week. ... We will be cooperating fully with the investigating authorities in the days ahead."

One motorist said she encountered no barricades blocking traffic onto the bridge moments before the truck sliced through the crowd.

Meaghan Pezon was driving north on 35W and saw many cars going the wrong way toward her.

"I was confused and knew I should probably turn around, but there was no good place for me to do it," she said. "My car was surrounded by protesters. When a protester first approached me, there were no police, no barricades, no indication that 35 was closed."

As police swarmed in and protesters dispersed, she exited on an entrance ramp.

"I really had no idea what was happening on the bridge," she said. "I just thought I was going home."

Trucker on 35W possibly confused, officials say

Staff writers Mara Klecker and Matt McKinney contributed to this report.

Paul Walsh · 612-673-4482

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

Tuesday coronavirus update: 22 new deaths, 310 additional cases

ARTICLE CCVII. [TUESDAY CORONAVIRUS UPDATE: 22 NEW DEATHS, 310
ADDITIONAL CASES](#)

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 395 words

Byline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: The death toll in Minnesota from COVID-19 reached 1,072 on Tuesday, with 22 additional deaths, more than doubling Monday's count. Of the state's overall deaths, 866 were long-term care or assisted-living center residents, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health data updated Tuesday morning. The state data report another 310 confirmed cases, increasing Minnesota's total [...]

Body

The death toll in Minnesota from COVID-19 reached 1,072 on Tuesday, with 22 additional deaths, more than doubling Monday's count.

Of the state's overall deaths, 866 were long-term care or assisted-living center residents, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health data updated Tuesday morning.

The state data report another 310 confirmed cases, increasing Minnesota's total number of infections to 25,508. The actual number of cases is likely much higher as the data only represent those who have been tested for the virus, state officials say. Testing was limited early on in the coronavirus pandemic.

With just 77 new cases identified for the day in Hennepin County, a county that typically reports over 200 cases daily, it's likely the dip in new cases is an effect of the lack of health care activity during the social unrest unleashed by the death of George Floyd and ensuing protests, arson, looting and curfews.

After days of testing in the range of 6,000 to 7,000 tests daily, testing for COVID-19 plummeted to 3,155 for the day.

State officials said a spike in cases may occur later this month. An increase in cases would appear in about 21 days due to the incubation period of the virus.

Effective Monday, June 1, restaurants can open for outdoor dining, and salons and barber shops can also begin to reopen.

HOW ARE PATIENTS DOING? There were 20,381 patients Tuesday that no longer need to be isolated as they have recovered enough. This is an increase from 19,441 on Monday. There were 537 patients with COVID-19 in Minnesota hospitals, a decrease from 549 the day before. Of those patients in hospitals, 248 are in intensive care units, a decrease from 253 on Monday.

Tuesday coronavirus update: 22 new deaths, 310 additional cases

WHO IS GETTING SICK? Age group with most confirmed infections: 30- to 39-year-olds, with 5,105 cases. Age group with most deaths: 80- to 89-year-olds, with 368 deaths. Number of health care workers with COVID-19: 2,764.

This report includes information from Forum News Service.

Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCVIII. UNION'S KROLL BLASTS CITY'S RIOT RESPONSE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 2, 2020 Tuesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 6ALength: 929 wordsByline: LIBOR JANY; LIZ NAVRATIL; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

In his first substantial comments since the killing of George Floyd, fiery Minneapolis police union president Lt. Bob Kroll blasted the city's handling of the ensuing riots in a letter to the rank-and-file, in which he told officers that they were being made "scapegoats" for the continued violence.

"No one with the exception of us is willing to recognize and acknowledge the extreme bravery you have displayed through this riot," said Kroll's letter, which seems to channel the frustration of some officers who feel abandoned by the administration and City Hall. "I commend you for the excellent police work you are doing in keeping your co-workers and others safe during what everyone except us refuses to call a riot. You've turned the tide of the largest scale riot that Minneapolis has ever seen."

Kroll, who represents more than 800 Minneapolis and park police, went on to accuse Mayor Jacob Frey, Gov. Tim Walz and other leaders of refusing to "acknowledge the work of MPD" and saying they "continually shift blame to it."

"It is despicable behavior," Kroll wrote. "How our command staff can tolerate it and live with themselves I do not know."

He continued by writing that he had reached out to Republican Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka to discuss deploying more Minnesota National Guard troops on city streets and has spoken with other law enforcement leaders across the country to "push our messaging on a national level." He added that he was also working with the union's attorneys to help the fired officers get their jobs back.

Kroll's letter later surfaced on social media, where it was widely condemned as divisive and rekindled questions for some about whether real reform will ever take root in the city's police force. Janeé Harteau, a former Minneapolis police chief and frequent sparring partner of Kroll's, called for him to resign from his post.

"A disgrace to the badge! This is the battle that myself and others have been fighting against. Bob Kroll turn in your badge!" Harteau posted on her Twitter account.

Union's Kroll blasts city's riot response

Frey echoed those sentiments in a statement.

"For a man who complains so frequently about a lack of community trust and support for the police department, Bob Kroll remains shockingly indifferent to his role in undermining that trust and support," he said. "His categorical opposition to reform, his consistent disrespect for civilian leadership, and his lack of empathy for the community have done more to undermine trust in police than any 'community activist' ever has."

Former Mayor R.T. Rybak chimed in on Twitter, and noted that Kroll's letter doesn't detail that Floyd died after being pinned by an officer.

"Wonder why people are angry?!" Rybak wrote. "We have some very courageous cops but you must now stand up to your leader jeopardizing all our safety."

Kroll has long been a lightning rod for criticism, both for his unabashed defense of officers accused of misconduct and because critics believe he represents a bygone era of policing. He did not return a call Monday.

He joined the department in 1989 and was elected to his first two-year term as union president in 2015, easily defeating longtime incumbent John Delmonico. He next won in another landslide against acting Federation treasurer Cory Fitch before running unopposed in the most recent election this spring.

Kroll was named in a 2007 racial discrimination lawsuit against the department brought by five black officers - including current chief Medaria Arradondo - after Kroll reportedly called then-U.S. Rep. Keith Ellison a terrorist and made disparaging comments about a gay aide to former Mayor Rybak in front of several other high-ranking commanders. Both Kroll and Arradondo have since said they have settled their differences.

Kroll most recently drew activists' ire when he joined President Donald Trump onstage at his rally at Target Center in October. Kroll was also criticized for pointing out the criminal record of Jamar Clark, who was fatally shot by a Minneapolis officer in 2015. In his letter to officers, he also alluded to Floyd's "violent criminal history."

Kroll's supporters have said he is misunderstood and has been unfairly vilified.

The police lieutenant seemed to suggest that he was directly involved in some of the operations at the Third Precinct before the station was overrun and burned by rioters. He said several missteps might have prevented the Third Precinct station's destruction by rioters, noting that reinforcements from the Minnesota National Guard didn't materialize until just after midnight Friday. He also said that officers weren't allowed to "use gas munitions and less lethal munitions to defend themselves."

"Given the right numbers, the right equipment, and your ability to use them [we] would have ended this Tuesday night," Kroll wrote. "I know this because I've been in charge of three separate riot situations when the police on the ground had the ability to make the tactical decisions to effectively end the situation."

"The politicians are to blame and you are the scapegoats," he said.

City officials pushed back on that claim.

Union's Kroll blasts city's riot response

Council Member Steve Fletcher said he thought "it was bad choices by Minneapolis police officers that escalated the situation to the point that it turned into a prolonged week of action."

Council President Lisa Bender described statements like Kroll's as "a huge barrier to change" and said she believes it undermines "the leadership of the really talented ... police leaders within the department."

Libor Jany · 612-673-4064 · Twitter: @StribJany

Liz Navratil · 612-673-4994 · Twitter: @LizNavratil

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCIX. UNREST DAMAGE COULD EXCEED \$100M IN TWIN CITIES

Finance and Commerce

June 2, 2020 Tuesday

Copyright 2020 BridgeTower Media All Rights Reserved

FINANCE & COMMERCESection: NEWSLength: 1246 wordsByline: Brian JohnsonBody

Fallout from the protests over the death of George Floyd continues as Twin Cities businesses emerge from the broken glass, rubble and charred remains of their buildings to begin the process of rebuilding.

The full extent of damage to buildings and businesses isn't fully known, but it's safe to say that "hundreds" of businesses were affected in Minneapolis and St. Paul, said Jonathan Weinhagen, president of the Minneapolis Regional Chamber of Commerce.

The St. Paul Police Department tweeted on May 28 that more than 170 businesses were "damaged or looted" and "dozens of fires" were reported as a result of protests stemming from Floyd's Memorial Day death at the hands of Minneapolis police.

Mark Kulda, Vice President of Public Affairs for the Insurance Federation of Minnesota, said Tuesday that it's difficult for the industry to put a dollar value on the damage, in part, because claims are pouring in from cities across the country.

"But we are one of the hardest-hit cities," Kulda said in an interview. "In my estimation, we are clearly going to be over $100 million if not more. Not all of it is going to be insured," because businesses aren't required to have commercial insurance.

Most standard insurance policies cover damage from riots and civil unrest, though some businesses might not get as much as they anticipated because COVID-19-related shutdowns likely reduced their income, Kulda said.

COVID-19 impacts are not covered because policies typically have specific exclusions related to viruses, Kulda said. But many businesses were allowed to reopen starting Tuesday, so that could be an inroad, he said.

"There could be some businesses that could make the claim, 'I was ready to reopen on Tuesday, but now I can't because of what happened,'" Kulda said. "It's going to be a little more nuanced because what a business was making pre-pandemic is probably different than what a business was making during the pandemic. "

Unrest damage could exceed $100M in Twin Cities

Weinhagen, of the Minneapolis Regional Chamber, said the damage has “multiple layers to it,” from broken glass and burned down facilities to merchandise lost to looting and employees’ lost wages.

“Significant dollars” have been flowing into relief funds established in the past 72 hours, he said. In addition, the chamber and other groups have been talking with city and state leaders about potential relief in a special legislative session, he said.

Weinhagen said the chamber is already seeing “tremendous flexibility” from the city of Minneapolis on the regulatory side. For instance, he said, business owners didn’t have to obtain permits to board-up their facilities for protection.

“I anticipate that will continue,” he said.

Weinhagen added that the damage is “widespread across our city and our region. Certainly, Lake Street is the epicenter,” but Chicago Avenue, areas of downtown and the North Loop, North Minneapolis and other areas have been hit as well, he noted.

“We want to tell that story of the expansive nature of the damage and destruction across the city of Minneapolis and certainly in the city of St. Paul, as well,” Weinhagen said.

Kari Collins, Ramsey County’s director of Community and Economic Development, said the county is partnering with the city of St. Paul, the St. Paul Area Chamber of Commerce and other community organizations to identify resources for affected businesses.

An existing resource is the Ramsey County Means Business site, which was launched to address the COVID-19 crisis and is being expanded to include relief for businesses damaged by the civil unrest.

Through that effort, the county will give priority to “businesses that have been doubly affected by the two crises,” Collins said.

Kyle Mianulli, a Hennepin County spokesman, said a number of county-owned buildings were damaged as a result of last week’s unrest. That includes the South Minneapolis Regional Service Center (broken window/glass doors, some fire damage, water damage, graffiti), the East Lake Library (windows and doors broken, minor fire damage, vandalism, graffiti, smoke damage), the Central Library (broken windows, graffiti) and the North Minneapolis Human Services and Public Health Satellite location (broken windows, vandalism).

“This continues to be a fluid and ongoing situation,” Mianulli added in an email. “It is still very early for detailed concrete policy actions around capital investments and future rebuilding efforts. Hennepin County will be considering a full spectrum of potential response strategies and tactics. That may include working with our existing funds and programs to support small businesses as well as seeking creative collaborative solutions in partnership with impacted communities and other public and private partners.”

An immediate focus is to get more than $20 million in “small business and relief funds into the hands of small businesses facing crisis due to COVID-19,” he said.

On Tuesday, he added, the county board was expected to approve an additional $10 million in CARES Act funding for the Hennepin County Small Business Relief Fund. The county received 2,290 applications for that fund by the May 8 deadline and expects the additional funding “to allow us to support the balance of eligible businesses who applied,” he said.

“The events of the last week were momentous in many ways and compound the hardships the small business community is already facing due to COVID-19,” Mianulli said. “The impacts are felt especially hard by our small business community, many of which are directly impacted by events of the last week are minority-owned. Hennepin County has longstanding relationships with community, nonprofit, and business partners in the Midtown Corridor who we will work closely with to support efforts to respond and rebuild.”

Unrest damage could exceed $100M in Twin Cities

Mianulli added that building and land use authorities “fall outside the county so we expect any county response to be in deep partnership with city and state officials. We are assessing our available authorities in order to align ourselves for these partnerships. ”

On its website, the city of St. Paul noted that the Minnesota Department of Commerce can help business owners, property owners and renters that experienced property damage. More information is available at www.stpaul.gov/curfew.

"The City of Saint Paul is working closely with our business community to support businesses impacted by the civil unrest this past week, including mobilizing all available resources," said Suzanne Donovan, marketing and public relations director for the city of St. Paul. "We continue to partner with the new Pay It Forward joint initiative, in which Saint Paul's business community has begun mobilizing a corps of volunteers to help small businesses access what they need to repair and rebuild."

The city is also reviewing procedures and options to expedite reviews to ensure building permits are issued as quickly as possible while continuing to promote the public health and safety of our community, said Donovan.

For its part, the Lake Street Council has launched a relief fund to “help rebuild Lake Street, starting with direct support to small businesses and nonprofits to help them rebuild their storefronts, reopen their businesses and serve our neighborhoods,” according to the council’s website. More information is at www.WeLoveLakeStreet.com.

[divider]

Like this article? Gain access to all of our great content with a month-to-month subscription. Start your subscription here.

Copyright © 2020 BridgeTower Media. All Rights Reserved.

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

Murder charge increased against ex-Minneapolis officer; 3 others charged in George Floyd's death

ARTICLE CCX. MURDER CHARGE INCREASED AGAINST EX-MINNEAPOLIS OFFICER; 3 OTHERS CHARGED IN GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 320 words

Byline: Mara H. Gottfried, Dave Orrick

Highlight: "We are gratified that this important action was brought before George Floyd's body was laid to rest," the family's attorney said.

Body

Days after taking over the case, Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison beefed up the murder charge against a former Minneapolis police officer and filed criminal charges against three others, saying justice would be found for George Floyd.

Ellison and Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman Wednesday filed an amended criminal complaint against Derek Chauvin, adding a charge of second-degree murder.

Three other Minneapolis officers, who have also been fired, were charged Wednesday with aiding and abetting second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter in Floyd's May 25 death. They are Thomas Lane, 37, J. Alexander Kueng, 26, and Tou Thao, 34.

He also urged patience from those seeking a swift resolution, cautioning that it would take "months" before the case goes to trial. He did not say when body camera footage from the four officers might be made public.

Ellison said the slow wheels of justice in prosecuting the officers should have no bearing on the public outcry for police reform.

"There's a lot more to do than just this case," he said.

It was a sentiment echoed by Walz.

"The charges ... are a meaningful step toward justice for George Floyd," Walz said in a statement. "But we must also recognize that the anguish driving protests around the world is about more than one tragic incident.

"George Floyd's death is the symptom of a disease," Walz continued. "We will not wake up one day and have the disease of systemic racism cured for us. This is on each of us to solve together, and we have hard work ahead."

Murder charge increased against ex-Minneapolis officer; 3 others charged in George Floyd's death

Nick Ferraro contributed to this report.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Former Minneapolis police officers, from left, Derek Chauvin, Tou Thao, Thomas Lane and J. Alexander Kueng were charged Wednesday, June 3, 2020, in the death of George Floyd. A charge of second-degree murder was added against Chauvin. The other three are charged with aiding and abetting second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. (Hennepin County Sheriff's Office)

Quincy Mason Floyd, 27, son of George Floyd, second from left, holds a news conference with his uncle Twain Mason, far left, family attorney Ben Crump, center, civil rights activist Rev. Al Sharpton, second from right, and Eric Garner's mother Gwen Carr, far right, after Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison charged three other police officers in the death of his father George Floyd, June 3, 2020, in Minneapolis. (AP Photo/Bebeto Matthews)

Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman, left, and Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison arrive at a press conference in St. Paul on June 3, 2020 to announce that charges of aiding and abetting second-degree murder and aiding and abetting second-degree manslaughter had been filed against former Minneapolis police officers Thomas Lane, J. Alexander Kueng, and Tou Thao in the May 25 death of George Floyd. Ellison also announced that charges against former officer Derek Chauvin were upgraded to second-degree murder. (Scott Olson/Getty Images)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Minneapolis police release Chauvin's personnel records, offering few more details

ARTICLE CCXI. MINNEAPOLIS POLICE RELEASE CHAUVIN'S PERSONNEL RECORDS, OFFERING FEW MORE DETAILS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 441 words

Byline: Staff and wire reports

Highlight: The Minneapolis Police Department on Tuesday released personnel records for Derek Chauvin, the now-fired officer accused of killing George Floyd, a black man whose death has sparked protest nationwide. The records provide some insight into Chauvin's background, starting as a military police officer with the U.S. Army from September 1996 to February 1997 and again [...]

Body

The Minneapolis Police Department on Tuesday released personnel records for Derek Chauvin, the now-fired officer accused of killing George Floyd, a black man whose death has sparked protest nationwide.

The records provide some insight into Chauvin's background, starting as a military police officer with the U.S. Army from September 1996 to February 1997 and again from September 1999 to May 2000.

However, the records included little detail about the 17 times Chauvin was the subject of internal affairs investigations by the Minneapolis department.

Chauvin, who had worked with the Police Department since October 2001, had been disciplined for only one incident during his tenure. It occurred in August 2007 in Longfellow, a neighborhood just south of downtown Minneapolis. Chauvin was accused of pulling a woman out of her car after stopping her for going 10 mph over the speed limit. The woman filed the complaint the next day.

Investigators found that Chauvin "did not have to remove complainant from car" and that he "could've conducted interview outside the vehicle." Further investigation showed that Chauvin's squad car video camera was turned off during the course of the stop.

Chauvin received a letter of reprimand for the incident, the details of which were redacted.

Chauvin last week was fired and charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter in George's death.

He is being held on $500,000 bail in the custody of the state prison at Oak Park Heights. Chauvin is in "administrative segregation," which Minnesota Corrections Commissioner Paul Schnell says is standard procedure for inmates who are law enforcement officers or high-profile offenders.

Minneapolis police release Chauvin's personnel records, offering few more details

Reports indicate Chauvin was previously involved in multiple shootings. In 2006, he shot and killed a suspect who allegedly had a gun. In 2008, he shot a domestic assault suspect, and in 2011, he fired at a man seen running from another shooting.

The other officers at the scene when Floyd died - Thomas Lane, Tou Thao and J Alexander Kueng - are being investigated for their roles. Chauvin and the other officers could not be reached for comment.

According to internal records, Thao has been investigated at least six times by the department. None of those investigations resulted in discipline, records show. One case is pending.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Derek Chauvin

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCXII. FLOYD FAMILY ATTORNEY BLASTS COUNTY AUTOPSY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 6ALength: 613 wordsByline: CHAO XIONG; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

An attorney for the family of George Floyd, a black man killed by Minneapolis police, blasted official autopsy results that differed from the conclusions of pathologists hired by his family, and called for protesters to "take a breath" and demonstrate peacefully.

Attorney Benjamin Crump made the remarks during a Tuesday news conference on the Floyd case. He and co-counsel S. Lee Merritt are also representing the families of Ahmaud Arbery and Breonna Taylor, black Americans killed recently by civilians and police, respectively.

Crump accused the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's office of going to "great length" to obscure the cause of Floyd's death. He said the office suggested there was no trauma to Floyd's trachea after officer Derek Chauvin knelt on his neck for several minutes on May 25 as Floyd and bystanders begged him and three other officers to stop.

"We know this is going to play out continuously through this trial," Crump said of the diverging autopsy results. "Attorney General Ellison's office is all over it."

Chauvin was charged last week with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter in Floyd's death. Ellison's office declined to comment Tuesday on the autopsy reports.

Floyd's attorneys on Monday released the results of a private autopsy which found that Floyd died of asphyxia, which occurs when oxygen flow is cut off.

Officers Thomas Lane and J Alexander Kueng pinned Floyd stomach-down in the street as Chauvin knelt on his neck and officer Tou Thao stood watch. All four have since been fired.

The officers had responded about 8 p.m. to a call of a man allegedly using a counterfeit $20 bill at Cup Foods at Chicago Avenue and E. 38th Street.

The medical examiner's office issued its final public autopsy report Monday, stating that Floyd died from "cardiopulmonary arrest complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint, and neck compression." In short, it concluded that Floyd suffered a heart attack while being restrained and noted heart disease, "fentanyl intoxication" and some previous methamphetamine use as "significant conditions."

Floyd family attorney blasts county autopsy

Both autopsies found that Floyd died of homicide.

Citing Minnesota law and the investigation, the county declined to elaborate on the cause of death or respond to Crump's comments.

Crump called the toxicology results a "red herring."

"That is an attempt to assassinate his character," he said.

Asked if Ellison has committed to using the private autopsy in his investigation into the officers, Crump said the attorney general "wants to look at all of the autopsies and all of the science as they build their case."

Gov. Tim Walz announced Sunday that Ellison would lead the investigation and prosecution, aiding the Hennepin County Attorney's Office.

Crump called for protesters who have taken to the streets across the country and world to cease the destruction and looting that damaged more than 300 metro businesses, including the Minneapolis police Third Precinct.

"What he needed was breath," Crump said of Floyd. "The family's asked everybody to take a breath - just to take a breath for peace, take a breath for justice. If George was here, he would be asking people to peacefully protest.

"Just follow the example of George, America, and take a breath and try to heal our country."

Merritt called on President Donald Trump and law enforcement to follow suit.

"What we're asking from the highest executive office in this country and from policing agencies, from the National Guard, is to take a breath," Merritt said. "We are all here because law enforcement refused to do what they were trained to do, what humanity dictates they do, which is to de-escalate."

Chao Xiong · 612-270-4708

Twitter: @ChaoStrib

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCXIII. MISINFORMATION IN FLOYD DEATH TROUBLING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 6ALength: 656 wordsByline: ANDY MANNIX; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

On the morning of May 26, Minneapolis police spokesman John Elder sent a brief statement to reporters under the subject line: "Man Dies After Medical Incident During Police Interaction."

According to Elder, a suspected money forger had "physically resisted" arrest. And after police managed to get him into handcuffs, the officers "noted he appeared to be suffering medical distress."

The man was George Floyd. And a source of the medical distress was the knee of a Minneapolis police officer, pinning Floyd to the ground by the neck almost eight minutes as Floyd pleaded that he couldn't breathe - all details that emerged hours later when bystander video surfaced online and went viral.

The statement came hours before the first video of the encounter went viral - the moment they lost control of the narrative, and the public took over. Some city politicians, including Council Member Jeremy Schroeder, say they are still searching for answers as to the source of the false information.

"It is deeply concerning that the information initially circulated by the Minneapolis Police Department early Tuesday morning did not fully reflect the horrifying circumstances surrounding George Floyd's death," said Schroeder. "The original news release did not in my view accurately convey the facts or the role of the officers in this tragedy."

Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo said this week that he did not know the original source of the information contained in the news release.

"I'm committed as we move forward that we will do better to make sure we are getting as much factual information out in a timely matter as we can."

Elder said in an interview late Tuesday night that when he goes to a scene, information is fluid and the officers involved can't be interviewed by a public information officer.

"We try very hard to get information out as quickly as possible that is wholly honest and correct," he said. "There is no way I'm going to lie about a situation that is on body camera and is going to prove this department to be disingenuous."

Misinformation in Floyd death troubling

The most credible accounts of what happened that night came from bystander video and private surveillance footage, later supplemented by a criminal complaint. Minneapolis officers arrived at the intersection of 38th Street and S. Chicago Avenue. They removed Floyd from a vehicle, handcuffed him and walked him across the street. While they attempted to get him into a squad car he went to the ground. A bystander video then shows officer Derek Chauvin pinning down Floyd by his neck while two other officers, J Alexander Keung and Thomas Lane, hold him down at his legs and back. Officer Tou Thao stands by.

"Please, I can't breathe," Floyd pleads repeatedly.

"He is human, bro," bystanders shout at the officers. "He's not even resisting arrest right now, bro. You're [expletive] stopping his breathing right now, bro. You think that's cool?"

"Look at him," another cries as Floyd becomes unresponsive.

After seeing the video, city leaders quickly condemned the police actions and Arradondo fired the officers. Protests have erupted across the Twin Cities, culminating Thursday night with crowds breaking into the Third Precinct police headquarters and lighting it on fire. Chauvin has been arrested and charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter.

Mary Moriarty, chief public defender in Hennepin County, said her office frequently deals with cases where Minneapolis police officers provide official accounts of arrests later proven to be false by video evidence.

"Am I at all surprised that the police lied in their report? No," she said.

Moriarty also said she wasn't surprised to see Chauvin pinning down Floyd in what city officials have criticized as an unsanctioned form of restraint.

"We look at bodycam, we look at dashcam, and we frequently see officers put their knees in a client's back or neck," she said. "And it is troubling. It's extremely troubling."

Andy Mannix · 612-673-4036

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCXIV. MPD FACES RACISM PROBE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1229 wordsByline: JESSIE VAN BERKEL; LIZ NAVRATIL; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: STATE BEGINS BATTLE TO OVERHAUL CITY POLICING // Waves of volunteers rush to donate tons of needed food, suppliesBody

The Minnesota Department of Human Rights will launch an investigation into the Minneapolis Police Department after filing a civil rights charge related to the death of George Floyd, who died while being pinned to the street by police last week.

The probe, announced Tuesday by Gov. Tim Walz, will look at Minneapolis police policies and procedures over the past 10 years to determine whether the department has engaged in discriminatory practices toward people of color.

"This is not about holding people personally criminally liable," said Human Rights Commissioner Rebecca Lucero, who will lead the investigation. "This is about systems change."

In a statement released late Tuesday, Police Chief Medaria Arradondo acknowledged there is work to be done.

"With the assistance of the State Human Rights Commission, we can take an honest examination at systemic barriers that have prevented us from reaching our greatest potential for those we serve," he said.

Lucero said this will differ from past examinations of the police department. First, the state Human Rights Department will work with city leaders to try to make some quick changes, she said. There will also be a longer process to potentially reach a consent decree, which can be enforced by the courts, Lucero said.

"This is not a report. This is something that will result in court action and require change," she said.

The investigation follows the arrest and charges against former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, a white officer who knelt on Floyd's neck for almost nine minutes before he died. Three other police officers have been fired following the deadly encounter.

"We are going to establish peace on the streets when we address the systemic issues," Walz said.

MPD faces racism probe

The move is the first time the Human Rights Department has launched a systemic investigation into the largest police department in the state.

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey said an agreement with the state could be a needed catalyst for change that he considers to have been hindered over the years by the Minneapolis Police Federation, the department's powerful police union.

"For years in Minneapolis, police chiefs and elected officials committed to change have been thwarted by police union protections and laws that severely limit accountability among police departments," Frey said. "Breaking through those persistent barriers, shifting the culture of policing, and addressing systemic racism will require all of us working hand in hand."

Minneapolis police union president Lt. Bob Kroll did not immediately respond to a request for comment Tuesday. Kroll has been an outspoken critic of the city's liberal leadership, which he faults for being anti-police and holding back on needed resources and manpower. In a letter to the rank-and-file, he blasted the city's handling of the riots following Floyd's death, saying officers had been made "scapegoats" for the continued violence.

Kroll was under fire from two of the state's largest labor organizations. Education Minnesota and the state AFL-CIO called for his resignation.

Meanwhile the City Council issued a joint statement welcoming the state scrutiny. In a news conference Tuesday afternoon, council members presented a wide range of ideas about how they hope this investigation could help reform the police department.

Some want to defund the department quickly, though others prefer to take a longer approach, soliciting more community input before drastically overhauling the force.

"I know you don't care what we say. You care about what we do, and this is action," said Council Vice President Andrea Jenkins.

Jenkins noted that the city as a whole has some of the largest racial disparities in the country.

Police department data also show disparities in how Minneapolis police use force: While 40% of city residents are people of color, they are involved in 74% of all cases of police use of force, according to the most recent department data available. Black people are involved in 63% of the cases.

The human rights probe came as Democratic state lawmakers rolled out policing reforms that they said should be a centerpiece of the special legislative session expected this month, a push that Walz endorsed. The proposals mirror some of the recommendations outlined in a February report produced by a 16-member task force on deadly police encounters, led by state Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington and Attorney General Keith Ellison, who has taken over the prosecution of Chauvin.

Lucero said her agency will also look into state-level changes. Some of those could involve legislative action, Lucero said, such as eliminating the ban on residency requirements. That ban has allowed Minneapolis to reach a point where just under 7% of officers live in the city, according to its human resources department.

Chauvin and three other officers involved in Floyd's arrest on Memorial Day are under investigation by state prosecutors and by the U.S. Attorney's Office and the FBI, which is determining whether Floyd's constitutional rights were violated. Lucero said her department's investigation is focused on state law, and she is not sure whether there also will be a federal civil rights investigation.

MPD faces racism probe

The state's effort to enter into a binding agreement on discrimination and use of force is not the first move to curb alleged police abuses in Minneapolis. The Police Department entered into a federal mediation agreement with the U.S. Justice Department in 2003 aimed at addressing a host of police issues such as use of force, diversity and race relations. It was billed as a way to soothe community tensions inflamed by the fatal police shooting of a machete-wielding Somali man in March 2002, followed by a riot a few months later in north Minneapolis.

Arradondo, who was involved in the pact's negotiations, said at the time that he was willing to revisit the agreement, but it's unclear which of the reforms have been enacted.

That agreement outlined some critical areas of improvement, notably use of force and how officers handle suspects who are dangerously mentally ill. But critics say that the city for years fell behind on commitments in other areas: disciplining officers who were repeated targets of citizen complaints; providing culturally sensitive training across the department; hiring and keeping minority and female officers; and creating a forum for ongoing dialogue after the agreement expires.

Over the years, the agreement led to changes in the police department's policy on use of force and improvements in mental health training, while ending the controversial practice of transporting suspects in squad cars with K-9s, city officials say.

But a civilian oversight body, considered the centerpiece of that mediation agreement, dissolved in 2008 amid questions of its effectiveness.

Minneapolis Civil Rights Director Velma Korbel said changing the department has taken years, and that the city can't achieve reform on its own.

"Every time we let a black man's murder at the hands of the state go unpunished, we chip away a piece of the soul of this country," she said. "George Floyd should not have died. He died calling out for his mother. Let's do the work so that no other black mom has to go through life without her son."

Staff writers Libor Jany and Stephen Montemayor contributed to this report.

Jessie Van Berkel · 651-925-5044

Liz Navratil · 612-673-4994

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

George Floyd's family demands arrest of all 4 officers involved in his death. AG Keith Ellison planning update

ARTICLE CCXV. GEORGE FLOYD'S FAMILY DEMANDS ARREST OF ALL 4 OFFICERS INVOLVED IN HIS DEATH. AG KEITH ELLISON PLANNING UPDATE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 388 words

Byline: The Associated Press

Highlight: George Floyd's family on Wednesday demanded the arrest of all four police officers involved in his death, as they visited a makeshift shrine at the Minneapolis street corner where the black man died after a white officer pressed a knee on his neck as he pleaded for air. The officer, Derek Chauvin, has been fired [...]

Body

George Floyd's family on Wednesday demanded the arrest of all four police officers involved in his death, as they visited a makeshift shrine at the Minneapolis street corner where the black man died after a white officer pressed a knee on his neck as he pleaded for air.

The officer, Derek Chauvin, has been fired and charged with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. Three other officers who were present were also fired but have not been charged in Floyd's May 25 death.

Widely seen bystander video showing Floyd's death has sparked sometimes violent protests around the world against police brutality and discrimination.

The family's attorney, Ben Crump, repeated his call for all four officers to be charged.

"He died because he was starving for air," Crump said. "He needed a breath. So we are demanding justice. We expect all of the police officers to be arrested before we have the memorial here in Minneapolis, Minnesota, tomorrow."

CNN is reporting that Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison has reviewed the case on the officers. Ellison is planning to provide an update on the prosecution of the Floyd case this afternoon.

Gov. Tim Walz made an unannounced visit to the memorial earlier Wednesday. And on Tuesday, Walz and the Minnesota Department of Human Rights launched a civil rights investigation of the Minneapolis Police Department and its history of racial discrimination, in hopes of forcing widespread change.

George Floyd's family demands arrest of all 4 officers involved in his death. AG Keith Ellison planning update

The official autopsy by the county medical examiner concluded that Floyd's death was caused by cardiac arrest as police restrained him and compressed his neck. The medical examiner also listed fentanyl intoxication and recent methamphetamine use, but not as the cause of death.

Crump and the Floyd family commissioned a separate autopsy that concluded he died of asphyxiation due to neck and back compression due to Chauvin's knee on his neck and other responding officers' knees in his back, which made it impossible for him to breathe.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Quincy Mason Floyd, right front, leaves after paying tribute at the makeshift memorial in honor of his father, George Floyd, on June 3, 2020 in Minneapolis. (Chandan Khanna/AFP via Getty Images)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Walz extends curfew: 10 pm - 4 am Wednesday and Thursday nights in St. Paul and Minneapolis

ARTICLE CCXVI. WALZ EXTENDS CURFEW: 10 PM - 4 AM WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY NIGHTS IN ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 315 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: St. Paul and Minneapolis will be under a curfew again Wednesday and Thursday nights. On Wednesday, Gov. Tim Walz announced that he was extending the 10 p.m. to 4 a.m. curfew for the Twin Cities both nights. While the past two days have seen outpourings of peaceful demonstrations and the last two nights have seen [...]

Body

St. Paul and Minneapolis will be under a curfew again Wednesday and Thursday nights.

On Wednesday, Gov. Tim Walz announced that he was extending the 10 p.m. to 4 a.m. curfew for the Twin Cities both nights.

While the past two days have seen outpourings of peaceful demonstrations and the last two nights have seen a noted fall in violence compared with days prior, authorities are still concerned that the situation remains volatile and unpredictable in the wake of last week's killing of George Floyd, an unarmed black man, in Minneapolis police custody. Violence has continued in other cities across the nation.

According to a statement from the governor's office:

"During the curfew, no one is allowed to travel on Minneapolis and Saint Paul streets or public places, except for first responders, members of the media, people going back and forth to work, individuals seeking emergency care or fleeing danger, and people experiencing homelessness. Curfews are not limited to Minneapolis and St. Paul. Mayors and local governments across the state can issue their own curfews as necessary."

Walz issued the following statement: "Minnesotans need more than ever to lean on their neighbors, show up for their communities, and add their voice to this urgent conversation on addressing our systemic problems. Yet they've made those sacrifices to stay home through the curfew to help keep our neighborhoods safe. We're incredibly grateful that Minnesotans are working with us so we can focus our conversation and energy on justice for George Floyd."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He

Walz extends curfew: 10 pm - 4 am Wednesday and Thursday nights in St. Paul and Minneapolis

is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Protesters return to the streets as Trump decries 'lowlifes'

ARTICLE CCXVII. PROTESTERS RETURN TO THE STREETS AS TRUMP DECRIES
'LOWLIFES'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1258 words

Byline: Zeke Miller, Tim Sullivan

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Undeterred by curfews, protesters streamed back into the nation's streets Tuesday, hours after President Donald Trump pressed governors to put down the violence set off by George Floyd's death and demanded that New York call up the National Guard to stop the "lowlifes and losers."

Body

WASHINGTON - Undeterred by curfews, protesters streamed back into the nation's streets Tuesday, hours after President Donald Trump pressed governors to put down the violence set off by George Floyd's death and demanded that New York call up the National Guard to stop the "lowlifes and losers."

But most protests passed peacefully, and while there were scattered reports of looting in New York City, the country appeared calmer by late Tuesday than it did a day earlier, when violence swept through multiple cities.

The president, meanwhile, amplified his hard-line calls from Monday, when he threatened to send in the military to restore order if governors didn't do it.

"NYC, CALL UP THE NATIONAL GUARD," he tweeted. "The lowlifes and losers are ripping you apart. Act fast!"

One day after a crackdown on peaceful protesters near the White House, thousands of demonstrators massed a block away from the presidential mansion, facing law enforcement personnel standing behind a black chain-link fence. The fence was put up overnight to block access to Lafayette Park, just across the street from the White House.

"Last night pushed me way over the edge," said Jessica DeMaio, 40, of Washington, who attended a Floyd protest Tuesday for the first time. "Being here is better than being at home feeling helpless."

The crowd remained in place after the city's 7 p.m. curfew passed, defying warnings that the response from law enforcement could be even more forceful. But the protest lacked the tension of the previous nights' demonstrations. The crowd Tuesday was peaceful, even polite. At one point, the crowd booed when a protester climbed a light post and took down a street sign. A chant went up: "Peaceful protest!"

Protesters return to the streets as Trump decries 'lowlifes'

On Monday, law enforcement officers on foot and horseback aggressively drove protesters away from Lafayette Park, clearing the way for President Donald Trump to do a photo op at nearby St. John's Church. On Tuesday, pastors at the church prayed with demonstrators and handed out water bottles.

Protests ranged across the U.S., including in Los Angeles, Miami, St. Paul, Minnesota, Columbia, South Carolina, and Houston, where the police chief talked to peaceful demonstrators, vowing reforms.

"God as my witness, change is coming," Art Acevedo said. "And we're going to do it the right way."

In New York, midtown Manhattan was pocked with battered storefronts after Monday's protests. Macy's flagship store was among those hit when crowds of people smashed windows and looted stores as they swept through the area. Police made nearly 700 arrests and Mayor Bill de Blasio extended an 8 p.m. curfew all week.

"We're going to have a tough few days," he warned, but added: "We're going to beat it back." He pleaded with community leaders to step forward and "create peace."

Thousands of protesters marched Tuesday night in a string of demonstrations across Manhattan and Brooklyn after merchants boarded up their businesses, fearing a repeat of the night before. Many people remained on the streets after the curfew hour. Police eventually ordered them to move along and began taking some into custody.

More than 20,000 National Guard members have been called up in 29 states to deal with the violence. New York is not among them, and de Blasio has said he does not want the Guard. On Tuesday, Democratic Gov. Andrew Cuomo called what happened in the city "a disgrace."

"The NYPD and the mayor did not do their job last night," Cuomo said at a briefing in Albany.

He said the mayor underestimated the problem, and the nation's largest police force was not deployed in sufficient numbers, though the city had said it doubled the usual police presence.

Tuesday marked the eighth straight night of the protests, which began in Minneapolis, where Floyd died, and quickly spread across the country.

The mother of George Floyd's 6-year-old daughter, Gianna, said she wanted the world to know that her little girl lost a good father.

"I want everybody to know that this is what those officers took," Roxie Washington said during a Minneapolis news conference with her young daughter at her side. "I want justice for him because he was good. No matter what anybody thinks, he was good."

On Monday, scattered violence flared in multiple protests, including an officer who was shot and gravely wounded outside a Las Vegas hotel and casino, and four officers shot in St. Louis. They were expected to recover.

About a dozen other deaths have been reported around the country over the past week. And nearly 8,000 people nationwide have been arrested, according to a count by The Associated Press.

Some protesters framed the burgeoning movement as a necessity after a string of killings by police.

Protesters return to the streets as Trump decries 'lowlifes'

"It feels like it's just been an endless cascade of hashtags of black people dying, and it feels like nothing's really being done by our political leaders to actually enact real change," said Christine Ohenwuwa, 19, who attended a peaceful protest at the Minnesota state Capitol in St. Paul. "There's always going to be a breaking point. I think right now, we're seeing the breaking point around the country."

"I live in this state. It's really painful to see what's going on, but it's also really important to understand that it's connected to a system of racial violence," she said.

Meanwhile, governors and mayors, Republicans and Democrats alike, rejected Trump's threat to send in the military, with some saying troops would be unnecessary and others questioning whether the government has such authority and warning that such a step would be dangerous.

"Denver is not Little Rock in 1957, and Donald Trump is not President Eisenhower. This is a time for healing, for bringing people together, and the best way to protect civil rights is to move away from escalating violence," Colorado Gov. Jared Polis and Denver Mayor Michael Hancock, both Democrats, said in a statement, referring to Eisenhower's use of troops to enforce school desegregation in the South.

A senior White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that the president is not rushing to send in the military and that his goal was to pressure governors to deploy more National Guard members.

Such use of the military would mark a stunning federal intervention rarely seen in modern American history.

Amid the protests, nine states and the District of Columbia held presidential primaries that tested the nation's ability to run elections while balancing a pandemic and sweeping social unrest. Joe Biden won hundreds more delegates and was on the cusp of formally securing the Democratic presidential nomination.

Also Tuesday, Minnesota opened an investigation into whether the Minneapolis Police Department has a pattern of discrimination against minorities. Floyd died May 25 after a white Minneapolis officer, Derek Chauvin, pressed his knee on the handcuffed black man's neck for several minutes.

Chauvin has been charged with murder. Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison said prosecutors are working as fast as they can to determine if the three other officers at the scene should be charged too. All four have been fired.

Sullivan reported from Minneapolis. Associated Press journalists across the U.S. contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXVIII. MINNEAPOLIS SCHOOL BOARD ENDS SECURITY CONTRACT WITH CITY'S POLICE FORCE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 209 words

Byline: The Associated Press

Highlight: The Minneapolis school board has voted to end its contract with the Minneapolis Police Department following the death last week of George Floyd while a white police officer pressed his knee to the black man's neck. The Star Tribune reports the vote was unanimous Tuesday. Minneapolis Public Schools will stop further negotiations with the Police [...]

Body

The Minneapolis school board has voted to end its contract with the Minneapolis Police Department following the death last week of George Floyd while a white police officer pressed his knee to the black man's neck.

The Star Tribune reports the vote was unanimous Tuesday.

Minneapolis Public Schools will stop further negotiations with the Police Department. Schools Superintendent Ed Graff must come up with a new plan for school safety by the board's Aug. 18 meeting.

School board chairwoman Kim Ellison said in an interview that she values "people and education and life." Ellison said she's now convinced, "based on the actions of the Minneapolis Police Department, that we don't have the same values."

The Minneapolis and St. Paul school districts have faced criticism over the use of school resource officers. Both districts have sought to transform the role to be more of a mentor than an enforcer.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXIX. WALKER ART CENTER WON'T USE MINNEAPOLIS POLICE FOR SPECIAL EVENTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 235 words

Byline: Kathy Berdan

Highlight: The Walker Art Center is cutting ties with the Minneapolis Police Department. It posted a message on social media on Wednesday afternoon stating it would no longer contract the services of the Minneapolis Police Department for special events "until the MPD implements meaningful change by demilitarizing training programs, holding officers accountable for the use of [...]"

Body

The Walker Art Center is cutting ties with the Minneapolis Police Department.

It posted a message on social media on Wednesday afternoon stating it would no longer contract the services of the Minneapolis Police Department for special events "until the MPD implements meaningful change by demilitarizing training programs, holding officers accountable for the use of excessive force, and treating communities of color with dignity and respect."

The Minneapolis contemporary art center did not say how much it has paid the police department for services in the past.

The move is in response to the Memorial Day death of George Floyd while he was in police custody.

Meanwhile, the Minneapolis Institute of Art said Wednesday it has also "suspended its practice of contracting off-duty Minneapolis police officers."

Since Floyd's death, the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis School District and the Minneapolis Park & Recreation Board have also severed ties with the Minneapolis Police Department.

Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Meet Kamryn Johnson, the 9-year-old who has raised more than \$50,000 for Minneapolis Daily Distraction: AirJamz guitar pick lets you shred your worries away \(no guitar required\) Accordo announces new season will begin in October

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Walker Art Center won't use Minneapolis police for special events

End of Document

ARTICLE CCXX. ELLISON APPOINTMENT CAN HELP BUILD TRUST

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 10ALength: 551 wordsHighlight: Attorney general's experience in civil rights is needed as case tests legal system's credibility.Body

The legal case resulting from the death of George Floyd will be one of the most contentious, closely watched legal proceedings in Minnesota history.

The most recent high-profile criminal case against a police officer in the state led to the 2019 third-degree murder conviction of former Minneapolis police officer Mohamed Noor, who is black, in the death of Justine Damond, who was white. It was believed to be the first time in state history that a police officer was convicted of murder for an on-duty killing.

Gov. Tim Walz, drawing on his statutory authority, has requested that state Attorney General Keith Ellison take over the case against former officer Derek Chauvin. Fired shortly after the incident that cost Floyd his life, Chauvin was initially charged with third-degree murder and manslaughter by Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman, who prosecuted Noor.

Walz's decision was unusual. While it has not been uncommon in the past for smaller county attorney's offices to seek state assistance on complex cases, it is rare for a governor to make such a decision on his own. But there are extenuating circumstances that make this a sound and even necessary choice in the Floyd case. Restoring trust in the legal system among all Minnesotans is critical.

Floyd's family requested that Ellison take the case as a way to instill confidence in the outcome. Ten House members of the Minneapolis delegation sent a letter to Walz asking for Ellison to take over as well. The 10, all Democrats, stated bluntly that their constituents, "especially constituents of color, have lost faith in the ability of [Freeman] to fairly and impartially investigate and prosecute these cases." They cited a news conference in which Freeman appeared to suggest there was unseen evidence that could exonerate Chauvin and the other three officers involved in the arrest.

That, the letter writers said, "further ruptured that trust." Ellison, they said, "has earned the goodwill of Minneapolis residents through years of service to the city. ... It is imperative to signal ... that the authorities are treating this case with the special attention it deserves."

But the reasons for Ellison's appointment go beyond a symbolic gesture or even his decadeslong reputation in the city and communities of color. Ellison is steeped in civil rights issues, began his career litigating civil rights cases and led the Legal Rights Center of Minneapolis for five years as executive director. That experience will be necessary. Every facet of this case will be scrutinized here, across the country and beyond.

Ellison appointment can help build trust

Already, conflicting autopsy reports - one from the Hennepin County medical examiner and another by doctors hired by the Floyd family - have contributed to the tension.

This is a time to make every effort to address the concerns of an aggrieved community forthrightly. That starts with a prosecution team that instills trust. Minnesotans should also welcome the state Human Rights Department's decision to launch a long overdue investigation into Minneapolis Police Department practices. The proposal to make police reform a cornerstone of any special legislative session is also a good one.

These are beginnings that should give all Minnesotans more confidence that the law works for everyone, regardless of the color of their skin.

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

Minn. group in plateless car charged

ARTICLE CCXXI. MINN. GROUP IN PLATELESS CAR CHARGED

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 4BLength: 553 wordsByline: CHAO XIONG; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Man from Illinois also jailed for rioting in cities.Body

In warning that "outside agitators" had infiltrated local protests over the death of George Floyd, a black man killed by Minneapolis police, state officials outlined a list of concerning developments, including cars stripped of their license plates driving around town.

But at least one case charged Tuesday in Hennepin County District Court showed that a group of mostly local young men were riding in one of the mysterious vehicles.

Police allegedly recovered two guns, a hammer and an "electric grinding tool" from the men.

Authorities charged Junior G. Smith, 24, of Rochester; Augustine Z. Livingstone, 22, of Ramsey, Minn.; and Peter Shin, 29, of St. Paul.

They face one count of second-degree riot, armed with a dangerous weapon.

State authorities warned at a Sunday news conference focused heavily on the alleged threat of outsiders that such cars had been found loaded with rocks and weapons, and that caches of incendiaries had been discovered near sites of protests and vandalism.

They later backed off the claims after some arrest data didn't support the claim that outsiders were the bulk of the troublemakers.

According to the complaint against the three suspects: Minneapolis police were responding to looting and someone with a gun near S. Pillsbury Avenue and E. Lake Street about 12:50 a.m. Sunday.

"The area was recently subject to many instances of arson, structure fires, burglary, looting, assaults, vehicles driving with no license plates at high speed and other riotous activities," the charges said.

The city was under a curfew issued by Gov. Tim Walz that went into effect at 8 p.m. in an attempt to curb widespread vandalism and arson that ultimately damaged more than 300 businesses in the metro.

Minn. group in plateless car charged

Police saw a Mercedes sedan with no visible license plates speed down Lake Street.

The car turned onto Pillsbury, pulled into a parking area and backed out onto Pillsbury, the charges said.

"Officers ordered the vehicle to stop with guns drawn," according to the complaint.

The vehicle's occupants complied.

Police ordered the men out of the vehicle and found Smith with a loaded pistol in his waistband, the charges said.

Smith also allegedly carried a backpack containing a hammer and spray paint.

Shin allegedly had a backpack with a firearm and an "electric grinding tool," the charges said.

Livingstone was allegedly driving.

A fourth man who was not charged told police he was from Portland, Ore., and traveled to Minnesota to witness the protests.

Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington on Sunday said authorities had intercepted such cars, which often had their lights turned off and windows blacked out.

Some suspects fled while others were arrested, he said, adding that he didn't have "any credible evidence of any specific group being here in Minnesota."

On Monday, Matthew Lee Rupert, 28, of Galesburg, Ill., was charged in federal court for traveling to Minnesota to riot.

He allegedly lit a store on fire and looted an Office Depot. Thousands of protesters have taken to the streets every day for a week after officer Derek Chauvin knelt on Floyd's neck on May 25, killing him as he said he couldn't breathe.

Bystanders, one of whom recorded the incident on video seen around the world, also pleaded with Chauvin and his three colleagues to stop.

None did.

Chao Xiong · 612-270-4708

Twitter: @ChaoStrib

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCXXII. MPLS. SCHOOLS END POLICE CONTRACT

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3BLength: 446 wordsByline: RYAN FAIRCLOTH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: The district must come up with new safety plan by mid-August.Body

Minneapolis Public Schools has severed its decadeslong relationship with the city's police department in response to the death of George Floyd in police custody.

The school board voted unanimously Tuesday to terminate the MPD's contract to provide school resource officers. The district will cease further negotiations with the department and Superintendent Ed Graff must come up with a new plan for school safety by the board's Aug. 18 meeting.

"I value people and education and life," school board chairwoman Kim Ellison said in an interview. "Now I'm convinced, based on the actions of the Minneapolis Police Department, that we don't have the same values."

"I firmly believe that it is completely unnatural to have police in schools," school board member Kimberly Caprini said during the meeting.

In a statement, MPD Deputy Chief Erick Fors said they will continue to work with MPS on security and safety issues.

"The relationships that were built were impactful not only for the students and staff, but for the officers who had a calling to work with our youth through mentorship and engagement."

The Minneapolis and St. Paul school districts have long faced criticism over the use of school resource officers, with both seeking to transform the role to be more of a mentor than an enforcer. In 2018-2019, a Minneapolis Public Schools survey gave mostly positive marks to the officers, but the data also showed that school cops had more interactions with black students than their peers.

The state's third-largest school district has contracted with Minneapolis police since 1967, a district spokeswoman said, except from 2004-2009, when it worked with park police. Under the current contract, the district was paying Minneapolis police $1.1 million annually for its services.

Mpls. schools end police contract

Earlier Tuesday, a few hundred people - including Democratic U.S. Rep. Ilhan Omar - gathered outside the district's headquarters to voice support for the move.

"Police brutality doesn't just happen in the streets here in Minneapolis. It happens in our schools," Omar said. "Enough is enough."

A group of North High School students spoke against the removal of school resource officers. Their school resource officer, who is also their football coach, is "like a father," they said.

"With SROs being gone, nobody's going to feel safe at school," one of the students said. Board member KerryJo Felder offered an amendment during Tuesday's meeting to give North and Henry high schools the option to keep their officers. It failed.

Ellison noted that police response time will be slower without school resource officers if an incident occurs. But, she said, this is a matter of values.

Ryan Faircloth · 612-673-4234

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

Fourth day of protest in Madison shuts down state highway

ARTICLE CCXXIII. FOURTH DAY OF PROTEST IN MADISON SHUTS DOWN STATE HIGHWAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 829 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: Protesters shut down a six-lane state highway that feeds into downtown Madison for a second day on Tuesday, as Gov. Tony Evers called for the Legislature to pass a law to reduce the use of police force and urged a united battle against racism.

Body

By SCOTT BAUER

MADISON, Wis. (AP) - Protesters shut down a six-lane state highway that feeds into downtown Madison for a second day on Tuesday, as Gov. Tony Evers called for the Legislature to pass a law to reduce the use of police force and urged a united battle against racism.

The latest actions came after a third night of violence gripped downtown Madison, with protesters spraying graffiti on the state Capitol and nearby buildings, dumping paint on the beloved "Forward" statue and breaking into boarded up businesses. Police in riot gear used tear gas to disperse the crowd.

Madison, the liberal state capital with one of the deepest racial divides in the nation, has been a flashpoint for protests over the killing of George Floyd, a black man who died after a white Minneapolis policeman pressed his knee into his neck for minutes, even after he stopped moving and pleading for air.

Evers, in a video message released Tuesday afternoon, urged calm and unity. The Democrat condemned "all those who encourage violence against black lives" and urged systematic change to fight racism. He did not speak directly to Republican criticism that he hasn't done enough to quell the violence.

Evers called on the Republican-controlled Legislature to pass a Democratic-sponsored bill that would require law enforcement agencies to minimize the use of force and prioritize preserving life. He also called for local government leaders to join the call for change. The bill died when the Legislature adjourned its regular session earlier this year.

Madison Mayor Satya Rhodes-Conway condemned the vandalism and called for an end. "This is not protest. This is dangerous criminal behavior," the mayor said in a statement Tuesday.

Rhodes-Conway said she welcomes protests, but does not want legitimate protests "to continue to provide cover for this violent, unacceptable behavior."

Fourth day of protest in Madison shuts down state highway

Meanwhile, workers boarded up storefronts near the state Capitol and University of Wisconsin campus that have borne the brunt of the vandalism since Saturday night, to ward off any more destruction.

"I have seen hope in those who've joined this cause in support, who've lent a hand to a neighbor, who've showed up with brooms and dustbins in hand to help clean up our neighborhoods," Evers said. "We must use this dark moment to begin to be an example for the rest of the nation. ... Please be kind to each other, support each other, and keep each other safe tonight and in the days ahead."

Hundreds of protesters again blocked traffic on John Nolen Drive, a state highway that feeds into downtown Madison. Traffic was stopped early evening on Monday in a peaceful protest and marchers held up traffic there for about two hours on Tuesday before forming a caravan through the city, including to the home of the Dane County sheriff in a residential neighborhood where they left flowers and signs saying "Black Lives Matter."

In Milwaukee, police fired several tear gas canisters and rubber bullets at protesters Tuesday night, the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel reported. Police said protesters were ordered to disperse after throwing rocks, glass and "Molotov Cocktails" at officers. An armed suspect in the crowd also was taken into custody, said Sgt. Sheronda Grant, a Milwaukee police spokeswoman.

Things turned violent in Madison late Monday night into Tuesday morning. Police said around 1 a.m. that someone fired a handgun in the air, two men were beaten with a crowbar and others attempted to light Molotov cocktails. Madison Police Chief Vic Wahl said in his blog that multiple police officers were struck with rocks and projectiles.

Madison police said 15 people were arrested Monday night, bringing the number of arrests since Saturday to at least 32.

The Capitol has increasingly become the target. A four-letter expletive was painted in large red letters on the building Monday night.

Graffiti painted on the state veterans museum, the "Forward" statue and nearby sidewalks and boarded-up storefronts said: "We had enough," "Where is our museum?" and "Do you hear us?"

Criticism from Republican state lawmakers over Madison's handling of the protests escalated Tuesday.

Several lawmakers retweeted photos of the vandalized "Forward" statue. It was first installed 125 years ago, but replaced with a bronze replica in 1998. It is placed prominently outside the Capitol, facing the University of Wisconsin campus and the street lined with bars, restaurants and small businesses that have been the target of much of the vandalism since Saturday.

Republican Assembly Majority Leader Jim Steineke directed a Twitter message bearing an image of the statue to Evers and Rhodes-Conway, both Democrats.

"When does it end?" Steineke tweeted. "When are you going to put a stop to this? Without a massive police presence (with actual arrests), this is your 'new normal'."

Rhodes-Conway has condemned the property damage and violence, but also said that frustration should instead be directed at how black people are treated.

Fourth day of protest in Madison shuts down state highway

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Former Wild star Jason Zucker calls out racism, wishes more NHL players would do the same

ARTICLE CCXXIV. FORMER WILD STAR JASON ZUCKER CALLS OUT RACISM, WISHES MORE NHL PLAYERS WOULD DO THE SAME

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 677 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: Jason Zucker forced himself to watch the video of George Floyd dying under the knee of a Minneapolis police officer last week. He felt it was important to see it with his own eyes. "I was disgusted," said Zucker, a popular, former Wild forward who was traded to the Pittsburgh Penguins in February. "I couldn't [...]"

Body

Jason Zucker forced himself to watch the video of George Floyd dying under the knee of a Minneapolis police officer last week. He felt it was important to see it with his own eyes.

"I was disgusted," said Zucker, a popular, former Wild forward who was traded to the Pittsburgh Penguins in February. "I couldn't believe what I was watching."

Which he admits is part of the problem. The fact that he couldn't fathom the police brutality that took Floyd's life, he said, speaks to his privilege.

"I'm not naive to the fact that I'm a white male who doesn't have to face these issues," Zucker said. "I realize that. I'll never be able to fully understand what the black community has to go through. But I want to be a part of the change by drawing awareness to it and being at the forefront of these conversations moving forward."

He took a step in the right direction Monday night, voicing his support for the black community in a strong statement he posted on his personal Twitter account.

While various athletes have released vanilla statements in the past week, Zucker took a firm stance. He called out racism and inequality, committed to donating to minority businesses impacted by the protests, and used the words "Black Lives Matter" in closing.

"I don't want to tip-toe around things," Zucker said. "It's pretty easy to see right through people who are doing that."

He educated himself over the past week before making his statement. He also confronted the fact that he wasn't vocal in his support former Wild teammate J.T. Brown, who is black, and has been very vocal about bringing awareness to the issues of police brutality.

Former Wild star Jason Zucker calls out racism, wishes more NHL players would do the same

"Just being supportive silently isn't enough," Zucker said. "You have to be able to truly stand behind a guy like J.T. Brown and help in any way possible. I wish I would've done more to help him when he was my teammate. We were texting about that the other day when I made my statement. Now it's about making sure that change happens."

That will require more players - white players, to be specific - using their platform to make a difference.

While this is as loud as the NHL has ever been in regards to racism - a movement started by San Jose Sharks winger Evander Kane after he appeared on ESPN's First Take last week and called out star Sidney Crosby by name - it's still not enough as far as Zucker is concerned.

"I wish more people would speak up," Zucker said. "I think some guys are afraid to say the wrong thing."

That silence could also stem from the culture around a sport that has long discouraged anybody from bringing attention to themselves. It's about the team more than anything else; anybody who feels differently is almost instantly criticized.

"I hope this starts a dialogue," Zucker said. "These conversations are important, whether it's a small group of guys or the entire team. I think they should happen more. We have a platform and we have to use that for good."

Aside from educating his kids about racism and inequality, Zucker also vowed to continue to educate himself. He talked to his agent Eustace King, who is black, for 45 minutes on the phone this week and asked him about his experiences.

Wild star Matt Dumba teams up with fellow hockey players to eradicate racism From career backup to starter, Wild's Alex Stalock is Masterton Trophy nominee Wild prospect Gerry Mayhew named AHL's most valuable player Gov. Tim Walz on pro sports in Minnesota: "I think there's a potential there" Here's the case for St. Paul as an NHL playoffs 'hub city'

"It was eye-opening," Zucker said. "I've been working with him for a few years now, and known him since I was a kid, and that was the first conversation I've had with him about that. That's my fault. It's not his job to bring that up. I need to ask those questions and learn and educate myself."

Which is something he vows to do moving forward.

"I should've been better before in educating myself earlier," Zucker said. "I'm very honest with myself and everyone else when I say I wasn't good enough and I didn't do enough before and I need to do a lot more now."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXXV. TORCHED MINNEAPOLIS BAR UNDER FIRE FOR FACEBOOK POST

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: VARIETY; Pg. 1ELength: 418 wordsByline: CHRIS RIEMENSCHNEIDER; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

A now-deleted Facebook post from the Hexagon Bar has sparked a different kind of fire after it blamed "arsonists connected with Black Lives Matter" for destroying the place during rioting last Friday in south Minneapolis.

The message - which noted plans to rebuild - was posted Monday morning on the Seward neighborhood bar's Facebook page but taken down within a half-hour: "Due to Arsonist's [sic] connected with 'Black Lives Matter' the Hexagon will be closed until further notice. Plans for rebuilding are in progress. We would Like to 'Thank our Community' for all their support and condolences for such an outstandingly shocking, lawless activities that seek to destroy our neighborhood & Community."

Screenshots of the post were captured, however, and circulated on social media. "You canceled yourself faster than the fire that burned you down," wrote music scenester Jason Koffman.

A subsequent post read, "Any previous postings regarding the disaster was not authorized. We apologize for any miss communications [sic]." The Facebook page itself was later deleted.

Responding hours later to a request for comment, Billy Hupp Jr. - son of owner Bill Hupp - reiterated the claim that the post was made "without the knowledge of management." He did not say who was behind those words, but "they do not reflect the beliefs of ownership or the Hexagon Bar.

"These posts made me sick to my stomach because the Hexagon Bar has been an intricate part of the Southside community for over 85 years, and I personally serve its patrons that come from all races, religions and walks of life."

A dive-y watering hole with gritty bathrooms and ultra-cheap beer that dated back to 1934, "The Hex" sits on the corner of 26th Street and 27th Avenue S., six blocks north of the heart of the rioting that ravaged E. Lake Street. It was adopted by punk and indie-rock bands in the 2000s, but the relationship between the bar's management (and its regulars) and the younger music community was often tenuous.

Torched Minneapolis bar under fire for Facebook post

"I once had the bouncer open the door with my face and throw me out in to the street while my band was on stage because he was too method out and drunk to do his job," musician Liam Watkins wrote in one of many responses to the bar's initial post.

Hupp said his dad believes he caught the arson on a security cam: "A heavysset, white male threw something onto the roof of the bar just before the fire started. ... It is clear to us that the arson was not made by Black Lives Matter or anyone associated with the BLM movement."

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCXXVI. TRUMP OFFERS 'DOMINATION' OF DC PROTESTS AS MODEL FOR STATES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1256 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Claiming he is backed by a "silent majority," President Donald Trump turned the nation's capital into a model for the overwhelming force he believes critical to stop sometimes-violent protests that have spread across the country in a time of racial unrest. His tactics were decried Tuesday by some fellow Republicans as well as his presumptive Democratic opponent.Body

By ZEKE MILLER, JONATHAN LEMIRE and MICHAEL BALSAMO

WASHINGTON (AP) - Claiming he is backed by a "silent majority," President Donald Trump turned the nation's capital into a model for the overwhelming force he believes critical to stop sometimes-violent protests that have spread across the country in a time of racial unrest. His tactics were decried Tuesday by some fellow Republicans as well as his presumptive Democratic opponent.

The violent dispersal of peaceful protests near the White House the night before was a potent symbol of Trump's policing tactics and a physical manifestation of the rhetorical culture war he has stoked since before he was elected. Moments after historic Lafayette Park was cleared, Trump walked across to pose with a Bible in front of a church damaged by fire during protests the previous evening.

"D.C. had no problems last night. Many arrests. Great job done by all. Overwhelming force. Domination," Trump tweeted Tuesday, after a night in which heavily armed military forces and federal officers swarmed the city. Trump added: "(thank you President Trump!)."

The president wanted to make the aggressive action in the nation's capital - where he wields disproportionate powers - an example for the rest of the country, a senior White House official said Tuesday, speaking on condition of anonymity because the official was not authorized to discuss internal thinking. Trump hoped his personal walk to the church, after federal officials dispersed protesters, would send a message about how dominant force could restore law and order.

The president has threatened that if states do not take tough enough action, he will deploy active duty military across the country to quell unrest in the wake of the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis.

Trump offers 'domination' of DC protests as model for states

"SILENT MAJORITY!" Trump tweeted Tuesday, embracing a phrase popularized by President Richard Nixon decades ago, in claiming broad support for his actions. Trump also emphasized the political importance of the moment to his supporters on Twitter and declared that "My Admin has done more for the Black Community than any President since Abraham Lincoln."

The District of Columbia's federal status gives the president outsized authority to act, allowing him to direct the deployment of the National Guard. He authorized Attorney General William Barr to oversee a surge in the deployment of federal law enforcement officers, including the FBI's Hostage Rescue Team and agents from the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Defense Secretary Mark Esper and Gen. Mark Milley, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, sought to distance themselves from Monday night's events after former military officials criticized their appearance with the president. Senior defense officials told reporters the two were not aware that the Park Police and law enforcement had made a decision to clear the square or that Trump intended to visit the church. They had been in Washington to coordinate with federal law enforcement officials but were diverted to the White House to brief Trump on military preparations, the officials said.

Former Vice President Joe Biden, the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee, said of Trump posing for photos holding up a Bible: "I just wish he opened it once in a while."

And D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser said of the routing of the protesters, "At no time do we think it was appropriate that people who had not violated the curfew or anything else received that treatment."

Democrats weren't the only ones saying Trump had gone too far.

"There is no right to riot, no right to destroy others' property, and no right to throw rocks at police," said Nebraska Republican Sen. Ben Sasse. "But there is a fundamental - a constitutional - right to protest, and I'm against clearing out a peaceful protest for a photo op that treats the Word of God as a political prop."

It was Barr who gave the order Monday afternoon for law enforcement to clear out the protest before Trump's walk to the church and ahead of Washington's 7 p.m. curfew. Officials said the decision to clear the park was made earlier in the day in response to violence the night before.

Trump also ordered military aircraft to fly above Washington on Monday night as a "show of force," according to two Defense Department officials. They said the U.S. military and National Guard were operating under the mission name "Operation Themis." In Greek mythology, Themis is a titaness of divine law and order, whose symbols are the scales of justice.

Execution of the order to clear the park created striking split-screen images as officers deployed pepper spray, flash bangs and mounted units to break up the peaceful protest even as Trump was in the Rose Garden saying he supported the rights of peaceful protesters. Chemical remnants still hung in the air as he walked to the church.

Trump reacted to the clearing of the protesters with enthusiasm, pumping his fist at officers in the park. He'd been furious about weekend images juxtaposing the fires in the area with the darkened White House in the background, according to current and former campaign and administration officials not authorized to speak publicly about private conversations.

Trump offers 'domination' of DC protests as model for states

Trump was also angry about the news coverage revealing that he had been rushed to the White House bunker during weekend protests, believing the park fires in what amounts to his extended front yard made him appear weak.

But some White House and Justice Department officials privately acknowledged that Monday's events didn't serve the administration well.

Trump on Tuesday appeared to be backing off his threat to deploy federal troops to quell unrest under the 1807 Insurrection Act. White House officials said Monday night's events indicated that the resources already available to local governments should be able to restore order.

Instead, Trump turned his Twitter fire on New York officials, including Gov. Andrew Cuomo, a frequent political sparring partner.

"New York was lost to the looters, thugs, Radical Left, and all others forms of Lowlife & Scum," Trump tweeted. "The Governor refuses to accept my offer of a dominating National Guard. NYC was ripped to pieces."

The federal government has provided all affected states with a list of National Guard resources available to them, the White House official said. The official added that Trump's message to governors was that if they don't use all the tools in their arsenal they shouldn't expect a sympathetic response to any request for federal dollars to help with cleanup and recovery down.

Trump, meanwhile, toured a Catholic shrine on Tuesday in his second straight religious-themed appearance after he declared himself to be the "president of law and order."

Washington Archbishop Wilton D. Gregory called it "reprehensible that any Catholic facility would allow itself to be so egregiously misused and manipulated in a fashion that violates our religious principles, which call us to defend the rights of all people even those with whom we might disagree."

On Tuesday's drive to the shrine, Trump's motorcade sped past National Guard members deployed around the World War II Memorial. Some onlookers along the route booed, held "black lives matter" signs or made obscene gestures as the convoy rolled past.

Floyd died after a white Minneapolis police officer pinned him down and pressed Floyd's neck with his knee as the man pleaded that he couldn't breathe. Violent demonstrations have raged in scores of American cities, marking a level of unrest unseen for decades.

Lemire reported from New York.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Twins president sees hope for season

ARTICLE CCXXVII. TWINS PRESIDENT SEES HOPE FOR SEASON

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: SPORTS; Pg. 1CLength: 689 wordsByline: LA VELLE E. NEAL III; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: St. Peter believes owners, players will reach a deal.Body

Major League Baseball owners and the MLB Players Association have taken turns proposing ways to start the 2020 season - only for those proposals to be launched into oblivion by the other side like a hanging breaking ball.

Owners claim they will lose hundreds of thousands of dollars each game - one report had it over $600,000 - by playing in stadiums this season without fans, something the union finds hard to believe. The apparent mistrust between the sides has fueled speculation about the possible cancellation of the 2020 season.

Not so fast.

MLB Commissioner Rob Manfred might implement a 50-game schedule - less than one-third of the standard 162-game schedule - in which the players would receive their salaries pro rata. It's not the 114-game schedule the players association proposed Sunday, but it's the pay scale they seek.

Perhaps it is the worst-case scenario. Perhaps the sides can negotiate for a few more games. But it's something to work with, and it is a possible path to playing baseball.

"I can tell you that as of [Tuesday], I am more optimistic about playing this season as I have been over the last couple of weeks," Twins President Dave St. Peter said. "I know there's a lot of media reporting and speculation [otherwise], but I think the reality of it is that the situation is a little closer to resolution than most people believe. I truly believe that.

"I think it is rooted in the reality that owners and players ultimately want to play. I think they want to find a bridge, come together. I know that's the case with the owners and I know that's the case of our players. I can't speak for the other 29 clubs."

The sides have been battling since late March, when they agreed to an altered salary structure as the coronavirus outbreak upended sports leagues worldwide. But the players and owners ended up disagreeing about the agreement. Owners claimed they could renegotiate a deal for a season with no fans allowed in stadiums; the union felt the March agreement was ironclad.

The league floated a 50-50 revenue split, which the union balked at. Last week, owners proposed an 82-game schedule and a sliding pay scale in which the highest-paid players would take a 75% pay cut. The fact that Manfred and other MLB staffers were taking only 35% pay cuts was not lost on players as they balked at that plan. Then the players suggested over the weekend a 114-game season with prorated salaries. That led to the league threatening a 50-game schedule.

"I think there are also some benefits to shorter versus longer that allows us to get out on the diamond and play in a safe manner, and hopefully for over an entire season," St. Peter said. "Getting derailed on the start/stop scenario is the worst-case scenario. You're trying to thread a needle in getting a baseball season in before a second surge of this virus which we believe is a very real possibility."

The health concerns of the players are issues that can be resolved, St. Peter said.

As other sports craft plans to complete their seasons, the return of baseball has been viewed by many as potentially a big step in the nation's emergence from the pandemic. But now the country needs healing in another way.

The Twins participated in Blackout Tuesday, a movement that originated in the music industry but has expanded as a way to mourn the May 25 death of George Floyd while pushing for social justice change and reflecting on ways the black community can move forward.

On Tuesday, the Twins tweeted a picture of a black square and even changed their avatar to a Twins cap with a black background, along with the message "Black Lives Matter."

St. Peter said he feels baseball can be part of the emergence from a tumultuous period in history.

"There's an appetite to make a deal, to come together and recognize that this is an opportunity," St. Peter said.

"Baseball historically has found ways to help our country recover from national emergencies.

"I do believe that is not just a historical fact, but a narrative that matters to players and owners.

"The events of the last week help reinforce how baseball can bring communities together. We have an opportunity here."

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCXXVIII.

DORSEY & WHITNEY ENDING RELATIONSHIP WITH CITY OF MINNEAPOLIS AFTER GEORGE FLOYD DEATH

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 347 words

Byline: Patrick Rehkamp

Body

Minneapolis-based law firm Dorsey & Whitney is ending a roughly 40-year relationship with the city of Minneapolis to provided legal assistance in the prosecution of misdemeanor cases.

Managing Partner Bill Stoeri said he and other attorneys at the firm wanted to take action after watching the video of Minneapolis Police Officer Derek Chauvin pressing his knee on George Floyd's neck, resulting in his death. They decided to axe the pro bono Minneapolis City Attorney's program since its prosecutions disproportionately impacted minorities, Stoeri said.

"We wanted to do more than put out a statement," he said, adding it was his decision to end it. "Our governing board did a unanimous vote of support even though it wasn't their decision to make."

Roughly eight associates worked with the city for three-month stints annually.

The firm has had similar relationships in other markets, but nothing this long-standing, Stoeri said.

Dorsey & Whitney ending relationship with city of Minneapolis after George Floyd death

He added the video of Floyd's death in police custody was painful to watch.

"Speaking just for myself, it was horrifying to to see," he said. "If there's anything good that comes out of this, I hope people are talking and understanding the real need for change."

Stoeri added that the firm's foundation has set up a $50,000 matching grant to organizations working for racial justice. The firm is also working on streamlining services to minority-owned business clients so the firm can handle issues like permit applications and insurance claims more efficiently.

Unrelated, Stoeri said the firm is not expecting anymore staff cuts, after announcing two waves of reductions in recent months due to the economic impact of the coronavirus.

Dorsey, the third-largest firm in the metro area and the largest one headquartered here, ranks 98th on the American Lawyer list, up one spot from 99th in 2019. The firm has more than 230 attorneys in the Twin Cities. Dorsey reported roughly $387 million in companywide annual revenue, according to the report.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCXXIX. TIMBERWOLVES, LYNX JOIN FORCES WITH MINNEAPOLIS FOUNDATION IN PURSUIT OF JUSTICE, HEALING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 523 wordsByline: Jace FrederickHighlight: Timberwolves coach Ryan Saunders and Lynx coach and general manager Cheryl Reeve are taking on civic leadership duties as part of the multi-year partnership the entire organization is entering with The Minneapolis Foundation "to address systemic inequities and translate community anger into actions." The organization said the move, announced Wednesday, is the "first of many [...]"Body

Timberwolves coach Ryan Saunders and Lynx coach and general manager Cheryl Reeve are taking on civic leadership duties as part of the multi-year partnership the entire organization is entering with The Minneapolis Foundation "to address systemic inequities and translate community anger into actions."

The organization said the move, announced Wednesday, is the "first of many steps the organization will take to fight racism and help unite its communities following the murder of George Floyd by law enforcement."

Reeve and Saunders will serve as leaders on one or two advisory committees designed to oversee the disbursement of the Fund for Safe Communities. The second committee will feature diverse youth from Minneapolis.

That fund will "champion the prevention of further violence, address systemic inequities, reform the criminal justice system and heal communities affected by this tragedy."

"Minneapolis is a special place," Saunders said in a statement. "I want all people of color to experience this amazing city without fear. We talk a lot about actions over words; we need to make meaningful change and that starts with partnering with The Minneapolis Foundation. As leaders on this advisory committee, we will work diligently with our youth counterparts to listen to what needs to change, raise awareness, and partner with informed leaders who can help bring meaningful impact to our cities."

The two committees will "work collectively to disburse funds from the Fund for Safe Communities as early as next week."

Minnesota athletes and coaches combine to help the community, and perhaps spark change End of Timberwolves' season brings more uncertainty Food and supplies distribution event Friday to feature

Timberwolves, Lynx join forces with Minneapolis Foundation in pursuit of justice, healing

Kyle Rudolph, Josh Okogie, Ryan Saunders and P.J. Fleck NBA's reported plan to return leaves Timberwolves out of mix, ends their season Gov. Tim Walz on pro sports in Minnesota: "I think there's a potential there"

"This is a moment where we all need to step into some bigger, bolder leadership," Chanda Smith Baker, senior vice president of impact at The Minneapolis Foundation, said in a statement. "We need allies in this work and we are excited the Timberwolves and Lynx have decided to step into this partnership, dig deep into understanding the complexity of the inequities, and to help us drive toward solutions that ensure senseless tragedies rooted in racism never happen again."

The Timberwolves and Lynx organization said it will announce "additional programming and initiatives pertaining to ending systemic racism and the need for community conversations." Players will be part of those initiatives. You can donate to the fund by texting SAFEMPLS to 243725.

"I am proud of the ways in which the Minnesota Lynx have used our voices to stand up for social justice. The senseless murder of George Floyd has strengthened our resolve to bring about change in the inequities that face our black and brown communities," Reeve said in a statement. "This alignment with The Minneapolis Foundation will allow us to directly impact these inequities as well as be active participants in the healing of our communities."

Graphic

Minnesota Timberwolves head coach Ryan Saunders applauds his players in the first half of an NBA basketball game Portland Trail Blazers, Thursday, Jan. 9, 2020, in Minneapolis. (AP Photo/Jim Mone)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXXX. DFL LEADERS WANT POLICE REFORM AT TOP OF SPECIAL SESSION

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3BLength: 520 wordsByline: STEPHEN MONTEMAYOR; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: "We are at a critical point," lawmakers say as Floyd's death revives policing proposals from AG task force.Body

A visibly emotional group of Democratic state lawmakers demanded Tuesday that policing reform be a centerpiece of the special legislative session expected this month.

Speaking on the front lawn of the Hallie Q. Brown Community Center in St. Paul, House Democratic leadership and members from its People of Color and Indigenous Caucus outlined a sweeping package of nearly two dozen policy proposals that they argued now must be heard after last week's death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

The proposals mirror some of the recommendations outlined in a February report produced by a 16-member task force on deadly police encounters led by state Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington and Attorney General Keith Ellison, who has taken over the prosecution of Derek Chauvin, who faces murder charges in Floyd's death.

"We are at a critical point," said state Rep. Ruth Richardson, DFL-Mendota Heights. "What's happening in our cities right now is about ... that legacy of pain, the legacy of murder, the legacy of lynching that continues today. It's 2020: if you're not going to listen to us today, you're never going to listen to us."

Gov. Tim Walz is expected to call lawmakers back to the State Capitol by June 12 for an extension of the state's peacetime emergency, declared in March amid the COVID-19 pandemic. The passage of a major public works bonding bill was left undone in May and was expected to be a focal point of the session. But some DFL House and Senate leaders have since suggested that failure to advance policing reform would stall any other work.

State Rep. Carlos Mariani, a St. Paul Democrat who chairs the House's public safety committee, said Tuesday that the governor told him he expected policing reform to be part of any upcoming special session.

DFL leaders want police reform at top of special session

"Quite frankly it's a false proposition at this point in time to say that the Minnesota Legislature would convene and not address this issue," Mariani said. "There are no other issues more important than the public safety and well-being of Minnesotans and our communities. So yes, this rises to ... the highest level of responsibility for us in the coming session."

DFL lawmakers are pushing for changes in the way officer-involved deaths are investigated. The lawmakers also want to give the state Bureau of Criminal Apprehension more leeway to investigate police killings. Other proposals include citizen oversight councils for law enforcement, more oversight of the Peace Officer Standards and Training (POST) board's officer licensure and training, lifting a state ban on local-residence requirements for police officers and ordering the POST board to develop a model policy on use of force in responding to peaceful protests.

"We're talking about our lives; we're talking about our existence," said state Rep. Hodan Hassan, a Democrat from south Minneapolis, who later added: "Every single one of us should be on the right side of this fight. We should all be outraged, we should all be angry. We should demand the four officers to be behind bars. We should fight for justice. No justice, no peace."

Stephen Montemayor · 651-925-5048

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

Floyd's family speaks out, calls for justice

ARTICLE CCXXXI. FLOYD'S FAMILY SPEAKS OUT, CALLS FOR JUSTICE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 12ALength: 886 wordsByline: PAM LOUWAGIE; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

On the sprawling lawn of the Minnesota Capitol, thousands of teenagers and young adults sat shoulder to shoulder to protest racism in policing, sparked by the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis officers.

Near the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office, medical students sat in quiet protest of an autopsy report on Floyd that they allege was reckless.

And nearby, inside Minneapolis City Hall, Floyd's 6-year-old daughter, Gianna, stood near her mother in a plea for justice.

Young people took the lead in rallies and protests around the Twin Cities on Tuesday, eight days after bystander video showed a handcuffed Floyd pleading for breath before falling unconscious as a Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck. Floyd was later pronounced dead.

In a case that has sparked international outrage and widespread protests across the country, Minnesota leaders were hoping Tuesday evening for a third straight night of relative calm after bouts of arson and looting destroyed businesses and public buildings last week. More than 7,000 National Guard members had been brought in to help quell the unrest days earlier.

Floyd's family has urged that protests over the 46-year-old man's death be peaceful.

Roxie Washington, the mother of Floyd's young daughter, stood inside City Hall on Tuesday and tearfully described how Floyd was more than his last moments; he was a loving and devoted father who continued to provide for their family.

"He loved her; he loved her so much," she said.

"Gianna does not have a father. He will never see her grow up, graduate. He will never walk her down the aisle. If there's a problem she's having, if she needs her dad, she does not have that anymore.

Floyd's family speaks out, calls for justice

"I'm here for my baby and I'm here for George because I want justice for him," she said, flanked by attorneys and retired NBA player Stephen Jackson, who was Floyd's childhood friend. "I want justice for him because he was good. No matter what anybody thinks, he was good. And this is the proof that he was a good man."

Floyd's family had hired a medical team to conduct an autopsy, which found he died of asphyxia. Their findings differed from an autopsy from the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office, characterized in a criminal complaint as not showing "physical findings that support a diagnosis of traumatic asphyxia or strangulation" and noting that Floyd had underlying health conditions including coronary artery disease and hypertensive heart disease.

"The combined effects of Mr. Floyd being restrained by the police, his underlying health conditions and any potential intoxicants in his system likely contributed to his death," the complaint said.

Later, an updated medical examiner report said Floyd died as a result of "cardiopulmonary arrest complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint, and neck compression."

About 150 University of Minnesota medical students protesting Tuesday outside the Medical Examiner's Office said it was a lie to say pre-existing health conditions and drug toxicity played a role.

"Everyone saw the video; it's clear as day," said Ifeolu Akinola, an M.D./Ph.D. student. "To say that his death is attributed to these pre-existing conditions and not so much as the strangulation by the officer in custody is just a blatant lie."

"We all saw the tape," said Dominique Earland, also an M.D./Ph.D. student. Whether the medical examiner's findings were mischaracterized on its own report or by lawyers writing the complaint, he said, "It's important that we understand as a medical community our voices have power."

At a makeshift memorial outside Cup Foods, where Floyd was detained, the smell of barbecue and music filled the air and families with children lined up for free hot dogs, kebabs and drinks in an uplifting atmosphere.

Crowds took photos of a new mural, and people listened to speakers nearby as others danced near messages written on the street and thousands of bouquets placed at the intersection.

On the Capitol lawn in St. Paul, students held moments of silence for Floyd amid impassioned speeches, music and chanting.

Speakers demanded criminal charges against the four officers who detained Floyd. So far, only officer Derek Chauvin, whose knee was on Floyd's neck for nearly 9 minutes, has been arrested. He was charged with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

Speakers also called for systemic changes such as fewer government dollars spent on law enforcement and more on community needs and services.

"I am angry and I am heartbroken," said volunteer Priya Manda, 18, of Stillwater. "There is such injustice. Something needs to be done."

Caden Frahm, of St. Paul, occasionally raised his fist with the crowd as he stood with his friends listening to speakers.

Floyd's family speaks out, calls for justice

"I have experienced racism," said Frahm, 17. "It's a terrible feeling. I am here for everyone who has fallen to police and to white supremacy."

Preston Hamlette, a 27-year-old professional rugby player in Australia visiting a friend in the Twin Cities, said he was shocked by Floyd's murder. But the size and passion of the peaceful crowd stretching across the lawn gave him hope, he said.

"If this doesn't get the people in charge's attention," he said, "I don't know what will."

Staff writers Shannon Prather, Kim Hyatt and Matt McKinney contributed to this report.

Pam Louwagie · 612-673-4482

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

Three more charged in connection with riots

ARTICLE CCXXXII. THREE MORE CHARGED IN CONNECTION WITH RIOTS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 5BLength: 631 wordsByline: ANDY MANNIX; CHAO XIONG; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Two Twin Cities men were charged Tuesday in a federal complaint in the firebombing of the Dakota County courthouse, and a third man was charged in Hennepin County with attempted murder for allegedly shooting at police officers during the protests and rioting that followed the May 25 death of George Floyd while in police custody.

According to charges unsealed Tuesday in U.S. District Court in St. Paul, two Minnesota men threw Molotov cocktails into Dakota County courthouse buildings early Friday. The accused men are: Fornandous Cortez Henderson, 32, of Savage, and Garrett Patrick Ziegler, 24, of Long Lake. Each was charged with destruction of property used in interstate commerce and possession of Molotov cocktails. Both men appeared before U.S. Magistrate Judge Becky Thorson in St. Paul on Tuesday for an initial appearance.

Apple Valley police responded to reports of fire early Friday and found broken windows, smoke and flames pouring out from the part of the courthouse where the judges' chambers and clerks' offices are located. Inside they found broken glass jars and liquor bottles, pushpins, intact glass jars containing ignitable liquid and a charred red bandanna, according to the federal criminal complaint.

Officers found a set of car keys in the grass near the building that belonged to a Ford Fiesta registered to Ziegler, which had been parked in a nearby parking lot. A search of the car uncovered materials that could be used to make fire bombs, according to the charges.

After dousing the fire, authorities found Ziegler and Henderson on a road nearby and arrested them. The two suspects gave false statements to the officers, according to the charges.

Jaleel K. Stallings, 27, of St. Paul was charged Tuesday in Hennepin County District Court with two counts each of attempted second-degree murder, first-degree assault and second-degree assault for allegedly firing a gun at police early Saturday. Stallings was also charged with one count each of second-degree riot and dangerous weapons. Court records show he was arrested Sunday and spoke briefly with police before asking for a lawyer.

Three more charged in connection with riots

The charges say the shooting took place near Lake Street and 14th Avenue S. after officers had fired a "less lethal" round - which usually means rubber bullets - at Stallings. No officers were hit in the incident, which occurred about 4 a.m.

The arrest of Floyd, who is black, was captured on video that went viral on the internet, setting off protests in dozens of U.S. cities and around the world. All four officers at the scene of the arrest were fired and one, Derek Chauvin, who is white, was charged last week with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

According to the complaint, the shooting at officers took place as Minneapolis police were working to enforce a curfew ordered by Gov. Tim Walz. Officers in SWAT vests and helmets were near Lake Street and 14th Avenue S. around 4 a.m., when they encountered a group of people in a parking lot.

Several people fled, but Stallings allegedly walked toward police from behind a pickup truck. Several SWAT officers were in an unmarked white van flanked by two marked squads. Stallings ran toward the truck and crouched, the charges said.

An officer reported that he had fired a 40-mm "less lethal" round at Stallings, concerned that he was going to throw debris or rocks at police.

It's unclear if Stallings was struck.

"Almost immediately, Officer A saw three to four gunshot muzzle flashes from Stallings' chest toward law enforcement," the complaint said. "One round sparked and ricocheted in front of officers."

The shooting was captured on the officers' body camera footage. An AK-47 style Mini Draco Style pistol was found nearby, according to the charges.

Chao Xiong · 612-270-4708

Andy Mannix · 612-673-4036

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

George Floyd's young daughter, her mother visit Minneapolis: 'He was good'

ARTICLE CCXXXIII. GEORGE FLOYD'S YOUNG DAUGHTER, HER MOTHER VISIT MINNEAPOLIS: 'HE WAS GOOD'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 266 words

Byline: The Associated Press

Highlight: The mother of George Floyd's 6-year-old daughter, Gianna, said Tuesday that she wanted the world to know that her little girl lost a good father who would never get to see his daughter grow up. "I want everybody to know that this is what those officers took. At the end of the day, they get [...]"

Body

The mother of George Floyd's 6-year-old daughter, Gianna, said Tuesday that she wanted the world to know that her little girl lost a good father who would never get to see his daughter grow up.

"I want everybody to know that this is what those officers took. At the end of the day, they get to go home and be with their families," Roxie Washington said during a Minneapolis City Hall news conference with her young daughter at her side. "I'm here for my baby and I'm here for George because I want justice for him. I want justice for him because he was good. No matter what anybody thinks, he was good."

Floyd died on Memorial Day after a white Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into the black man's neck for several minutes even after he stopped moving and pleading for air.

Accompanying Washington was former NBA player Stephen Jackson, who was a friend of Floyd's in their native Houston.

Jackson and Floyd called each other "twin" because of their resemblance. Both were star high school athletes in the Houston area in the 1990s.

Floyd was also the father of a 22-year-old daughter from a previous relationship.

A crowdfunding campaign has been set up for Gianna and, as of Tuesday night, had collected $190,431 towards its $250,000 goal.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

George Floyd's young daughter, her mother visit Minneapolis: 'He was good'

Graphic

Roxie Washington speaks and stands behind Gianna Floyd, the daughter of George Floyd, at a news conference Tuesday in Minneapolis. (AP Photo/Julio Cortez)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Thousands gather for peaceful protests across Twin Cities Tuesday

ARTICLE CCXXXIV.

THOUSANDS GATHER FOR PEACEFUL PROTESTS ACROSS TWIN CITIES TUESDAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 756 words

Byline: Nick Ferraro

Highlight: Faith leaders from several congregations marched in silence Tuesday in St. Paul as a way to reflect the "beloved community" and the social justice action of the civil rights era in the United States.

Body

Faith leaders from several congregations marched in silence Tuesday in St. Paul as a way to reflect the "beloved community" and the social justice action of the civil rights era in the United States.

A corresponding march was also held in South Minneapolis, along 38th Street to Chicago Avenue, where George Floyd died May 25 after being pinned facedown by three Minneapolis police officers for nearly nine minutes, despite his pleas to stop and that he couldn't breathe.

Led by local black clergy, marchers in St. Paul met at Gordon Parks High School at Griggs Street and walked in the middle of a temporarily closed University Avenue. It ended a few blocks away at the boarded-up Super Target, which became the epicenter of protesting, rioting and looting last week in St. Paul following Floyd's death.

"We know we are all hurting, and we all want justice," said Stacey L. Smith, pastor and presiding elder of St. James African Methodist Episcopal Church - a 130-year-old historically black church in St. Paul's Old Rondo neighborhood. "And that's what today is about. We pray that it is healing that will begin today. We're going to decree and declare today."

St. Paul Police Chief Todd Axtell and St. Paul Fire Chief Butch Inks walked alongside clergy members during the march, which was one of several peaceful protests held throughout the Twin Cities on Tuesday.

At the state Capitol, a crowd estimated at up to 3,000 people gathered on the front lawn and steps for a sit-in organized by a dozen high school students from around the metro area.

Also Tuesday afternoon, several hundred protesters - some of whom migrated over from the Capitol - held a "speak-out" on Kellogg Boulevard in front of St. Paul City Hall and the Ramsey County Courthouse.

Speakers included civil rights attorney Nekima Levy-Armstrong and relatives of Marcus Golden, who was killed in an encounter with St. Paul police in 2015, and Brian Quinones, who was killed by Richfield police following a police chase in 2019.

Thousands gather for peaceful protests across Twin Cities Tuesday

Golden's aunt, Monique Cullars-Doty, said he would have turned 30 years old on Tuesday. She read the names of individuals killed in encounters with St. Paul police. Protesters yelled the names back.

Cullars-Doty said she doesn't want to see St. Paul police officers taking a knee for a "photo-op," referring to a picture the department shared on its Facebook page Monday of officers on one knee during a peaceful protest in front of the Minnesota Governor's Residence.

On University Avenue, Axtell said now is a "pivotal moment for policing in America."

"We have to start connecting at much higher levels with our community," he said. "We have a strong history in the St. Paul Police Department of doing that and this is an opportunity to continue to do that - build more relationships and really show the community that our eyes are open, our ears are open and most importantly our hearts are open to brighter and better days."

The walk passed several former businesses that are now rubble from Thursday night's arson fires.

A COLLECTIVE STATEMENT

Outside the Target store, the Rev. James Thomas of Mount Olivet Baptist Church in the Old Rondo neighborhood told those gathered that the silent march was "our link to the historical lynching of African-American men. But this time, instead of a rope and a tree, we witnessed a police officer use his knee while a black man laid in the gutter."

As a collective body, he said, the clergy has "publicly held our peace."

"But we have something to say," he said. "Our silent march is our collective statement that we recognize the pain and suffering in our cities. Our silent march is our weakness that for several days our best cells became our worst cells. Our silent march is a protest against the violence, the looting and aggressive policing. In other words, all violence must end."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest The silent march is a "trumpet call that justice must roll down like waters, and righteousness like a mighty steam," he continued. "Do not be deceived - our silence is not that of the meek and the weak. Our march was held in silence to demonstrate that we are determined that change must happen and that justice must be done."

Frederick Melo contributed to this report.

Graphic

Clergy members from around the region are joined by hundreds as they march past the ruins of a burned business along University Ave. W. in a "Silent Clergy March" from Gordon Parks High School to the Midway Target in St. Paul on Tuesday, June 2, 2020. The march was in response to the death of George

Thousands gather for peaceful protests across Twin Cities Tuesday

Floyd while in the custody of Minneapolis police officers and the subsequent civil unrest. (John Autey / Pioneer Press)

Thousands of people gather at the state Capitol in St. Paul during a rally on Tuesday, June 2, 2020 to protest the death of George Floyd, who died after being restrained by Minneapolis police officers on May 25. (Nick Ferraro / Pioneer Press)

Army National Guard soldiers hand out bottled water during a protest on the state Capitol grounds in St. Paul on Tuesday, June 2, 2020, following the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody on May 25. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

'No one to call for help' - Twin Cities neighbors band together to stand guard

ARTICLE CCXXXV. 'NO ONE TO CALL FOR HELP' - TWIN CITIES NEIGHBORS BAND TOGETHER TO STAND GUARD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 524 words

Byline: Kathleen Hennessey, Tim Sullivan

Highlight: A week of civil unrest has led some Twin Cities residents near the epicenters of the violence to take steps to protect their homes and neighborhoods. They've stocked up on fire extinguishers and buckets, and formed scores of loose neighborhood watch groups - aided by a cluster of apps and social media - to share [...]

Body

A week of civil unrest has led some Twin Cities residents near the epicenters of the violence to take steps to protect their homes and neighborhoods. They've stocked up on fire extinguishers and buckets, and formed scores of loose neighborhood watch groups - aided by a cluster of apps and social media - to share what they view as suspicious activity.

Preparing for nightfall in Minneapolis has meant a new routine for many: stashing garbage cans to keep them from being tossed or set on fire, turning on lights and opening blinds. In some neighborhoods near large demonstrations, witnesses say it also includes residents armed with baseball bats, crowbars and the occasional pistol barricading their streets to keep violent protesters away.

By Tuesday, one GroupMe neighborhood watch group had swelled to 479 members, organized into seven smaller regions. Members, identified only by their first names and cross streets, posted a steady stream of descriptions of suspicious vehicles, loud popping sounds, worries about outsiders and objects that might be filled with accelerants used to set fires.

"I would guess those are lawn bags," one poster said.

Residents have reason to be on alert. Arson and vandalism have devastated a large stretch of the vital Lake Street corridor, and have spread beyond to pockets of neighboring St. Paul and some suburbs. State law enforcement authorities have said they've found caches of flammable liquids all over the metropolitan area, as well as stolen vehicles without license plates that they believe have been used to move the material.

In the worst-hit neighborhoods, where store after store was sometimes burned to the ground and looting was brazen, groups of neighbors sometimes set up makeshift barricades at their street corners, standing behind them for hours with baseball bats and metal rods.

'No one to call for help' - Twin Cities neighbors band together to stand guard

But most of the tactics are far less confrontational.

Michael Grunke, a 35-year-old who lives near where Floyd died at Chicago Avenue South and East 38th Street, said he and other tenants in his building gathered hoses and buckets for water. The building manager bought up fire extinguishers before they sold out at some local hardware stores. The group stayed up all night, standing watch, he said - his way to show support for the peaceful protests.

"This was a good thing I could do to help the community and make sure things weren't getting destroyed and tarnishing the memory of George Floyd," Grunke said.

Joy Miciano, 47, lives with her husband and their two teenage children in the Uptown area, where stores have been damaged. She said she and her husband stayed up keeping watch Friday because they felt no police or firefighters would respond.

"That's what was worrisome to us - if this was coming our way, there was no one to call for help," she said.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Obediah, a member of a neighborhood watch that started after the death of George Floyd in police custody sparked unrest, looks out from the roof of his home with binoculars, Tuesday June 2, 2020, in Minneapolis, Minn. A week of civil unrest has led some Minneapolis residents near the epicenter of the violence to take steps to protect their homes and neighborhoods. (AP Photo/Bebeto Matthews)

Michael Grunke looks out from his home to the streets around his neighborhood, where he has joined neighbors to form a watch group, after the death of George Floyd while in custody of police sparked unrest, Tuesday June 2, 2020, in Minneapolis, Minn. A week of civil unrest has led some Minneapolis residents near the epicenter of the violence to take steps to protect their homes and neighborhoods. (AP Photo/Bebeto Matthews)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Minneapolis cops, State Patrol targeted journalists, protesters with violence, lawsuits say

ARTICLE CCXXXVI. MINNEAPOLIS COPS, STATE PATROL TARGETED JOURNALISTS, PROTESTERS WITH VIOLENCE, LAWSUITS SAY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1288 words

Byline: Josh Verges, Emma Harville

Highlight: Two separate lawsuits seeking class-action status allege law enforcement officers targeted journalists and used unnecessary force against protesters during demonstrations in Minneapolis over the May 25 death of George Floyd in police custody. The American Civil Liberties Union and freelance reporter Jared Goyette filed a lawsuit Tuesday night in U.S. District Court in Minnesota alleging [...]

Body

Two separate lawsuits seeking class-action status allege law enforcement officers targeted journalists and used unnecessary force against protesters during demonstrations in Minneapolis over the May 25 death of George Floyd in police custody.

The American Civil Liberties Union and freelance reporter Jared Goyette filed a lawsuit Tuesday night in U.S. District Court in Minnesota alleging First Amendment violations by the city of Minneapolis, city police leaders and the heads of the State Patrol and Minnesota Department of Public Safety.

The complaint alleges officers specifically targeted journalists with violence and arrest and used excessive force in retaliation for their reporting.

"Over the past week, the Minneapolis Police and the Minnesota State Patrol have tear-gassed, pepper-sprayed, shot in the face with rubber bullets, arrested without cause, and threatened journalists at gunpoint, all after these journalists identified themselves and were otherwise clearly engaged in their reporting duties," the complaint reads.

"These are not isolated incidents. The past week has been marked by an extraordinary escalation of unlawful force deliberately targeting reporters."

Goyette, a freelance reporter who covered the protests for the Washington Post, alleges a Minneapolis police officer drew his gun on him. Separately, he says, a police officer on May 27 shot him in the face with a less-lethal ballistic while he was standing alone and carrying a notepad, camera and monopod.

Goyette was shot, he said, while trying to document what had happened to a man who was more seriously hurt.

Minneapolis cops, State Patrol targeted journalists, protesters with violence, lawsuits say

When I was hit by a police projectile, an incident that is now part of an @ACLUMN class-action lawsuit against the MPD, I was trying to document what was happening to this man, and the efforts of people like to keep him alive. Never got a chance to finish. pic.twitter.com/Bbh71X4VC5

- Jared Goyette (@JaredGoyette)

Goyette said in an interview Wednesday that he hopes the lawsuit will bring to light why law enforcement officers have threatened and harmed journalists.

"I am hoping that with this case, we can understand more ... about what went into people's decisions and ultimately hold them accountable for those decisions as needed," he said. "That's very much in the spirit of what I try to do as a journalist. It turns out that when you have a lawsuit, you cannot only interview people, but interview them on the stand and make them swear under oath."

Goyette said he was reluctant to sue but the ACLU told him they were taking action on behalf of protesters, as well.

"Hopefully, the lawsuit may make it safer for journalists to do their jobs," he said. "But other people are also being impacted, and this is part of an overall process to seek answers."

BLINDED, PEPPER-SPRAYED, ARRESTED

The complaint alleges numerous other incidents in which officers arrested or used force against journalists.

It alleges that on May 29:

CNN reporter Omar Jimenez and his news crew were arrested during a live broadcast. An Associated Press photojournalist John Minchillo was shot with a less-lethal projectile. A police officer sprayed USA Today reporter Tyler Davis in the face after he identified himself as a member of the media.

On May 30:

Freelance journalist Linda Tirado was blinded in one eye when police or troopers shot her in the face with a less-lethal projectile. A police officer threw Vice journalist Michael Adams to the ground. Adams said he was a reporter and showed his credential, then a second officer hit him in the face with pepper spray. Police pepper-sprayed a group of reporters, including some from KSTP-TV, outside the Fifth Precinct. Minneapolis police fired less-lethal projectiles at a CBS news team, injuring sound engineer John Marschitz, while they stood far from any protesters. Police or troopers fired projectiles at an MSNBC news crew, hitting Ali Velshi. Later, police confronted Velshi and another TV crew in an empty parking lot and fired projectiles at them. Police shot Reuters TV cameraman Julio-Cesar Chavez and a member of his news crew with projectiles. Photojournalist Lucas Jackson was pepper-sprayed in the face and shot in the back with a projectile. CBC correspondent Susan Ormiston was hit by a projectile and a tear gas canister after protesters had cleared the parking lot. Police fired a flash-bang grenade at Morgan Chesky's MSNBC news crew while they were live on air. State troopers backed Los Angeles Times journalists Molly Hennessy-Fiske and Carolyn Cole against a wall and fired tear gas and less-lethal projectiles at them. State troopers fired projectiles at Star Tribune reporter Ryan Faircloth's car after he made a wrong turn. He later was cut by glass when officers fired more projectiles, breaking his car windows. Star Tribune photographer Anthony Souffle was tear-gassed by police or troopers. WCCO-TV videographer

Minneapolis cops, State Patrol targeted journalists, protesters with violence, lawsuits say

Tom Aviles was forced to the ground and arrested; he previously had been shot with a less-lethal projectile. European Pressphoto Agency photojournalists Tannen Maury and Craig Lassig were arrested and charged with curfew violations, and NBC reporter Simon Moya-Smith was pepper-sprayed and arrested.

On May 31:

A police officer threatened Star Tribune reporters Liz Sawyer with arrest. She and four other journalists were told earlier that night that their press credentials were "bull--." Police detained and searched Tim Arvier's Australian TV news team, handcuffing the cameraman.

The complaint alleges Minneapolis police and state troopers fired both Skat Shells and Direct Impact Rounds at journalists despite warnings that they can cause "serious injury or death."

Defendants in the lawsuit include Lt. Bob Kroll, who heads the Minneapolis police union. The complaint calls Kroll the department's "de facto policymaker" and cites his recent letter to rank-and-file officers complaining about the "liberal media."

Gov. Tim Walz at a Sunday news conference called the officers' treatment of journalists "unacceptable."

In a statement Wednesday, the State Patrol said it "recognizes the importance of the media in covering the civil unrest" and that "it can be difficult for officers to distinguish journalists from those who are violating a curfew order or not complying with commands to leave an area."

The agency said it's "reviewing the incidents involving our troopers in an effort to prevent similar incidents in the future."

The city of Minneapolis did not respond to a request for comment.

PROTESTER LAWSUIT

Separately, attorney David Madgett and protester Annette Williams filed a federal class-action lawsuit Tuesday night against the city of Minneapolis on behalf of any peaceful protesters who were injured and now are reluctant to "speak out against police violence against citizens." Minnesota lawmakers pressed to make changes after Floyd @JaymalGreen June 3, 2020 Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest

That complaint, too, details incidents in which police officers used tear gas and percussion grenades and fired projectiles at protesters.

"This 'corral and combat' strategy has no tactical purpose other than injuring otherwise peaceful protesters," the complaint reads.

Williams, an African American woman from St. Paul, says she was peacefully protesting on a public sidewalk May 28 when a chain of police vehicles rode by and an officer sprayed a chemical irritant out the window at Williams and her daughter.

Well THAT was uncalled for. pic.twitter.com/Odu4LyrZ9U

Minneapolis cops, State Patrol targeted journalists, protesters with violence, lawsuits say

- Jennifer Brooks (@stribrooks) May 29, 2020

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCXXXVII.

POLICE, CRIMINAL JUSTICE REFORM BILLS INTRODUCED AT MINNESOTA CAPITOL

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 430 wordsByline: Sarah Mearhoff

Highlight: State legislators in Minnesota's People of Color and Indigenous (POCI) Caucus have introduced a slew of police and criminal justice reform bills in response to the death of George Floyd, a black St. Louis Park man who died by asphyxiation after a white Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck last week. Introduced at a [...]

Body

State legislators in Minnesota's People of Color and Indigenous (POCI) Caucus have introduced a slew of police and criminal justice reform bills in response to the death of George Floyd, a black St. Louis Park man who died by asphyxiation after a white Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck last week.

Introduced at a Tuesday news conference, the caucus said they want to make the bills and overall reform a priority for the Legislature's upcoming June 12 special session, as well as future sessions.

POCI Caucus Chair Rep. Rena Moran, DFL-St. Paul, said Tuesday that "it's time for all hands to come on deck and fundamentally change how police interact with black men and boys."

"For too long, people in my community have been told they will have to wait for the systemic changes necessary to ensure people of color don't have to live in fear of law enforcement," Moran said. "They are tired of waiting for reform, tired of waiting for accountability, and tired of waiting for justice."

The legislators said the bills, if passed, will increase police accountability and transparency, raise conduct standards, heal community trust in law enforcement and reform investigation and prosecution processes for cases of officer-involved uses of force and deaths.

Rep. Fue Lee, DFL-Minneapolis, said Tuesday that Floyd died "at the hands of four individual police officers," but the issues stem back to "structural racism and implicit bias (that) have prevailed for generations." Tuesday's proposals are a first step to change, he said.

Rep. Ruth Richardson, DFL-Mendota Heights, added that the voices of black Minnesotans "must have their voices uplifted ... and must be leading the change that our voices have been crying out for centuries."

At a separate Tuesday news conference, Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan said she and Gov. Tim Walz back the POCI Caucus's proposals because "we are no longer in a place where we can throw our hands up."

Police, criminal justice reform bills introduced at Minnesota Capitol

"The most important thing that leaders can do right now is to listen directly to communities of color, and to the Black community specifically, about policy proposals deconstructing systems of racism," Flanagan said. "If we don't take action, I don't see how we can move forward as a state at all."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Want to help St. Paul businesses damaged in recent riots? Here's how.

ARTICLE CCXXXVIII.

WANT TO HELP ST. PAUL BUSINESSES DAMAGED IN RECENT RIOTS? HERE'S HOW.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 357 words

Byline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: As businesses in the Midway area and across St. Paul grapple with damage caused by recent riots, fundraisers are being established to help. Following protests that escalated to riots resulting in looting, vandalism and arson of businesses after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody, more than 200 businesses in St. Paul have [...]

Body

As businesses in the Midway area and across St. Paul grapple with damage caused by recent riots, fundraisers are being established to help.

Following protests that escalated to riots resulting in looting, vandalism and arson of businesses after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody, more than 200 businesses in St. Paul have been damaged. Some businesses, like Lloyd's Pharmacy on North Snelling Avenue, were completely burned to the ground.

We Love St. Paul launched Wednesday by the St. Paul Area Chamber of Commerce Charitable Foundation aims to address the immediate financial needs of businesses. Donations made to the fund will be tax deductible and directly support businesses to help them rebuild store fronts and reopen.

The fund will help businesses in the heavily damaged Midway area and across St. Paul, said B Kyle, president and CEO of the St. Paul Area Chamber of Commerce.

Kyle said the fund is encouraging donations "from people of all walks of life," including individuals, businesses, companies and foundations.

Kyle said she hopes this will also be used as an opportunity to form long-lasting relationships with businesses in the community. Donations can be made on the fund's website at www.welovestpaul.com.

A number of other funds have been set up across the Twin Cities to help businesses:

The Lake Street Council started the "We Love Lake Street" fund, which has raised more than $4.3 million. Donations can be made at www.welovelakestreet.com.

Want to help St. Paul businesses damaged in recent riots? Here's how.

The African Economic Development Solutions started a fund to assist African-owned businesses affected by the riots. Donations can be made on the fund's GoFundMe page.

The Asian Economic Development Association launched a fund to help Asian-owned businesses. Donations can be made on the fund's GoFundMe page.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCXXXIX. GEORGE FLOYD'S DAUGHTER ON 'GMA': WHAT SHE WANTS PEOPLE TO KNOW

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 395 wordsByline: Molly Guthrey

Highlight: Here's what 6-year-old Gianna Floyd wants people to know about her dad: "Kinda that I miss him," she said during an interview that aired Wednesday on ABC's "Good Morning America." Eva Pilgrim - an ABC News correspondent and GMA weekend co-anchor - asked the girl what her dad was like. "He played with me," she [...]

Body

Here's what 6-year-old Gianna Floyd wants people to know about her dad:

"Kinda that I miss him," she said during an interview that aired Wednesday on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Eva Pilgrim - an ABC News correspondent and GMA weekend co-anchor - asked the girl what her dad was like.

"He played with me," she remembered.

He was a good dad, said Gianna's mom, Roxie Washington.

"He loved his little girl," she said.

Floyd had moved from Houston to Minnesota to better provide for his family, Pilgrim said.

In the sit-down interview, Washington says she found out in a phone call that Floyd had died. She then went online to find the video of the Minneapolis police officer kneeling on Floyd's neck.

"I watched it," she said. "Only for a moment."

That moment was horrific. She cried as she tried to describe her reaction.

"I can't believe ... " she said. "I couldn't believe that someone was doing him like that."

If only ...

"I wish I could have been there to help him," she said, crying.

George Floyd's daughter on 'GMA': What she wants people to know

Gianna does not know exactly what happened to her dad, her mother said.

But she does know this:

"I told her," Washington said, "that her dad died because ...

She paused.

" ... he couldn't breathe," she said, her face wet with tears.

In the segment, Pilgrim says that while the girl might not know what happened to her dad, she does know that we are talking about him.

"Daddy changed the world," she says in a clip on Instagram.

She also knows what she wants to be when she grows up.

"I wanna be a doctor," she said. "I want to take care of people."

The segment, which is about 3-1/2 minutes long, is interspersed with photos of father and daughter from the girl's baby album. That baby book includes a note - " ... and Daddy stayed every night" - when she was a newborn. It's hard to believe he is not here still, Washington said through her tears.

"My heart is broke for my baby," she says. "It's broke."

Floyd was also the father of a 22-year-old daughter and a 27-year-old son.

On Wednesday, the son, Quincy Mason Floyd, visited Minneapolis from Texas.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXL. READERS WRITE TOGETHER, DO WHAT FLOYD COULDN'T

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 10ALength: 1268 wordsBody

GEORGE FLOYD

The family of George Floyd of blessed memory has retained an attorney, Benjamin Crump. On Monday, Crump reported the results of an independent autopsy of Floyd ("Justice: 'A long road,' " June 2). The conclusion of this second autopsy is that Floyd died of asphyxia. After making the announcement, Crump shared these words with the listening public:

"I implore all of us to take a breath for justice, to take a breath for peace, to take a breath for our country and to take a breath for George."

I hope we are all indeed breathing deeply, always, but especially now. Breath clears the body of toxins; breath renews. The Israelites under Pharaoh could not hear the words of hope offered by Moses because of "kotzer ruah" - shortness of breath (Exodus 6:9). They could not breathe, so they could not hear, so they could not hope. We have a choice. I hope we are appreciating the miracle of breath - how it sustains life, how it brings calm, how it creates spaciousness of spirit, so that each of us can act with compassion and wisdom, with intention and focus.

For all those suffering in this pandemic, and for George Floyd of blessed memory, let us all indeed take a breath for justice, for peace, for our country and for life itself.

Rabbi Shosh Dworsky, St. Paul

POLICE UNION

That was the wrong response, Kroll

It is always sad to see the police union president, Lt. Bob Kroll, emerge from his cave waving his "the world is against us" flag. It has to be a cave without Wi-Fi or TV for him to make statements like those in his letter to union members describing the events of the past week as something "everyone except [members of the union] refuses to call a riot." Huh? We're informed that he's working with the union's attorneys to help the fired officers get their jobs back. What exactly would it take for the union to acknowledge unacceptable behavior by a member? Apparently, to this union, there is no limit on police behavior.

Kroll criticizes the decision of Mayor Jacob Frey around abandoning the Third Precinct. Fair enough, but he then goes on to say, "The politicians are to blame and you are the scapegoats." News flash, it wasn't Frey with his knee on the neck of George Floyd.

The police elect their union leadership. If Kroll's behavior doesn't disgust the rank and file enough to replace him after this, we will know where they stand, and sadder days lie ahead.

Bill Mease, Minneapolis

. . .

With the Minneapolis police union collective-bargaining agreement having expired on Dec. 31, the city has an opportunity to take the lead to amend those provisions of the contract that overly restrict its ability to discipline those officers who violate policy, procedures and practices established by the city and Police Department. The federation, if it truly cares about its members, should be willing to work with the city to identify and review the applicable provisions. The city is a signatory to the contract, as well as the union. Therefore, Minneapolis must also take ownership for agreeing to such restrictive provisions in first place. Likewise, the members themselves should demand such "justice" to protect the good cops. Yielding to political pressure by the federation is unacceptable and should be called out.

W.W. Bednarczyk, Minneapolis

POLICING

The solution is not more of the same

While I feel that Gov. Tim Walz and Mayor Jacob Frey are trying their best to do the right thing in controlling the looting and arson, their response shows how poor our ability to cope with justified social unrest is. The only tool that Walz has to deal with looting and arson triggered by violent and overly militarized police is ... more violent and overly militarized police.

Watching the live footage of the behavior of the police on Sunday shows a force that is not at all ready to engage successfully with the population of the city. It attacks clearly credentialed journalists and people watching from their porch in the neighborhood. This looks like an attempt to keep citizens from seeing what is in progress and preserve police impunity. Will steps be taken to make accountable those who have attacked citizens without provocation? A more frightening question is: Is it even possible to hold these officers accountable?

The lack of planning to positively engage with even peaceful protesters, and elected leadership's inability to exert meaningful control over law enforcement, is another illustration that our criminal enforcement system has become the tail that wags the dog of our city and our state.

Robert Goldman, Minneapolis

. . .

It seems to me that public officials should not use the phrase "urban warfare" when referring to civil disturbance. Warfare involves soldiers who engage an enemy. Police officers are not soldiers. Their work is to protect and serve citizens, not to engage enemies. Using war language puts the wrong idea in the minds of all involved, and actions often follow ideas.

Duane Cady, Shoreview

RIOTS

Last week set gun control back

This is in response to the letter writer who expressed the view that, with fewer guns in private citizens' hands, more effective, community-focused policing models could be developed ("Unworkable with so many guns," June 1). I agree with his view that there are far too many guns in private citizens' (both lawful and unlawful) hands. I also fully support the agenda of the recent protests to align policing methods and policies with the interests of the whole community, rather than just a privileged segment that benefits from the color of their skin.

Unfortunately, results are often just the opposite of best intentions. And I think the recent rioting, arson and looting - actions that some in the community support because they believe it's the only way to get change - have taken us in just the opposite direction. The thunder you hear is the feet of thousands of folks racing to gun stores to buy a gun to protect themselves and their property because they perceive the police can't provide that protection.

Here is their reasoning: If I'd been sitting in front of my small-business establishment with an AR-15 in my lap, how many looters would have wanted to confront me and my "little friend"?

More assault weapons in the hands of private citizens is the last thing we need! It is so unfortunate that a good cause has set gun control back to the point where true reform is now a pipe dream.

Nick Holman, Loretto

ECONOMIC INEQUALITY

Those donations are needed but point to the larger problem

UnitedHealth Group has donated $10 million to help rebuild Lake Street ("UnitedHealth gives $10M to Floyd family, rebuilding," June 2). Good. This money is sorely needed. But let's put this in perspective. In 2019, David Wichmann, UnitedHealth's CEO, received total compensation of more than $52 million, according to an April article in the Star Tribune. This is not to personally disparage Wichmann or any of UnitedHealth's employees. They are merely doing their job, which is to make as much money as possible for UnitedHealth.

However, the fact that the leader of a company whose primary function is to filter the relationship between health care providers and health care recipients can earn compensation that strikes many as obscene is closely related to the anger and sense of grievance rending our country.

Connect the dots. An economic system that over the past few decades has been exquisitely designed to push the proceeds of productivity to the few while leaving most people in idle, or even moving backward, nourishes the forces that explode into riots.

READERS WRITE Together, do what Floyd couldn't

Marty Koessel, Minneapolis

We want to hear from you. Send us your thoughts here.

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

Best Buy's Corie Barry on the aftermath of George Floyd's killing: 'We will do better'

ARTICLE CCXLI. BEST BUY'S CORIE BARRY ON THE AFTERMATH OF GEORGE FLOYD'S KILLING: 'WE WILL DO BETTER'

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 485 words

Byline: Carter Jones

Body

As protests have spread nationwide after the death of George Floyd while in Minneapolis Police custody, Best Buy Co. Inc. CEO Corie Barry on Wednesday said she's committing the company to assist in systemic, permanent change in as many ways it can find.

"I don't have the answers, but I am no longer OK with not asking the question: If everything were on the table, what could Best Buy do?" Barry said in an email sent to customers on Wednesday. "With that in mind, I am appointing a diverse group (by demography and level in the company) to challenge one another and, ultimately, our senior leadership team and Board of Directors, with substantive, enduring ways we can address the inequities and injustices to which all of us bear witness every day."

Barry said she believes this is one of the toughest times in our country's history, as the pandemic and resulting economic havoc combine with the raging confrontation over long-term effects of racial injustice.

Best Buy's Corie Barry on the aftermath of George Floyd's killing: 'We will do better'

"Watching tens of thousands take to the streets to speak out against fear and inhumanity is, on one hand, inspiring for the commitment it represents and, on the other, heartbreaking for its profound need," Barry said. "But what's next? What do we do to change the cycle in which black men or women, with tragic frequency, are harmed by those who are supposed to protect them? Or the gut-wrenching truth that to be a person of color in America is often to not feel fully safe, seen or heard?"

"For me, it starts with seeing the situation for what it is, acknowledging these experiences for what they are and, quite simply, apologizing for not doing enough. As important, it includes committing the company I lead down a path of systemic, permanent change in as many ways as we can find."

Best Buy plans to create more than 100 additional Teen Tech Centers, places where teens from disinvested communities are exposed to and trained on a range of technology that helps them find success in college or the job market.

Best Buy is also continuing to provide computers and internet access to hundreds of thousands of youth so they can learn from home to help reduce the digital divide and opportunity gap.

Barry said some stores across the country remain closed to protect employee safety, and any affected employee will be paid for their time.

"Neighborhoods across America have felt the heat of flames lit by those who would do only harm, and still others have felt the fear that comes from not knowing where that harm may go next. But those fires will be extinguished, and the damage will be repaired," Barry said. "What remains, however, are the indelible images of George Floyd and the many who came before him. It is in their name that we embrace the fight for equality and justice as a common cause, one we all fight - and solve - together."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

Twin Cities blood donations dangerously low. Here's why and how to help.

ARTICLE CCXLII. TWIN CITIES BLOOD DONATIONS DANGEROUSLY LOW. HERE'S WHY AND HOW TO HELP.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 443 words

Byline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: As the coronavirus pandemic and protests concerning the death of George Floyd continue in the Twin Cities, blood donations have reached extremely low levels. Donation centers are asking individuals who are healthy and feeling well to consider donating blood. With hospitals beginning to offer elective surgeries again that were stalled because of the pandemic, all [...]

Body

As the coronavirus pandemic and protests concerning the death of George Floyd continue in the Twin Cities, blood donations have reached extremely low levels.

Donation centers are asking individuals who are healthy and feeling well to consider donating blood. With hospitals beginning to offer elective surgeries again that were stalled because of the pandemic, all blood type donations are needed.

Due to the pandemic, less people are donating blood than usual, even more so due to the current protests, said American Red Cross spokeswoman Susan Thesenga.

Memorial Blood Centers were just beginning to offer blood drives again, but were forced to cancel due to civil unrest and protesting, said Wendy Capetz, a spokeswoman for Memorial Blood Centers.

"We're starting to see our blood supply reach a critical level so we need to reverse that now going into the summer so we don't have an additional health crisis," Thesenga said.

At a media briefing Monday afternoon, state health officials also emphasized the need for blood donations and encouraged healthy individuals to donate if they are able.

Having a stable blood supply is essential, Capetz said. Blood donations are needed for surgeries, cancer patients, childbirth and more.

Normally, Memorial Blood Centers have a seven-day blood supply, Capetz said. Right now there is less than a three-day supply.

Twin Cities blood donations dangerously low. Here's why and how to help.

Both the American Red Cross and Memorial Blood Centers are taking extra precautions concerning the pandemic, including offering appointment scheduling, requiring face masks and taking each donor's temperature.

Additionally, both the American Red Cross and Memorial Blood Centers are collecting COVID-19 convalescent plasma from recovered patients to help those who are currently fighting the virus develop antibodies.

WHERE CAN BLOOD BE DONATED IN THE TWIN CITIES? The American Red Cross has five metro locations located in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Bloomington, Arden Hills and St. Cloud. The American Red Cross blood donor mobile app can also connect residents to blood drives near them. For information, go to their website: www.redcross.org. Memorial Blood Centers has six metro locations located in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Eden Prairie, Bloomington, Plymouth and Coon Rapids. For information, go to their website: www.mbc.org. Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXLIII. DELUGE OF GIVING ENGULFS ANGUISH

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1144 wordsByline: JEAN HOPFENSBERGER; KELLY SMITH; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

As the world sees images of soldiers and armored vehicles patrolling Minneapolis streets, an even larger army is quietly gathering strength. Their mission: to put out financial and emotional fires still smoldering after last week's violent protests.

Lines of vehicles stretched 14 blocks after Sanford Middle School requested 85 bags of food to help families after local stores were looted and burned. They wound up with 20,000 bags of bread, fruit and more.

All My Relations Arts on Franklin Avenue has been transformed from a gallery into a food pantry that the Native American Community Development Institute plans to operate until at least October.

A refrigerated truck carrying 18 tons of fresh produce rolled into a Cub Foods parking lot Tuesday, a gift from the Zakat Foundation, a Muslim charity based in Chicago.

The sheer scope of support, pouring in from Minnesota and the nation, has surprised and relieved exhausted Minneapolis communities.

"These people are coming out of nowhere," said Mark Graves, director of the Southside Village Boys & Girls Club, watching a group of young men who spontaneously offered to unload groceries from a Richfield food drive Tuesday.

"I haven't seen anything like this in the 40 years I've lived in south Minneapolis," Graves said. "This is the positive stuff that people around the country need to see. In a time you want to give up hope, this is the stuff that makes you not want to give up hope."

Hope is coming in ways big and small to Minneapolis neighborhoods, reeling from the torching and looting that erupted after the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police on May 25. Individuals show up with brooms. Neighbors form night watch committees. Suburban gyms collect diaper donations. Nonprofits orchestrate volunteers to scrub graffiti.

Top priority is food

The Southside Boys and Girls Club, like so many organizations, has morphed into an emergency support center during this crisis that has left a community with no major grocery stores, limited transportation and unemployment reaching new heights as more than 150 businesses were damaged or destroyed.

Their gymnasium became a food distribution center this week because the Boys and Girls Club in the Little Earth community ran out of space from the flood of donations, Graves said.

The Little Earth community center, packed with cereal, soup and diapers, served 1,000 Little Earth residents as well as 7,500 people from the nearby neighborhoods - turning away donations for the first time ever, said Millie Hernandez, Little Earth Youth Development Center director.

People picking up bags of groceries said they were desperate with neighborhood grocery stores destroyed.

"I am so thankful," said Robin Keaton, 64, as she looked over the bags.

Chris Foreman, 47, of Apple Valley, brought his two teenage daughters to sort and organize donations. The Army Ranger served in Iraq and Afghanistan. He said troops would never do to captured Taliban what Minneapolis police did to George Floyd.

"I needed to come out here to help the community and I think that's what all Minnesota should do," he said. "There is Minnesota goodness out there, but that label [Minnesota Nice] papers over ... the inequities."

A mile away, at Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, Jackson Odenbach, 17, and five of his co-workers from an insurance company near La Crosse, Wis., arrived Tuesday after driving nearly three hours to volunteer. He stood at a table piled high with tortillas and trail mix.

Earlier in the day, Odenbach had seen a woman waiting for about half an hour. He held up a package of baby formula and asked if she needed it.

"She just started crying," he said.

All My Relations Arts gallery was emptied last week in case the riots came to its Ventura Village neighborhood. The space quickly became a storage site for thousands of donations, from fire extinguishers to diapers to canned goods. Distribution began Tuesday morning.

"This is a food desert now," said Angel Swann, donation coordinator.

Swann grew up in the area and said she's never seen the community come together so quickly before. Volunteers have driven from reservations across Minnesota to sort the items, she said.

"There's a place for everyone to do something now," she said.

The power of one

Valerie Quintana is among thousands of Minnesotans who have created do-it-yourself volunteer projects. Last week she gathered a few friends to clean up the shattered glass outside the Target and Cub Foods stores attacked by looters arsonists during last week's violence.

She posted on Facebook that she was looking for help. The next day, 400 volunteers answered - and they are still coming.

"This has grown really big, really quick," Quintana told a crowd of strangers holding brooms and dust pans at Phelps Field Park on Monday, the fourth day she's organized cleanups.

Quintana started the cleanup effort as a tour guide to tragedy, guiding volunteers to the intersection where Floyd's life was ended. She wanted to show the mostly white volunteers who might not typically venture to this neighborhood that it is safe.

"The broom is a symbol,' " she said. "It's a symbol of hope, it's a symbol of action."

In north Minneapolis, Sanctuary Covenant Church is another symbol of hope and a destination for those wanting to pitch in. On Tuesday, Ashley Adkison drove an hour from New Richmond, Wis., to drop off two carloads of supplies she gathered from her community and police department after seeing a Facebook post seeking help.

"When you see something as heartbreaking as this, the only option is to help," said Adkison, a bakery owner.

The church had planned to start a daily barbecue to offer meals to residents, but when strangers such as Adkison started pulling up with groceries, it transformed into a broader effort that now serves about 1,000 people a day across the street from a now-shuttered Cub Foods store.

"People have come from literally every part of the cities," said Pastor Edrin Williams, as church volunteers directed traffic. "The response to help is incredible, but the need is also incredible."

The business community, in particular, has felt that painful need. More than 46,000 Minnesotans responded, donating more than $3.8 million to date to the Lake Street Council to distribute to business owners whose livelihoods were damaged or destroyed.

While grateful for the support, and uplifted by it, the aid cannot meet the financial needs caused by the devastation, neighbors said. Even as donations pour in, they do so on streets that still have the faint smell of smoke and where rubble is still piled high on the sites of former businesses.

Neighbors hope Minnesotans don't forget them after the current crisis has passed.

Said Graves: "There are so many needs."

Reporters Mara Klecker, Erin Adler and Katy Read contributed to this story.

Jean Hopfensperger · 612-673-4511 Kelly Smith · 612-673-4141

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCXLIV. KENDRICKS PRODS NFL TO DO MORE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: SPORTS; Pg. 1CLength: 669 wordsByline: BEN GOESSLING; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Vikings LB criticizes commissioner's statement on George Floyd's death.Body

Through his leadership role on the Vikings' social justice committee, his partnership with the Sheridan Story to fight childhood hunger and his recent efforts to help those affected by COVID-19 through sales of his artwork, linebacker Eric Kendrick has worked for several years to address systemic inequalities he's encountered.

With a series of social media posts Tuesday morning, he called on the NFL to do the same.

Kendricks took to Twitter, asking the NFL to show its work on social justice issues, after NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell issued a statement Friday addressing the May 25 death of George Floyd while restrained by Minneapolis police officers.

Goodell's statement expressed condolences to Floyd's family, adding the reaction of protesters in Minneapolis and around the country "reflect the pain, anger and frustration that so many of us feel." On Tuesday morning, Kendrick joined the chorus of players criticizing the statement, which referred to the league's "ongoing efforts" to address "systematic issues." Kendrick asked the NFL to go beyond words.

"@NFL what actual steps are you taking to support the fight for justice and system reform? Your statement said nothing," Kendrick wrote in a Twitter thread later shared by teammate Anthony Barr. "Your league is built on black athletes. Vague answers do nothing. Let the players know what you're ACTUALLY doing. And we know what silence means."

Kendricks then said the Vikings have "opened a dialogue with players and we're all working toward solutions with the team," before asking for suggestions from Twin Cities residents about ways the team can support the city.

"Our team doesn't just want to donate - we want to work with local organizations and get out there to help facilitate change," he wrote. "But we want answers at the league level. That's where change can happen, and we've seen none. Because right now, it seems like nothing. And nothing is unacceptable. You can't bring in people to teach us how we should interact with police but not work towards changing the behavior of the police themselves. Silence will not make this go away. @NFL #WeWantAnswers #BlackLivesMatter."

Kendricks prods NFL to do more

Goodell and the NFL have been taken to task in recent years for their handling of race issues, including players such as Colin Kaepernick protesting police brutality by kneeling during the national anthem and a lack of diversity in the league's coaching ranks.

The Vikings released a statement last Wednesday afternoon offering condolences to Floyd's family, and coach Mike Zimmer released a statement through the team Tuesday, supporting "peaceful protests." The Vikings also retweeted Kendricks and Barr's messages about players opening a dialogue with the team and soliciting suggestions for ways to support the Twin Cities.

After President Donald Trump said in September 2017 that NFL players who kneel during the national anthem to protest police brutality should be removed from the league, Vikings owners Zygi and Mark Wilf linked arms with players on the team's sideline before a home game against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. They later committed $250,000 of their own money to a social justice fund that players could use at their own discretion. Kendricks and Barr assumed leadership roles on the team's new social justice committee in 2018.

The team announced in January its social justice committee approved a $35,000 grant for All Square, a south Minneapolis grilled-cheese shop that provides jobs to those returning from prison to society.

The committee also has organized visits to the Hennepin County Juvenile Detention Center to talk to teenagers there. Kendricks shared stories of his father's struggles with drug addiction and how his mother, Yvonne Thagon, kept their family together during that time.

"I just told them, 'Hey, if you guys ever feel like giving up, use me as an example.' " he said in Dec. 2018. "The skills we learn, the things we do, we learn from somebody. These kids are good kids; they just happened to be in the wrong situation."

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCXLV. OUR HEARTLESS LEADER

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 10ALength: 382 wordsBody

Nearly everything about President Donald Trump's response to protests sweeping the nation is wrong.

His approach and tone have been divisive, mean-spirited and blatantly partisan. At a time when America desperately needs measured, unifying and healing leadership, this president instead fuels the flames.

Trump initially said little about the death of George Floyd while in Minneapolis police custody a week ago. Instead, he responded to Floyd's death and resulting protests with a series of polarizing tweets.

Then during a brief address in the Rose Garden on Monday, Trump told reporters that he is an "ally" of peaceful protests even as a peaceful demonstration was being broken up by law enforcement a few yards away. Demonstrators were forcibly pushed out of a park across the street from the White House before the 7 p.m. curfew. Trump went on to declare himself the "law and order" president and vowed to "dominate" the streets with military force.

After Trump spoke, it became clear why the park had been cleared. Without taking questions from reporters, the president strolled across that park for a surprise visit to the historic St. John's Church, which was boarded up because of damage caused by rioters. In front of the church, he stood awkwardly with a Bible in his hand for a quick photo op, then walked back to the White House. He made no reference to Floyd, the church or the peaceful protesters police had just cleared away.

Faith leaders and some lawmakers quickly denounced the appearance as a political stunt in which Trump used the Bible as a prop. The Rev. Mariann Budde, formerly of Minneapolis, who is now bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington, D.C., said she was "outraged" by Trump's visit, adding that it "did not serve the spiritual aspirations or the needed moral leadership It did not address the grievous wounds that we are dealing with and the agony of our country."

The rioting that has left Minneapolis, St. Paul and other American cities damaged and on edge must not be condoned. Yet at times like these, presidents who've come before Trump have found effective ways to bring people together. What the nation doesn't need is a tone-deaf strongman who shows little regard for the underlying issues that have made George Floyd's death a flash point.

Our heartless leader

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

Rosedale Center reopens, Mall of America still closed following riots

ARTICLE CCXLVI. ROSEDALE CENTER REOPENS, MALL OF AMERICA STILL CLOSED FOLLOWING RIOTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 330 words

Byline: Emma Harville

Highlight: The Mall of America remains closed but Rosedale Center reopened with limited hours Tuesday after temporarily shutting down because of riots and looting in the metro area last week. Hundreds of metro businesses were damaged during several days of sometimes violent unrest that followed the May 25 death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody. [...]

Body

The Mall of America remains closed but Rosedale Center reopened with limited hours Tuesday after temporarily shutting down because of riots and looting in the metro area last week.

Hundreds of metro businesses were damaged during several days of sometimes violent unrest that followed the May 25 death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

The damage caused many stores and shopping centers either to temporarily close or postpone reopening after a long .

Maplewood Mall had been open for one week before shutting down again Thursday through Sunday as a precautionary measure. It reopened with limited hours Monday.

The Mall of America was scheduled to reopen stores Monday after closing March 17. But amid the property damage and looting in the Twin Cities, the mall postponed reopening "out of an abundance of caution."

The mall said it would "announce a new reopening date in the coming days." Curbside pickup also is suspended until further notice.

Several CVS locations in the metro remain closed, including stores in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Maplewood and Brooklyn Center. Various Walgreens stores in St. Paul, Minneapolis and one in Bloomington remain closed until further notice, as well.

As of Saturday, Target had temporarily closed 71 stores statewide after looters overtook Minneapolis locations. Most stores have reopened, but the Uptown and East Lake Street locations in Minneapolis remain closed.

Rosedale Center reopens, Mall of America still closed following riots

The Target on Lake Street took extensive damage and must be rebuilt. The Uptown store could reopen before the end of the year.

1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin closure related to the coronavirus pandemic Dozens of homeless people evicted from Minneapolis hotel 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen Fever checks at the door, no facials or blow drying: Hair salons 'reinventing' under coronavirus St. Paul police officer one of six area leaders to land 2020 Bush Foundation fellowships

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Tim Walz visits site of George Floyd's death, lays flowers, apologizes to CNN reporter Omar Jimenez for arrest

ARTICLE CCXLVII. TIM WALZ VISITS SITE OF GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH, LAYS FLOWERS, APOLOGIZES TO CNN REPORTER OMAR JIMENEZ FOR ARREST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 287 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: In a visit not announced to the media, Gov. Tim Walz ended up encountering CNN reporter Omar Jimenez.

Body

Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz on Wednesday morning visited the Minneapolis site where George Floyd died while being arrested last week.

In a visit that was not announced to the media - and apparently not intended to be seen publicly - Walz laid flowers at the memorial, he said later.

Dressed in casual clothes with a University of Minnesota hat pulled over his face, he ended up encountering CNN reporter Omar Jimenez, the same reporter whose arrest on live TV embarrassed Walz and the State Patrol before the nation.

Walz granted Jimenez a brief interview in which he apologized and explained why he felt the need to personally see the scene near East 38th Street and Chicago Avenue South, which has become a sort of sacred ground for the swells of protests and mourning that have sprung from Floyd's killing in the custody of Minneapolis police.

"It's very personal," Walz said in the interview broadcast on CNN. "We wanted to try to get down here early, I'll just say that, because I very much worry about white politicians appropriating black pain, and that's certainly not it. ... I have to personally and viscerally feel this. It's unfortunate I've become friends with mothers only because their sons were killed."

Walz has already apologized publicly and personally to CNN leaders for the arrest of Jimenez and his crew last week, but Wednesday's encounter appears to be the first time the two have met.

"Thank you for the professionalism, thank you for understanding and I'm deeply sorry," Walz said. "And you know that we've made other mistakes on this as far as making sure that you have access, but protocols and everything else, we're learning, have to change because we have to create the space for you to tell the story."

Tim Walz visits site of George Floyd's death, lays flowers, apologizes to CNN reporter Omar Jimenez for arrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCXLVIII. BIDEN MOVES CLOSER TO FORMALLY WINNING DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 964 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: Joe Biden is on the cusp of formally securing the Democratic presidential nomination after winning hundreds more delegates in primary contests Tuesday that tested the nation's ability to run elections while balancing a pandemic and sweeping social unrest.

Body

By STEVE PEOPLES

Joe Biden is on the cusp of formally securing the Democratic presidential nomination after winning hundreds more delegates in primary contests Tuesday that tested the nation's ability to run elections while balancing a pandemic and sweeping social unrest.

Biden could lock down the nomination within the next week as West Virginia and Georgia hold primaries.

On Tuesday, voters across America were forced to navigate curfews, health concerns and National Guard troops - waiting in line hours after polls closed in some cases - after election officials dramatically reduced the number of in-person voting sites to minimize the spread of the coronavirus outbreak.

Biden and President Donald Trump easily swept their respective primary contests that ranged from Maryland to Montana and featured the night's biggest prize: Pennsylvania. The two men are certain to face each other on the presidential ballot in November, yet party rules require them first to accumulate a majority of delegates in the monthslong state-by-state primary season.

Trump secured the Republican presidential nomination in March.

Pennsylvania, which offered Tuesday's largest trove of delegates, also represented a significant test case for Republicans and Democrats working to strengthen their operations in a premier general election battleground.

Biden moves closer to formally winning Democratic nomination

Voters were forced to brave long lines in "militarized zones" because officials consolidated the vast majority of polling places in Philadelphia to minimize health risks, according to Erin Kramer, executive director of One Pennsylvania. She noted that some polling places in African American communities are in police stations.

"Having to stand in line while police officers are entering and exiting the building on police business is not exactly how people want to spend their election day," Kramer said.

Biden was in Philadelphia earlier Tuesday to deliver remarks about the civil unrest that has erupted across the nation after the police killing of George Floyd. He didn't talk about the primary, instead focusing his attention on Trump, whom Biden blasted as "more interested in power than in principle."

Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders is not actively campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination, having suspended his operation and endorsed Biden, but his name appeared on the ballots. On the eve of Tuesday's primaries, senior adviser Jeff Weaver encouraged progressives to vote for Sanders anyway to help maximize his influence in the direction of the Democratic Party.

The comments served as a reminder that Biden may have no legitimate Democratic rivals remaining, but he must still win over skeptical activists from his party's far-left flank, who worry he's too close to the political establishment.

Party unity was an afterthought this week, however, as more immediate health and safety concerns dominated the national conversation. The coronavirus death toll has surged past 100,000 nationwide, and thousands of new cases are reported each day.

At the same time, several major cities, particularly Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia among those voting Tuesday, struggled to contain protests and related looting that led to thousands of arrests.

Some voters said Trump's increasingly tough tone toward protesters inspired them to participate in the democratic process. Nicholas Autiello, who works in finance in Rhode Island, said he was disturbed by police driving back peaceful demonstrators near the White House on Monday.

"Last night, we have a president who is acting like a dictator," Autiello said. "So being able to come out here this morning and fill in a circle next to a name for someone who I know will restore honor and decency to the presidency was so important."

Political groups have had to adjust as some states move to a system that relies largely on voting by mail. They include Montana, where all 56 counties decided to vote entirely by mail, despite Trump's repeated warning against it. Voting rights watchdogs in multiple states on Tuesday expressed concerns about access to mail ballots, confusion about deadlines and a shortage of poll workers that led to long lines.

"We are in unique times, and voting is a unique challenge for people," said Josh Schwerin, chief strategist for the pro-Democrat super PAC Priorities USA. He said that his organization and others would be watching closely on Tuesday "to see how well it works, where issues are and where obstacles have been put in place."

Those voting Tuesday included the District of Columbia, Indiana, Maryland, Montana, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and South Dakota. Two other states holding primary elections on Tuesday, Idaho and Iowa, chose their presidential nominee early in the year.

Biden moves closer to formally winning Democratic nomination

In Iowa, Republican Rep. Steve King, known nationally for controversial remarks, lost his bid to be nominated for a 10th term to state Sen. Randy Feenstra. House Republicans stripped King of his committee assignments in 2019 after comments that seemed to defend white nationalism, providing fuel for Feenstra's argument that King was no longer an effective representative for the 4th District.

In a New Mexico race for an open House seat, ex-CIA operative Valerie Plame lost the Democratic primary to attorney Teresa Leger Fernandez, a professional advocate for Native American communities and voting rights issues. A first-time candidate for public office, Plame harnessed her fame as the operative whose secret identity was exposed shortly after her diplomat husband disputed U.S. intelligence used to justify the 2003 Iraq invasion.

Associated Press writer Rodrique Ngowi in Providence, R.I., and Terry Spencer in West Palm Beach, Fla., contributed to this report.

Catch up on the 2020 election campaign with AP experts on our weekly politics podcast, "Ground Game."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXLIX. CONSTRUCTION STARTS PLUMMET IN APRIL

Finance and Commerce

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 BridgeTower Media All Rights Reserved

FINANCE & COMMERCESection: NEWSLength: 681 wordsByline: Brian JohnsonBody

Struggling to regain its footing amid the COVID-19-induced economic downturn, Twin Cities construction activity is falling further behind last year's pace after an especially slow month of building in April.

In April, the 13-county metro area saw $326.46 million worth of construction starts, down 56% from April 2019, according to a new report from Dodge Data & Analytics. Nonresidential starts, $61.9 million, are down 84%, and homebuilding, $264.5 million, is off 25%.

For the year through April, overall construction starts, $1.63 billion, are down 36%. That includes $513 million worth of nonresidential construction, down 52%, and $1.1 billion in the residential sector, down 24%.

Residential includes both single-family and multifamily construction. Nonresidential covers offices, retail, hotels, warehouses, manufacturing, education, religious, recreational and other sectors.

Tim Worke, CEO of the Associated General Contractors of Minnesota, said he's surprised at the level of the April downturn.

"While everyone anticipated a pretty sharp reduction or downturn in the construction market during the quarter, I anticipated the bigger impacts would play out in the third and fourth quarter," Worke said in an email. "This is because I think members are reporting owners are deferring or canceling projects that may have been planned for later in the year or next year. "

Worke noted that architectural billings are also off dramatically, which would "portend an impact on future work in the pipeline. The Dodge numbers show a more immediate impact of COVID in the construction market as the safer-at-home orders did not take effect until mid-late March. "

Folks still believe that multifamily housing has "strong market underpinnings and that this downturn will see a correction as COVID fades, the economy rebounds and construction starts to resume," Worke said.

Worke added that the Dodge numbers don't reflect the highway market, which has "remained relatively unaffected and has opened the season strong. "

Construction starts plummet in April

The Dodge numbers, which predate the civil unrest sparked by the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police, are the latest in a string of grim economic reports for the local building industry.

In April, demand for U.S. design services saw its “steepest decline on record,” according to the American Institute of Architects. AIA’s Architecture Billings Index, a barometer of future construction starts, fell to 29.5 in April. Any reading below 50 indicates a decrease in billings.

In May, single-family homebuilding permits were down 25% year-over-year and planned multifamily units were off 57%, according to the Keystone Report, which tracks homebuilding permits in the 13-county area. The combined value, $163.3 million, is down 32%.

Also in May, the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis released a survey that shows widespread project cancellations. More than 500 local construction firms responded to the survey. Roughly 70% reported at least one project canceled and a third reported “moderate or significant numbers of projects canceled,” according to the Minneapolis Fed.

The sluggish Twin Cities activity is part of a national trend.

From March to April, when construction activity typically picks up, construction employment declined in nine out of 10 metro areas across the country, the Associated General Contractors of America said Wednesday.

“[Wednesday’s] employment report shows how few areas were left unscathed by April’s unprecedented job losses,” Ken Simonson, the association’s chief economist, said in a statement.

Simonson cited a recent AGC survey, which shows that project cancellations “are escalating, making further job losses inevitable unless there is funding for widespread new projects. ”

Worke called for more state and federal investment, including a stimulus package, to help “rebuild the economy and engage economic activity and opportunity. ”

[divider]

Like this article? Gain access to all of our great content with a month-to-month subscription. Start your subscription here.

Copyright © 2020 BridgeTower Media. All Rights Reserved.

Load-Date: June 9, 2020

ARTICLE CCL. CONTACT TRACING CONCERNS RAISED

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 1197 wordsByline: JEREMY OLSON; GLENN HOWATT; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Tracking those exposed to virus could get tougher following civil unrest.Body

Minnesota has gone all-in on contact tracing - mobilizing more than 400 interviewers and investigators to find people at risk for COVID-19 and prevent them from spreading the infectious disease.

But a new report questions that strategy against the coronavirus causing this pandemic. And those concerns were raised irrespective of the mass protests over the death of George Floyd, which could produce a new wave of COVID-19 cases that would be tough to trace.

"We've almost seen a mind-set that if a little contact tracing is good, a lot more must be better. ... We're saying, 'No that's not true,' " Michael Osterholm, executive director of the University of Minnesota's Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy (CIDRAP), said on Tuesday.

CIDRAP's report stated that contact tracing is valuable against viruses that infect a small percentage of a community, and cause clear symptoms, but that COVID-19 is widespread and involves a coronavirus that many people carry without symptoms.

The report recommends continued study to see if contact tracing works in the U.S. rather than assuming that it will work as well as it did in Asian countries with strict government testing mandates and quarantines.

Testing boosts tracing

The Minnesota Department of Health on Tuesday reported 25,508 lab-confirmed cases of COVID-19 and 1,072 deaths, but health officials suspect that as much as 5% of the state's population has been infected. That would be 280,000 people.

Contact tracing usually occurs after people have been diagnosed through testing, and identifies anyone they have been close to who might have been infected. Those at-risk contacts are then asked to quarantine themselves until their infection status is clear.

Contact tracing concerns raised

The CIDRAP report raises valid concerns, though state infectious disease director Kris Ehresmann said that contact tracing isn't expected to identify all cases and stop the virus' spread completely.

"We can't say that case investigations or contact tracing can eliminate transmission," she said. "We're really trying to mitigate as best we can."

Contact tracing helped contain a measles outbreak in 2017 that was centered around Somali-Americans and child-care facilities. At the start of the COVID-19 pandemic this winter, Minnesota officials viewed it as part of a containment strategy to keep the virus from spreading out of control, and discussed how it could reach a point at which it would no longer be effective.

As the search for treatments and a vaccine continues, though, Ehresmann said contact tracing remains useful.

"It's the tool that is available," she said.

It could be working, too.

An increase in diagnostic testing over the past month has allowed for more contact tracing, and in the past week the growth in COVID-19 cases in Minnesota has ebbed. The 310 lab-confirmed cases on Tuesday was the lowest daily case count in the COVID-19 pandemic since April 27.

Hospitalization numbers have plateaued for now as well - at 537 COVID-19 patients admitted and 248 needing intensive care statewide. Those numbers had been rising so fast two weeks ago that hospitals in the Twin Cities were nearing capacity and diverting patients.

Ehresmann said her staff is keeping up with the goals of reaching out to people within 24 hours of positive tests, and having tracers conduct at least eight interviews per day. There is no way to know if that is reducing the number of COVID-19 cases, though.

As of May 24, 36% of people infected with COVID-19 in their communities had no known sources of exposure - preventing health officials from identifying others at risk.

Getting people to pick up their phones is one limitation, though Ehresmann said most comply with quarantine requests once they are determined to be at risk.

Adequate information is another limiting factor. About 10,000 free tests at National Guard armories over the Memorial Day weekend found 405 COVID-19 cases.

To keep up with higher-than-expected demand, the testers accepted forms from people without complete contact information. That has hindered contact tracing.

Reaching vulnerable groups

Ehresmann said it is premature to assume Minnesota has peaked in its COVID-19 cases - given the potential of the protests to spread the virus.

At a rally Monday night at the spot where Floyd died last week, about a third of the 1,000 attendees weren't wearing masks.

Contact tracing concerns raised

The state on Tuesday advised doctors to test protesters, first responders and volunteers who cleaned up after the riots - regardless of whether they had symptoms of infection.

Ehresmann said the state is looking to improve contact tracing in vulnerable populations, including in minority and immigrant communities that have been hesitant to participate. The state has offered a $1.5 million contract to firms that can increase minority participation in COVID-19 testing and contact tracing this year.

Minorities have suffered higher rates of severe COVID-19, in part because they have more chronic health problems that complicate their infections. Black people make up less than 7% of the state's population but more than 20% of its COVID-19 hospitalizations.

One concern with the focus on contact tracing is the distraction from other public health problems that haven't gone away amid the pandemic.

Minnesota's contact tracing team includes workers from other state health divisions who were reassigned, as well as volunteers and workers provided by health insurers - Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota and Medica.

Retasking foodborne disease investigators was easier with restaurants shut down, but they are starting to reopen, Ehresmann said.

Osterholm said that is a key problem if states commit too many people to contact tracing for COVID-19, without proof that it helps, and then neglect proven services.

The rate of childhood immunizations has dipped, for example, Osterholm said.

"I know that's a very bad thing," he said.

The state is seeking to outsource the case investigation and contact tracing work, in part to allow health workers to return to such tasks. It is seeking bids from firms that can manage up to 1,400 workers.

The state also hired Rose International, a St. Louis-based staffing firm, to hire about 40 contact investigators with specialized skills, including medical backgrounds and proficiency in foreign languages. The contract, which can pay out up to $3 million, runs until July 1.

Staff writer John Reinan contributed to this story.

jeremy.olson@startribune.com · 612-673-7744

howatt@startribune.com · 612-673-7192

TRACKING CORONAVIRUS

Minnesota cases, daily change*

25,508 -- Total cases

310 -- June 2 new cases

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

Contact tracing concerns raised

*Chart data is a net count of new confirmed cases minus previously announced cases that were removed by MDH on that date.

Minnesota deaths, new daily

1,072 -- Total deaths

22 -- June 2

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

U.S. cases, new daily

1,820,658 -- Total cases

21,894 -- June 1

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

U.S. deaths, new daily

105,121 -- Total deaths

740 -- June 1

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

Sources: New York Times, Minnesota Dept. of Health

Note: U.S. data lags a day behind Minnesota

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCLI. CORONAVIRUS UPDATE: 14 NEW MN DEATHS, 372 ADDITIONAL CASES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 441 words

Byline: Betsy Helfand

Highlight: The total number of Minnesotans to have died from the coronavirus hit 1,086 on Wednesday, an increase of 14 from the day before, according to the state Department of Health. An additional 372 infections were also reported, raising the number of confirmed cases in the state to 25,870. The actual number of cases in Minnesota [...]

Body

The total number of Minnesotans to have died from the coronavirus hit 1,086 on Wednesday, an increase of 14 from the day before, according to the state Department of Health.

An additional 372 infections were also reported, raising the number of confirmed cases in the state to 25,870. The actual number of cases in Minnesota - and around the country - are believed to be much higher than actually reported because testing ability is still improving from months ago.

The data report shows an additional 6,971 tests were completed on Tuesday after reporting 3,155 a day before. Testing numbers had been trending higher than 8,000, but had dropped in recent days as the Twin Cities area dealt with the unrest following George Floyd's death while in Minneapolis police custody last week and the ensuing civil unrest. The MDH Public Health Lab was closed for testing from May 30 to June 1 as a result.

CURRENT PATIENTS The state reports 537 patients with COVID-19 in hospitals around Minnesota, the same number as a day before. Of those patients 254 are in intensive care units, a slight increase from 248 on Tuesday. A total of 21,169 patients that have recovered enough to no longer need isolation. That is an increase from the 20,381 on Tuesday. WHO IS SICK? The age group with the most confirmed infections remains 30-to-39-year-olds with 5,181 cases. The age group with the most confirmed deaths in Minnesota is 80-to-89-year-olds with 374 deaths. The number of health care workers in the state infected by COVID-19 is 2,802. HYDROXYCHLOROQUINE STUDY COMPLETED

University of Minnesota researchers found that hydroxychloroquine, an anti-malaria drug, did not prevent COVID-19 any more so than a placebo. The trial, which was completed with patients who had been exposed to COVID-19, began on March 17 and participants were watched for two weeks.

Coronavirus update: 14 new MN deaths, 372 additional cases

According to a news release, researchers found that about 12 percent of participants given the drug developed the illness while 14 percent given the placebo got sick. Researchers say this is not a statistical difference. Results also show that 40 percent of those who took the drug came down with other non-serious side effects, including nausea, diarrhea or upset stomach. They did not find serious side effects.

"Our objective was to answer the question of whether hydroxychloroquine worked to prevent disease or did not work," David Boulware, the senior investigator of the trial and infectious disease physician at the U, said in a release. "While we are disappointed that this did not prevent COVID-19, we are pleased that we were able to provide a conclusive answer. Our objective was to find an answer."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCLII. COUNTY TALLIES TOLL AT LIBRARIES, OTHER SITES

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 5BLength: 514 wordsByline: ROCHELLE OLSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Nine artisan-etched windows at the Cesar Pelli-designed Central Library in downtown Minneapolis rank among the damage done to Hennepin County properties in last week's riots, the County Board learned at a meeting Tuesday.

Margo Geffen, director of property services for the county, projected grim images of the destruction inflicted on buildings in the county's urban core, including extensive vandalism to structures on E. Lake Street in south Minneapolis and W. Broadway on the North Side that provide health services.

Hennepin County is working with insurance adjusters but doesn't yet have a damage estimate for the buildings or a timeline for reopening, Geffen said. The damaged windows at the Central Library likely will be replaced with plain glass until etched ones can be installed.

Among the buildings extensively damaged was Hennepin County Library's East Lake branch in south Minneapolis, near the heavily damaged Third Police Precinct and a little more than 2 miles from the corner where police officers fatally pinned George Floyd to the street last week.

Geffen displayed two photos showing that locals had posted cardboard over the library's broken windows and written, "Respect this community-owned library."

Other damaged buildings provide an array of services to residents and are relatively new as part of the county's recent move to decentralize outside downtown Minneapolis.

At the county's South Minneapolis Regional Service Center, at Lake Street and Hiawatha Avenue, every window was broken and the building was flooded with water from fire sprinklers.

On the service center's ground floor, two private businesses - Briva Health and Seward Pharmacy - were hit. County Administrator David Hough said it's going to be "very hard" for the businesses to rebuild.

"We'll do everything we can to help," he said.

The North Minneapolis Human Services and Public Health Satellite, at 627 W. Broadway, saw significant damage. The county leases space for the satellite office above a Walgreens at Lyndale Avenue and West Broadway.

Most of the looting and destruction occurred Wednesday and Thursday. Since then county officials have worked to shore up and protect existing structures.

Geffen said the county has boarded up 20 buildings on commercial corridors and installed fencing and barricades at other major facilities, including the 24-story Government Center, the Medical Examiner's Office and HCMC in downtown Minneapolis. Those facilities also are now protected by armed guards.

During the board meeting, Commissioner Angela Conley asked Sheriff David Hutchinson about protesters, including Conley herself, being "shot at" outside Cup Foods while mourning Floyd. Hutchinson told her it's difficult to pick out the peaceful protesters from the dangerous agitators.

Afterward, Conley criticized the sheriff on social media for offering an "unwanted apology" but "no substantial answers." She said she wanted to know how he will tell the difference between peaceful protesters and bad actors after the curfew, but got no answer.

Rochelle Olson · 612-6731747 Twitter: @rochelleolson

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

Donaldson CEO sees optimism after 11.7% drop in Q3 revenue

ARTICLE CCLIII. DONALDSON CEO SEES OPTIMISM AFTER 11.7% DROP IN Q3 REVENUE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1D

Length: 379 words

Byline: PATRICK KENNEDY; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: Asia-Pacific region is recovering, he said, and signs point to more stability.

Body

Donaldson Co. CEO Tod Carpenter said the Bloomington industrial-filtration company is in good shape financially despite a global downturn because of COVID-19.

Carpenter said in an earnings call Tuesday that the Asia-Pacific economy, led by China, is now in recovery mode, and Europe is beginning to stabilize.

The company said revenue for its quarter ended April 30 was down 11.7% to $629.7 million. Third-quarter net earnings were $63.4 million, or 50 cents a share, down about 15% from the same period a year ago.

Donaldson's sales started to improve in April, and Carpenter said results were slightly better than anticipated.

"We are well-positioned to deal with continued unevenness, which will likely extend beyond the end of our fiscal year in July," Carpenter said in the company's earnings statement. "We have further enhanced our already-strong liquidity position, and we will maintain our historically disciplined approach to capital deployment, giving us necessary flexibility to respond to demand changes while continuing to prioritize investments in long-term capabilities."

Despite the positive signs globally, uncertainty remains, so the company is withholding guidance for the remainder of the fiscal year and also for fiscal 2021.

Europe, despite stabilizing, is still in various stages of reopening, Carpenter said in the earnings call. North and South American markets remain challenging with varying degrees of government-mandated economic lockdowns still in effect.

Donaldson's strategy is to support different regions of the world with manufacturing locations in more than 40 countries. That has given the company broad geographic diversity in responding to the global coronavirus pandemic and the ability to adjust production to local health, business and government conditions, company officials said.

Donaldson CEO sees optimism after 11.7% drop in Q3 revenue

Carpenter concluded the earnings call by addressing the events in the Twin Cities last week, offering condolences to the family of George Floyd, who died in Minneapolis police custody, and pledging that Donaldson is committed to sustainable change and is united with its local communities and the nation to stop cycles of discrimination.

Donaldson shares closed Tuesday at $49.04, up 2.3%. Year-to-date Donaldson share are down 14%.

Patrick Kennedy · 612-673-7926

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

Fighting to resurrect: Black-owned salon burned to the ground

ARTICLE CCLIV. FIGHTING TO RESURRECT: BLACK-OWNED SALON BURNED TO THE GROUND

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 370 words

Byline: Iain Carlos

Body

After years of work, Flora's Hair Designs, a black-owned hair salon in North Minneapolis, was starting to see earnings pick up. Covid-19 swiftly killed that purple patch. Then, four days after the death of George Floyd, Flora's was burning.

Flora Westbrook, the salon's owner, set up shop at 921 W. Broadway Ave. in 1986. She has developed a strong connection with the area - some of her customers tell her their grandmothers used to come to Flora's to get their hair done, Westbrook said.

She got a call saying that her business was in flames Friday evening. She rushed to the scene to be greeted by a crowd, a firetruck and an inferno. The two buildings next to hers, a MetroPCS and Olympic Cafe, were engulfed as well.

Fighting to resurrect: Black-owned salon burned to the ground

"I understand that they were protesting about Mr. Floyd and my sympathy goes to him," Westbrook said. "But this is beyond that. Why would you come and do this to us? Why would you take our business away like this?"

Westbrooks couldn't bear to watch. She got in her car and drove away. The fire appears to have been intentionally set, but she's not sure who started it.

"That was my life; that was everything to me," she said. "If they only knew my story, they wouldn't have done what they did. They don't know the things I endured, the things I went through to try and keep my business. It wasn't easy for a black-owned business to stay there that many years and to survive."

A GoFundMe page aimed to raise $30,000 to help with rebuilding efforts. It easily cleared that amount, raising $64,000 so far, and the goal has been boosted to $100,000.

"It makes me feel so great," said owner Flora Westbrooks. "I'm so grateful, so thankful for that, and I'm just hoping that it goes where I can just rebuild. I just want to rebuild my business, that's all I want to do."

Westbrooks is worried her financial situation is too precarious to apply for a loan, though she is considering applying for a PPP loan after a conversation with a banker.

"I just want it to keep growing, keep growing, rebuild," Westbrooks said. "Because I'm still hurting inside. I just want my store back, that's all I want."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 10, 2020

Guard waits 'for the scales to tip'

ARTICLE CCLV. GUARD WAITS 'FOR THE SCALES TO TIP'

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 1146 wordsByline: REID FORGRAVE; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: National Guard assists state and local law enforcement to face historic protests.Body

Tech Sgt. William Hildebrand stood in a camouflage uniform as the sun went down on another night of protests in the Twin Cities, and as thousands of Minnesota National Guard soldiers and Air National Guard airmen helped keep a tenuous peace.

Hildenbrand is 35 years old. He has three children. He worries how they're dealing with 2020, from the global pandemic to the protests and violence in their home state. He has spent nearly half his life in the Minnesota Air National Guard. He works for U.S. Bank, managing a team that helps employees through serious life crises: domestic violence, mental health issues, the worst moments of their lives. He has shared select details of the past few days with his kids - that he spent Friday night on a concrete floor at the armory in St. Paul, that he is now sleeping on a cot, that he hasn't had a shower in three days - and he constantly assures them he's safe. He served in Iraq for six months in 2010, during the drawdown, and says that being activated for the protests and riots after George Floyd's killing at the hands of Minneapolis police is much more stressful than Iraq.

Because this is his home.

On Minnesota's steamiest night of the year so far, he would have liked nothing more than to be on the deck at his home in Champlin, 26 miles away, drinking a beer.

Instead, Hildebrand was standing outside Regions Hospital in St. Paul, a gas mask strapped to his waist, an M4 rifle slung over his shoulder, waiting to see if Monday night's peaceful protests at the State Capitol would turn violent.

"You're just waiting for the scales to tip one way or the other," Hildebrand said. "Things are either going to get better or they're going to get worse. We're not going to maintain this kind of riot purgatory. You're just kind of waiting. All of that plays into the human dynamics of it. People gotta feel heard. People gotta speak their piece. But we also have to defend the city, protect the people. It's a balance."

Guard waits 'for the scales to tip'

This is life for Minnesota's citizen-soldiers and citizen-airmen now: Long days and tense nights as they continue the Guard's largest domestic deployment in its 164-year history.

"When it's sunny out, your guard is never down, but your mind is more at ease," said Airman 1st Class Jordan Hopwood. "As soon as that sun touches the horizon, you're getting ready for it to be a long night. And that's been since the start. I don't think anybody is really scared or nervous. We're just like, 'How long is this going to go on for?'"

About Hopwood: He is 23 and grew up in Woodbury. He is biracial. His mother used to be a St. Paul police officer. He loves playing his Xbox: "Call of Duty: Modern Warfare" or "NHL 20." He plays left wing for the 133rd Airlift Wing's hockey team. Fellow Airmen tease him by calling him Hollywood, since he's done modeling since he was a kid.

A security forces squadron of 45 airmen from the Minnesota Air National Guard's 133rd Airlift Wing, based at the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport, started their Monday evening at Jimmy Lee Recreation Center across the street from St. Paul's Central High School. They were tasked with the same mission as all 7,000 Minnesota National Guard and Air National Guard troops called up last week by Gov. Tim Walz: To assist state and local law enforcement in the face of historic protests and riots that started here and spread across the nation.

The heat was beating down: Still 90-plus degrees an hour or so before dusk. Hopwood's shadow grew long. A convoy of Minnesota Air National Guard troops combined with St. Paul police officers and drove to a public works building to gas up. As they pulled out of the parking lot, a Jeep Cherokee on Marshall Avenue stopped with its windows down. A young man and woman, both white, extended middle fingers for more than a minute as troops moved out.

By 8 p.m., the squad was milling around a parking lot next to the Cathedral of St. Paul. Church bells chimed. Then a St. Paul officer shouted, "Loading up!" The convoy turned onto Kellogg Boulevard and headed toward the Capitol. A jogger paused and stared. A protester held up a sign: "ABOLISH THE POLICE!"

They came to a halt between Regions Hospital and the Harold E. Stassen Office Building: A couple blocks from the Capitol protests, close enough to react quickly but far enough away so they weren't seen as a provocation. They parked in a line of 20 or so police vehicles. One Airman ate an MRE, Meal Ready to Eat: A taco, room temperature. Catered dinners soon arrived. Humvees blocked roads to the Capitol so that only foot traffic could come through. Airmen waved to nurses who gathered at hospital windows to watch.

"Thank you for your service!" a woman shouted as she drove past. A waxing moon rose in the clear sky.

The crowd of peaceful protesters at the Capitol dwindled as the 10 p.m. curfew crept closer. By 10 p.m., perhaps 30 remained. Those who remained were arrested.

"We want to be there if things go bad," Hildebrand said, "but we also want to allow them the opportunity to peacefully do their thing. Because that's their constitutional right. They need to be able to do that. And sometimes our presence can be an agitation if we're there - if they're peaceful and we're coming in, rolling deep, that can be agitating.

Guard waits 'for the scales to tip'

"It's better to be a couple blocks behind and let them do their thing and still be there - and protect the people from having the city burn down."

The city wasn't burning down on Monday as it had been just days before. Senior Airman Nathan Van Beusekom (22, a full-time student at University of Northwestern, St. Paul, finance major, football player, married) has lived here all his life: Turtle Lake Elementary School, Chippewa Middle School, Mounds View High School. He was part of a "snatch-and-grab" team with St. Paul police. They look for bad actors. Over the weekend at the Capitol, his squad hauled away a rowdy man accused of punching a woman during the protest.

Like so many across the Twin Cities, Van Beusekom both appreciates the motive behind the protests - "It's a worthy cause," he said - and hates when they turn violent.

Amid the past week's destruction, Van Beusekom has seen some light.

"Those moments when law enforcement and protesters come together and have a moment - it's just completely opposing what's out there in people's minds," he said. "I had one of those moments yesterday, with the Army colonel out there, the one in charge of everything out by the Capitol. He took all his gear off: His helmet, his vest, his weapons. He went outside the fence and started talking to the protesters when they were all riled up. He got them to kneel with him, talk with him. They were taking pictures with him. He ended up de-escalating the situation all by himself."

"There's just a bigger message out there to take in," he said. "We're all people, and we have to love each other."

Reid Forgrave · 612-673-4647

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCLVI. HACKERS FORCE MINNESOTA SENATE WEBSITE OFFLINE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 5BLength: 268 wordsByline: TOREY VAN OOT; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Hackers forced the Minnesota Senate website offline Tuesday, the latest in a series of cyberattacks targeting state and local computer systems.

Secretary of the Senate Cal Ludeman wrote in an e-mail to staff that the Senate's server was "hacked and accessed for several minutes" starting at 4:24 a.m. Tuesday. Senate information technology employees "brought down the server as a precaution" as they worked with Minnesota IT Services and the FBI to trace what was accessed, his e-mail said.

While the hack hit a file that includes the Senate Wi-Fi password, login information for senators and staff was not accessed. The Wi-Fi password has been reset.

Ludeman said the security breach came from the same hacker group that targeted 10 state agencies, including the governor's office, in recent days.

It's unknown whether the attacks are related to demonstrations and unrest sparked by the death of George Floyd. But Gov. Tim Walz said at a weekend news conference that "a very sophisticated denial-of-service attack on all state computers was executed" as the state readied its response to riots on Saturday.

Such denial-of-service attacks send high levels of external traffic to a website's servers, causing the site to freeze or crash.

"That's not somebody sitting in their basement," Walz said at the time.

City of Minneapolis websites also experienced outages due to a cyberattack early Thursday morning. A city spokeswoman said there was no evidence of a data breach and that most of the sites were back online by 9 a.m. that day.

Staff writer Liz Navratil contributed to this report.

Torey Van Oot · 651-925-5049

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

Letters: SPPD should extend its purview

ARTICLE CCLVII. LETTERS: SPPD SHOULD EXTEND ITS PURVIEW

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 289 words

Byline: Letter Writers

Highlight: A modest proposal I propose that our Saint Paul Police Department extend its purview to the City of Minneapolis. I'll bet things would work out better that way. In exchange, Minneapolis could come over and pick up our trash. Joel Clemmer, St. Paul The world's concern The last few days have of course called [...]

Body

I propose that our Saint Paul Police Department extend its purview to the City of Minneapolis. I'll bet things would work out better that way.

In exchange, Minneapolis could come over and pick up our trash.

Joel Clemmer, St. Paul

The last few days have of course called for headline coverage of matters connected with the death of George Floyd.

On May 29, the same day that you first covered the story, a three-inch column in section 3B reported that "U.N. warns of global famine"; the pandemic would cause "unimaginable devastation and suffering around the world" with historic levels of hunger and famine and up to 1.6 billion people unable to earn a living unless action is taken now."

Granted that the Floyd case called for front-page coverage. However, the press as the "fourth estate" in a democracy bears responsibility "to inform, criticize and stimulate debate" (Peter Millett).

I would hope for more than a mere 3 inches of column given to what should be the world's concern for the billions who suffer hunger and disease for lack of food and necessary health care - and for the thousands who die daily.

The Pioneer Press often does well in this regard. I hope that you will continue in this vein and that the current world concerns for poverty, hunger, disease and climate change will find adequate reporting in your paper.

Maynard W. Dorow, Arden Hills

Letters: SPPD should extend its purview

Letters: Progressives have controlled Minneapolis for 40 years. Hold them accountable Tainted: Hey, bicyclists, what's wrong with your special bikeway? Letters: You own this, Minneapolis and Minnesota Democrats Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates? Letters: Address the ways we deny people their human dignity and rights

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCLVIII. MAYOR RESIGNS OVER INFLAMMATORY MEME ABOUT PROTESTERS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3BLength: 507 wordsByline: JOHN REINAN; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: In Sauk Rapids, two volunteer firefighters were fired for offensive social media posts.Body

The mayor of Blackduck, Minn., resigned Monday after posting a Facebook meme that appeared to support running over protesters.

Rudy Patch issued a resignation letter and deleted his post. It showed what was apparently a bloody Jeep with the caption, "I don't know what you mean by protesters on the freeway. I came through no problem."

On Sunday night, a tanker truck drove into a large crowd of marchers on Interstate 35W near downtown Minneapolis protesting the death of George Floyd. Nobody was seriously injured, but witnesses described it as a terrifying event. Officials have said they don't believe the truck driver was intentionally attempting to drive over protesters.

He was released from jail on Tuesday without charges.

Blackduck, a town of about 850 residents, is in Beltrami County about 25 miles northeast of Bemidji.

In his resignation letter, Patch said his sharing of the meme was a misguided attempt to show how dangerous it could be to protest on a highway.

"I have made a mistake by sharing a post without the correct context behind it," Patch wrote. "It is not and never has been my intention to support running over protesters.

"Social media can be used as a good tool for people to spread their messages," he wrote. "In this instance, it is a life lesson for me about how things put on social media can be mistaken without a context to back it up."

In Sauk Rapids, Minn., two volunteer firefighters were fired on Monday for offensive social media posts.

"Threats of violence and racism are unacceptable and will not be tolerated by the city of Sauk Rapids," officials said in a news release signed by the city's mayor, city administrator, fire chief and police chief.

Mayor resigns over inflammatory meme about protesters

According to screen captures shared by UniteCloud, a social justice organization in the St. Cloud area, one of the firefighters, Tyler Heinen, called for deadly violence against protesters in at least two Facebook posts.

The other ousted firefighter, Tom Muehlbauer, shared a post similar to Patch's, showing a semitrailer truck with a bloody, damaged front end that referred to protesters.

Muehlbauer is remorseful and has been communicating with UniteCloud, said Natalie Ringsmuth, the group's founder and director.

"We are actually in contact with Tom, talking back and forth with him," she said. "He just said to me, 'I don't know why I did this. I've lost everything I love.' "

Ringsmuth said Heinen hasn't been in contact with her group, adding that Heinen's primary employer, the owner of a small construction company, made an angry social media post, "doubling down" on the sentiments Heinen expressed. That post has since been deleted.

It's important to have dialogue in situations such as this, Ringsmuth added.

"My organization hopes that we can provide a path to get back into relationships with these folks, because they're part of our community," she said. "Just because they're not firefighters any more, they're still members of our community. And some people won't want to have relationships with them, and that's OK, too."

John Reinan · 612-673-7402

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCLIX. MEMORIAL TO BE AT NORTH CENTRAL UNIVERSITY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 12ALength: 684 wordsByline: PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

North Central University in Minneapolis will be the site for a private memorial service for George Floyd, the man whose death during a police encounter more than a week ago has provoked an unprecedented reaction throughout the nation and beyond.

The service, announced Tuesday, will be from 1 to 3 p.m. Thursday in the Lindquist Sanctuary of the Trask Word & Worship Center. The Rev. Al Sharpton will deliver the eulogy, the civil rights leader's National Action Network said.

The gathering at the school in the city's Elliot Park neighborhood is the first of three memorial events culminating with Floyd's funeral and burial in Houston, where the 46-year-old man lived for most of his life.

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey said he will be among those attending at North Central.

The campus of 1,200 students tucked in the southeast corner of downtown was chosen to host the memorial through a connection on its faculty. Prof. Ellington Porter has a brother on the national task force associated with Sharpton's organization, said North Central President Scott Hagan.

Hagan said he's confident that the sanctuary "is a very normal space to help the family and put aside the theater and noise that is going on."

Along with Sharpton's eulogy, Floyd's family members will participate, and a statement from family attorney Benjamin Crump will be read.

North Central said the memorial is limited to family, friends and invited guests. The event will be carried by livestream on local media outlets, the school added.

Late last week, as the sometimes violent and destructive unrest struck many blocks in Minneapolis, Hagan wrote in an open letter that "as a Christian university ... I believe North Central University is poised as a healing agent in downtown Minneapolis."

Memorial to be at North Central University

Sharpton was in Minneapolis Thursday and spoke at E. 38th Street and S. Chicago Avenue, the corner where Floyd was detained until he fell into unconsciousness. Sharpton was accompanied by Gwen Carr, the mother of Eric Garner, who was killed by New York City police in 2014.

One of the challenges of staging the Minneapolis gathering and the others is working within social distancing rules in place to restrict the spread of the novel coronavirus.

North Central's sanctuary seats roughly 1,000 and can expand capacity by another 2,000 or so because of the nearby gymnasium and other adjacent space, Hagan said.

Under an executive order from Gov. Tim Walz, this type of gathering appears to fall under these conditions: organizers must ensure a minimum of 6 feet of physical distance between households, and occupancy must not exceed 25% of normal capacity as determined by the fire marshal, with a maximum of 250 people in a single, self-contained space.

Hagan said the memorial will resemble more of "a small family event," and he is confident the school can adhere to the social distancing restrictions.

A statement from North Central said it is working with the service's planners and Walz's office "to ensure appropriate measures will be in place for health and safety related to COVID-19. When finalized, these measures will be communicated to all guests and media attending the funeral."

Another remembrance is scheduled for Saturday in North Carolina, the state where Floyd was born. A public viewing is scheduled from 10 a.m. to noon CDT and then a memorial at 2 p.m. at the Cape Fear Conference B Headquarters in Raeford.

Floyd's funeral is scheduled for 11 a.m. June 9 in Houston at the Fountain of Praise, with burial to follow. There will be a viewing the day before at the same location from noon to 6 p.m.

Crump, the attorney for the Floyd family, said Tuesday on CNN that Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden is expected to attend the Houston funeral.

Boxing legend Floyd Mayweather, who lives in Las Vegas and has never met Floyd, said he will be paying for the funeral.

The Fort Bend Memorial Planning Center, just south of Houston, is handling arrangements in all three states. Center operator Bobby Swearington said additional details will be announced soon.

Staff writer Liz Navratil contributed to this report.

Paul Walsh · 612-673-4482

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

Minneapolis ends school resource officer program. Will St. Paul be next?

ARTICLE CCLX. [MINNEAPOLIS ENDS SCHOOL RESOURCE OFFICER PROGRAM.
WILL ST. PAUL BE NEXT?](#)

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 320 words

Byline: Josh Verges

Highlight: The St. Paul school board will re-evaluate its school resource officer program next week after their Minneapolis counterparts voted Tuesday to break ties with that city's police department. The St. Paul district is paying up to $775,000 this school year to station seven police officers at public high schools in the city. The one-year contract [...]

Body

The St. Paul school board will re-evaluate its school resource officer program next week after their Minneapolis counterparts voted Tuesday to break ties with that city's police department.

The St. Paul district is paying up to $775,000 this school year to station seven police officers at public high schools in the city. The one-year contract expires next month.

"The Board plans to review our relationship with the SPPD in light of current events. We are prepared to take action on this important matter with thoughtful dialogue," board vice chair Jeanelle Foster said in a statement released by the school district Wednesday.

The contract discussion will be part of Tuesday's board meeting, but any formal action would wait till June 23.

The St. Paul district began reforming its program in 2016 amid police scrutiny following a suburban officer's shooting death of school food service worker Philando Castile and the rough arrest of a student at Central High School.

School-based officers no longer arrest students for minor crimes, and any arrests they do make require a school administrator's involvement. They also get training in racial equity and nonviolent intervention.

Board members have debated the merits of the program each year, fretting over the financial and psychological costs of having armed officers in schools. But the most recent vote, last December, was .

St. Paul student surveys have found overwhelming support for the program.

Outrage over the May 25 death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody led a unanimous Minneapolis school board on Tuesday to terminate its relationship with their police department.

Minneapolis ends school resource officer program. Will St. Paul be next?

Now, some are calling for the St. Paul district to do the same with St. Paul police. St. Paul school board chairwoman Marny Xiong, 31, dies of COVID-19 unanimous in favor of another one-year contract St. Paul school board postpones meeting on school police after chairwoman's death

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCLXI. MINORITY NEIGHBORHOODS STAGGERED BY DESTRUCTION

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1205 wordsByline: MAYA RAO; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

As fire and riots raged around Lake Street and Hiawatha Avenue last week, several employees of an American Indian nonprofit called Migizi stayed behind to guard their building.

They wrote "native youth center" on the window to discourage attacks. Members of the American Indian Movement came to help. But rioters set fire to the block anyway. The inferno forced out the building's protectors around 3:30 Friday morning.

When the nonprofit's executive director, Kelly Drummer, returned to the scene a few hours later and saw the destruction, she said, "I knelt down and I just cried."

The riots and arson that followed protests of George Floyd's death have devastated organizations and businesses that serve communities of color. Destruction from the south side's Lake Street to West Broadway in north Minneapolis has hit immigrant- and minority-owned businesses already struggling amid the pandemic-induced shutdown. Now, ethnically diverse neighborhoods are grappling with the loss of jobs, services and investments.

"People right now are going to want to stay away from Lake Street and that is understandable," said Ricardo Hernandez, who owns an ice cream shop there called La Michoacana Purepecha. Workers gave away free Popsicles over the weekend after the shop lost power in the riots.

"It's very hard to see your whole life savings go down like this. We used up all our money to build something nice for ... not just the Latino community, but everybody," Hernandez said.

Although La Michoacana Purepecha had only minor damage from vandals, he expects a loss of business as many nearby establishments burned and the area remains under threat. His 20 employees, all Latino, are out of work until the neighborhood returns to normal.

On the same block, immigrant Luis Tamay saved for more than a decade to open his Ecuadorian restaurant, El Sabor Chuchi, seven years ago. His specialty was a soup called encebollado, made with tuna fish, yuca, fried plantain and onions. Tamay guarded his lifelong dream the first few nights of the riots, but stayed home on Friday night to abide by the curfew, assuming that he had nothing to fear with the National Guard in town.

He was aghast to see Facebook videos showing El Sabor Chuchi in flames - and even more so when he called 911 for help in vain. By the time Tamay got to his restaurant Saturday morning, it was burned to the ground, along with establishments on either side. He didn't have insurance, he said, because quotes for the neighborhood were too high. The father of two was already working hard to pay his employees and other bills.

"There's the freezer right there; the kitchen was right there," Tamay said, pointing as he climbed the pile of rubble. "Seventeen years of work is gone."

A building owned by Latina entrepreneur Maya Santamaria also burned down - and with it, the Spanish language radio station La Raza.

"Small, minority business owners found themselves with the businesses that they worked their fingers to the bone building destroyed, looted, vandalized and burned down," Santamaria wrote on a GoFundMe page. "Some had no insurance. Others have no resources."

Jeff Lusuer empathized with the protesters as he boarded up his West Broadway barbershop, where looters had broken in and stole some supplies. His other barbershop, on Lake Street, burned down amid the riots. Lusuer said his insurance should cover the losses, and that people have a right to be angry and the protests are a way to get their point across. As a black man, he said, he's fed up with police too.

"Even though it hurt my businesses, I understand," Lusuer said. As unrest grew last week, Areal Crawford noticed that some establishments on Lake Street highlighted the fact that they were owned by people of color in hopes of warding off attacks. The Himalayan Restaurant across the way had posted "minority-owned business," and A & M Disaster Services nearby posted signs that said "Black owned."

Crawford's family lives off 29th Avenue behind O'Reilly Auto Parts, which was tagged with graffiti and burglarized. He feared that if arsonists set fire to the building it would quickly engulf his family's home a few feet away. So he picked up a can of spray paint left by vandals and wrote: "Please don't burn black home next door thanks."

"I saw the minority-owned business signs going up and thought, 'If that's what it takes to get people to not burn [expletive] down, then that's what it takes,' " Crawford said.

His father, Ken Crawford, stood guard at O'Reilly for days as rioters with golf clubs, baseball bats and tire irons trawled the neighborhood. He said he told them that if they set the building on fire that he had a gun and wasn't afraid to use it. The antagonists were racially mixed at first, he said, but were nearly all white by Thursday night as protesters took over the Third Precinct. What troubled him and his family most, including wife Nina Sobotta, was that many of the troublemakers appeared to be outsiders.

"I don't want people from different neighborhoods coming to tear up my stuff - this is all we've got," said Ken Crawford, scanning the lot behind his house, which was littered with Cub Foods shopping carts that had been dumped by looters.

"Now the whole community is suffering," he said.

Minority neighborhoods staggered by destruction

Back at the 43-year-old nonprofit Migizi, which supports American Indian youth, Drummer recalled how she had helped raise $2 million to move into the new building on S. 27th Avenue last summer. The restaurant Gandhi Mahal, a few doors down, sent over food for the grand opening.

On Friday afternoon, Drummer gazed at the charred Migizi building as 20 officers formed a phalanx to block off the street and firefighters trained their hoses on the collapsed, smoldering Gandhi Mahal. That restaurant, too, had posted a minority-owned business sign.

"We're policing ourselves," Drummer said. "They didn't care until after the building burned."

While staff managed to save important cultural items from the fire, the loss of the space will be felt by young people, said youth development specialist LeVi Boucher.

"They have said, 'Migizi is my home and I'm watching it burn' and it didn't have to be that way," Boucher said.

Though not the epicenter of the riots, West Broadway also saw a string of businesses raided and damaged. It had been the city's pre-eminent commercial corridor in the mid-20th century but was devastated by the flight of white and black middle-class residents after the 1960s race riots and the burning of nearby Plymouth Avenue. Broadway has gradually seen progress as business and community leaders pushed for redevelopment.

"You got the sense that [West Broadway] was slowly making its way forward," said Don Samuels, a former school board and City Council member representing the area.

So he was horrified to see the raiding of Broadway Liquor Outlet and the gutting of U.S. Bank and other structures. Looters also hit a Walgreens and Cub Foods, the main grocery store in the area, which suffered damage. Now, residents of the mostly black neighborhood have no convenient way to get food and other supplies.

"Will it bounce back in a year or two or is this a death blow for decades?" Samuels asked. "Will people have the resources to rebuild?"

Maya Rao · 612-673-4210

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXII. TAWANNA BLACK WANTS TO SEE A FUNERAL FOR RACISM

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 959 wordsByline: Carrigan MillerBody

Tawanna Black is CEO and founder of the Center for Economic Inclusion, a St. Paul-based nonprofit organization that aims to close the wage gaps between white and BIPOC (black, indigenous and people of color) people in the Twin Cities.

Tawanna is also a thought leader, and recently wrote for the Brookings Institution about public policy decisions that hurt black people.

On Monday, she spoke with the Business Journal about rebuilding Minneapolis after a week of looting and arson, how CEOs can push social change, and how she has personally reacted to Minnesota's hardest week in living memory. The following interview has been edited for length and clarity.

I'd like to get your personal impressions of the past week. How are you feeling?

I am feeling continued pain, for both the family of George Floyd and our entire community. We have experienced, I think, one of the most painful, visible murders of an unarmed black man that our country has seen publicly in some time. It's yet another painful reminder that we have not ever had racial justice in this country.

These protests feel different than other recent protests, like after Philando Castile was killed. Do you agree?

I do. I also would say we are still separating the protests from the way the protests have been infiltrated by white supremacists and people who want to cause destruction. For the actual protestors, I think some of the difference is people who have never protested before have now seen enough that they're scared for where our country is headed and are saying, "I need to march. I need to take my children to march. I need to go be a part of something that's bigger than myself."

You met with Gov. Tim Walz this weekend. How did that go?

Yes, this weekend I organized a meeting between black leaders and Gov. Walz. Some were business leaders, some were organizers, some were nonprofit leaders. We're starting to talk about what economic rebuilding looks like, knowing that African Americans have been widely disenfranchised in this state for many decades. And so when you add Covid-19 to that, which has disproportionately left African Americans unemployed, and see so many of our businesses and nonprofits burning down and suffering economically, we need to be partnering between the government, the private sector and nonprofits to ensure that we are building a meaningful and intentional plan.

Do you have a roadmap of what rebuilding will look like?

We have a roadmap for what it should start to look like. What's most important is that it is African Americans who are driving that plan for African Americans, but that we also start to build plans for our indigenous communities and for Asian and Latino communities, as well. For far too long we've had other institutions trying to lead plans for communities of color and hence we have not made progress.

Can you say a little more?

We released a roadmap for economic recovery following Covid-19 about a month ago. We are following that roadmap. We've got to be both building businesses in communities of color and ensuring that those businesses have dollars to grow at scale. Right now, we have businesses, but those businesses are not at scale so they're not able to employ a large number of people of color and pay family-sustaining wages. At the same time, we're rooting out racism in our private sector. Particularly in a market like the Twin Cities where we have so many large corporations, we need to be intentional in thinking about how we get the C-suites of those corporations to reflect the racial diversity in the Twin Cities.

What sort of support are you seeing from CEOs?

You know, the Center for Economic Inclusion issued a statement to the CEOs asking for really direct commitments, and they put out a letter the next day. The letter, while nice, speaks about desiring nice neighborhoods and things like that. Which is nice, but it's still not getting to a commitment to racial equity in wages. It's still not getting to a commitment to stopping the injustices that exist in Minneapolis and St. Paul. That won't be achieved by letters, press conferences and statements. That will be achieved by them using their power in the same way that they drive meaningful tax incentives and other policy changes that they need to cultivate business.

Tawanna Black wants to see a funeral for racism

Is there anything else our readers need to know?

I think it's important to note the number of people who are working hard to ensure that we heal. That can't be stressed enough. I actually am right now looking at letters that neighbors in Roseville woke up to on their lawns that are just hate-filled. We go to work every day and don't know that our black and indigenous and co-workers of color are experiencing hate in ways we have no idea about. They don't know that you have neighbors in Roseville who woke up to signs on their lawns telling them, "I'm going to torch your home." I don't think those signs or letters are left by their neighbors, but nonetheless, now they've living in fear. I've had people warning me all weekend about my Twitter feed and how I should be scared. I went to bed Saturday night with my kids in my bed because I was scared after all the warnings I got, and I'm living in a suburb for God's sakes. I just want readers to know they have no idea the weight that people of color are carrying every day, all day long. And now we have a real chance to not just have a funeral for another man, but to have a funeral for racism if we want to do this work and do it right.

Correction:

This story previously stated Tawanna Black is affiliated with the Northside Funders Group. She is no longer a part of that organization; MSPBJ regrets the error.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCLXIII. THE LATEST: EX-CIA OPERATIVE VALERIE PLAME LOSES N.M. RACE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1586 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: The Latest on Tuesday's primary elections (all times EDT):Body

By The Associated Press

The Latest on Tuesday's primary elections (all times EDT):

1:05 a.m.

Former CIA operative Valerie Plame has lost her race in the Democratic primary for an open seat representing New Mexico in Congress.

Attorney Teresa Leger Fernandez overcame six competitors to win her party's nomination to succeed U.S. Rep. Ben Ray Luján as he runs for the U.S. Senate. Sen. Tom Udall is retiring.

In her first run for public office, Plame harnessed her fame as a former U.S. intelligence operative whose secret identity was exposed shortly after her diplomat husband disputed U.S. intelligence used to justify the 2003 Iraq invasion.

Leger Fernandez was making her first bid for public office as a professional advocate for Native American communities and voting rights issues.

She could become the first woman to represent the state's 3rd Congressional District, a Democrat-heavy district.

12:10 a.m.

Controversial Iowa Republican congressman Steve King has lost his bid to be nominated for a 10th term.

The 71-year-old Iowa native faced four challengers in Tuesday's Iowa primary. Topping the field is a well-funded state senator, Randy Feenstra, who offered support for President Donald Trump, hardline immigration policies and other conservative views without King's baggage.

The Latest: Ex-CIA operative Valerie Plame loses N.M. race

Provocative statements piling up over the years have been a drag on King's latest campaign. He has compared immigrants crossing the border illegally to cattle, made light of rape and incest in defending his anti-abortion views, and wondered aloud when the term "white supremacist" became offensive.

Last year House Republicans stripped King of his committee assignments after his remarks seeming to defend white nationalism appeared in The New York Times. King said they were taken out of context.

Critics in both parties have charged that King is no longer an effective representative for Iowa's 4th Congressional District on agriculture and other local issues. Worse for King, even his supporters worried that he could lose the seat to a Democratic challenger if he were nominated again.

10:45 p.m.

Joe Biden has scored a clean sweep of the seven states conducting Democratic presidential primaries on Tuesday, not at all a surprise given that the presumptive Democratic nominee has no active opposition.

Yet the delegate haul is important to Biden's goal of gaining enough delegates to claim the Democratic nomination before the party's summer convention. Tuesday's results may leave Biden just short of the 1,991 delegates he needs, but primaries next week in Georgia and West Virginia could put him over the top.

Of Tuesday's elections, Pennsylvania's could add the most delegates to Biden's count. He also won contests in Maryland, Indiana, Rhode Island, New Mexico, Montana and South Dakota.

Also choosing a nominee Tuesday are voters in the District of Columbia. Those results are pending.

10:44 p.m.

Dozens of Maryland primary voters are waiting in line to vote two hours after polls were scheduled to close.

At one location in Baltimore, roughly 100 people were still waiting to cast their ballots around 10 p.m. Tuesday. Another location had about 50 people in line.

The voting was being slowed by the limited number of people allowed inside the polling stations because of the coronavirus pandemic. Most voting took place by mail because of the virus.

However, elections officials allowed six in-person voting centers in Baltimore over concerns that ballots were not arriving in the mail as scheduled.

The highest-profile contest on the ballot is the Baltimore mayoral election. Voters are looking for a leader who can get violent crime under control, address deep-rooted poverty and restore trust in local government after years of scandal and dysfunction.

10:19 p.m.

The Latest: Ex-CIA operative Valerie Plame loses N.M. race

Joe Biden has won the Montana presidential primary as he advances toward the goal of earning enough delegates to claim the Democratic Party nomination before the summer convention.

The primary in Montana was conducted by mail in an effort to limit the spread of the coronavirus.

Biden has also won Tuesday contests in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Indiana, Rhode Island, New Mexico and South Dakota.

With no active opposition, Biden is already the party's presumed nominee. But the former vice president's haul of delegates from Tuesday's voting pushes him closer to the 1,911 delegates he needs to claim the Democratic presidential nomination.

Voters in several states and the District of Columbia have participated in primary elections Tuesday. They coincide with a time of crisis across the country. Voters have had to navigate both health concerns over the coronavirus and protests against racism and police brutality.

9:30 p.m.

Democrat Joe Biden has won the New Mexico presidential primary, his latest victory in Tuesday's voting as he marches toward earning enough delegates to claim the party nomination before the summer convention.

New Mexico Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham has pledged to help Biden connect with racial- and ethnic-minority voters in the state. She has also been talked about as a possible Biden running mate.

Biden has also won Tuesday contests in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Indiana, Rhode Island and South Dakota.

With no active opposition, Biden is already the party's presumed nominee. But the former vice president's haul of delegates from Tuesday's voting pushes him closer to the 1,911 delegates he needs to claim the Democratic presidential nomination.

Voters in several states and the District of Columbia are participating in primary elections. They coincide with a time of crisis across the country. Voters have had to navigate both health concerns over the coronavirus and protests against racism and police brutality.

9:13 p.m.

Democrat Joe Biden has won the South Dakota presidential primary, racking up another victory in Tuesday's voting as he marches toward earning enough delegates to claim the party nomination before the summer convention.

The secretary of state's office sent absentee ballot applications to all registered voters in South Dakota in late April amid the coronavirus pandemic.

Biden has also won primaries in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Indiana.

The Latest: Ex-CIA operative Valerie Plame loses N.M. race

With no active opposition, Biden is already the party's presumed nominee. But the former vice president's haul of delegates from Tuesday's voting pushes him closer to the 1,911 delegates he needs to claim the Democratic presidential nomination.

Voters in several states and the District of Columbia are participating in primary elections. They coincide with a time of crisis across the country. Voters have had to navigate both health concerns over the coronavirus and protests against racism and police brutality.

8:55 p.m.

Joe Biden has won Maryland's Democratic presidential primary.

Biden was declared the winner of Tuesday's primary on a night when six other states and the District of Columbia are voting in the presidential nomination contest. The result has been expected because Biden's rivals have already dropped out of the race.

Voters in Maryland were strongly urged to vote by mail because of concerns about further spread of the coronavirus.

Biden's haul of delegates from his Maryland win and victories in Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Indianan push him closer to the 1,911 delegates he needs to capture the Democratic presidential nomination.

8:40 p.m.

Democrat Joe Biden has won Pennsylvania's presidential primary, which promises the biggest haul of delegates among the seven states choosing their presidential nominees on Tuesday.

Biden has also won the Democratic primaries in Rhode Island and Indiana.

With no active opposition, Biden is already the party's presumed nominee. But the former vice president's haul of delegates from Tuesday's voting pushes him closer to the 1,911 delegates he needs to claim the Democratic presidential nomination.

Voters in several states are participating in primary elections. They coincide with a time of crisis across the country. Voters have had to navigate both health concerns over the coronavirus and protests against racism and police brutality.

7:05 p.m.

Democrat Joe Biden and Republican Donald Trump have won Indiana's presidential primary.

Indiana is among the states and the District of Columbia with primaries on Tuesday. Pennsylvania offers the day's biggest trove of presidential delegates.

The Latest: Ex-CIA operative Valerie Plame loses N.M. race

The Democratic result in Indiana was expected because Biden's rivals have already dropped out of the race.

The former vice president's haul of delegates from the Indiana victory pushes him closer to the 1,911 delegates he needs to capture the Democratic presidential nomination.

The state's primary was delayed by four weeks because of the coronavirus outbreak.

4:40 p.m.

Voters in nine states and the District of Columbia are participating in primaries Tuesday.

The states voting are Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, Montana, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and South Dakota.

Indiana polls are scheduled to close first, at 7 p.m. Eastern time. Pennsylvania offers the day's biggest trove of delegates. Joe Biden is already the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee, but he needs to win 89% of all delegates at stake Tuesday to formally clinch the nomination. If he doesn't reach the requisite number on Tuesday, he has more opportunities to do so later this month.

Voters are navigating coronavirus concerns and curfews in place amid protests of George Floyd's killing by police. In-person voting is down in every state, as many voters were encouraged to vote by mail because of the pandemic.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Trucker who drove on bridge leaves jail

ARTICLE CCLXIV. TRUCKER WHO DROVE ON BRIDGE LEAVES JAIL

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 3, 2020 Wednesday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1B

Length: 559 words

Byline: PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

The truck driver who drove onto the I-35W Bridge and narrowly missed hitting protesters over the weekend was released from jail Tuesday, but prosecutors continue investigating the incident in consultation with the state's senior public safety official.

Bogdan Vechirko, 35, of Otsego, was jailed Sunday evening on suspicion of assault and held in the Hennepin County jail until midday Tuesday in connection with his empty fuel tanker careening through a crowd marching to protest the May 25 death of George Floyd after being restrained by Minneapolis police.

The County Attorney's Office had until noon Tuesday to hold Vechirko without charges before they had to release him, pending further investigation, County Attorney Mike Freeman said in a statement Tuesday.

"Investigators are in the process of gathering additional information and answers to aid in the charging decision," the statement says.

Earlier Tuesday, a relative of Vechirko's said the harrowing incident was unintentional.

Art Loghinov said he has spoken with Vechirko since Sunday's near-deadly sequence of events and is convinced that the incident on the bridge was "not his fault. ... He didn't have any intent to harm or do anything bad to anybody."

State Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said Monday that the driver was speeding and "panicked, and he just kept barreling forward" but did not breach any barriers put up to protect the protesters and was not aiming for anyone.

On Tuesday, Harrington said he'd been talking with Freeman about potential charges.

"We just want to make sure, even though no one was killed ... we are certainly getting to the right charge that holds him accountable for the behaviors," he said.

Trucker who drove on bridge leaves jail

Several protesters on the bridge, including Drew Valle, said the truck's driver "wasn't stopping. He was beeping loudly and driving into a crowd of people."

Minneapolis schoolteacher Doug Butler said that while "we perhaps cannot know his motives ... he sped [and] hurtled into protesters."

Loghinov and others in the family commissioned a brief video that features Vechirko's wife appealing for financial help on behalf of the couple.

Liudmila Vechirko, who is eight months pregnant, says in Russian with subtitles, "Due to multiple requests, I am recording this video for those who care and want to help our family." She then holds up a piece of paper with an address for a PayPal fundraising account.

Liudmila Vechirko adds that "our credit cards are frozen since they stole his wallet, phone and all the belongings in the truck's cabin."

Loghinov also said the family is "very thankful for the people who came to rescue him and very grateful for the police" who fended off some of the marchers who began attacking Vechirko after his truck came to a stop on the bridge over the Mississippi River.

The couple's financial situation is under pressure from Vechirko missing work, his wife being pregnant and the potential for legal bills in connection with the incident, Loghinov said.

"They are not a rich family," he said. "He is a hard worker and the only one bringing money to the family."

Loghinov said Bogdan Vechirko came to the United States from Russia when he was 4 years old and met Liudmila in Minnesota.

"He's a nice, friendly guy," Loghinov said. "He was just going home."

Staff writer Jessie Van Berkel contributed to this report. Paul Walsh · 612-673-4482

Load-Date: June 3, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXV. CHARGES FOR ALL 4

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1539 wordsByline: STEPHEN MONTEMAYOR; CHAO XIONG; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: CHAUVIN NOW FACES SECOND-DEGREE MURDER // Floyd family calls AG Ellison's move a 'bittersweet moment'Body

Attorney General Keith Ellison's office on Wednesday upgraded charges against the former Minneapolis police officer who knelt on George Floyd's neck and charged the other three officers at the scene with aiding and abetting murder.

The decision came just two days after Ellison took over the prosecution from Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman and followed more than a week of sometimes-violent protests calling for tougher charges against former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, who had pinned Floyd to the ground and held him there for nearly nine minutes. Protesters also demanded the arrests of the three other former officers who were present but failed to intervene. All three were booked into the Hennepin County jail on Wednesday.

"To the Floyd family, to our beloved community, and everyone that is watching, I say: George Floyd mattered. He was loved. His life was important. His life had value. We will seek justice for him and for you and we will find it," Ellison said

However, he said, he doesn't believe that "one successful prosecution can rectify the hurt and loss that so many people feel. The solution to that pain will be in the slow and difficult work of constructing justice and fairness in our society."

Chauvin, who was recorded on video kneeling on Floyd's neck as he begged for air on Memorial Day, now faces the more serious charge of second-degree murder, in addition to the original charges of third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter with culpable negligence.

Chauvin was originally charged by the Hennepin County Attorney's Office last week.

The amended complaint filed against Chauvin stated, "Police are trained that this type of restraint with a subject in a prone position is inherently dangerous. ... Officer Chauvin's restraint of Mr. Floyd in this manner for a prolonged period was a substantial factor in Mr. Floyd losing consciousness, constituting substantial bodily harm, and Mr. Floyd's death as well."

Charges for all 4

Don Lewis, special prosecutor in the case against Jeronimo Yanez, the former St. Anthony police officer who killed Philando Castile in 2016, said the nearly nine-minute recording of the moments before Floyd died showed ample evidence of intent to kill on Chauvin's part.

"Those are moments to cause reflection on whether or not you're in the middle of a wrongful death here," Lewis said. "You have George Floyd begging for his life, right? 'I can't breathe.' This is a moment of potential reflection on Chauvin's part," Lewis said. "He had multiple opportunities to change course here and decided not to over the span of almost 10 minutes."

The other officers at the scene - Tou Thao, J Alexander Kueng and Thomas Lane - were each charged with aiding and abetting second-degree murder while committing a felony, and with aiding and abetting second-degree manslaughter with culpable negligence. Both charges are categorized as "unintentional" felonies.

Thao was recorded watching as Chauvin continued to press on Floyd's neck with his knee. Kueng was one of the first officers on the scene and helped pin Floyd down. Lane was detailed in earlier charges as pointing a gun at Floyd before handcuffing, and he later asked whether officers should roll Floyd on his side as he was restrained.

The charges come just days after Gov. Tim Walz asked Ellison to take over the prosecution, which until Sunday had been led by the Hennepin County Attorney's Office. Freeman stood next to Ellison as the attorney general announced the charges Wednesday, but he did not speak and left midway through the news conference.

Despite the quick pace of adding charges to the investigation, Ellison sought to manage expectations, cautioning that the cases could take "months" to see through. He also brushed off the idea that intense public pressure influenced the process.

The charges noted that Floyd was "calm" after he was first arrested and before Chauvin knelt on his neck. The complaint also noted three times that after Floyd was pinned to the pavement by three officers, none of them moved from their positions despite pleas from Floyd. Video of the incident showed that bystanders also pleaded with police.

Floyd had told the first two officers at the scene - Lane and Kueng - that he was not resisting arrest but did not want to get into the back of their squad car because he is claustrophobic, the charges said.

Walz issued a statement after Ellison announced the new charges. "I laid flowers at George Floyd's memorial this morning. As a former high school history teacher, I looked up at the mural of George's face painted above and I reflected on what his death will mean for future generations. What will our young people learn about this moment? Will his death be just another blip in a textbook? Or will it go down in history as when our country turned toward justice and change?

"It's on each of us to determine that answer," Walz said. "The charges announced by Attorney General Keith Ellison today are a meaningful step toward justice for George Floyd. But we must also recognize that the anguish driving protests around the world is about more than one tragic incident.

Charges for all 4

"George Floyd's death is the symptom of a disease. We will not wake up one day and have the disease of systemic racism cured for us. This is on each of us to solve together, and we have hard work ahead," he said. "We owe that much to George Floyd, and we owe that much to each other."

One of the attorneys representing Floyd's family, Benjamin Crump, released a statement Wednesday praising the arrest and charging of the other three officers and the upgrading of murder charges against Chauvin. Crump's statement came after the Star Tribune first reported the charges and before Ellison's office made any official announcements.

"This is a bittersweet moment for the family of George Floyd," said the joint statement by Floyd's family, Crump and the legal team. "We are deeply gratified that Attorney General Keith Ellison took decisive action in this case, arresting and charging all the officers involved in George Floyd's death and upgrading the charge against Derek Chauvin to felony second-degree murder."

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey also released a statement in support of the new charges.

"That George Floyd's plea - that his struggle to survive - went unrecognized and unaided by not just one but four officers will live forever as the most chilling moments in our city's history," Frey said. "Failing to act amounted to a failure to recognize George's humanity."

Attorney Eric Nelson, who is representing Chauvin, declined to comment. Chauvin remains in custody at the state prison in Oak Park Heights.

Kueng's attorney, Thomas Plunkett, released a statement Wednesday stating that his client was asked at 1:20 p.m. to turn himself in; he is being held at the Hennepin County jail. Plunkett, who represented former Minneapolis officer Mohamed Noor when he was tried and convicted in 2019 for fatally shooting Justine Ruszczyk Damond, declined further comment.

Attorney Earl Gray, who is representing Lane, also declined to comment. Gray represented Yanez when he was tried and acquitted in 2017 for fatally shooting Castile.

Thao's attorney, Robert Paule, could not be reached for comment.

Floyd's family and Crump, their lawyer, called the new charges "a significant step forward on the road to justice, and we are gratified that this important action was brought before George Floyd's body was laid to rest ... That is a source of peace for George's family in this painful time."

They urged Ellison to continue the investigation and upgrade the charges to first-degree murder, which carries a potential life sentence.

First-degree murder requires proof of planning out the crime. Second-degree unintentional murder carries a maximum sentence of 40 years. Murder in the third degree has a maximum 25-year sentence. Charges of aiding and abetting carry the same maximum penalties as the underlying crime.

"These officers knew they could act with impunity, given the Minneapolis Police Department's widespread and prolonged pattern and practice of violating people's constitutional rights," the family's statement said. "Therefore, we also demand permanent transparent police accountability at all levels and at all times."

Charges for all 4

The family thanked the "outpouring" of support it has received, which manifested in days of huge protests across the country and world.

"Our message to them: Find constructive and positive ways to keep the focus and pressure on," they said. "Don't let up on your demand for change."

The former officers' prosecution is the quickest in Minnesota history against officers on the job who have killed civilians, and is the first time more than one officer involved in such an incident has been criminally charged. Three officers have previously been charged with killing a civilian on the job; Noor was convicted at trial while two were acquitted.

"Let me be honest here, our country has under-prosecuted these matters in Minnesota and throughout the country," Ellison said. "We can't control the past. All we can do is take the case that is in front of us right now and do our good-faith best to bring justice to this situation, and we will."

Stephen Montemayor · 612-673-1755

Chao Xiong · 612-673-4391

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

Minneapolis police release some personnel data on 4 former officers

ARTICLE CCLXVI. MINNEAPOLIS POLICE RELEASE SOME PERSONNEL DATA ON 4 FORMER OFFICERS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 835 words

Byline: New York Times

Highlight: The Minneapolis Police Department late Wednesday released 235 pages of personnel records for the four former officers charged in George Floyd's killing on May 25, all of whom were fired after video of his death emerged the following day. Three of the officers - Thomas Lane, 37; J. Alexander Kueng, 26; and Tou Thao, 34 [...]

Body

The Minneapolis Police Department late Wednesday released 235 pages of personnel records for the four former officers charged in George Floyd's killing on May 25, all of whom were fired after video of his death emerged the following day.

Three of the officers - Thomas Lane, 37; J. Alexander Kueng, 26; and Tou Thao, 34 - were charged Wednesday with aiding and abetting second-degree murder.

The fourth officer, Derek Chauvin, 44, who was arrested last week, now faces an increased charge of second-degree murder.

Many of the pages of the personnel files were heavily redacted, but they revealed details of the officers' lives before joining the department and during their time on the force.

Chauvin appears to have been reprimanded and possibly suspended after a woman complained in 2007 that he needlessly removed her from her car, searched her and put her in the back of a squad car for driving 10 mph over the speed limit.

Chauvin was the subject of at least 17 misconduct complaints over two decades, but the woman's complaint is the only one detailed in 79 pages of his heavily redacted personnel file. The file shows that the complaint was upheld and that Chauvin was issued a letter of reprimand.

"Officer did not have to remove complainant from car," read the investigators' finding. "Could've conducted interview outside the vehicle."

In one part of the records, the discipline imposed is listed as "letter of reprimand," but Chauvin was also issued a "notice of suspension" in May 2008, just after the investigation into the complaint ended, that lists the same internal affairs case number.

Minneapolis police release some personnel data on 4 former officers

Investigators wrote that there was no audio of the incident and that the dashcam "had been turned off during course of stop."

The records say Chauvin admitted to leaving a microphone in the squad car during the traffic stop and "did not check" the dashcam at the start of his shift.

In applying to the Minneapolis Police Department, Chauvin said he had served as a member of the Army, working for a time as a member of the military police. He also said he had worked as a security guard and as a cook for McDonald's and another restaurant in the mid-1990s. The records said he was hired by the department in January 2001 as a part-time community service officer.

Kueng had been an officer with the department for less than six months. He joined the force as a cadet in February 2019 and became an officer Dec. 10, 2019, his personnel records show. He had previously worked as a community service officer with the department while he earned his bachelor's degree in sociology at the University of Minnesota Twin Cities.

He also worked as a security guard at a Macy's and stocked shelves at a Target, and graduated from Minneapolis' Patrick Henry High School in 2012.

Otherwise, most of his personnel file was blacked out, including basic details like whether he had a driver's license, whether he lived in Minneapolis, whether he had any convictions for a long list of crimes, whether he was a U.S. citizen, and what his college GPA was.

His file shows that he was terminated May 26, the day after Floyd's death, at 4:45 p.m. It says he was fired for substandard performance, misconduct and violations of the city's use-of-force policy, including failure to stop another officer from applying inappropriate force.

Lane did not graduate from high school, his file shows, but he went on to get his GED, then an associate degree from Century College and a bachelor's degree from the University of Minnesota in criminology.

He was accepted to the police academy in January 2019 but started working in the criminal justice system in 2017 as a probation officer. Lane previously worked a series of different jobs, from restaurant server to Home Depot sales associate. He volunteered at Ka Joog tutoring, working with Somali youth in Cedar Riverside.

Thao held jobs at McDonald's, at a grocery store as a stocker, and as a security guard before being hired in 2008 as a community service officer in Minneapolis. But he worked there less than two years before being laid off in late 2009 because of budget cuts. Almost two years later, in 2011, he was recalled, then hired as a police officer in 2012.

Thao graduated in 2004 from Fridley High School and attended North Hennepin Community College, where he studied for an associate degree in law enforcement but never graduated, according to his file.

According to police department data, Thao faced at least six complaints in his career with the Minneapolis force and also was the subject of a lawsuit that claimed he and another officer punched, kicked and kneed an African American man, leaving the man with broken teeth and bruises.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He

Minneapolis police release some personnel data on 4 former officers

is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Former Minneapolis police officers, from left, Derek Chauvin, Tou Thao, Thomas Lane and J. Alexander Kueng

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Lawyers: 2 of 3 newly charged ex-cops were rookies; 3rd cooperating with investigators

ARTICLE CCLXVII. LAWYERS: 2 OF 3 NEWLY CHARGED EX-COPS WERE ROOKIES; 3RD COOPERATING WITH INVESTIGATORS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 784 words

Byline: Steve Karnowski

Highlight: MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - A judge set bail at $750,000 apiece Thursday for three fired Minneapolis police officers charged with aiding and abetting in the killing of George Floyd, as a memorial service took place just blocks away.

Body

Two of three Minneapolis police officers accused of aiding and abetting in the death of George Floyd were rookies barely off probation when a more senior white officer ignored the black man's cries for help and pressed a knee into his neck, defense attorneys said Thursday.

Earl Gray said his client, former officer Thomas Lane had no choice but to follow the instructions of Derek Chauvin, who has since been charged with second-degree murder in Floyd's May 25 death. Gray called the case against his client "extremely weak."

Meanwhile, the New York Times reported that the third officer has cooperated with investigators.

A judge set maximum bail at $1 million apiece for Lane, J. Alexander Kueng and Tou Thao, when they made their first appearances in Hennepin County District Court on Thursday. Simultaneously, and just blocks away, celebrities, friends and relatives gathered to memorialize Floyd at a Bible college.

The Minneapolis Police Department fired all four officers last week and charged Chauvin - initially with third-degree murder - the following day. But protests that began on the streets of Minneapolis quickly spread across the nation, calling for justice for Floyd and other African Americans who were killed by police.

On Wednesday, the three other officers were charged with aiding and abetting second-degree murder. If convicted, they potentially face the same penalty as Chauvin: up to 40 years in prison.

Gray said Thursday that all Lane did was hold Floyd's feet so he couldn't kick, and he underlined that the criminal complaint says Lane asked Chauvin twice if they should roll Floyd over and expressed concern that Floyd might be in delirium. He said Lane performed CPR in the ambulance.

"What was my client supposed to do but follow what his training officer said? Is that aiding and abetting a crime?" Gray asked.

Lawyers: 2 of 3 newly charged ex-cops were rookies; 3rd cooperating with investigators

Gray and Kueng's defense attorney, Tom Plunkett, asked the court for lower bail, saying their clients had been police officers for just four days when Floyd was killed. Police records indicate that while the men were rookies, they had more experience than a handful of days on the force. According to their records, they joined the department in February 2019 and became full officers in December. Minneapolis officers must serve a year on probation and spend time in field training with a more senior officer before they are fully qualified.

Kueng, who is black, became a police officer because he "wanted to make his community a better place," Plunkett said. He said Kueng was raised by his single mother on Minneapolis' predominantly black North Side.

Plunkett and Thao's attorney, Robert Paule, did not address the merits of the charges in court and declined to comment after the hearing out of respect for Floyd's family during the memorial. But Paule told the New York Times that Thao had cooperated with investigators before they arrested Chauvin.

Judge Paul Scoggin set their next court dates for June 29. Gray said he plans to renew his arguments for lower bail then, saying it could take more than a year for Lane's case to go to trial.

Chauvin's first court appearance is Monday, the Star Tribune reported, and his attorney has not publicly commented on the case. The latest criminal complaint says his actions were a "substantial causal factor in Mr. Floyd losing consciousness, constituting substantial bodily harm, and Mr. Floyd's death as well."

The complaint against Lane, 37, notes that while he suggested to Chauvin, 44, that Floyd should be rolled over he "took no actions to assist Mr. Floyd, to change his position, or to reduce the force the officers were using against Mr. Floyd."

Kueng's complaint says the 26-year-old was positioned between Chauvin and Lane and could hear their comments. Thao, 34, was seen in the cellphone video standing near a crowd of bystanders, and his complaint says although he fetched a hobble restraint - designed to restrict the movement of a person in custody - from the squad car, "the officers decided not to use it and maintained their positions."

Chauvin is being held on a maximum bail of $1 million while in custody at the state prison in Oak Park Heights.

Gov. Tim Walz and the Minnesota Department of Human Rights have ordered a civil rights investigation of the police department to determine how to address racial discrimination and create systemic change.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Former Minneapolis police officers, from left, Derek Chauvin, Tou Thao, Thomas Lane and J. Alexander Kueng, were charged Wednesday, June 3, 2020, in the death of George Floyd. A charge of

Lawyers: 2 of 3 newly charged ex-cops were rookies; 3rd cooperating with investigators second-degree murder was added against Chauvin. The other three are charged with aiding and abetting second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. (Hennepin County Sheriff's Office)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

COMPLAINT: FROM CALM TO FATAL

ARTICLE CCLXVIII. COMPLAINT: FROM CALM TO FATAL

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 577 wordsByline: CHAO XIONG; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

George Floyd was calm during his encounter with Minneapolis police last week, authorities said, but things turned deadly after three officers pinned him to the pavement, where he told officers he could not breathe before eventually losing consciousness. An amended criminal complaint released Wednesday against Derek Chauvin, J Alexander Kueng, Thomas Lane and Tou Thao offered a revealing new look at the last minutes of Floyd's life:

8:08 p.m. Officers Lane and Kueng responded to a call about a man using a counterfeit $20 bill at the Cup Foods store on the corner of Chicago Ave. and E. 38th St. They found Floyd, 46, of St. Louis Park, in the driver's seat of a nearby car with two passengers. Lane pointed his gun at Floyd and re-holstered it when Floyd placed his hands on the steering wheel.

Lane ordered Floyd out of the car, then pulled him out and handcuffed him. The complaint said he was "calm," adding that after he was seated on the ground, he thanked Lane.

The officers' body-worn cameras captured the incident.

8:14 p.m. Lane and Kueng walked Floyd to their squad and tried to put him inside. Floyd "stiffened up and fell to the ground."

"Mr. Floyd told the officers that he was not resisting but he did not want to get in the back seat and was claustrophobic," the complaint said.

Chauvin and partner arrive

At some point, officers Chauvin and Thao arrived at the scene in a separate squad. The officers tried several times to get Floyd into the back seat of a squad by "pushing him from the driver's side," the charges said, adding that Floyd "repeatedly said that he could not breathe."

8:19 p.m. Chauvin pulled Floyd out of the squad and he "went to the ground" facedown while still handcuffed. Kueng held onto Floyd's back while Lane restrained his legs and Chauvin placed his left knee on Floyd's neck.

COMPLAINT: FROM CALM TO FATAL

Thao retrieved a hobble restraint from a squad to control Floyd, but the officers opted not to use it. Thao stood watch nearby, and was seen in a video dismissing the concerns of witnesses who pleaded with the officers to stop.

"Mr. Floyd said, 'I can't breathe' multiple times and repeatedly said, 'Mama' and 'please,' as well," the charges say. "At one point, Mr. Floyd said, 'I'm about to die.' "

The complaint noted three times that the three officers did not move from their positions. At one point, an officer told Floyd, "You are talking fine."

Lane asked if they should roll Floyd on his side. Chauvin responded that Floyd was "staying put where we got him."

No pulse detected

8:24 p.m. Floyd's "slight movements" decreased and he stopped moving.

8:25 p.m. Floyd appeared to stop breathing. "Want to roll him on his side?" Lane asked again.

Kueng checked Floyd's pulse. "I couldn't find one," Kueng said.

8:27 p.m. Chauvin removed his knee from Floyd's neck. An ambulance and emergency medical personnel arrived at the scene and transported Floyd to Hennepin County Medical Center (HCMC).

9:25 p.m. Floyd was pronounced dead at HCMC after first responders and emergency room staff tried to revive him for nearly an hour.

"Police are trained that this type of restraint with a subject in a prone position is inherently dangerous," said an amended criminal complaint filed Wednesday against Chauvin. "Officer Chauvin's restraint of Mr. Floyd in this manner for a prolonged period was a substantial factor in Mr. Floyd losing consciousness, constituting substantial bodily harm, and Mr. Floyd's death as well."

Chao Xiong · 612-270-4708

Twitter: @ChaoStrib

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXIX. WATCH: GEORGE FLOYD MEMORIAL IN MINNEAPOLIS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1038 wordsByline: Aaron Morrison, Nomaan Merchant, Matt SedenskyHighlight: Mourners converged in Minneapolis on Thursday for the first in a series of a memorials to George Floyd.Body

Mourners converged in Minneapolis on Thursday for the first in a series of a memorials to George Floyd, whose death at the hands of police has sparked turbulent protests around the world against racial injustice.

The afternoon event was set for North Central University, where the civil rights leader the Rev. Al Sharpton was scheduled to be among those eulogizing the 46-year-old Floyd.

"He was a human being. He had family, he had dreams, he had hopes. The real duty of one with this type of assignment is to underscore the value of the human life that was taken, which gives the reason the movement was occurring," Sharpton said ahead of the gathering.

Inside the sanctuary, a golden casket was flanked by white and purple flowers, and an image was projected above the pulpit of a mural painted at the street corner where Floyd was pinned to the ground by police. The sanctuary normally seats 1,000, but because of the coronavirus outbreak, the capacity was reduced to about 500.

The service was expected to attract an array of celebrities, civil rights leaders, activists and politicians from around the country.

Seats were reserved for actors and comedians Kevin Hart, Tiffany Haddish and Regina Hall; actor and producer Tyler Perry; Martin Luther King III; the Rev. Jesse Jackson; Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz; Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey; Rep. Ilhan Omar; Sen. Amy Klobuchar and others, though it wasn't certain that all would attend.

Memorial service for George Floyd a call for justice and change George Floyd's daughter on 'GMA': What she wants people to know His business in St. Paul got looted. He's more concerned with justice for George Floyd Democrats prepare police reform bills after Floyd's death Memorials are set to take place in three cities over six days: After the Minneapolis event, Floyd's body will go to Raeford, North Carolina, where he was born, for a public viewing and private family service on Saturday.

Watch: George Floyd memorial in Minneapolis

Next, a public viewing will be held Monday in Houston, where he was raised and lived most of his life. Then a 500-person service will take place Tuesday at the Fountain of Praise church.

The farewells for Floyd - an out-of-work bouncer who was arrested on suspicion of passing a counterfeit $20 bill at a convenience store and died after a white officer pressed his knee on the handcuffed black man's neck for several minutes - come as demonstrations around the globe continue.

In the U.S., where protests had been marked by bouts of lawlessness earlier in the week, relative quiet continued for a second straight night Wednesday following a decision by prosecutors to charge the three other Minneapolis officers at the scene of Floyd's death with aiding and abetting a murder.

Authorities also filed a new, more serious murder charge - second-degree, up from third-degree - against the officer at the center of the case, Derek Chauvin.

If convicted, they could get 40 years in prison.

The three officers newly charged in the Floyd's death - Thomas Lane, J. Kueng and Tou Thao - were due to make a first court appearance Thursday. Chauvin is not due in court until Monday.

Meantime, in Georgia, a white father and son charged in another killing of a black man that has raised racial tensions in the U.S. made a court appearance Thursday via video. A state investigator testified that the man accused of shooting Ahmaud Arbery, Travis McMichael, uttered a racist epithet as he stood over Arbery's body.

The new charges in Minneapolis punctuated an unprecedented week in recent American history, in which largely peaceful protests took place in communities of all sizes but were rocked by bursts of violence, including deadly attacks on officers, theft, vandalism and arson. In Minneapolis alone, more than 220 buildings were damaged or burned, with damage topping $55 million, city officials said.

Nationwide, more than 10,000 people have been arrested, an Associated Press tally found. More than a dozen deaths have been reported, though the circumstances in many cases are still being sorted out.

From Paris and London to Tel Aviv, Sydney, Johannesburg and Rio de Janeiro, Floyd's death has triggered demonstrations, with protesters decrying inequality, police brutality and other problems in their own countries.

"It's a solidarity question. We stand with our brothers, internationally, our sisters as well, but the same thing is happening here. It's no different," Isaak Kabenge said in Stockholm.

The attorney for Floyd's family, Ben Crump, called the additional charges against the officers "a bittersweet moment" and "a significant step forward on the road to justice."

Hundreds of protesters were in New York City's Washington Square Park when the charges were announced.

"It's not enough," protester Jonathan Roldan said, insisting all four officers should have been charged from the start. "Right now, we're still marching because it's not enough that they got arrested. There needs to be systematic change."

Watch: George Floyd memorial in Minneapolis

The mood in New York turned somber later in the day after a police officer on an anti-looting patrol was ambushed by a man who walked up behind him and stabbed him in the neck. Two other officers suffered gunshot wounds to their hands in the struggle, and the attacker was in critical condition after being shot by police.

The new second-degree murder charge alleges Chauvin caused Floyd's death without intent while committing another felony, namely assault. It carries a heavier sentence than the third-degree charge, which is punishable by up to 25 years behind bars.

At a protest in the nation's capital, 30-year-old Jade Jones said the demonstrations would continue despite the new charges.

"That's the least they could do," Jones said. "It's not going to wipe away 400 years of pain."

Merchant reported from Houston and Sedensky from Philadelphia. Associated Press journalists across the U.S. and the world contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Witness who was in George Floyd's car says his friend did not resist arrest

ARTICLE CCLXX. WITNESS WHO WAS IN GEORGE FLOYD'S CAR SAYS HIS FRIEND
DID NOT RESIST ARREST

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 831 words

Byline: Erica L. Green, Katie Benner

Highlight: Witness Who Was in Floyd's Car Says His Friend Did Not Resist Arrest

Body

WASHINGTON - A longtime friend of George Floyd's who was in the passenger seat of Floyd's car during his fatal encounter with a Minneapolis police officer said Wednesday night that Floyd tried to defuse the tensions with police and in no way resisted arrest.

"He was, from the beginning, trying in his humblest form to show he was not resisting in no form or way," said the friend, Maurice Lester Hall, 42, who was tracked down Monday in Houston, arrested on outstanding warrants and interviewed by Minnesota state investigators.

"I could hear him pleading, 'Please, officer, what's all this for?' " Hall said in an interview Wednesday night with the New York Times.

Hall recounted the last moments with Floyd on Memorial Day, May 25, after they had spent part of the day together.

"He was just crying out at that time for anyone to help because he was dying," Hall said. "I'm going to always remember seeing the fear in Floyd's face because he's such a king. That's what sticks with me, seeing a grown man cry, before seeing a grown man die."

Hall is a key witness in the state's investigation into the four officers who apprehended Floyd, including Derek Chauvin, who knelt on Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes, even after he became unresponsive.

But Hall - who had outstanding warrants for his arrest on felony possession of a firearm, felony domestic assault and felony drug possession - provided a false name to officers at the scene of Floyd's arrest, according to a Minnesota official.

Hall left Minneapolis and hitchhiked to Houston two days later, after visiting a memorial at the site of the police encounter.

"When the whole world was finding out that they murdered George Floyd," he said, "I went and said a prayer where I witnessed him take his last breath, and I left."

Witness who was in George Floyd's car says his friend did not resist arrest

Hall said he had left dinner with his family late Monday evening when their car was surrounded by at least a dozen law enforcement officers. After his arrest, he was questioned for hours by a Minnesota state investigator about Floyd's death - not about his warrants. Hall was then transferred to the Harris County Jail in Houston, and Tuesday, he returned to his home in the city, after his lawyers fought for his release.

"When Hall's family found us, he had been isolated in jail for 10 hours after being interrogated until 3 a.m.," said Ashlee C. McFarlane, a partner at Gerger Khalil Hennessy & McFarlane, who is representing Hall. "This is not how you treat a key witness, especially one that had just seen his friend murdered by police. Even with outstanding warrants, this should have been done another way."

"I knew what was happening, that they were coming. It was inevitable," Hall said in the interview with the Times. "I'm a key witness to the cops murdering George Floyd, and they want to know my side. Whatever I've been through, it's all over with now. It's not about me."

Hall and Floyd, both Houston natives, had connected in Minneapolis through a pastor and had been in touch every day since 2016. Hall said that he considered Floyd a confidant and a mentor, like many in the community, and that he went back to Houston because the "only ties I had in Minnesota that had me Houston-rooted was George."

Agents of the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension, which is building the state's case against Chauvin and the three other officers involved in the Floyd case, "attempted to contact Hall numerous times to no avail," said Bruce Gordon, a spokesman for the bureau.

Hall said that he was distraught and working through his trauma with his family and was not taking phone calls in the days immediately after.

The bureau asked law enforcement agents in Texas to arrest Hall because it believed he was not cooperating with its investigation. Hall and McFarlane, his lawyer, said that he cooperated fully with the Minnesota official's interview.

"They got a testimony, and that's what they were after," Hall added. "They came and saw, and left me to fighting for my freedom."

Passengers in the car with Floyd, a man and a woman, had remained unidentified until Hall spoke with The Times on Wednesday. Hall said that he did not know the woman's name.

Minnesota officials said Wednesday that the state had upgraded the charges against Chauvin to second-degree murder from third-degree murder and manslaughter. They also charged the other three officers who took part in the fatal arrest - Thomas Lane, 37; J. Alexander Kueng, 26; and Tou Thao, 34 - with aiding and abetting murder.

All four officers were fired the day after Floyd died and video of his death went viral online.

"I walk with Floyd," Hall said. "I know that I'm going to be his voice." Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Witness who was in George Floyd's car says his friend did not resist arrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

CHARGES AGAINST FOUR EX-MINNEAPOLIS POLICE OFFICERS

ARTICLE CCLXXI. CHARGES AGAINST FOUR EX-MINNEAPOLIS POLICE OFFICERS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 10ALength: 539 wordsBody

Derek Michael Chauvin, 44, Oakdale

Second-degree murder : Chauvin caused the death of a human being, George Floyd, without intent to effect the death of any person, while committing or attempting to commit a felony offense.

Maximum sentence: 40 years

Third-degree murder : Chauvin caused the death of another, George Floyd, by perpetrating an act eminently dangerous to others and evincing a depraved mind, without regard for human life.

Maximum sentence: 25 years

Second-degree manslaughter : Chauvin caused the death of George Floyd by culpable negligence, creating an unreasonable risk and taking a chance of causing death or great bodily harm.

Maximum sentence: 10 years

Thomas Kiernan Lane, 37, St. Paul

Aiding and abetting unintentional second-degree murder while committing a felony: Lane intentionally aided, advised, hired, counseled, or conspired with or otherwise procured another to commit a crime, namely, causing the death of a human being, George Floyd, without intent to effect the death of any person, while committing or attempting to commit a felony offense.

Maximum sentence: 40 years

Aiding and abetting second-degree manslaughter - culpable negligence creating unreasonable risk: Lane intentionally aided, advised, hired, counseled, or conspired with or otherwise procured the other to commit [a] crime, namely caused the death of another, George Floyd, by his culpable negligence, creating an unreasonable risk and consciously took the chances of causing death or great bodily harm to another, George Floyd.

Maximum sentence: 10 years

CHARGES AGAINST FOUR EX-MINNEAPOLIS POLICE OFFICERS

J Alexander Kueng, 26, Plymouth

Aiding and abetting unintentional second-degree murder: Kueng intentionally aided, advised, hired counseled, or conspired with or otherwise procured another to commit a crime, namely, causing the death of a human being, George Floyd, without intent to effect the death of any person, while committing or attempting to commit a felony offense.

Maximum sentence: 40 years

Aiding and abetting second-degree manslaughter - culpable negligence creating unreasonable risk: Lane intentionally aided, advised, hired, counseled, or conspired with or otherwise procured the other to commit [a] crime, namely caused the death of another, George Floyd, by his culpable negligence, creating an unreasonable risk and consciously took the chances of causing death or great bodily harm to another, George Floyd.

Maximum sentence: 10 years

Tou Thao, 34, Coon Rapids

Aiding and abetting unintentional second-degree murder: Thao intentionally aided, advised, hired, counseled, or conspired with or otherwise procured another to commit a crime, namely, causing the death of a human being, George Floyd, without intent to effect the death of any person, while committing or attempting to commit a felony offense.

Maximum sentence: 40 years

Aiding and abetting second-degree manslaughter - culpable negligence creating unreasonable risk: Thao intentionally aided, advised, hired, counseled, or conspired with or otherwise procured the other to commit a crime, namely caused the death of another, George Floyd, by his culpable negligence, creating an unreasonable risk and consciously took the chances of causing death or great bodily harm to another, George Floyd.

Maximum sentence: 10 years

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXXII. MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR GEORGE FLOYD A CALL FOR JUSTICE AND CHANGE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1266 wordsByline: Mara H. GottfriedHighlight: For eight minutes and 46 seconds, the family of George Floyd stood in silence, along with civil rights leaders, celebrities and politicians on Thursday.Body

For eight minutes and 46 seconds, the family of George Floyd stood in silence, along with civil rights leaders, celebrities and politicians on Thursday.

"That was the time that George was on the ground, and we want you all over the world to stand with us ... and make that commitment for justice in the name of George," said the Rev. Al Sharpton during Floyd's memorial service in Minneapolis.

Floyd died May 25 after a Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into the neck of the 46-year-old for nearly nearly nine minutes. The death off Floyd set off global protests.

Thursday's memorial at North Central University's sanctuary was a private service and featured repeated calls for change and justice. A crowd of several hundred people gathered outside and listened to the service that was also broadcast outdoors. Many held signs of support for Floyd and wore T-shirts that bore his name.

The mural for Floyd is projected on a screen. @DaneMizutani wrote about how the mural came to be: pic.twitter.com/GKY7qvXxMH

- Mara Gottfried (@MaraGottfried)

"George Floyd's story has been the story of black folks," Sharpton said in his eulogy. "Because ever since 401 years ago, the reason we could never be who we wanted and dreamed to be is you kept your knee on our neck. ... What happened to Floyd happens every day in this country in education, in health services and in every area of American life. It's time for us to stand up in George's name and say, 'Get your knee off our necks!' "

Sharpton vowed this will become a movement to "change the whole system of justice."

Memorial service for George Floyd a call for justice and change

A golden casket was flanked by white and purple flowers, and an image was projected above the pulpit of a mural painted at the street corner https://t.co/hjtt8eoj6j June 4, 2020 where Floyd was pinned to the ground by police. The university's sanctuary normally seats 1,000, but because of the coronavirus outbreak, the capacity was reduced to about 500.

An autopsy report released Wednesday showed Floyd had tested positive for COVID-19 at the beginning of April. The medical examiner determined he died after his heart stopped while he was restrained by police.

"It was not the coronavirus pandemic that killed George Floyd," family attorney Benjamin Crump said during the service. "... It was that other pandemic that we're far too familiar with in America, that pandemic of racism and discrimination that killed George Floyd."

The mural for Floyd is projected on a screen. @DaneMizutani wrote about how the mural came to be: pic.twitter.com/GKY7qvXxMH

- Mara Gottfried (@MaraGottfried)

Floyd was raised in Houston and lived there most of his life, yet Minneapolis "adopted him and showed him so much love," said his brother, Rodney Floyd.

Growing up, their family "didn't have much, but we had a house full of love," Rodney Floyd said.

"Our mom did what she could," said Philonise Floyd, another of George's brothers. "We would sleep in the same beds, play video games together, go outside and play catch."

They danced and cooked with their mother. They made banana and mayonnaise sandwiches. "It was a family thing," Philonise Floyd added.

Floyd's family called him Perry, but he had many nicknames - Big George, Big Floyd, Georgie Porgie.

People wanted to be around Floyd, who had a way with words. Whether someone was homeless or did drugs, Floyd made them feel like they were "the president" when he spoke with them, Philonise Floyd said.

A cousin, Shareeduh Tate, said she would miss Floyd's hugs the most.

"He was this great, big giant, and when he would wrap his arms around you, you would just feel like ... any problems you had, any concerns you had would go away."

While Tate said they all need prayers, she said they're most concerned about Floyd's five children and 3-year-old granddaughter.

A bystander's video captured what happened to Floyd. Crump said Thursday what it showed was torture, inhumane and evil.

"Yes, it was," called out people gathered at the service.

While officers were restraining Floyd, he said "I can't breathe" multiple times and also "mama."

Memorial service for George Floyd a call for justice and change

Sharpton said when he heard that, he told Crump he wanted to talk to Floyd's mother, but Crump told him she was deceased.

"And I thought about it because I was raised by a single mother and sometimes the only thing between us and our conditions was our mothers, sometimes the only thing that would take danger away was our mothers," Sharpton said. "... I know why George was calling for mama."

Floyd's son told Sharpton on Wednesday night another thought about why Floyd was calling for his mother: "Because at the point that he was dying, his mother was stretching her hands out, saying, 'Come on, George. ... There's a place where police don't put knees on you, George,'" Sharpton said.

Former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin is charged with second-degree murder, third-degree murder and manslaughter in Floyd's death. Three others are charged with aiding and abetting murder and manslaughter; they've also been fired from the Minneapolis police department.

Carolyn Washington, a minister who attended Thursday's service, said she was most moved by standing for Floyd.

"I don't think any of us has ever paid attention to eight minutes and how long eight minutes actually is," she said. "I could not hold back the tears because all I could think about was the weight of that officer on his neck and, 'What if that was my son?'"

The Rev. Jesse Jackson and members of Congress, including Reps. Ilhan Omar of Minnesota, Sheila Jackson Lee of Texas and Ayanna Pressley of Massachusetts prayed over Floyd's casket.

Among others in attendance were Martin Luther King III, son of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.; U.S. Sens. Amy Klobuchar and Tina Smith; Gov. Tim Walz; Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey; House Speaker Melissa Hortman, DFL-Brooklyn Park; and Minnesota's top Republican politicians, Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka and House Minority Leader Kurt Daudt.

A number of celebrities came to the service, including T.I., Ludacris, Tyrese Gibson, Kevin Hart, Tiffany Haddish, Master P, Will Packer and Marsai Martin.

About a dozen members of the Minnesota Vikings were in the sanctuary, along with Josh Okogie of the Minnesota Timberwolves and University of Minnesota men's basketball coach P.J. Fleck.

"We understand the hard times that are going on today, and some of us can feel it near and dear to our hearts," Vikings running back Alexander Mattison said afterward. "It's time for change."

North Central University has established a George Floyd Memorial Scholarship, and even before it was announced more than $53,000 was contributed, President Scott Hagan said during the memorial service. He challenged university presidents around the nation to start scholarships in Floyd's name and said, "It is time to invest like never before in a new generation of young black Americans."

On Saturday, a public viewing and private family service will be held in Raeford, N.C., where Floyd was born.

A public viewing will be held Monday in Houston, Floyd's hometown before moving to Minnesota in 2014, and a private family service will follow Tuesday, also in Houston.

Memorial service for George Floyd a call for justice and change

Nick Ferraro and Dave Orrick contributed to this report, which includes information from the Associated Press.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform https://t.co/hjtt8eoj6j June 4, 2020 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

His business in St. Paul got looted. He's more concerned with justice for George Floyd

ARTICLE CCLXXIII. HIS BUSINESS IN ST. PAUL GOT LOOTED. HE'S MORE CONCERNED WITH JUSTICE FOR GEORGE FLOYD

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1034 words

Byline: Dane Mizutani

Highlight: Mussie Embaye was protesting the killing of George Floyd on Saturday night when his business on University Avenue in St. Paul was broken into and looted. He returned to Go Get It Tobacco on Sunday morning to survey the damage, wandering around the destruction of the tobacco shop he worked so hard to open a [...]

Body

Mussie Embaye was protesting the killing of George Floyd on Saturday night when his business on University Avenue in St. Paul was broken into and looted.

He returned to Go Get It Tobacco on Sunday morning to survey the damage, wandering around the destruction of the tobacco shop he worked so hard to open a mere 11 months ago.

The front door was kicked in, display cases shattered, and pretty much everything stolen from him. Still the last thing on Embaye's mind was his business.

"I took one for the team," Embaye said. "I don't care. There are bigger things going on right now. That's what we should be focused on."

He knows he can rebuild. He can repair and reopen. He still has a future.

He knows the same thing can't be said about Floyd. Not after he died under the knee of a Minneapolis police officer last week in what has been deemed a homicide by the Hennepin County medical examiner.

It was the latest example of a black man being killed by a police officer, a list that notably includes Philando Castile and Jamar Clark in the Twin Cities, and too many names to count nationwide.

As a result, peaceful protests broke out across the Twin Cities last week with some areas escalating into riots. This same pattern has played out across the country in recent days.

"What happened is pretty much the straw that broke the camel's back," Embaye said. "Look at all of these other times that we have seen innocent black people get killed. We have tried the peaceful protest. We have tried changing legislation. We have tried getting different leaders in there. And this still happens."

His business in St. Paul got looted. He's more concerned with justice for George Floyd

Which is why Embaye, 32, wasn't thinking about his tobacco shop over the weekend. Instead, he was thinking about the years of oppression, both his personal experiences and those on a larger scale, that led up to that moment that people broke in.

'I WAS TAUGHT RACISM IN MINNESOTA'

His family emigrated from Eritrea back in 1993. It was the first time in his life he looked different than the people around him, and it started to make him feel different, even as a kid.

He remembers being teased in elementary school. He remembers being called the n-word during his adolescence. He remembers being racially profiled when he got to college.

"I was taught racism in Minnesota by people that don't look like me," Embaye said. "I came from a place where everybody looked like me. Whether it was doctors, nurses, anybody in a position of power, police officers, military, everybody was black. I didn't know racism until I came to Minnesota."

He said it continued after he opened his business, citing how he had to battle "systemic racism" to obtain the license needed to convert to a tobacco shop.

EMBAYE'S 40-FOOT BATTLE

After opening as Little Grocery in August 2017 near the intersection of Herschel Street and University Avenue, Embaye made the decision to convert to a tobacco shop amid new restrictions that limited sales of menthol tobacco products in convenience stores.

He was originally denied his license for being too close to a similar business. He was is 2,600 feet away, and thus, needed a 40-foot variance to fall in line with the policy that states tobacco shops in St. Paul need to be at least 2,640 feet apart. He presented to the Board of Zoning Appeals, asking for a 40-foot variance, and was narrowly approved by a vote of 4-3.

Though he was happy with the result, Embaye also voiced his frustration about how the Board of Zoning Appeals approved a larger 200-foot variance unanimously a week earlier. All the while, Embaye also battled with Association of Non-Smokers Minnesota, who appealed the decision.

He eventually got to present to the St. Paul City Council and was finally granted his license after months of legal battles. That said, Embaye's fight wasn't quite done. His landlord didn't want a tobacco shop in that area and wouldn't renew his lease.

That forced Embaye to move, and he opened Go Get It Tobacco in July 2019 at its current location.

"Everything I had to do, if it wasn't for me grinding and having the support of my family, I wouldn't have made it to the finish line," Embaye said. "I want people to know the struggle and what it took for a black person to get a (expletive) business in St. Paul."

'I CAN'T LET THINGS LIKE THIS PASS'

He gets emotional talking about it because it brings up the racism he's been dealing with his whole life. It's the same racism that led to Floyd's death last week, he said.

That's what Embaye wants people to focus on right now. As hard as he worked to get Go Get It Tobacco opened, he is more concerned with justice for Floyd.

His business in St. Paul got looted. He's more concerned with justice for George Floyd

As he wrote on his store's Go Fund Me page, "We know buildings do not matter more than black lives."

"This emotion is real," Embaye said. "That's why I've been out there protesting since Day 1. My mom doesn't understand why I'm out there. She just wants me to be safe like any mother would. And I have to tell her, 'This is why I'm doing this.' I can't let things like this pass."

As an inspiration in the Eritrean community, Embaye hopes to continue to make a positive impact moving forward. His store's Go Fund Me page has already met its goal and he plans to donate any additional funds to Captain Rebel, another black-owned business that was destroyed on Lake Street in Minneapolis last week, as well as other East African and Native American businesses across the Twin Cities.

That said, Embaye knows there's still a lot of work to do as far as fighting racism and demanding equality. He has the letters "TMC" plastered on the windows outside of Go Get It Tobacco as a reminder. It stands for "The Marathon Continues" and pays homage to the late Nipsey Hussle and the movement he started.

"It's letting people know that anything in life that we do is not a sprint," Embaye said. "It's not going to happen overnight. It's a marathon. And if we continue running we can get to the end."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Mussie Embaye's Go Get It Tobacco business on University Avenue in St. Paul, seen Tuesday, June 2, 2020, was broken into and looted twice in the past week. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Mussie Embaye at his Go Get It Tobacco business on University Avenue in St. Paul on Tuesday, June 2, 2020. The business was broken into and looted twice in the past week. Embaye stands behind the broken counters holding a rock which was hurled through his window. (Scott Takushi / Pioneer Press)

Mussie Embaye poses outside his Go Get It Tobacco business on University Avenue in St. Paul. (Photo courtesy of Mussie Embaye)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXXIV. TWIN CITIES SEE A SECOND NIGHT OF RELATIVE CALM

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 1051 wordsByline: JAMES WALSH; PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

If you listened very closely Wednesday night, you could almost - almost - hear residents of Minneapolis and St. Paul heave a collective sigh of relief.

More than a week after the death of George Floyd at the hands of police, after days and nights of protests and marches and fires and looting and curfews and the deployment of National Guard troops and the charging of four former police officers with murder and aiding and abetting murder, the Twin Cities experienced a second night of relative calm. While state and community leaders said much more remains to be done, there was a sense that the grip of the past week is loosening.

On Wednesday, Attorney General Keith Ellison announced the addition of a more serious second-degree murder charge against former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, who was shown on a witness' video kneeling on Floyd's neck for nearly 9 minutes. Ellison also announced that the three former officers involved in Floyd's arrest were charged with aiding and abetting second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

Walz thanked Minnesotans for their sacrifices to stay home and keep their neighborhoods safe, but he wasn't ready to ease up just yet. He extended the curfews in Minneapolis and St. Paul for two more nights, 10 p.m. to 4 a.m., on Wednesday and Thursday out of continuing public safety concerns.

"Minnesotans need more than ever to lean on their neighbors, show up for their communities, and add their voice to this urgent conversation on addressing our systemic problems," the governor said in a statement. "Yet they've made those sacrifices to stay home through the curfew to help keep our neighborhoods safe."

People who have abided by the curfew are creating a space to allow state leaders to focus on other priorities, Walz said, priorities such as the civil rights investigation into the Minneapolis Police Department, charging the other officers involved in Floyd's death and introducing changes that need to be made during the upcoming legislative special session.

TWIN CITIES SEE A SECOND NIGHT OF RELATIVE CALM

In at least one sign of a return to normal in the Twin Cities area, Metro Transit restarted some service Wednesday morning. Buses began rolling again at 4 a.m. Wednesday after service was halted late last week over concerns for the safety of riders and employees.

Blue and Green Line light-rail service was to resume at 6 a.m. Thursday, the agency announced.

"I ask for - and I thank you for - your continued patience as we work to restore service," Metro Transit General Manager Wes Kooistra said in a statement. "Please know that we are eager to return to fulfilling our mission to get people where they need to go. We recognize that reliable transportation is especially important in areas where food and other services are now harder to come by, and we will do all we can to meet those needs."

Transit spokesman Howie Padilla said that despite the extension of nighttime curfews until before dawn Friday, "we expect to have service at the same levels and times as we have had during the COVID-19 epidemic."

Some bus routes that usually travel in areas where unrest broke out in recent days may need adjusting. That includes the intersection of E. 38th Street and S. Chicago Avenue, where Floyd was detained by police and where a sprawling memorial on the pavement now dominates the space.

Various suburban transit agencies are also moving closer to normal operations.

Floyd's death on May 25 prompted many days of protest in large areas of Minneapolis and St. Paul that included acts of looting, arson and property damage along with peaceful expressions of grief and outrage. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives National Response Team arrived in Minneapolis this week to investigate who was responsible for starting the fires during the riots.

While the unrest has ebbed since the mobilization of thousands of National Guard troops and the imposition of nightly curfews, nonviolent gatherings and activities have continued largely without incident. Protests have continued - outside the governor's residence, on the grounds of the State Capitol and outside the offices of the Minneapolis Police Federation. Protesters there demanded the resignation of the union's president, Lt. Bob Kroll.

Kroll has been an outspoken critic of the city's liberal leadership, which he faults for being anti-police and holding back on needed resources and manpower. In a recent letter to the rank-and-file, he blasted the city's handling of the riots following Floyd's death, saying officers had been made "scapegoats" for the continued violence.

City leaders, in turn, have blasted Kroll for opposing reform and lacking empathy for the communities police serve.

Other statewide unions including Education Minnesota and the Minnesota Nurses Association joined the AFL-CIO in calling for Kroll's resignation.

The Star Tribune, too, has drawn criticism. A protest in front of the news company's offices on S. 3rd Avenue in downtown Minneapolis on Wednesday evening featured civil rights attorney Nekima Levy-Armstrong encouraging people to cancel their subscription to the newspaper.

TWIN CITIES SEE A SECOND NIGHT OF RELATIVE CALM

The paper "regurgitates the news releases that come directly from the police department," she said afterward. In the case of George Floyd, she said, "They put out that news release without any investigative journalism, without talking to black witnesses to get a different narrative."

The protest drew thousands of people, nearly enough to fill the city block of S. 3rd Avenue between S. 7th Street and S. 6th Street.

Chief Hennepin County Public Defender Mary Moriarty also spoke, telling people, "This is a moment in history ... We in the system need your help. We need you to help us. I vow to you that I will keep speaking out about systemic racism."

Monique Cullars-Doty is the aunt of Marcus Golden. He was shot and killed in 2014 by two St. Paul police officers. She said the "media repeated multiple lies from the St. Paul Police Department."

"They're not investigating, they're just putting out false narratives as if they're an extension of the law enforcement agencies," she said. "Their goal in doing that when the police try and demonize our loved ones is to justify the homicide."

Star Tribune staff writers Jessie Van Berkel and Matt McKinney contributed to this report.

James Walsh · 612-673-7428

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

3 more officers charged in George Floyd's death

ARTICLE CCLXXV. 3 MORE OFFICERS CHARGED IN GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1117 words

Byline: Tim Sullivan, Matt Sedensky

Highlight: MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Prosecutors charged three more police officers Wednesday in the death of George Floyd and filed a new, tougher charge against the officer at the center of the case, delivering a victory to protesters who have filled the streets from coast to coast to fight police brutality and racial injustice.

Body

By AMY FORLITI, STEVE KARNOWSKI and TIM SULLIVAN

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Prosecutors charged three more police officers Wednesday in the death of George Floyd and filed a new, tougher charge against the officer at the center of the case, delivering a victory to protesters who have filled the streets from coast to coast to fight police brutality and racial injustice.

The most serious charge was filed against Derek Chauvin, who was caught on video pressing his knee to Floyd's neck and now must defend himself against an accusation of second-degree murder. The three other officers at the scene were charged for the first time with aiding and abetting second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

All four were fired last week. If convicted, they could be sentenced to up to four decades in prison.

Chauvin was initially charged with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter. Those charges still stand.

The new second-degree murder charge alleges that Chauvin caused Floyd's death without intent while committing another felony, namely third-degree assault. It carries a maximum penalty of 40 years in prison, compared with a maximum of 25 years for third-degree murder.

The other officers - Thomas Lane, J. Kueng and Tou Thao - face the same maximum penalties for aiding and abetting. All three men were in custody by Wednesday evening. Chauvin was arrested last week and is still being held.

The multiple charges against each officer would offer a jury more options to find them guilty.

The charges were sought by Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison, who called the protests unleashed by the death "dramatic and necessary" and said Floyd "should be here and he is not."

3 more officers charged in George Floyd's death

"His life had value, and we will seek justice," said Ellison, who cautioned that winning convictions would be hard and said that public pressure had no bearing on his decisions.

Hundreds of protesters were in New York City's Washington Square Park when the charges were announced.

"It's not enough," protester Jonathan Roldan said, insisting all four officers should have been charged from the start. "Right now, we're still marching because it's not enough that they got arrested. There needs to be systematic change."

Ben Crump, an attorney for Floyd's family, called it "a bittersweet moment" and "a significant step forward on the road to justice." Crump said Ellison had told the family he would continue his investigation into Floyd's death and upgrade the charge to first-degree murder if warranted.

The move by prosecutors punctuated an unprecedented week in modern American history, in which largely peaceful protests took place in communities of all sizes but were rocked by bouts of violence, including deadly attacks on officers, rampant thefts and arson in some places.

Nationwide, more than 9,000 have been arrested in connection with unrest. At least 12 deaths have been reported, though the circumstances in many cases are still being sorted out.

Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz, speaking after the new charges were announced, said the state and nation need to "seize the moment" and use the wrenching events of the past week to confront the effects of racism, including unequal educational and economic opportunities.

"I think this is probably our last shot, as a state and as a nation, to fix this systemic issue," he said at a news conference.

Also Wednesday, the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office released the full autopsy report on Floyd, which noted he had previously tested positive for COVID-19, but was apparently asymptomatic. The report was released with the family's permission after summary findings Monday that said he had a heart attack while being restrained by officers.

President Donald Trump has pushed the nation's governors to take a hard line against the violence. He again tweeted Wednesday: "LAW & ORDER!"

An overpowering security force - including officers from the FBI Hostage Rescue Team, the Secret Service, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Bureau of Prisons and, according to a senior defense official, at least 2,200 National Guard soldiers - was out in force Wednesday as thousands of peaceful protesters demonstrated in the nation's capital. Some remained near the White House while others marched toward the Capitol building.

Military vehicles were parked on streets near the White House, and an array of agencies kept watch from the air. An FBI plane, an Army surveillance plane and a Park Police helicopter circled overhead.

At one point near the White House, protesters began singing "Amazing Grace" as they knelt in view of law enforcement officers in riot gear. "We are not going anywhere!" they chanted. There were no signs of confrontations.

Protester Jade Jones, 30, said the demonstrations would continue despite the new charges.

3 more officers charged in George Floyd's death

"That's the least they could do," said Jones, who had been attending Washington protests for days. "It's not going to wipe away 400 years of pain."

"We are glad there are additional charges, but that doesn't mean justice has been served," she said.

More than 20,000 National Guard members have been called up in 29 states to deal with the violence.

In New York City, where high-end stores were looted in earlier days, some retailers fortified their property. At the luxury department store Saks Fifth Avenue, windows were boarded up, then covered in chain-link fencing and razor wire. The front of the store was guarded by a line of tattooed men with dogs. There was scuffling in some parts of the city Wednesday night, but no signs of major clashes between protesters and police.

The protests have also taken root overseas.

In Greece, police fired tear gas after young people attacked them Wednesday outside the U.S. Embassy in Athens. Some 4,000 protesters had been peaceful until near the end of the demonstration, when some threw gasoline bombs and stones at police. No injuries or arrests were reported. Other protests were held Wednesday in London, Helsinki, Rotterdam and Bogota, among other cities.

The anger over Floyd's death has spilled into an array of racial issues across the U.S.

In Philadelphia, for example, a statue of former Mayor Frank Rizzo was removed by the city Wednesday after repeatedly being targeted by vandals. Rizzo presided over a police force widely accused of racism and brutality in the 1970s.

In Virginia, Gov. Ralph Northam was expected to announce plans Thursday for the removal of an iconic statue of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee from Richmond's prominent Monument Avenue, a senior administration official told The Associated Press. The statue in the former Confederate capital has been the target of vandalism during the protests.

Associated Press journalists across the U.S. contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXXVI. PUSHING FOR RACE AND POLICE REFORMS, WALZ FIRES SHOT AT REPUBLICANS IN SENATE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1165 wordsByline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: Attempting to leverage an uncommonly visible bully pulpit and channel widespread outcry for police and racial justice reform in the wake of George Floyd's death, Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz Wednesday fired a shot across the bows of state Senate Republicans, suggesting they're the only group in the state standing in way of morally compelling change. [...]

Body

Attempting to leverage an uncommonly visible bully pulpit and channel widespread outcry for police and racial justice reform in the wake of George Floyd's death, Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz Wednesday fired a shot across the bows of state Senate Republicans, suggesting they're the only group in the state standing in way of morally compelling change.

To be clear, Walz, a Democrat, never uttered the word "Republican" or mentioned any lawmaker by name. But on the eve of memorial services for Floyd that will continue the national spotlight on Minnesota, Walz's pivot to an offensive posture against the only body of power in the state not controlled by Democrats left little doubt. He all but dared them.

"My call to action on this is: This is on us, and I don't think things just happen by chance," Walz said at a 5 p.m. news conference carried live on local stations, underscoring that the national fury over racial injustice was sparked in Minneapolis when a white police officer put his knee to a subdued and unarmed Floyd's neck, leading to his death. "I'm not sure there's anywhere else in the country (where) their Legislature is coming back next week. So you're gonna get to see an opportunity next week how serious people are about getting this done. Because I will guarantee you, there will be bills put on the floor and put to a vote: Yes or no. Put your money where your mouth is and send it forward."

Walz didn't articulate the actual bills he wants to see voted on, but it was clear from his deference to minority lawmakers and community activists that he's endorsing a cornucopia of proposals long sought by liberal Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party members from the core cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

A request for comment from the state's most powerful Republican, Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake, wasn't returned Wednesday evening.

LEGISLATURE DORMANT

Pushing for race and police reforms, Walz fires shot at Republicans in Senate

The shift toward the Minnesota Legislature is jarring; the entire legislative branch of government has taken a way-back seat to Walz ever since the the coronavirus pandemic hit and Walz, like governors across the nation, in March granted himself sweeping emergency powers allowed under state law. The Legislature was in session at the time, and the sense of national crisis spawned a brief flash of bipartisanship as both the Democratic-controlled House and Republican-controlled Senate sped through a series of relief packages.

But then the chambers went largely dormant, scattered into scratchy Zoom calls and soon defaulting to muted-but-still-steadfast partisan lines. They adjourned last month with no agreement on a public infrastructure spending package, aka "bonding bill," even though the basic idea enjoys widespread support from lawmakers of both parties.

However, for Walz to continue his emergency powers, he must call lawmakers back to the Capitol in St. Paul for a special session. He's said he'll do so on June 12.

Walz attempted to draw a natural progression to the doorsteps of the Legislature Wednesday.

He highlighted that the executive branch - his domain - on Tuesday launched a sweeping civil rights probe into the Minneapolis Police Department's racial practices over the last decade.

And he reiterated that Attorney General Keith Ellison - an independently elected official with constitutional powers - had taken over prosecution of the police officers involved in Floyd's custody. On Wednesday, Ellison upped the charges against Derek Chauvin, the then-Minneapolis police officer whose knee kept Floyd's face pressed against the pavement, to second-degree murder and also charged the three other officers with aiding and abetting second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

Walz noted that the prosecution will eventually face the scrutiny of the judiciary branch of government.

Then, after saying "the center of gravity" of the national unrest "is in this state," he rattled off a host of historical racial inequities, from discriminatory housing to educational achievement, and pivoted to the legislative branch.

LIST OF PROPOSALS

"Pick your issue," Walz said, suggesting perhaps a way for those who have demonstrated to channel their energy.

The agenda poised to embody much of the initiatives was laid out earlier this week by lawmakers in the People of Color and Indigenous (POCI) Caucus, of which Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan was a founding member when she served in a Legislature.

Their agenda includes some two dozen ideas, under five general topics - as the caucus defined them:

Reform the investigation and prosecution of officer-involved deaths and wrongful actions
 Increase police accountability and transparency
 Raise standards of conduct and support officer excellence
 Partner officers with the communities they serve
 Repair and build community trust and create community-centered public safety

Among the specific ideas:

Pushing for race and police reforms, Walz fires shot at Republicans in Senate

Create a new crime: "unjustified use of force that results in death or great bodily harm" Create a legal duty for officers to intervene when a fellow cop is using excessive force Move all officer-involved death investigations and prosecution to the attorney general's office Rescind current state law that bans municipalities from requiring cops to live within their borders "Prohibit use of 'Bullet-Proof Warrior' style use of force training" Develop new policies to respond to protests

"I think this is probably our last shot," Walz said of the ambitions to rewrite many of the laws and policies that govern police behavior.

IS IT REALISTIC?

By any traditional political calculation, the list of ideas would face little hope of reaching Walz's desk. In fact, many have been proposed for years, but never gained enough traction, with some never reaching the floor of the House and others languishing in the Senate, where traditional law-and-order Republicans preside over key committees.

But Walz is seeking to capitalize on what he painted as ground-shifting momentum during a moment when all lawmakers will face re-election in November.

Special legislative sessions are traditionally short affairs as lawmakers try to get in, pass urgent matters, and return to their summer breaks. When asked how such a list of reforms could possibly be heard, debated and passed in a short stretch of time, Walz suggested time wasn't an issue.

"The strongest leverage is the people," he said. "I could see us staying there until we get 'er done."

Shortly after his remarks, Walz's political campaign committee sent an email to supporters to rally the cause.

"Will his death be just another blip in a textbook?" the email said of Floyd. "Or will it go down in history as when our country turned toward justice and change?"

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXXVII.

PARK BOARD CUTS TIES TO MPD

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 955 wordsByline: MIGUEL OTAROLA; PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Other organizations cutting ties with MPD after George Floyd killing.Body

The Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board voted Wednesday night to sever its longtime relationship with the Minneapolis Police Department, adding to the list of organizations that have cut ties with the local police following the death of George Floyd at the hands of its officers.

The University of Minnesota, Minneapolis Public Schools, museums and venues have also chosen to limit or end their collaboration with the Police Department in the wake of Floyd's death May 25, which resulted in the firings and arrests of four officers.

The Park Board's unanimous vote directs Superintendent Al Bangoura to immediately stop using Minneapolis police officers to staff park-sanctioned events, and block Park Police officers from responding to nonviolent Minneapolis police calls.

"Recent actions by the Minneapolis Police Department in the alleged murder of George Floyd while in police custody have severely undermined community trust in, and sense of safety around, Minneapolis Police," the resolution read. "This ... does not support the mission of the [Park Board] and has no place in our parks."

Commissioners also unanimously voted to create a new uniform for the Park Board's police force that distinguishes them from Minneapolis police. Officers will now have to wear green; a new design would need to be presented to the board by Oct. 1, according to a separate resolution.

Earlier Wednesday, Bangoura expressed little confidence that park and city police would resume their working relationship anytime soon.

The Minneapolis Police Department "has a long road ahead of them," he said. "We can't judge an entire department by the few, [but] there is a lot that is going to have to change."

The Park Board's police force is made up of 33 officers, 91% of whom live outside the city, according to the board. Roughly 18% of the city of Minneapolis is Park Board land.

Park Board cuts ties to MPD

During the meeting, Park Police Chief Jason Ohotto said only 2% of serious violent crimes occur on parkland.

The Minneapolis Police Department assists the Park Police when there are multiple calls at a time, something which is common during the summer, Ohotto said. Its officers also answer calls in parks in the early mornings.

Ohotto added he could not speak for the Minneapolis police if they would continue to provide that emergency assistance following Wednesday's vote.

Bangoura said the Park Board's police would need to search for new partners to cover nearly 2,000 employee hours it needs each year for events large and small. Those agencies could be the Hennepin County Sheriff's Office, the State Patrol, Metro Transit police and University of Minnesota police.

The vote was held after Park Board employees read an hour's worth of e-mails sent by residents, most of them supporting the resolution to cut ties with Minneapolis police.

A visibly shaken Bangoura, who is black, said during the meeting he was "angered, devastated and heartbroken" to see the video of Floyd's arrest.

"I stand in solidarity with those seeking justice, as does the Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board," he said. "We denounce racism in all forms and we support and promote justice."

The board also voted to create a safety plan that would address policing in the city's parks by June 17.

"We still have our Park Police. They will be focusing on our parks spaces," Park Board President Jono Cowgill said. "This gives us a chance to step back and really have those discussions on what policing looks like in our parks system."

Other local organizations also announced they were cutting ties with the Minneapolis Police Department on Wednesday.

The Walker Art Center announced it would no longer contract with city police for security "for special events until the MPD implements meaningful change to by demilitarizing training programs, holding officers accountable for the use of excessive force, and treating communities of color with dignity and respect."

The Minneapolis Institute of Art and First Avenue said they would not hire off-duty Minneapolis police officers for their events. In a Twitter post, First Avenue said it would "instead work with local organizations who represent our community, and who will protect and affirm Black and Brown lives."

In recent days, Minneapolis Public Schools officials said they would no longer have city police act as school resource officers, terminating a $1.15 million annual contract with the city. University of Minnesota President Joan Gabel said her school also was cutting some ties with city police, including contracting off-duty security for football games, concerts and ceremonies.

A Park Police squad car is visible in the viral video of Floyd's arrest, stationed in front of the Cup Foods while he was pinned to the pavement. Bangoura and Park Police Chief Jason Ohotto said Wednesday that the officer was responding to a request for backup, that he was across the street monitoring a vehicle and that he could not see what was happening to Floyd.

Park Board cuts ties to MPD

The Park Police was subject to its own public outcry in 2018 after a video showed its officers handcuffing four Somali-American teens at Minnehaha Regional Park, yelling and pointing a handgun at them. The Park Board paid $170,000 in recent months to settle claims filed on behalf of the teens.

Commissioners and Ohotto on Wednesday decried the death of Floyd and the actions of the Minneapolis police. Some said the Park Board now needs to focus on reforming its own force.

"The Park Board has a small enough police force that we can actually make some real change," said Commissioner Londel French, who is black. "If we don't do it the right way, our communities burn."

Star Tribune staff writers Liz Navratil contributed to this report.

Miguel Otárola · 612-434-0020

Paul Walsh · 612-673-4482

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

MINNEAPOLIS POLICE DEPARTMENT

ARTICLE CCLXXVIII. MINNEAPOLIS POLICE DEPARTMENT

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 13ALength: 701 wordsByline: ANDREW P. MULLER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Years ago we had a reform plan. It got derailed by politics. // For that, I'm sorry.Body

Citizens of Minneapolis employed former MPD officer Derek Chauvin, and we granted him broad powers, including authority to use deadly force when absolutely necessary.

Last week, we witnessed the killing of an innocent black man, George Floyd, thereby abusing our trust and the power we had conferred on him.

As a citizen, I bear some responsibility for Chauvin's actions - to some degree, we all do. But I can't help thinking that I may be more responsible than others.

In late 2007, I along with attorney John Klassen filed a federal lawsuit on behalf of five high-ranking, African-American officers against Minneapolis and former Police Chief Timothy Dolan. Never before had five such accomplished, currently employed police officers stepped up to call out discrimination by the MPD.

These brave souls included Medaria Arradondo. He is now chief of the Minneapolis Police Department, a position he would not hold if he had previously refused to stand up against the powers that be.

The widely publicized discrimination suit drew attention to systemic problems within the MPD, including overt and covert racism inflicted upon the citizens of Minneapolis. By the end of July 2008, we had spent countless hours working toward a comprehensive resolution of the case with former Assistant City Attorney James Moore, former members of the City Council, and U.S. District Judge Susan Richard Nelson.

Late in the night on July 28, 2008, we had a settlement on the table, and it included the most sweeping changes to any major police department in the United States. For example: The creation of a deputy-chief position to monitor and combat racism within the MPD, including illegal use of force against people of color; mandatory adherence to the terms of a federal consent decree, with continuing federal oversight; and robust data collection and public reporting on incidents of racism within the MPD and the community.

MINNEAPOLIS POLICE DEPARTMENT

That night, we were on the one-yard line of making history.

The next morning, details of our negotiations leaked to the media, and certain segments of the public vehemently opposed such a sweeping settlement. The mayor at the time and others on the City Council got cold feet. They refused to sign off on the would-be-historic deal, worrying it would be far too expensive and, I believe, fearing political fallout. As a result, the deal we had fought so hard to make died, taking much-needed reform with it to the grave.

By early fall 2009, the public had lost interest in the case. It continued, and our clients became the target of unfair personal and professional attacks. So in September 2009, we reached a settlement that was in our client's best interests. It provided them significant relief for the discrimination they had suffered, but it contained no sweeping changes on a department-wide level.

Given the nature of the suit, alleging intentional discrimination against our clients, the city of Minneapolis would have had to voluntarily agree to sweeping reforms; we likely could not obtain them otherwise. And, at that time, the political will to change just didn't exist.

Last week, I along with others in Minneapolis cried watching Floyd's death. And in the back of mind, I wondered what might have been if 12 years ago politics had not gotten in the way of making history. Were we wrong to have settled the case in the best interest of our clients? Would the reforms we thought the city had agreed to in 2008 have changed the course of history? We will never know.

A few things I do know: Half-measures are worthless; they will not save lives. Chief Arradondo, my former client and friend, is absolutely the perfect person to lead the MPD in reform. He has staked his career on fighting institutional racism multiple times in the past, including in our federal lawsuit.

If the current mayor and council members learn from the mistakes of prior leaders - that is to say, if they put their money where their mouths are - reform will happen. If they fail to make good on their current promises, George Floyd will have died in vain. Nothing is more expensive, both in terms of innocent lives lost and dollars wasted, than inaction. We must all stand up.

Andrew P. Muller is a Minneapolis attorney.

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

Minneapolis park board votes to sever ties with city's police department

ARTICLE CCLXXIX. MINNEAPOLIS PARK BOARD VOTES TO SEVER TIES WITH CITY'S POLICE DEPARTMENT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 268 words

Byline: Nick Woltman

Highlight: The Minneapolis Park & Recreation Board voted unanimously Wednesday evening to sever ties with the city's police department in response to the death of George Floyd at the hands of its officers. The resolution adopted by the board directs parks superintendent Alfred Bangoura to prohibit park police officers from responding to backup requests from the [...]

Body

The Minneapolis Park & Recreation Board voted unanimously Wednesday evening to sever ties with the city's police department in response to the death of George Floyd at the hands of its officers.

The resolution adopted by the board directs parks superintendent Alfred Bangoura to prohibit park police officers from responding to backup requests from the Minneapolis Police Department on nonviolent calls, and to stop employing Minneapolis police officers to provide security at park-sanctioned events.

Under the resolution, Bangoura must provide an alternative plan to secure events by Aug. 1.

"Recent actions by the Minneapolis Police Department in the alleged murder of George Floyd while in police custody have severely undermined community trust in, and sense of safety around, Minneapolis Police," the resolution read, in part.

The park board also unanimously approved a second resolution to redesign park police uniforms to distinguish them from those worn by Minneapolis police.

The park board is just the latest entity to cut ties with the department. The Minneapolis school board on Tuesday voted to stop employing the city's police officers to provide security at the district's schools. The Walker Art Center Wednesday morning.

'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress announced a similar move Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Minneapolis park board votes to sever ties with city's police department

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Rachel Marsden: Here's how the U.S. government would be talking about itself if it were a foreign country

ARTICLE CCLXXX. RACHEL MARSDEN: HERE'S HOW THE U.S. GOVERNMENT WOULD BE TALKING ABOUT ITSELF IF IT WERE A FOREIGN COUNTRY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 828 words

Byline: Rachel Marsden

Highlight: PARIS - It looks like democracy has finally arrived, and the regime's days are numbered. It was a single spark in a tinderbox of totalitarian exasperation that ignited a firestorm of freedom. An innocent civilian, George Floyd, member of a minority racial class, died at the hands of regime authorities. Video of the incident leaked [...]

Body

PARIS - It looks like democracy has finally arrived, and the regime's days are numbered. It was a single spark in a tinderbox of totalitarian exasperation that ignited a firestorm of freedom. An innocent civilian, George Floyd, member of a minority racial class, died at the hands of regime authorities.

Video of the incident leaked online and quickly shot around the world, igniting protests against the interventionist regime in cities such as Paris, Amsterdam and Dublin. The footage showed a member of the domestic paramilitary kneeling on the victim's neck for several minutes. The regime cited underlying health conditions as a cause of death and refused to acknowledge any premeditation.

For the past several days, the American people's attempt to overthrow the regime by spilling into the streets in protest has been led by average people from all walks of life. Call it the Free American Army. The regime is trying to discredit the FAA by tying it to antifa, which the regime plans to declare a terrorist group. This dishonest attempt to associate the plight of average American citizens with the actions of a violent group known worldwide for rapidly organizing to exploit domestic strife in various countries has one objective: to undermine the uprising and keep the regime in power.

This fight for freedom comes after more than two months of intense crackdowns across the country. Citizens were told to "shelter in place" and were denied the basic human freedoms of movement, assembly and work under the pretext that a virus was lurking outside. Various members of the regime, including medical apparatchik Dr. Anthony Fauci and New York Gov. Anthony Cuomo, whose father also served in the regime, appeared regularly in white face-burkas on state television to bombard Americans with death statistics, inciting fear of going outside or getting too close to others. As the regime plunged the middle class into poverty, it legislated a redistribution of wealth to the country's elites.

Rachel Marsden: Here's how the U.S. government would be talking about itself if it were a foreign country

"I want to protect myself and protect others, and also because I want to make it be a symbol for people to see that that's the kind of thing you should be doing," Fauci said as he encouraged Americans to wear face-burkas in public.

The battle between freedom-loving Americans and the authoritarian regime had already begun when citizens started gathering en masse and flooding the country's beaches without face-burkas.

The last hope for pro-democracy reformers was President Donald Trump, an outsider who had vowed to reform the country's institutions. Unfortunately, Trump has struggled to enact meaningful structural reforms, leading his supporters to conclude that perhaps the system is simply unreformable.

Trump is only tolerated by regime elites when he falls into line and distracts citizens from domestic problems by shaking his fist at other countries. The regime has even offered a $15 million reward for information leading to the arrest of a foreign leader, Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro, while its military has continued to infiltrate, invade and destabilize countries all over the world.

The regime is now trying to depict peaceful protestors as radical, sending its army into the streets to crack down on the movement with tear gas and rubber bullets. Videos have emerged showing state violence against unarmed civilians. The regime has vowed to maximize the presence of its forces in the streets. Former New York City Mayor Rudy Giuliani, a Trump associate and noted proponent of foreign meddling, has appeared on Fox News state propaganda TV, explaining that when he was the strongman of New York City, he had hundreds of people arrested during protests.

Trump has echoed that sentiment. In a leaked recording of a conference call, Trump and Attorney General William Barr indicated that they want local elites to use the regime's army to "dominate" the protesters. He also said that he thinks the whole world is laughing at the regime's weakness. Trump should sit down with the protesters - bring all factions involved to the table and negotiate their inclusion in a new democratic government.

In the meantime, our NATO allies can set up a no-fly zone over major U.S. cities to protect the Free American Army and civilian democracy activists. Next week, there should be a congressional vote on sanctioning regime elites, including travel bans and asset freezes. Their wealth comes at the expense of the suffering American people. Our coalition will also draft a new constitution for America that ensures the inclusion and equal representation of all protest groups.

Free people will always prevail against oppression and tyranny, and America will always be on the side of those fighting in the streets. Elsewhere.

Rachel Marsden is a columnist, political strategist and host of an independently produced French-language program that airs on Sputnik France. Her website can be found at <http://www.rachelmarsden.com>. She wrote this piece for Tribune Content Agency.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXXXI. READERS WRITE LET THE REAL WORK BEGIN

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 12ALength: 1165 wordsBody

AFTERMATH OF FLOYD'S DEATH

Open letter to the peaceful protesters who have brought a message of justice and needed police reform in light of George Floyd's death: The time and energy you have spent demonstrating is to be commended. But now the real work to bring justice and change must begin.

Marching in the street is an immediate sugar high compared to the sometimes excruciatingly slow process of effecting real and lasting change. Now you must lobby your local, state and national representatives: Call, write and meet with them. Tell your story. Put a face to it so they see the pain you have experienced. Explain in detail the changes you wish to see. Attend local meetings and state legislative hearings. Support representatives who share your values. Organize your community, your family, friends and neighbors, to join you in the effort. And do the most powerful thing of all: Vote! Yes, be loud, peacefully march and protest, but don't stop there - make your voice heard long after the street demonstrations end.

Steve Millikan, Minneapolis

PROTESTS

That's what faith really looks like

Thank you, Star Tribune, for the beautiful front-page image on Wednesday of black clergy marching in silence. I was gratified that this was the image we saw above the fold this morning, rather than the photo of the president tried to create for his own political purposes.

The dignity and courage of these real faith leaders in our local communities is the image we need in these times and is a reflection of true faith instead of craven political pandering.

The Rev. Pamela Fickenscher, Northfield, Minn.

POLICING

Can't trust their information, either

Any investigation of the Minneapolis Police Department must extend to the department's public information office, which, at this point, appears to have engaged in covering up police misconduct.

Virtually everything about the initial news release was false: The police did not respond to a "forgery in progress." The videos of the incident show no indication that George Floyd "physically resisted officers. The officers did not "note" that Floyd was "suffering medical distress"; rather, they caused it. More than a week later, the police chief cannot explain it and does not know the original source of the information in the news release ("Misinformation in Floyd death troubling," June 3).

We have come to expect spin, but we shouldn't be lied to. Until the "public information" function of the MPD is fully addressed and reformed if necessary, we can't trust what the department says and must continue to rely on a relentless free press and citizens with cellphone cameras.

Carolyn Wolski, St. Paul

. . .

According to Richard Greelis' commentary, the actions that lead to Floyd's death "certainly do not represent the Minneapolis police" ("Most protesters don't loot, most cops don't kill," Opinion Exchange, May 30). So, at least one of the cops present should have conducted himself in a manner that does represent the Minneapolis police.

But Greelis says Derek Chauvin didn't. So, one of them is bad. OK.

But also, he says the other three didn't. Huh.

It's a shame that the sole four bad eggs out of 800 officers all happened to be in the same place at the same time.

Ben George, Roseville

. . .

Since the 1980s and the colorful reformer Tony Bouza, Minneapolis has had six police chiefs and five mayors. All attempted to improve police-community relations. All failed. Chief Medaria Arradondo and Mayor Jacob Frey hope to make things better, too, and they too will fail. MPD is broken beyond fixing.

But there is a solution: Disband MPD and contract with the Hennepin County Sheriff's Department for policing services.

Sure, the sheriff will need to hire a lot of Minneapolis cops. But that's part of the benefit: They will need to be hired. Bad eggs can be identified and left behind. The toxic police union will go away. So will the financial bill for police misconduct. That price tag, since 2007, has been at least $40 million, and several times the per-capita liability of the rest of Minnesota.

Cities contract with other cities and sheriffs' departments for police coverage all the time. Usually it's a smaller city contracting with a larger one. But there is no reason Minneapolis can't scrap a remarkably dysfunctional department and start over. There will be a new sheriff in town, and things can only get better.

David Therkelsen, Minneapolis

VICE PRESIDENCY

Michelle would thrive. Others, too.

With respect to Hank Shea's opinion piece, "A democracy in crisis needs Michelle Obama," I agree that Obama would make a terrific vice president. The Obamas undoubtedly will go down in history as one of the best, if not the best, first couple this country has had to this point.

I do not believe, however, that she is the only person who can heal the nation. Indeed, it pains me that Joe Biden has committed to picking a woman as his running mate and is being pressured to choose a black woman. This means that whoever he picks will be viewed through the lens of having been chosen from an artificially narrowed field. I would love to have him pick a black woman because she is the most qualified to help him lead the country out of all possible contenders.

That woman does not have to be Obama, who, as terrific as she is, has served and continues to serve this country in ways of her choosing. She has repeatedly said she is not interested in the job. Consider Keisha Lance Bottoms, the mayor of Atlanta. Consider Muriel Bowser, the mayor of Washington, D.C. Both are intelligent and articulate black women who are doing an outstanding job of leading their cities in this time of crisis. These are just two that come to mind.

Michelle Obama is not the only black woman in this nation capable of the job of vice president. It is myopic and demeans others to say so.

Elissa Mautner, Minneapolis

CLEANING UP

We're still processing - together

My wife's niece (who said I could share this story) has two sons. The 10-year-old has a neurological disorder that prevents him from processing what he experiences and has left him nonverbal, even though he can sense events around him and respond with simple signing. His older brother turned 13 a few days ago, in the midst of our pain and protest, unrest and violence.

Their mother took them to see some of the destruction on East Lake Street, only a few blocks from their home. The younger one knew what he saw was not good, and over and over again he signed, "I'm sorry. I'm sorry." As they walked with the younger one's repeated lament, the older one often held his brother's hand tightly.

It is unfair that a boy of 10 cannot process and verbalize what he experiences. It is also unfair that a boy of 13 is forced to process such prejudice, terror and destruction as we have had these days. Yet, for all who watched on Lake Street, these two young brothers gave an alternative: a vision of caring and shared love and security, an image of hope.

Paul Rogers, Minneapolis

We want to hear from you. Send us your thoughts here.

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

READERS WRITE Let the real work begin

End of Document

First Avenue, Walker drop security deals with Minneapolis police

ARTICLE CCLXXXII.

FIRST AVENUE, WALKER DROP SECURITY DEALS WITH MINNEAPOLIS POLICE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 261 words

Byline: Mark Reilly

Body

Minneapolis nightclub First Avenue and the Walker Art Center on Wednesday said they would stop using Minneapolis Police Department officers as security for events, a sign that pullback from the department after last week's death of George Floyd - and days of subsequent protests - is spreading to the private sector.

City Pages reports on the announcements (you can also read them here and here). First Avenue's is blunter, saying that in the wake of Floyd's death during an arrest by police, "The presence of off-duty MPD officers at our events will not guarantee the safety of our patrons and does not support our community or our values as an organization."

Four officers were fired after the incident. On Wednesday, Derek Chauvin, the officer captured on video with his knee on Floyd's neck, was charged with second-degree murder, an upgrade of an earlier charge, while three others now face aiding and abetting charges, the Star Tribune reports.

First Avenue, Walker drop security deals with Minneapolis police

Floyd's death sparked days of protest across the country, which in turn spun into rampages of violence that destroyed or damaged hundreds of businesses before calming in the past few days.

Since then, the Police Department has seen the termination of several contracts, including with the University of Minnesota and Minneapolis Public Schools. On Wednesday, the Minneapolis Park Board voted to separate its police force from the city's; the Star Tribune has more details on that move.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

George Floyd memorial draws hundreds of mourners, supporters. 'Just spread some love today.'

ARTICLE CCLXXXIII. GEORGE FLOYD MEMORIAL DRAWS HUNDREDS OF MOURNERS, SUPPORTERS. 'JUST SPREAD SOME LOVE TODAY.'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 866 words

Byline: Nick Ferraro

Highlight: Yvonne Cain of western Wisconsin drove more than an hour just to be outside North Central University as a show of support for George Floyd, who died after being pinned to the ground by Minneapolis police - an act that was recorded on a cellphone camera and outraged people from across the world. Cain, 54, [...]

Body

Yvonne Cain of western Wisconsin drove more than an hour just to be outside North Central University as a show of support for George Floyd, who died after being pinned to the ground by Minneapolis police - an act that was recorded on a cellphone camera and outraged people from across the world.

Cain, 54, was one of hundreds of mourners and well-wishers Thursday who chose Elliot Park, across the street from the university's Frank J. Lindquist Sanctuary, and other nearby open places to partake in Floyd's funeral service, audio of which was pumped in from several loudspeakers.

"I'm so happy we can listen out here," said Cain, a resident of Little Falls, Wis., who sat on a lawn chair, wore a sun hat and drank a Sierra Mist. "I wasn't sure what to expect - if I should come out here or watch it on TV."

The vibe in and around the park was lively before and after the service, which was invitation-only and attended by several political dignitaries and celebrities such as The Rev. Jesse Jackson, Al Sharpton, Kevin Hart, Tiffany Haddish and Ludacris. Soothing gospel music could be heard. Media members from the around the world broadcast live reports throughout the day.

A large crowd of mourners and well-wishers gathers outside North Central University in Minneapolis for #GeorgeFloyd private memorial service

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress)

Former Pioneer Press sports reporter Ray Richardson knew Floyd and was covering the service for KMOJ-FM pic.twitter.com/7hOIJNt4Zv June 4, 2020, a North Minneapolis radio station. Before it began, Richardson recalled how he first met Floyd three years ago when Richardson ran the CDL truck-driving training program at the YWCA in St. Paul. He said he'll remember Floyd as determined, respectful and polite.

George Floyd memorial draws hundreds of mourners, supporters. 'Just spread some love today.'

"I won't remember him lying down in the street," said Richardson, who wore a black face mask that read, "We still can't breathe." "I want to remember the guy who I interacted with."

So @899KMOJ radio host Ray Richardson, a former sports reporter, got to know #GeorgeFloyd about three years ago when Richardson ran the CDL truck driving training program at the YWCA in St. Paul. He'll remember Floyd as determined, respectful and polite.

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress) June 4, 2020 @PioneerPress pic.twitter.com/OXeHTdYfi8

Homeless tents were staked under trees, where people of all walks of life sought shade from the sun that raised temperatures into the mid-80s by the start of the 1 p.m. service. Several pickup soccer games were played.

Anthony Thornton, who lives about five blocks away, set up his lawn chair at 7 a.m. He planned to take photos and videos for his family around the country.

"Hate, whether you're black, white, green or brown, is no good in America," he said. "The whole of America has seen enough of this."

Mark Hintz, his wife, Meg, and their children Emma, 13, and Hazen, 11, passed out water and snacks in the park. The Roseville family belongs to Hope Community Church, which is on the other side of the park along 10th Avenue, and wanted to "just spread some love today," Mark said.

Nearby, Chris Jacobz held his 1-year-old nephew Quintavious Mims with one hand and a sign in the other. On it were the words that Martin Luther King Jr. wrote in an open letter while in a Birmingham jail for leading a protest in 1963: "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."

About a block away, members of Brothers Empowered, a nonprofit organization from North Minneapolis, served free meals at 14th Street and Chicago Avenue - the same street where Floyd was pinned facedown to the ground May 25 by three Minneapolis police officers.

These folks from Brothers Empowered - a North Minneapolis nonprofit - served free meals to anyone Thursday afternoon outside the #GeorgeFloydMemorial

- Nick Ferraro (@NFerraroPiPress)

The group had been feeding up to 500 people a day since the start of the coronavirus outbreak, and they wanted to be part of the funeral any way they could, minister Charles Caine said.

"We're here to support the family by handing out free food, and just hoping that justice comes for them and George," he said.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform pic.twitter.com/72PFVZ2Pgc June 4, 2020 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest Nicole Smith of Brooklyn Center wore a T-shirt with Floyd's face and the words, "I Can't Breathe." She bought it

George Floyd memorial draws hundreds of mourners, supporters. 'Just spread some love today.'

Thursday from Reggie Jones, who came to Minneapolis from Bowman, S.C. He said proceeds from the shirts will go to Floyd's children.

"His face is the message," Jones said. "This is a face you don't want to forget right here."

Jones reflected on Floyd as he stood outside the memorial service: "I'm hurt, I'm hurt, I'm hurt. Any time a life is taken senselessly and kids are left behind, I'm hurt."

When Floyd's shiny gold-colored casket was wheeled out of church, calls to prosecute the police and chants of his name rained down from the crowd.

Mara H. Gottfried contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

County autopsy: Floyd had virus, not factor in death

ARTICLE CCLXXXIV.

COUNTY AUTOPSY: FLOYD HAD VIRUS, NOT FACTOR IN DEATH

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 10A

Length: 464 words

Byline: PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

The Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office released the full autopsy results performed on George Floyd with his family's permission.

The release comes nine days after Floyd died following his detention on the pavement by police at a Minneapolis intersection and as crucial differences surfaced Monday with outside autopsy findings released by family attorney Benjamin Crump.

Also disclosed by the report was that Floyd tested positive for COVID-19 in early April, although the autopsy did not cite that as a factor in his death.

"Since ... positivity for [COVID-19] can persist for weeks after the onset and resolution of clinical disease, the autopsy result most likely reflects asymptomatic but persistent ... positivity from previous infection," the report said based on the autopsy performed by the medical examiner, Dr. Andrew Baker.

Floyd repeatedly told officers that he was unable to breathe while he was restrained before he lost consciousness and died. A concern with SARS-CoV-2 infection is that it can cause scarring in the lungs that results in lingering respiratory problems and shortness of breath. However, doctors worry more about that long-term problem in severe COVID-19 cases that require hospitalization, and doctors expect that patients with asymptomatic cases will fully recover. It can take weeks in some cases, though, before X-rays show that lungs have recovered.

The release of the 20-page report comes "with the consent and cooperation of Mr. George Floyd's family and their legal representatives," the examiner's office said in a statement that noted a court order was also needed.

The key difference between the medical examiner's findings and those of the autopsy arranged by the family is whether Floyd died from asphyxia.

County autopsy: Floyd had virus, not factor in death

The medical examiner made a point last week to say no, while the second report's findings focused heavily on asphyxia being caused by officer Derek Chauvin pinning Floyd's neck for nearly 9 minutes with his knee while officer Thomas Lane put his weight on the 46-year-old's back and constricted his chest.

Before releasing its full report, the examiner's office summarized in two public disclosures that Floyd died as a result of "cardiopulmonary arrest complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint, and neck compression." It also listed "arteriosclerotic and hypertensive heart disease," as well as fentanyl intoxication and recent methamphetamine use as "other significant conditions."

The medical examiner appeared to back his conclusion that Floyd was not asphyxiated by listing a host of injuries that were absent, in particular petechiae, or pinpoint-size red spots caused by broken blood vessels that can be a sign of asphyxiation.

Staff writers Jeremy Olson and Liz Navratil contributed to this report.

Paul Walsh · 612-968-2483

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

Letters: You own this, Minneapolis and Minnesota Democrats

ARTICLE CCLXXXV.

LETTERS: YOU OWN THIS, MINNEAPOLIS AND MINNESOTA DEMOCRATS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 849 words

Byline: Letter Writers

Highlight: The fact is George Floyd was killed in Minneapolis, by a Minneapolis policeman. He was not killed by a federal agent in a community of white supremacists. Minneapolis has been dominated by Democrat mayors for more than 40 years. If systemic racism exists in the Minneapolis police force it has been enabled by Democrat leaders [...]

Body

The fact is George Floyd was killed in Minneapolis, by a Minneapolis policeman. He was not killed by a federal agent in a community of white supremacists.

Minneapolis has been dominated by Democrat mayors for more than 40 years. If systemic racism exists in the Minneapolis police force it has been enabled by Democrat leaders for more than 40 years. Make no mistake, Gov. Walz, Mayor Frey, Attorney General Ellison, Police Chief Arradondo, Rep. Omar, Sens. Klobuchar and Smith - you own this situation. You have all run on platforms promising you would rid our community of this type of heinous behavior.

Liberal politicians' show their cynicism when, while in control for decades, they express their outrage that racism is a systemic problem in the police department of our largest city. Each of these leaders has expressed support for the protesters, as if they are sympatico with their cause. Where is the self-awareness? These people are not supporting your leadership, they are protesting against your failure to deal with systemic racism while you are empowered to make real change.

Tim Waltz is our governor; not George Wallace

Jacob Frey is the mayor; not Lester Maddox

Keith Ellison is attorney general; not Jeff Sessions

Amy Klobuchar is our U.S. senator; not Strom Thurmond

Medaria Arradondo is police chief; not Bull Connor

Enough of the empty accolades for the protesters. Don't pretend you are in agreement with their cause. Your actions, while in power to make real change, demonstrate otherwise. The correct response on your part is not to insult the community with feigned emotion, your responsibility was to prevent this from happening. You have all failed miserably.

Letters: You own this, Minneapolis and Minnesota Democrats

Jack Joseph, St. Paul

"One reason that they (mainland China's Communist Party and immigrants) came to Hong Kong is because there was the rule of law, there was a free enterprise system, there was a capitalist system, and there was democracy and local legislative elections. If all those things go away, I'm not sure how the financial community can stay there. It looks like with this national security law they're (China) going to basically take over Hong Kong," White House National Security Adviser Robert O'Brien said on May 24, 2020.

For ordinary people like us, the takeover of Hong Kong by mainland China can seem far away and irrelevant, but imagine if Winnipeg, Canada, declared that they now control St. Cloud or Duluth simply because we both have some shared history and are connected geographically. China's takeover of Hong Kong is a feudal takeover not grounded in Confucian nor Socratic methods of governing but instead unilaterally puts China's arbitrary police enforcement and judicial decision-making in the hands of their communist comrades increasingly sent to Hong Kong. The citizens of Hong Kong, however, have no army and their vulnerable population - slightly larger than Minnesota's - has demonstrated the power of resisting the destruction of their democratic principles for decades culminating in the massive, peaceful 2019 demonstrations.

The democratic, not autocratic, principles that made Hong Kong so desirable to China are the same principles that keep the United States functioning: judges trained to control their personal bias and who strive to determine rules of law that preserve a stable environment for everyone; individuals who value a competitive free market system, and most important of all, collaboration between and participation by all members of society through fair elections. Threats to each of these core aspects of democracy are occurring not only in Hong Kong but also in the U.S., when representatives seek the success of businesses rather than the well-being of citizens, and when judges make partisan decisions that excuse crime.

Excuses have been made for decades about China's actions in Tibet and Xinjiang so Hong Kong is just the next phase in their agenda. Hong Kong and the United States have been extremely attractive places to live because of the balance between stable legal and judicial systems, and the balance of public safety and private profit. Hong Kongers are at the frontlines of defending democratic principles, principles that led to stability and wealth for many people but principles which China is destroying in Hong Kong. Hong Kongers are not far away over there; hopefully, we recognize the same desire for fairness, stability and equity for which they are risking their lives and, hopefully, we are willing to work for its preservation here.

Mary Voight, St. Paul

If Jesus were alive today would we see him with and organizing demonstrations for racial justice or would he be standing next to the president on the steps of a church for a photo op?

Joseph Capecchi, Mendota Heights

Letters: You own this, Minneapolis and Minnesota Democrats

Letters: Progressives have controlled Minneapolis for 40 years. Hold them accountable Tainted: Hey, bicyclists, what's wrong with your special bikeway? Letters: SPPD should extend its purview Letters: Is this the society into which we're welcoming our 2020 high school graduates? Letters: Address the ways we deny people their human dignity and rights

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCLXXXVI.

FLORIDA OFFICER ON LEAVE AFTER PRESSING KNEE INTO MAN'S NECK

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 797 wordsByline: Associated Press

Highlight: SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) - A Florida police officer pressed his knee into the neck of a handcuffed black man a week before the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis, a bystander's video released this week shows - a release that has prompted a departmental investigation and the officer being placed on leave.

Body

SARASOTA, Fla. - A Florida police officer pressed his knee into the neck of a handcuffed black man a week before the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis, a bystander's video released this week shows - a release that has prompted a departmental investigation and the officer being placed on leave.

Two Sarasota officers are seen on video holding down Patrick Carroll, 27, as they arrested him May 18 on domestic violence charges for allegedly attacking a woman by pulling her hair, striking her and throwing her to the ground.

One officer put his knee on Carroll's neck as he lied face down on the street as another appears to be tightening the handcuffs holding his arms behind his back. A third officer stood nearby. A bystander yelled at the officer not to put his knee on Carroll's neck.

The department told news outlets it wasn't aware the officer placed a knee on Carroll's neck until it was tagged in the video on social media on Monday. In a police report released by the department, an officer stated, "minor force was used to escort subject to the ground and secure him long enough for him to calm down."

"Utilizing your knee on someone's neck is not something that we train," Sarasota Police Deputy Chief Patrick Robinson said. "It's not something that we authorize and it's not something that we stand behind." He has pledged transparency in the investigation.

Policing experts have told The Associated Press that no U.S. department is known to teach officers to put a knee into a suspect's neck because it can cut off the suspect's breathing and blood flow to the brain. Academies teach recruits a variety of use-of-force techniques, all with the idea that any force employed may equal but not exceed the physical resistance offered by a suspect.

Florida officer on leave after pressing knee into man's neck

One technique is to restrain someone on the ground face-down, but officers are taught to press a part of the lower leg, such as the shin or top of the ankle, across the shoulders or the back. In some cases officers will "hog-tie" suspects' legs to prevent flight or violent resistance.

The New York Police Department, for example, says in its policies manual in bold capitals that officers "SHALL NOT" use chokeholds and should "avoid actions which may result in chest compression, such as sitting, kneeling, or standing on a subject's chest or back, thereby reducing the subject's ability to breathe."

Such tactics gained worldwide attention after bystander video of Floyd's May 29 death showed a Minneapolis officer putting his knee on his neck for over eight minutes while three other officers failed to stop him. Floyd complained he couldn't breathe and then lost consciousness. Officer Derek Chauvin is charged with second-degree murder while the other three officers are charged with aiding and abetting second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

Sarasota police said on Facebook that Carroll "didn't require medical attention nor did the individual complain of injuries during the incident." Carroll's family disputes this, telling the Herald-Tribune that a request for medical attention was denied in jail and they are seeking legal counsel.

Aerial video posted by the department Tuesday shows more of the encounter. The officers are seen speaking with Carroll for several minutes before placing him in handcuffs. He then resists being put in the patrol car, and officers force him to the ground.

Carroll said he was trying to ask officers why he was being detained. He said he has asthma and scoliosis in his back, and was having trouble breathing.

"I could have been dead on that ground and not standing here talking to y'all right now," Carroll told reporters this week, amid global protests over the death of Floyd, who said he couldn't breathe as a Minneapolis officer pressed a knee into his neck on Memorial Day.

The officer who placed his knee on Carroll's neck has been placed on administrative leave, the department said. The two other officers are on "desk duty" while the arrest is being investigated, news outlets reported. Officials have not identified the officers.

Carroll, meanwhile, faces charges of domestic battery, resisting arrest and possessing ammunition by a felon as he allegedly had bullets but no gun in his backpack. The police report says the woman he allegedly attacked had bruising to her arms, face and chest. He is free on bail. State records show he served 1.5 years in prison on a felony battery conviction and was released in 2015. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Initial Minneapolis damage estimate: $55 million and rising

ARTICLE CCLXXXVII.

INITIAL MINNEAPOLIS DAMAGE ESTIMATE: $55 MILLION AND RISING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 296 words

Byline: The Associated Press

Highlight: The city of Minneapolis says the looting and property damage that following the death of George Floyd in police custody has caused at least $55 million in destruction so far. Vandals damaged or set fire to at least 220 buildings, but that number is expected to go up, city officials said. Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey [...]

Body

The city of Minneapolis says the looting and property damage that following the death of George Floyd in police custody has caused at least $55 million in destruction so far.

Vandals damaged or set fire to at least 220 buildings, but that number is expected to go up, city officials said.

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey will ask for state and federal aid to help rebuild after the civil unrest. Until that happens, community members are pitching in to support Minneapolis neighborhoods.

More than \$1 million has been raised to help businesses in North Minneapolis, WCCO-TV reported. The West Broadway Business and Area Coalition says it will announce how they plan to use the money in the coming weeks. to help businesses along Lake Street in South Minneapolis.

In St. Paul, where more than 200 buildings were damaged or set fire, the city is still assessing and tabulating the overall destruction, much of which occurred along University Avenue.

The violence follows the death of Floyd, a handcuffed black man who died May 25 after a white Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck, ignoring Floyd's cries that he couldn't breathe.

Prosecutors Wednesday upgraded charges against the officer, Derek Chauvin, to second-degree murder and charged three other officers with aiding and abetting in the case that has rocked the nation with protests over race and police brutality.

'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress More than \$4.5 million has been raised Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers

Initial Minneapolis damage estimate: $55 million and rising

open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

MEDA's work supporting minority-owned businesses set back 10 years by riots, CEO says

ARTICLE CCLXXXVIII. MEDA'S WORK SUPPORTING MINORITY-OWNED BUSINESSES SET BACK 10 YEARS BY RIOTS, CEO SAYS

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 411 words

Byline: Carrigan Miller

Body

The Metropolitan Economic Development Association, or MEDA, was founded in 1971 in part to help Minneapolis and St. Paul recover after riots rocked both cities in the late 1960s, said CEO Alfredo Martel.

Now, Martel said, MEDA's work supporting the formation and growth of minority-owned businesses has been set back 10 years by riots that stemmed from the killing of George Floyd by a member of the Minneapolis Police Department.

"This is going to be a big hole to crawl out of," Martel said.

The destruction hasn't been distributed equally. Minneapolis-based MEDA has clients in many of the neighborhoods that have been most impacted, such as along Lake Street in Minneapolis and University Avenue in St. Paul. Those businesses have been looted and faced water damage to their inventories. Some have had their buildings completely destroyed by fire.

MEDA's work supporting minority-owned businesses set back 10 years by riots, CEO says

The riots disproportionately impacted businesses owned by ethnic minority entrepreneurs, and are largely in industries like food service or retail that have thinner margins and were already more impacted by the financial effects of Covid-19, Martel said. Minority-owned businesses also often have less cash on hand and are less likely to have a relationship with a mainstream bank.

The Twin Cities is something like an ecosystem, and damage to any part of that ecosystem has profound ripples, Martel said. While many of the businesses that have been hurt will recover, the people those businesses employ will likely spend some time out of work.

Even the corporate businesses that were impacted invest in communities through their presence, Martel said.

"That Target that's across from the Third Precinct provides jobs," he said.

The bright spot is the collaborative response of the Twin Cities community. Groups like the Lake Street Council and Northside Funders Group are actively raising funds to help repair and rebuild business corridors that have been affected by looting and arson.

MEDA urges any businesses that have been damaged during the protests to reach out to the organization, whether they were existing MEDA clients or not, as the organization tries to understand exactly how much impact the riots have had on the Twin Cities economy.

"We are open for business," Martel said.

Martel also encouraged business owners to start crowdfunding and to seek donations through social media channels.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCLXXXIX.

MOOD BECOMES HOPEFUL AT FLOYD MEMORIAL SITE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 893 wordsByline: JOHN REINAN; ROCHELLE OLSON; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Standing at the intersection where his brother was pinned to the street by Minneapolis police more than a week ago, Milton Carney spoke with a quiet intensity about the death of George Floyd.

Behind him, hundreds of people had gathered outside Cup Foods to celebrate the news Wednesday afternoon that three former Minneapolis police officers had been charged with aiding and abetting murder in Floyd's death. Charges against a fourth, Derek Chauvin, were upgraded to second-degree murder in the Memorial Day incident, in which Chauvin kept his knee on Floyd's neck for more than eight minutes, leading to his death.

"We are glad the system is starting to work for the righteous," said Carney, 45, of Houston. "But this is just the first step. The journey is not over; the fight is not over.

"If y'all want the violence to stop, you got to give them something to make it stop."

For more than a week, the intersection of 38th Street and S. Chicago Avenue has been a place of intense passion and somber reflection. But Wednesday, as news of the charges against all four ex-police officers made its way through the crowd, the scene took on an air of hope and celebration.

Music blared, hot dogs and hamburgers sizzled on grills, and people mingled in the sunshine at the spot that's become a sacred shrine to many across the globe. After days of tragedy, terror and overwhelming grief, people were feeling some joy again.

"This is a moment of change that I didn't think I'd live to see," said Rod Adams, a Minneapolis native who now lives in Detroit, speaking to the day. "This is one of those moments in this country when we can do real structural change."

"I think it's about time," said Caroline Njogu of St. Paul, reacting to the charges against the former officers. "This is why we've been here. Today we're celebrating."

'We deserve justice'

Mood becomes hopeful at Floyd memorial site

Shortly after Attorney General Keith Ellison announced the new charges, George Floyd's son, 27-year-old Quincy Mason, stood outside a downtown Minneapolis hotel with family attorney Benjamin Crump and the Rev. Al Sharpton.

"I am happy that all the officers have been arrested," Mason said. "My father should not have been killed like this. We deserve justice."

Crump said the family wanted a first-degree murder charge filed against Chauvin but has faith in Ellison's pledge to investigate and prosecute the former officers.

"We believe it was torture," Crump said, adding that Chauvin's continued application of pressure on Floyd's neck despite another officer questioning him amounted to "intent," an element of first-degree murder.

Sharpton, who will deliver the eulogy at Floyd's funeral Thursday, said he plans to call for a national act akin to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that protects citizens from police.

"It's not about piecemeal," he said. "We need fundamental federal laws."

Both Sharpton and Crump said they were hopeful, given the outrage. Since Floyd's death, demonstrations for justice have spread to all 50 states and many nations.

"I've always believed you need to fight in the court of public opinion before you can get to the court of law," Crump said.

Added Sharpton, "When I see young white kids out there marching ... I know that change is possible."

Nearby, Gwen Carr, the mother of Eric Garner, who died in police custody in New York six years ago while also gasping that he couldn't breathe, said Floyd's pleas felt like "my son's voice echoing from the grave."

Although she expressed relief that the firings of the officers and criminal charges came swiftly in Minneapolis, Carr urged everyone to prepare for the long haul.

"We gonna fight," she said. "We gonna win."

Earlier Wednesday, Crump and Mason visited the intersection of 38th and Chicago. Crump's voice boomed as he spoke, rising above the hundreds of supporters and dozens of media members encircling the site.

"We are demanding justice ... [for] what the entire world has seen with their eyes and cannot unsee," he said. "We cannot have two justice systems in America - one for black Americans and one for white Americans."

Throughout the week, activists have circulated at the Cup Foods site, gathering support for their causes.

On Wednesday, a group seeking to recall Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman launched a petition drive, sending out volunteers with clipboards and signature sheets. Chaplains from the Billy Graham Rapid Response Team also were circulating through the crowd.

Mood becomes hopeful at Floyd memorial site

Ann Boekhoff of St. Paul left a gift of fruit and bars outside Cup Foods, and she also brought her 2-year-old granddaughter. "I'm here to honor George Floyd," she said. "This is a very sacred place. I wanted her to be exposed to what's going on in the world."

Carmilla Peterson of Minneapolis echoed the thoughts of many.

"I think people are happy that some justice has been served, but it's not enough," she said. "There's a lingering anger, because it took the destruction of our town to get some justice."

Larry Cregg, who lives a block from Cup Foods, said the events reminded him of the 1960s, when massive protests resulted in civil rights laws being passed. But those laws haven't been enough, he said.

"This says that black people in America haven't made any progress," he said. Gesturing at the crowd, he added, "If all these people don't go out and vote, all this is for nothing."

john.reinan@startribune.com

612-673-7402

raolson@startribune.com

612-673-1747

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

Valerie Castile: 'I knew this day would come'

ARTICLE CCXC. VALERIE CASTILE: 'I KNEW THIS DAY WOULD COME'

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 8A

Length: 854 words

Byline: REID FORGRAVE; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

It has been an emotional nine days since Valerie Castile's daughter alerted her to the video of Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin kneeling on George Floyd's neck on Memorial Day for more than eight minutes before he died.

The video felt like a sickening déjà vu: Another black man killed at the hands of a Twin Cities police officer, and filmed for the world to see. It was like four years ago, when her son, 32-year-old Philando Castile, was shot five times by officer Jeronimo Yanez after a traffic stop in Falcon Heights.

When Castile watched the video, she cried.

When she was invited to speak at a protest in downtown Minneapolis last week, the day before her 64th birthday, she spoke, even though she's avoided crowds during the coronavirus pandemic.

When she saw protests turn violent, she wasn't surprised: "I've said it time after time. You cannot keep treating people this way. They're going to rebel. I knew this day would come. George Floyd was the straw that broke the camel's back."

When Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison on Wednesday announced a harsher charge against Chauvin - second-degree murder - and charges against the three other officers, she cheered.

And yet all this is, she said, "really meaningless" - unless it's accompanied by drastic systemic changes in police departments around Minnesota and the country. By that, she means amending use-of-force guidelines, including community members in police advisory boards, and not responding to nonviolent incidents - her son's traffic stop, or Floyd being accused of using a counterfeit $20 bill - with aggressive tactics.

"For years, I've cried for other women's children," Castile said Wednesday, not long after charges were announced for the three other officers. "When that happened to me with Philando, I hardly had tears to shed for him. Because I was all cried out. And this just broke my heart all over again, to see such a brazen murder in broad daylight, and people asking this fool to get up off the man. That's just too much."

Valerie Castile: 'I knew this day would come'

The image of Chauvin kneeling on Floyd's neck brought to mind a sickening comparison for Castile: It looked like a hunter sitting on top of a deer that he'd just slain.

"That's what went through my mind," she said. "He's sitting on that man like he done killed his prize trophy. Arrogant - just arrogant. Boastful. Inhumane. All of that."

As she spoke, a dog barked. It was Julio, a Morkie - a mix between a Maltese and Yorkshire terrier - that Castile got after her son's death. Julio was the one of Philando's nicknames.

The barking nearly woke up her napping granddaughter. Her granddaughter is named Philandra, after her slain son. Philandra turns 2 in August.

"She's all I got left," Castile said. "I can't live without her."

She was pleased that the four police officers were immediately fired. She was heartened that Gov. Tim Walz didn't militarize the Twin Cities with federal troops after protests turned violent. She was saddened that civic leaders weren't talking with President Donald Trump: "He should be concerned: 'How can we mend this thing? How can we get this right?' I don't hear any conversation like that."

One night this week, she was in Philando's old room in her Brooklyn Park house. She came across a 30-page report from the Governor's Council on Law Enforcement and Community Relations, submitted on Sept. 29, 2017. There were plenty of recommendations: implicit and explicit bias training for police officers, bringing special prosecutors to partner with county attorneys in police investigations, promoting de-escalation strategies among police, working more closely with community leaders.

"I said, 'Oh my God, here it is in black and white,' " she said. "You can make all the recommendations in the world. But they're gathering dust. You just gotta pull it out and dust it off."

Her top priority is having community advisory boards. She wants these boards to be diverse and to include ex-police officers.

"I don't get it, that for the people that live here in Minnesota, there's not a community accountability board, an advisory board, that can go sit down with chiefs of police and the governor and say, 'We need to look at use-of-force policy,'" Castile said. "These policies are so vague, any attorney can flip those words. It's all about the word game - who can spin the best lie. And that's who they're gonna believe. But if there's no wiggle room in these policies, [then] it is what it is. You kill somebody, you go to jail."

Part of her feels optimistic that, this time, things will be different. That this time, people's eyes will open. She's grateful all four officers involved in Floyd's death have been charged.

But she's seen this movie before. She just hopes there's a different ending.

"You charge a person, you got high hopes, and then they slap you back down," Castile said. "If they're really sincere in really creating a different culture, really believing in what they're saying about accountability, and there being consequences about the things that you do, then yes. By all means. I hope they do. I pray that they do."

"It's now or never."

Reid Forgrave · 612-673-4647

Valerie Castile: 'I knew this day would come'

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

POLICE REFORM

ARTICLE CCXCI. POLICE REFORM

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 13ALength: 1141 wordsByline: D.J. TICE; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Here's why cops can't be held accountable // The second-guessing labor arbitration system makes it hard to discipline or fire problem officers, and it's been this way for decades.Body

St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter spoke wisely and well at a May 31 briefing where state and local officials updated the public on their newly muscular efforts to control civil unrest in the wake of George Floyd's terrible and world-famous in-custody death.

Carter pleaded with protesters to channel the passions on display on Twin Cities streets in recent days of rage into a crusade for positive change.

"Take that energy," Carter said, "and use it not to destroy our neighborhoods but to destroy the historic culture [of injustice], to destroy the systemic racism, to destroy, in specific, the laws, the legal precedents, the police union contracts - all of the things that make it so difficult to hold someone accountable when a life like George Floyd's is so wrongfully taken."

Carter has certainly set forth an heroic agenda here. To heal and transform the often sorrowful legacy of history is not the work of a day. But politicians often proclaim grand, visionary goals.

What actually made Carter's battle cry an exceptional case of starry-eyed optimism was his nuts-and-bolts call to reform "police union contracts" and dismantle "laws and precedents" that help those unions block accountability.

But by all means, let us dream the impossible dream.

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey seems willing. Welcoming a state investigation of his Police Department, he decried how "for years in Minneapolis, police chiefs and elected officials committed to change have been thwarted by police union protections and laws that severely limit accountability."

What barriers to accountability could the mayors be talking about? Well, one might well wonder how a Minneapolis police officer could possibly suppose that physically abusing a handcuffed arrestee would ever, if discovered, be seen as anything but intolerable misconduct.

POLICE REFORM

Reading a few labor arbitration rulings in police discipline cases might clear up that mystery.

Last October, barely more than half a year before Floyd's death, a fired Minneapolis police officer was reinstated to his job by a state arbitrator. MPD officer Peter Brazeau had beaten a handcuffed, intoxicated man who kicked him, producing what the arbitrator described as "a pool of blood."

The arbitrator agreed with Police Chief Medaria Arradondo that Brazeau had violated policy and shown no remorse. But Brazeau had (somewhat strangely) been returned to duty as a "training officer" and had performed well while his case went through channels following the 2016 beating incident.

A two-week unpaid suspension would be punishment enough, the arbitrator decided.

Any regular reader of this column has endured this kind of story before - and this kind of frustrated harangue. I have been writing about the dysfunctions of police disciplinary processes for roughly 30 years, without the slightest effect.

But this is merely to say that my reform efforts on this front have been about as successful as everyone else's.

State law governing public employment requires every police department in Minnesota, as public employers, to allow all discipline to be appealed to binding arbitration. Arbitrators sometimes uphold discipline (including firings) but it's not uncommon for terminations to be reduced to suspensions and for other discipline to be diminished. Evidence suggests fired cops are reinstated roughly half the time.

Often, as I've noted before, such cases come down to judgment calls about whether an officer has demonstrated that he or she does not possess, or has lost, the exceptional level of self-control and sound judgment we need from police - and which most officers heroically display. Presumably, we appoint police chiefs and elect city officials to make such judgment calls.

But what we have instead is a "broken and flawed" system of second-guessing, in the words of a 2017 lawsuit in which the city of Richfield, backed by the League of Minnesota Cities, the Minnesota Police Chiefs Association and others, pleaded with the courts that the arbitration system should not be applied to "police officers, who by the very nature of their positions, hold the trust and safety of the public in their hands [C]ities and their police chiefs must be allowed to fulfill their affirmative duty to protect public safety by [enforcing] rigorous accountability and transparency standards when [officers] use force on the public," the city and police leaders wrote.

A three-judge panel of the state Court of Appeals agreed with the city and its allies in the case at issue, writing that even public employment law "expressly subordinates the [right to] arbitration ... to the rights of Minnesota citizens."

But last year the state Supreme Court rejected that reasoning and reaffirmed, as I wrote at the time, "its decades-old doctrine that un-elected, unaccountable arbitrators' rulings are essentially all-powerful in Minnesota - immune from any check or balance based on mere 'general considerations of supposed public interests.' "

Like, for instance, the public interest in not employing cops who think it's OK to abuse handcuffed arrestees?

POLICE REFORM

"Under [Officer Brazeau's] interpretation of the Department's policy," wrote the arbitrator who ruled in his favor last fall, "if an individual uses an act of aggression toward an officer, the officer need not control or measure his response. There is no limit as to how much force, or how long the officer may use force, on that individual"

Chief Arradondo's "interpretation" was that anybody who thinks that way should not be on the Minneapolis police force.

The arbitrator disagreed - and in Minnesota today, that's the final word.

And it will be, until state policymakers finally decide to do more than talk about accountability.

Just this week, Rep. Pat Garofalo, R-Farmington, announced legislation that would eliminate binding arbitration not just for police but for all public employees. That sweeping confrontation with all public sector unions at once could be a political bridge too far.

Meanwhile, Attorney General Keith Ellison and Department of Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington led a working group last year on police use of force. Their recommendations, which may also come before the Legislature in a special session, don't address arbitration directly (although they did receive strong testimony decrying the problem). But the recommendations do call for policymakers to "discuss strategies to increase the role" of the state's licensing board for cops - the Peace Officer Standards and Training Board.

The idea seems to be to circumvent arbitration by allowing police chiefs unable to remove problem officers to ask the POST Board to revoke such an officer's license.

Something like that might help. But forgive me for saying that a clarion call to "discuss strategies" doesn't quite seem to match the passions of the moment.

D.J. Tice is at Doug.Tice@startribune.com

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

Lake Street may get rebuilt, but the south side corridor will never be 'what it was'

ARTICLE CCXCII. LAKE STREET MAY GET REBUILT, BUT THE SOUTH SIDE CORRIDOR WILL NEVER BE 'WHAT IT WAS'

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 1136 words

Byline: Nick Halter

Body

With the riots quieting in Minneapolis, business owners are left assessing the damage to their properties and deciding whether or not they will rebuild.

While it's likely that many of the national retailers will come back, longtime Lake Street businesswoman Maya Santamaria said the south side's east-west corridor will never be the same.

"It's going to be gentrified and it's not going to be what it was," she said. "You're never gonna be able to rebuild what it was."

Santamaria knows Lake Street. She founded El Nuevo Rodeo, a restaurant and night club in the International Order of Odd Fellows building at 2701 E. Lake St.

She renovated the historic 1909 building in 2003 and owned it from 2012 until January, when she sold it along with the restaurant. She operated her Spanish radio station La Raza 95.7FM/AM1400 and AM1470

Lake Street may get rebuilt, but the south side corridor will never be 'what it was' on the fourth floor of the building until last week, when it burned down in the riots following the death of George Floyd on Memorial Day while he was in police custody, resulting in a murder charge against the officer, Derek Chauvin. Both Floyd and Chauvin worked security at El Nuevo, though it's not clear if they knew each other.

Roughly 20 privately owned buildings on Lake Street between Nicollet Avenue and 32nd Avenue burned to the ground during the late May riots. They have a combined market value of $19.2 million, according to Hennepin County property records. That figure barely scratches the surface of the damage done to Lake Street, as countless more businesses were vandalized and looted. The Minneapolis Fire Department and city are still assessing the damage.

On Wednesday afternoon, the city officials released a preliminary estimate of $55 million in damage to 220 buildings citywide, a number they expect to rise.

Riots also inflicted substantial damage to businesses along University Avenue in St. Paul, West Broadway Avenue in North Minneapolis, and to businesses in other places in both cities. The Insurance Federation of Minnesota told Finance & Commerce that it estimates that the overall damage in the metro area would exceed $100 million.

Santamaria predicted that many of the torched buildings on Lake Street will be replaced by mixed-use buildings with apartments above commercial space. While the area needs more housing, she said, Lake Street will lose much of its character.

"The buildings will look nice and cool and modern, but they're not going to look historic," she said. "Something about the character's going to change."

The largest landowner in the area around the Police Department's burned Third Precinct is Wellington Management of St. Paul. It owns the Hi-Lake shopping center on the west side of Hiawatha, the Minnehaha Crossing shopping center on the east side and two apartment complexes nearby, Blue Line Flats and Lake Street Station.

Minnehaha Crossing was severely damaged, including a new Aldi store. Executive Vice President David Wellington said Aldi is working to restore that building and reopen the grocery in a month or two. A 189-unit apartment building, called Midtown Corner, was under construction on the site and about a year from completion when it burned the night of May 27. It would have had 38 units of affordable housing. The stick-frame building was a week from getting sprinklers installed, which explains why it burned so easily.

Wellington said the project is likely a complete loss, but the company plans to rebuild.

The Aldi located next to Hi-Lake was less damaged and should reopen by June 11, Wellington said. However, the rest of the Hi-Lake shopping center is likely a complete loss due to fire, except for the CitiTrends clothing store. Lost stores at the 150,000-square-foot center include Dollar General and HD Laundry.

"The insurance folks are just getting engaged, and we're working with a bunch of the tenants," Wellington said. "So it's going to be a little while for us to really formulate a plan [for Hi-Lake]."

But Wellington is committed to the area.

Lake Street may get rebuilt, but the south side corridor will never be 'what it was'

"The business district of Lake Street is this little gem in the heart of our city. We want to fight for that," he said. "What do we do? How do we help? How do we fight for what's important for us as a community? I think people are really up for that."

Businesses along Lake Street, like everywhere in the country, were already struggling due to the Covid-19 pandemic.

"Some people might get their insurance checks and walk away because they're tired and they're older and they did this for a long time and they've been there forever," Santamaria said. "It just might be their retirement check."

Santamaria on Tuesday was furiously trying to get her radio station back on the air with the help of volunteers. The Latino community around Lake Street and beyond gets Spanish news from her station.

La Raza has started a GoFundMe campaign to raise money for Lake Street businesses and another for the station itself, which has nine employees.

Another organization raising funds to repair damages is the Neighborhood Development Center, which owns the Midtown Global Market.

Thanks to a group of volunteers who guarded the historic Midtown Exchange building on Lake Street during nighttime riots, the Global Market was spared from serious damage. Earlsworth "Baba" Letang, director of Midtown Global Market said some windows were broken and point-of-sale systems for a couple vendors were damaged.

The windows will remain boarded up for at least a week, Letang said, but he hopes the market can help some of the businesses that lost their buildings. The main floor is about 90 percent occupied, though there are two vacant sit-down restaurant spaces available.

"The businesses that have lost their buildings, we want to see how the Midtown Global Market could help them. If we could temporarily even give somebody office space in the interim, we want to do that."

The Lake Street Council had raised over $4 million as of Wednesday morning to help rebuild Lake Street. The nonprofit business association is still working on plans on how to distribute the funds.

"We are exploring our options right now for how we can make this support available to those in need in a timely and equitable manner," the organization said in an email. "We know time is of the essence. We're working to develop an equitable and well-managed application and distribution process as quickly as possible. As we work to allocate and distribute these funds, we will focus on helping the hardest-hit and most vulnerable businesses in our community, which disproportionately includes immigrant and people of color-owned businesses. We'll be sharing those details as soon as possible. We will work with a broad range of diverse community partners to make these decisions."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

Lake Street may get rebuilt, but the south side corridor will never be 'what it was'

End of Document

After Minneapolis, George Floyd funeral rites will continue in North Carolina, Houston

ARTICLE CCXCIII. AFTER MINNEAPOLIS, GEORGE FLOYD FUNERAL RITES WILL CONTINUE IN NORTH CAROLINA, HOUSTON

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 746 words

Byline: The Associated Press

Highlight: The memorial services to honor George Floyd are extraordinary: three cities over six days, with a chance for mourners to pay their respects in the communities where he was born, grew up, and died. But so are the circumstances surrounding them: Since his May 25 death in Minneapolis, Floyd's name has been chanted by hundreds [...]

Body

The memorial services to honor George Floyd are extraordinary: three cities over six days, with a chance for mourners to pay their respects in the communities where he was born, grew up, and died.

But so are the circumstances surrounding them: Since his May 25 death in Minneapolis, Floyd's name has been chanted by hundreds of thousands of people and empowered a movement. Violent encounters between police, protesters, and observers have inflamed a country already reeling from the coronavirus pandemic.

The organizers of the memorials want to acknowledge the meaning Floyd had in life to his large family and the broader meaning he has assumed in death, which happened after a white officer pressed a knee into the handcuffed black man's neck for several minutes even after Floyd stopped moving and pleading for air.

"It would be inadequate if you did not regard the life and love and celebration the family wants," said the Rev. Al Sharpton, the civil rights leader who will eulogize Floyd in two cities. "But it would also be inadequate ... if you acted as though we're at a funeral that happened under natural circumstances."

"The family is not independent of the community," he said. "The family wants to see something happen."

The first service will be Thursday afternoon at North Central University in downtown Minneapolis. Sharpton, founder of the National Action Network, and Floyd family attorney Ben Crump will speak.

The 1 p.m. service will be private for family, friends and guests. But it will be livestreamed by local media. Links will be available at the school's website, www.northcentral.edu.

Floyd's body will then go to Raeford, N.C., where he was born 46 years ago, for a two-hour public viewing and private service for the family on Saturday.

After Minneapolis, George Floyd funeral rites will continue in North Carolina, Houston

Finally, a public viewing will be held Monday in Houston, where he was raised and lived most of his life. A 500-person service on Tuesday will take place at The Fountain of Praise church and will include addresses from Sharpton, Crump, and the Rev. Remus E. Wright, the family pastor. Former Vice President Joe Biden, the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee, may attend, and other political figures and celebrities are expected as well. A private burial will follow.

Both the memorials in Minneapolis and Houston will include personal tributes and eulogies about social justice, Sharpton said.

Due to the coronavirus, Fountain of Praise will be limited to 20 percent of its capacity and visitors will be required to wear masks.

Floyd's final journey was designed with intention, Sharpton said. Having left Houston for Minneapolis in 2014 in search of a job and a new life, Floyd will retrace that path.

"They collectively said we need to make the first memorial statement from the city he chose to go to make a living, that ended his life," he said.

Clayborne Carson, director of the Martin Luther King Jr. Research and Education Institute at Stanford University, said that "for a person who was pretty much unknown to the world until just last week, this is unprecedented."

"This has touched a nerve," Carson said. "It's been building up for all of American history. I think that people who are aware of the history of this country understand that there's a lot to atone for and a lot to celebrate in terms of people who stood up for justice."

The size of Floyd's memorial reflects his impact and the need to recognize the widespread grief his death has caused, said Tashel Bordere, an expert on grief and assistant professor at the University of Missouri. It also reflects a tradition particularly in African American communities that large funerals can provide the recognition that a lost loved one struggled to receive in life.

But, she added, "grief goes far beyond the funeral; healing goes far beyond the funeral. Justice is experienced when people feel safe in their communities and in their lives."

Carson said the impact of Floyd's death would ultimately be measured by changes in how police treat African Americans and the disparate rates at which black men are incarcerated.

"Otherwise, it'll just be the next George Floyd and the one after that," he said.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Autopsy report: George Floyd had COVID-19. He tested positive in April but had no symptoms.

ARTICLE CCXCIV. AUTOPSY REPORT: GEORGE FLOYD HAD COVID-19. HE TESTED POSITIVE IN APRIL BUT HAD NO SYMPTOMS.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 410 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: George Floyd had an asymptomatic COVID-19 infection when he died in the custody of Minneapolis police, according to an autopsy report released Wednesday. Floyd tested positive for the coronavirus on April 3, according to the report by the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office. Presumably, he would have known he was infected. It's unclear if he [...]

Body

George Floyd had an asymptomatic COVID-19 infection when he died in the custody of Minneapolis police, according to an autopsy report released Wednesday.

Floyd tested positive for the coronavirus on April 3, according to the report by the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office.

Presumably, he would have known he was infected. It's unclear if he was ever sick, though.

The report suggests the virus played no role in his death, since his lungs showed no signs of damage or pneumonia. With the exception of his heart, which showed evidence of heart disease, his other organs appeared healthy, according to the 20-page report.

Still, on May 26, a day after his death, a PCR test - a common test to detect the virus - administered on his body came back positive, the report said.

"Since PCR positivity for 2019-nCoV RNA can persist for weeks after the onset and resolution of clinical disease, the autopsy result most likely reflects asymptomatic but persistent PCR positivity from previous infection," the report concluded.

The report released by the Hennepin County Medical Examiner's Office came with the family's permission and after the coroner's office released summary findings Monday that Floyd died of cardiopulmonary arrest while being restrained by officers, and classified his Memorial Day death as a homicide.

The report also listed fentanyl intoxication and recent methamphetamine use under "other significant conditions" but not under "cause of death." The full report's footnotes noted that signs of fentanyl toxicity can include "severe respiratory depression" and seizures.

Autopsy report: George Floyd had COVID-19. He tested positive in April but had no symptoms.

The death of the handcuffed black man was recorded in a widely seen video that has sparked sometimes violent protests in the Twin Cities and across the nation.

One officer was shown with his knee on Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes as the 46-year-old gasped for air.

Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison on Wednesday upgraded charges against that officer to second-degree murder, and also charged three other officers on the scene with aiding and abetting.

This report includes information from the Associated Press.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Black business leaders respond to a week of grief and fire

ARTICLE CCXCV. BLACK BUSINESS LEADERS RESPOND TO A WEEK OF GRIEF AND FIRE

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 595 words

Byline: Carrigan Miller

Body

The Minneapolis/St. Paul Business Journal reached out over the past week to black business leaders in the Twin Cities to get their thoughts on the killing of George Floyd and the resulting protests and riots. Here are some of their responses:

"The lack of human decency shown to George Floyd and to all black people in Minneapolis by police is sickening. The fact that these officers knew they were being recorded and still did not have the presence of mind (or empathy) to alter their illegal behavior is even more appalling. As we all know, this is not an isolated incident; it is a systemic problem which reaches to the highest levels of the police department and its leadership.

"Institutional and systemic change is needed, and it can no longer simply be black folks demanding that change. George Floyd and his family deserve justice. The black community of Minneapolis and this entire nation deserve justice. Racist atrocities like this have been happening to black [people] for centuries simply because the police and white America do not value black lives the same way they value their own."

Black business leaders respond to a week of grief and fire

"It's been a really sad and anger-inducing week. From the state-sanctioned murder of black people continuing to the militarization of the police department to the deployment of the National Guard which has turned our state into a war zone, it makes me angry."

On transforming The Coven's Minneapolis location into a center to collect and distribute food and other donated supplies: "We're trying to listen to the community, which I think most leaders in our government aren't doing."

"All of those businesses that were up and running in supporting families and putting the wealth back into the community - it's like we just got put back 30 years because it's either on fire, broken or looted. For some of these small businesses along the street, that's a death blow. And if you add Covid on top of that - they didn't have deep pockets anyway, because most of us are burning cash. It's a death blow.

"I know that people are going to look at this and say, 'Why would people do these things? Why would they do it to their own community? Doesn't this just hurt your own community?' And the answer is yes, it does. People are angry, people are depressed, people are sad. They're emotional. And there's no place for it to go, because all of the traditional channels don't get anything changed. I don't condone looting, but I understand it."

"The murder of George Floyd and so many others is part of the long-standing virus of racism and discrimination that we must battle while also battling the health and economic impact of the coronavirus that has also disproportionately impacted the black community, my community. While no one person, sector or organization can solve these problems alone, our individual and collective actions are required to help us heal and make progress toward the beloved community of equity and justice that Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. spoke of."

"There are some beautiful things that are happening right now. When folks have to say, 'We can't take any more food donations today,' that's a beautiful thing.

"I've gotten some white people who have reached out in ways that seem like they are attempting to receive validation or consoling in this time, which has been fascinating. It can sometimes be hard to tell who's sincere and who's not.

"You need to listen and you need to stand with and fight with, not for, not in place of, [black people]."

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

ARTICLE CCXCVI. MINNESOTA NATIONAL GUARD TO DEPLOY FOR 'CREDIBLE THREATS' OF VIOLENCE AT FARGO DEMONSTRATION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 665 wordsByline: Forum News ServiceHighlight: FARGO - Area officials and organizers of what is being called a community celebration planned for Friday stressed that precautions are being put in place in case people with violent motives show up for what is intended to be a peaceful event. Those precautionary steps include plans to surround Fargo city buildings with police officers [...]Body

FARGO - Area officials and organizers of what is being called a community celebration planned for Friday stressed that precautions are being put in place in case people with violent motives show up for what is intended to be a peaceful event.

Those precautionary steps include plans to surround Fargo city buildings with police officers and National Guard troops, placing concrete barriers in front of Fargo City Hall and boarding up windows at the Fargo Police Department and elsewhere.

Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz activated the Minnesota National Guard to provide safety and protection for the western edge of the state across the border from the Fargo area.

"Local law enforcement authorities are aware of credible threats of violent activities during demonstrations planned in North Dakota that could impact nearby Minnesota communities, and have requested assistance from the Minnesota National Guard to help provide security and preserve public safety," a release from the governor's office reads. "The National Guard Adjutant General will work with local government agencies to provide personnel, equipment, and facilities needed to respond as necessary."

To underscore the unifying aim of Friday's event, it is being called "OneFargo." It is planned to run from 1-3 p.m. in Island Park.

Organizers initially planned a march and sit-in protest at Fargo City Hall, but after talks with city officials, they agreed to confine the event to Island Park and forego protesting in an effort to avoid a repeat of Saturday, May 30, when a day of peaceful protest turned into a night of rioting.

Minnesota National Guard to deploy for 'credible threats' of violence at Fargo demonstration

Saturday's demonstrations and riot in Fargo mirrored similar situations in cities across the United States following the death of George Floyd on May 25 while in the custody of Minneapolis police.

Local officials said Thursday they were aware of threats targeting Friday's event.

Speaking at a news conference Thursday, Moorhead Mayor Johnathan Judd said he spoke with Walz on Wednesday. Judd said the National Guard will not adopt a high-profile presence Friday, but it will be available if needed. He did not share specifics about the threats officials have become aware of in regards to Friday's planned event.

If people with violent intentions do show up for Friday's event, they will stick out like sore thumbs and be made to feel unwelcome, said Wess Philome, who spoke at Thursday's news conference along with other black leaders and city officials, including Fargo Mayor Tim Mahoney and Fargo Police Chief Dave Todd.

Philome said because of successful meetings with city officials, planners of Friday's event will not take to the streets. He said he hopes the cooperation taking place in the Fargo-Moorhead area will become an example to the rest of the world.

Fellow organizer Angelina Zokego agreed.

"They heard us," Zokego said, adding: "That's what you call a community that wants unity, that wants peace."

Mahoney and other leaders underscored the progress made this week and vowed such conversations would continue in the future.

"We want our community to be a community people want to live in," Mahoney said.

Todd agreed, stating the talks were a first step "in what needs to happen here."

Fargo City Hall, the downtown Fargo Public Library and Fargo Municipal Court will be fully closed on Friday in response to received threats.

The Fargo City Commission called a special meeting Thursday night to extend the emergency declaration issued by Mahoney on May 30 to 11:59 p.m. on Monday, June 15.

If the extension is approved, city commissioners could terminate the declaration sooner than Monday night or extend it further, depending on circumstances.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXCVII. PENTAGON-TRUMP CLASH BREAKS OPEN OVER MILITARY AND PROTESTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1249 wordsByline: Zeke Miller, Robert BurnsHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - President Donald Trump's Pentagon chief shot down his idea of using active-duty troops to quell protests across the United States, and former military leaders are going after him, too, in an extraordinary clash between the U.S. military and its commander in chief.Body

WASHINGTON - President Donald Trump's Pentagon chief shot down his idea of using active-duty troops to quell protests across the United States, and former military leaders are going after him, too, in an extraordinary clash between the U.S. military and its commander in chief.

Both Trump and Defense Secretary Mark Esper are both drawing stinging, rare public criticism from Trump's first defense secretary, Jim Mattis, in the most public pushback of Trump's presidency from the men he put at the helm of the world's most powerful military.

Mattis' rebuke on Wednesday followed Trump's threats to use the military to "dominate" the streets where Americans are demonstrating following the death of George Floyd, a black man who died when a white police officer pressed his knee into his neck for several minutes. The president had urged governors to call out the National Guard to contain protests that turned violent and warned that he could send in active-duty military forces if they did not.

Esper angered Trump when he said he opposed using military troops for law enforcement, seemingly taking the teeth out of the president's threat to use the Insurrection Act. Esper said the 1807 law should be invoked in the United States "only in the most urgent and dire of situations." He added, "We are not in one of those situations now."

After his subsequent visit to the White House, the Pentagon abruptly overturned an earlier decision to send a couple hundred active-duty soldiers home from the Washington, D.C., region, a public sign of the growing tensions with the White House. Then on Thursday, a defense official said the soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division were heading back to Fort Bragg, North Carolina, after all.

Former Secretary Mattis, a retired Marine general, lambasted both Trump and Esper in an essay in The Atlantic for their consideration of using the active-duty military in law enforcement - and for the use of the National Guard in clearing out a largely peaceful protest near the White House on Monday evening.

Pentagon-Trump clash breaks open over military and protests

"We must reject any thinking of our cities as a 'battlespace' that our uniformed military is called upon to 'dominate,'" Mattis wrote, referencing quotes by Esper and Trump respectively. "Militarizing our response, as we witnessed in Washington, D.C., sets up a conflict - a false conflict - between the military and civilian society. "

Trump responded on Twitter by calling Mattis "the world's most overrated General," adding: "I didn't like his 'leadership' style or much else about him, and many others agree, Glad he is gone!"

Yet another former military leader, retired Marine Corps four-star general John Allen, said that events on Monday, the day Trump walked to the church, "may well signal the beginning of the end of the American experiment."

Allen, president of the liberal-leaning Brookings Institution, contrasted the routing of the protesters in Lafayette Park with remarks by Floyd's brother, Terrence Floyd, who denounced looting that he said tarnishes his brother's memory.

Writing in Foreign Policy, Allen urged people to make their votes in November for the future of America's democracy. "It will have to come from the bottom up. For at the White House, there is no one home," he wrote.

Days ago, Esper had ordered about 1,300 Army personnel to military bases just outside the nation's capital as Trump weighed whether to invoke the Insurrection Act and send active-duty troops into the city, the scene of large protests that devolved into violence and looting over the weekend. But after a night of calm enforced by a large deployment of National Guard troops and heavily armed federal law enforcement agents, defense officials said the troops would begin returning to their home base.

Army Secretary Ryan McCarthy told The Associated Press that the decision was reversed after Esper's visit to the White House. The White House didn't respond to request for comment on whether Trump ordered the change.

The shift added to confusion over the president's threat to invoke the Insurrection Act for protests following Floyd's death in Minneapolis. White House officials had indicated even before Esper's comments that Trump was backing away from invoking the act, though officials said Trump was upset that Esper's statement conveyed "weakness."

Press secretary Kayleigh McEnany said the president was still willing to deploy federal troops despite Esper's comments.

Meanwhile, the president was taking credit for the deployment of federal and other law enforcement officers to the nation's capital, saying it offered a model to states on how to stop violence accompanying some protests nationwide.

On Wednesday evening, troops and others were out in force in Washington. A Defense official said at least 2,200 National Guard members would be on the streets.

Helmeted forces formed a ring around Lafayette Park across from the White House. Military vehicles were parked at intersections, also blocking access.

Pentagon-Trump clash breaks open over military and protests

Trump argued that the massive show of force was responsible for protests in Washington and other cities turning more calm in recent days and repeated his criticism of governors who have not deployed their National Guard to the fullest.

"You have to have a dominant force," Trump told Fox News Radio on Wednesday. "We need law and order."

Pentagon chief Esper himself has come under fire from critics, including retired senior military officers, for having walked from the White House on Monday evening with Trump and others for a presidential photo opportunity in front of St. John's Episcopal Church, which had previously sustained damage from protesters.

"I was not aware a photo op was happening," he said, adding that he also did not know that police had forcibly moved peaceful protesters from the park to clear the way for Trump and his entourage.

Mattis, in his essay, called the scene an "abuse of executive authority." The retired general quit the Trump administration in December 2018 after months of conflict with the president as Trump announced he was unilaterally withdrawing American troops from Syria.

Though the crackdown on the Washington demonstrations was praised by some Trump supporters Tuesday, a handful of Republicans expressed concern that law enforcement officers risked violating the protesters' First Amendment rights.

The clampdown followed a weekend of demonstrations outside the White House. Trump had been furious about images juxtaposing fires set in the park outside the executive mansion with a darkened White House in the background, according to current and former campaign and administration officials. He was also angry about the news coverage revealing he had gone to the secure White House bunker during Friday's protests.

Trump on Wednesday acknowledged he visited the bunker Friday but claimed he was only conducting an inspection as protests raged outside the White House gates.

Soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division remain on standby at Joint Base Andrews in Maryland and Fort Belvoir in Virginia outside Washington.

AP writers Michael Balsamo and Lolita C. Baldor in Washington and Sarah Blake Morgan in West Jefferson, North Carolina, contributed. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXCVIII.

VIRAL PHOTO OF ST. PAUL HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATE SPREADS MESSAGE OF POSITIVITY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 657 wordsByline: Betsy HelfandHighlight: In front of it all stood graduating St. Paul senior Deveonte Joseph, hands crossed, lips pressed into a line, proudly wearing his navy blue cap and gown.

Body

Gray smoke from fires in the area filled the bluish night sky and law enforcement officials crowded around a vehicle in the background with a couple more police officers nearby. Some debris laid scattered on the ground.

In front of it all stood graduating St. Paul senior Deveonte Joseph, hands crossed, lips pressed into a line, proudly wearing his navy blue cap and gown. Como Park resident Nathan Aguirre was struck by the image and snapped a powerful photo on his iPhone that has made the rounds on social media this week, showing Joseph as a symbol of hope for the future in a present full of sorrow.

"It was just a really chaotic scene and I just remember I looked to my right and I saw Deveonte," Aguirre said. "I didn't know who he was at that time. I just looked to my right and I had seen a gentleman walking down the street dressed up in his graduation outfit, and I thought, 'Oh God, I've got to get a picture of that.'"

Joseph, who graduated from Community of Peace Academy on Wednesday, had been out with a couple of friends taking photos in his graduation attire when they saw smoke and fire last Thursday night. Amid peaceful protests over George Floyd's death in police custody in Minneapolis earlier in the week, arson and looting had been taking place in the Midway area on Thursday.

Joseph originally didn't have plans to attend the protest - he was just out to take pictures. But in going, he wanted to be a force for positivity.

"I always think at protests, there's going to be some type of negativity, so I went there to spread some positivity," Joseph said. "When I noticed the protest was going on, I was like, 'Let's bring some positivity to these people.'"

That positivity was immediately evident to Aguirre in their brief interaction on University Avenue.

Viral photo of St. Paul high school graduate spreads message of positivity

"He showed up and held his head high. That's a game changer. The way he presented himself that night, it was different than anybody else out there. I didn't see (anybody) as proud as he was and as peaceful as he was," Aguirre said. "He stood out. It was really beautiful."

After Aguirre took the photo, the two went their separate ways. When Aguirre went home, he was showing photos from the night to his nephew, who recognized Joseph as someone he had gone to school with.

With his nephew's help, Aguirre got in contact with Joseph and received his permission to share the photo, which has been reshared across social media platforms for the past week.

"I feel like the people that see me in my cap and gown, what they were saying on Facebook, basically is what I agree with - they were saying, 'Oh, look at the world we made for Deveonte Joseph and the rest of the graduates in the class of 2020,' and I just felt like the world can be such a better place."

That starts, Joseph, said, with his generation. Joseph, who raps about his life and what he sees around him, wants to spread his message of positivity through his music.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest He dreams of going to art school at the Minneapolis College of Art and Design so he can get a degree in animation to use to animate his own music videos. Eric Anderson, the stepfather of Joseph's girlfriend, helped create a GoFundMe campaign to help him achieve that goal. In just a few days, the page had raised nearly $12,000 of its $20,000 goal as of Thursday afternoon to help fund tuition.

All thanks in part to a photo that helped Joseph spread his message of positivity.

"No matter (your) circumstances ... no matter what you're going through, nothing can get in the way of your goals. That's how I felt," Joseph said. "I felt like I made the world proud when I put on that gown."

Graphic

Community of Peace Academy graduate Deveonte Joseph stands near the intersection of University Avenue and Griggs Street in St. Paul on May 28, 2020. (Courtesy of Nathan Aguirre)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCXCIX. A LIST OF ST. PAUL BUSINESSES DAMAGED DURING THE RIOTING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1170 wordsByline: Isabel Saavedra-WeisHighlight: The damage caused by looters and rioters this past week has left a charred scar on St. Paul's Midway neighborhood. Dozens of businesses were devastated along the popular strip and many more were damaged elsewhere in the east metro. According to the reports from local chambers of commerce and others, here is a list of [...]Body

The damage caused by looters and rioters this past week has left a charred scar on St. Paul's Midway neighborhood. Dozens of businesses were devastated along the popular strip and many more were damaged elsewhere in the east metro.

According to the reports from local chambers of commerce and others, here is a list of burned out, looted and damaged St. Paul businesses that we know of. There are likely more that have gone unreported.

UNIVERSITY AVENUE

Go Get It Tobacco, 2484 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

McDonald's, 2213 W. University Ave.; property damage

Ax-man Surplus, 1639 W. University Ave.; looting

UPS Store, 1360 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

America's Best Contacts and Eyeglasses, 1360 W. University Ave.; property damage

Turf Club, 1601 W. University Ave.; fire and property damage

Trend Bar, 1537 W. University Ave.; looting

MaX It Pawn, 1519 W. University Ave.; looting, fire and property damage

Boost Mobile, 605 W. University Ave.; property damage

DTLR, 1515 W. University Ave.; looting

A list of St. Paul businesses damaged during the rioting

Big Top Wines and Spirits, 1544 W. University Ave.; fire and property damage

Culver's, 1491 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

Midway Tobacco and Vapor, 1475 W. University Ave.; property damage

Black Hart of St. Paul, 1415 W. University Ave.; property damage

Furniture Barn, 1389 W. University Ave.; looting, fire and property damage

BP, 1347 W. University Ave.; property damage

Leann Chin, 1360 W. University Ave.; property damage

Sprint Store, 1360 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

Great Health Nutrition, 1360 W. University Ave.; looting

Discount Tires, 1350 W. University Ave.; property damage

Verizon, 474 N. Hamline Ave.; property damage

Noodles and Company, 470 N. Hamline Ave.; property damage

The Vitamin Shoppe, 472 N. Hamline Ave.; property damage

Great Clips, 1474 W. University Ave.; fire damage

GameStop, 1484 W. University Ave.; looting and fire damage

Foot Locker, 1484 W. University Ave.; fire damage

T.J. Maxx, 1410 W. University Ave.; fire and property damage

Midway Tobacco Outlet Plus, 1418 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

Target, 1300 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

CVS Pharmacy, 1300 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

Bolé Ethiopian Cuisine, 490 N. Syndicate St.; fire damage

NAPA Auto Parts, 1271 W. University Ave.; fire damage

Goodwill, 1239 W. University Ave.; property and fire damage

Gordon Parks High School, 1212 W. University Ave.; property damage

Ananya Dance Studio, 1197 W. University Ave.; property damage

Enterprise Rent-A-Car, 1161 W. University Ave.; fire damage

ALDI, 1134 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

A list of St. Paul businesses damaged during the rioting

TCF Bank, 459 N. Lexington Pkwy.; property damage

O'Reilly Auto Parts, 448 N. Lexington Pkwy.; fire and property damage

Speedway, 970 W. University Ave.; fire and property damage

Fire N' Ice Chicken, 600 W. University Ave.; property damage

Sun Foods, 544 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

Springboard for the Arts, 262 W. University Ave.; fire and property damage

White Castle, 505 Rice St.; looting and property damage

BG Food Market, 955 W. University Ave.; property damage

Boba & Deli, 955 W. University Ave.; property damage

Century Plaza, 955 W. University Ave.; property damage

Little Asia Cafe, 955 W. University Ave.; property damage

Magic Noodle, 1337 W. University Ave.; property damage

May's Market, 375 W. University Ave.; property damage

Peking Garden, 1488 W. University Ave.; property damage

7-Mile Sportswear, 590 W. University Ave.; looting, fire, and property damage

America's Best Contacts & Eyeglasses, 1360 W. University Ave.; property damage

Family Dollar, 1536 W. University Ave.; looting and property damage

Sports Dome, 1505 W. University Ave.; fire damage

To New York, 1486 W. University Ave.; property damage

M Health Fairview Clinic, 1390 W. University Ave.; property damage

Speedway, 950 N. Lexington Pkwy.; fire damage

McDonald's, 1100 W. University Ave.; property damage

High School for Recording Arts, 1166 W. University Ave.; property damage

T-Mobile, 1460 W. University Ave.; property damage

Boost Mobile, 1499 W. University Ave.; fire damage

Metro by T-Mobile, 1539 W. University Ave.; property damage

Speedway, 399 N. Lexington Pkwy.; fire and property damage

A list of St. Paul businesses damaged during the rioting

Community Action Partnership of Ramsey and Washington Counties, 450 N. Syndicate St.; fire and property damage

Midas, 520 W. University Ave.; property damage

Cwhp, 565 W. University Ave.; property damage

CSL Plasma, 572 W. University Ave.; property damage

TJ Nails, 598 W. University Ave.; property damage

Subway, 599 W. University Ave.; property damage

Wendy's, 612 W. University Ave.; property damage

St. Paul Fire Dept. Station 18, 681 W. University Ave.; property damage

SNELLING AVENUE

Speedway, 56 N. Snelling Ave.; looting and property damage

Lloyd's Pharmacy, 720 N. Snelling Ave.; fire damage

Vig Guitars, 595 N. Snelling Ave.; looting

Taco Bell, 565 N. Snelling Ave.; looting

Dey Distributing, 525 N. Snelling Ave.; property damage

Snelling Avenue Fine Wines, 500 N. Snelling Ave.; looting, fire and property damage

Birthright, 299 N. Snelling Ave.; property damage

Holiday Station, 281 N. Snelling Ave.; looting and property damage

A-1 Lock Service by Kee Wee, 191 N. Snelling Ave.; property damage

Speedway, 756 N. Snelling Ave.; fire and property damage

GRAND AVENUE

Speedway, 2051 Grand Ave.; fire damage

BankCherokee, 985 Grand Ave.; property damage

First Grand Avenue Liquor Store, 918 Grand Ave.; looting and property damage

Lululemon, 870 Grand Ave.; looting and property damage

Gold'n Treasures, 805 Grand Ave.; looting and property damage

Walgreens, 734 Grand Ave.; property damage

Frattalone's Ace Hardware, 650 Grand Ave.; property damage

A list of St. Paul businesses damaged during the rioting

Grand Ole Creamery, 750 Grand Ave.; property damage

EAST SIDE

Mounds Liquor, 1047 Hudson Road; looting and property damage

Payne Avenue Wine & Spirits, 980 E. Payne Ave.; property damage

W & T Market, 604 N. Western Ave.; property damage

Cub Foods, 2197 Old Hudson Road; looting

Sun Ray Shopping Center, 2089-2215 Old Hudson Road; looting and property damage

MetroPCS, 1200 N. Forest St.; property damage

Holiday, 1444 E. Minnehaha Ave.; property damage

AutoZone Auto Parts, 846 Arcade St.; property damage

T-Mobile, 878 Arcade St.; property damage

Boost Mobile, 889 Arcade St.; property damage

Sun World Supermarket, 892 Arcade St.; property damage

HIGHLAND

R.F. Moeller Jeweler, 2065 Ford Pkwy.; looting and property damage

Speedway, 1580 Ford Pkwy.; property damage

The Fixery, 760 S. Cleveland Ave.; looting and property damage

MACALESTER-GROVELAND

Trader Joe's, 484 S. Lexington Pkwy.; looting and property damage

Walgreens, 1585 Randolph Ave.; fire and property damage

Dermatology Consultants, 280 N. Snelling Ave.; property damage

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Midway Chamber offers expert help for 200 St. Paul businesses damaged in George Floyd demonstrations

ARTICLE CCC. MIDWAY CHAMBER OFFERS EXPERT HELP FOR 200 ST. PAUL BUSINESSES DAMAGED IN GEORGE FLOYD DEMONSTRATIONS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 223 words

Byline: Frederick Melo

Highlight: The Midway Chamber of Commerce estimates more than 200 St. Paul buildings were damaged or destroyed in the past week during protests over George Floyd's death in Minneapolis police custody. The chamber will host an hour-long virtual panel discussion at 8 a.m. Thursday to offer guidance to business owners and operators. Titled "Your Business Was [...]"

Body

The Midway Chamber of Commerce estimates more than 200 St. Paul buildings were damaged or destroyed in the past week during protests over George Floyd's death in Minneapolis police custody.

The chamber will host an hour-long virtual panel discussion at 8 a.m. Thursday to offer guidance to business owners and operators.

Titled "Your Business Was Damaged ... What Do You Do Now?" the forum is free but advance registration is required.

Moderated by commercial law attorney Brian Alton, the forum features experts in insurance, legal property rights and restoration: Caleb Brunz, president of Paul Davis Restoration; Brian Hayes, an assistant vice president with Western Insurance; Matt Vatter, assistant commissioner of enforcement for the Minnesota Department of Commerce; and TJ Patton, audit director with the Department of Commerce's Insurance Enforcement Team.

More information can be found at MidwayChamber.com under the "Events" listing. Dozens of homeless people evicted from Minneapolis hotel 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen Fever checks at the door, no facials or blow drying: Hair salons 'reinventing' under coronavirus St. Paul police officer one of six area leaders to land 2020 Bush Foundation fellowships

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCI. COMMUNITY AID, DISTILLED

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1DLength: 710 wordsByline: NICOLE NORFLEET; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Du Nord, other small firms trying to help fellow business owners suffering after riots.Body

Du Nord Craft Spirits, which had already switched to making hand sanitizer after COVID-19 orders shut down tasting rooms, is now adding food and supplies donation center to its menu.

One of the few black-owned distilleries in the country, the Longfellow business, like many others in the neighborhood, was damaged early last Friday during riots after the death of George Floyd.

Several fires were set inside the Minneapolis distillery's warehouse.

"The spot of the fire has now been converted into a community asset," said owner Chris Montana. "There's so much life in that space right now."

Across the Twin Cities metro area, many small businesses - including those that have been damaged in recent riots after the killing of George Floyd - have started to collect and distribute food and other essential items to communities where stores may have been shut down due to vandalism or boarded up out of precaution.

Du Nord, which is located just a few blocks south of the police's Third Precinct that was the epicenter of the riots last week, had at first helped store overflow donations from a drive organized by eatery Pimento Jamaican Kitchen. But after Montana noticed some residents had begun to start a donation campaign in a nearby parking lot, he decided the cleaned-out warehouse could become the site of its own donation drive.

"Why not?" he said. "We are in a position that we could do it. We can't do anything else."

Now the entire distillery, including the undamaged cocktail room, which is being used as a volunteer lounge, has been transformed with pallets of supplies and the constant buzz of activity since the drop-off and pickup drive began this week.

"It looks like a beehive in there," Montana said.

Molly Hoskin, founder of Samadhi Yoga Mpls, rode her bike down Lake Street on Saturday to take stock of how riots had left numerous businesses along the corridor destroyed.

"With COVID going on, it already was a tough situation with food," she said. "Everything was closed or destroyed, and I was just thinking, 'What are folks going to do?'"

The Longfellow part of south Minneapolis and about eight other neighborhoods have nearly become a food desert in the wake of large grocery chains and small markets being damaged. As of Wednesday, more than 360 businesses across the Twin Cities had been vandalized, looted or had doors and windows smashed, according to a Star Tribune database.

Samadhi's studio is on S. 27th Avenue in the Ivy Arts Building, which suffered damage to its front entrance and second floor. Hoskin created a Facebook event Saturday night to collect supplies for residents on the front lawn of the building. The community response the next day was overwhelming, she said.

Deliveries were nonstop, with an estimated 500 bags of groceries donated and mountains of other supplies, she said.

"It took up the whole lawn. ... We ended up having to reallocate some stuff to other donation sites," Hoskin said.

Many businesses in the Twin Cities have already had to make significant changes to their services or products as a result of the coronavirus pandemic, and the recent riots have made trying to stabilize even more complicated.

"It's been hard," said Hoskin, who started her studio last year to try to provide clients with an inclusive space to practice yoga.

At Du Nord, the fires and resulting water damage from the sprinklers caused about $100,000 worth of damage to the distillery's inventory and equipment. The repair costs could end up being a lot more due to delayed future production, Montana said.

While figuring out the future of his own business, Montana is keeping his eye on helping the community. In addition to the collection of food and hygiene products, Du Nord has also started a fund to help other businesses that may not have insurance to rebuild. The fund has already raised close to $250,000. Though not exclusive, the fund is targeted to help minority-owned businesses.

"I ask myself, would this be worth it?" said Montana, referring to the damage and rebuilding that will need to happen for Du Nord and other businesses in the community. "If it meant that we can plant a flag in the moment, and tell our kids that this is when there was change, yes, it would."

Nicole Norfleet · 612-673-4495

Twitter: @nicolenorfleet

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCII. DEMOCRATS PREPARE POLICE REFORM BILLS AFTER FLOYD'S DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 771 wordsByline: Lisa MascaroHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Congressional Democrats, powered by the Congressional Black Caucus, are preparing a sweeping package of police reforms as pressure builds on the federal government to respond to the death of George Floyd and others in law enforcement interactions.Body

By LISA MASCARO

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congressional Democrats, powered by the Congressional Black Caucus, are preparing a sweeping package of police reforms as pressure builds on the federal government to respond to the death of George Floyd and others in law enforcement interactions.

With the urgency of mass protests outside their doors, lawmakers on Capitol Hill are working furiously to draft what could become one of the most ambitious efforts in years to oversee the way law enforcement works. Sens. Cory Booker of New Jersey and Kamala Harris of California, both former presidential candidates, are expected to announce a package in coming days, with a House bill coming soon and a House Judiciary Committee hearing next week.

Both the House and Senate efforts are expected to include changes to police accountability laws, such as revising immunity provisions and creating a database of police use-of-force incidents. Revamped training requirements are planned, too, among them a ban on the use of choke holds. Joe Biden, the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee, has endorsed such a ban.

"We have a moral moment in our country," Rep. Karen Bass, D-Calif., the chairwoman of the CBC, said on a conference call Wednesday.

The political stakes of any police reform effort are high, amplified in an election year by President Donald Trump's "law and order" stance, including his threats to call in the U.S. military to clamp down on protesters. With mass unrest now entering a second week, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi sought to shift the national tone Wednesday by walking and talking with protesters outside the Capitol.

The House is expected to vote by month's end. With Democrats in the majority, the bills will almost certainly pass the House. But the outcome in the Senate is less certain. Republican Majority Leader Mitch

Democrats prepare police reform bills after Floyd's death

McConnell has said the chamber would take a look at the issues, but he has not endorsed any particular legislation.

On Thursday, Senate Democratic leader Chuck Schumer pointedly called on McConnell to commit to considering the bills this summer.

"Will our Republican colleagues ever join us in this effort?" Schumer asked from the Senate floor, after Democrats held a 8-minute, 46-second moment of silence for Floyd and others at the Capitol's Emancipation Hall.

Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, tweeted earlier that his panel will conduct a hearing "to shine a bright light on the problems associated with Mr. Floyd's death, with the goal of finding a better way forward for our nation."

But much like efforts to stem gun violence after mass shootings, the political momentum for changes to policing procedures could ebb as the protests and images of those who have died fade from public view. For example, a long-sought federal anti-lynching bill has languished in Congress.

"Words of kindness and grace are essential to America, but they're not enough right now," Booker said during a Senate floor speech this week. "It's on us in this body to do something to change the law."

Lawmakers are looking at proposing other measures. Sen. Brian Schatz, D-Hawaii, is considering an upcoming defense bill provision that would ban the transfer of military equipment, including armor and tanks, to police and sheriff's departments.

Rep. Frederica Wilson, D-Fla., is proposing a national commission on the status of young black men and boys, and Rep. Barbara Lee, D-Calif., has legislation to establish a national truth and reconciliation commission on black Americans. Judiciary Committee Chairman Rep. Jerrold Nadler, D-N.Y., will convene next week's hearing to review options.

"This is just one thing we can do," said Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, D-N.Y., who is introducing a bill in the Senate similar to one in the House that seeks to make choke-hold suffocation a federal crime. "This is a moment that demands leadership, it demands a reckoning."

It's not clear whether law enforcement will back the changes. Many of the efforts will likely be supported by other minority lawmakers.

Rep. Judy Chu, D-Calif., the chairwoman of the Congressional Asian Pacific Caucus, convened the call Wednesday with the leaders of the Black, Hispanic and Native American caucuses. "We stand together," she said.

Rep. Brenda Lawrence, D-Mich., is among several members of the black caucus who will be attending memorial or funeral services for Floyd on Thursday in Minnesota and Texas. She acknowledged the opposition the bills will likely face, but called on fellow lawmakers to consider the option of doing nothing.

"It's very hard to watch that video and go back in your corner," Lawrence said.

Democrats prepare police reform bills after Floyd's death

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCIII. LARA WEBER: PROTESTERS WHO TRY TO BAN CAMERAS MISS THE POINT OF THE FIRST AMENDMENT

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 835 words

Byline: Lara Weber

Highlight: "No recording allowed! Stop recording now!" It took a moment to register that the bullhorn admonishment was directed at me. I'd just parked my car and walked up to the edge of Oz Park near Lincoln Park High School in Chicago, where a couple hundred young people were gathered on a hill for the start [...]

Body

"No recording allowed! Stop recording now!"

It took a moment to register that the bullhorn admonishment was directed at me. I'd just parked my car and walked up to the edge of Oz Park near Lincoln Park High School in Chicago, where a couple hundred young people were gathered on a hill for the start of a march downtown to protest the killing of George Floyd.

As I often do, especially when I'm working as a journalist as I was Monday, I was snapping some shots of the scene. I lowered my phone and glanced around to be sure we were all on public property. We were. I lifted up my media badge and said, "No, I can take photos here."

But the rebukes continued. "You can't record without my consent!" yelled a young woman to my side. And "People here could literally get arrested if their faces are shown!" came another from up on the hill.

I didn't lift my phone camera again until two young women ran up to within a few feet of me, to wave their signs in my face and block my view of the gathering. At that point, I sighed, lifted my phone and snapped a couple of shots of them. Then the group's leaders called for everyone to start marching and they all headed off.

It was a peculiar encounter that left me wondering about how the latest coming-of-age generation understands the First Amendment - and whether they could see the double standard they were practicing.

The group I encountered were mostly teens, organized by the group FourtuneHouse to march in two groups - one from the North Side, one from the South Side - toward downtown. They were peaceful and passionate with their message, and it was inspiring to see so many young people taking action and lifting their voices during such a volatile time.

Lara Weber: Protesters who try to ban cameras miss the point of the First Amendment

This is also a generation raised on social media and constant video surveillance - a generation that knows intuitively the awesome power that shared images and video carry. So I get their resistance to having their every move documented and pushed out to the world.

That's the messy part about freedom of speech, though. When we're out in the public arena exercising our right to free expression, we don't get to tell others they can't exercise that same right.

Legally, I was allowed to stand on that public sidewalk taking as many photos or videos as I wanted of the group gathered in a public park. The group's members certainly could ask me to stop and implore me to understand the reasons for their request, but I didn't have to comply.

What concerned me more, though, was that these outspoken, determined teens seemed to miss the irony of their demand.

They were gathered to protest because a black man in Minneapolis had died under the crushing pressure of the knee of a white police officer - a horrific killing that has sparked outrage around the world.

But how did the world know what happened to George Floyd? We know because a 17-year-old concerned citizen standing nearby hit record on her cellphone camera and captured the torturous eight minutes leading up to Floyd's unnecessary death.

Do we want our police to be allowed to say, "No recording allowed!""? Would we have wanted the father and son who chased down and killed Ahmaud Arbery to have been able to command, "No recording allowed!""? Would we prefer that the dashcam video of Laquan McDonald being shot 16 times by a Chicago police officer remain hidden?

No, of course not.

Without video, would we know what really happened to Walter Scott, Philando Castile, Sandra Bland, Eric Garner, Tamir Rice, Terence Crutcher and so many more?

The power of video - to document racism, police brutality and other atrocities - has brought remarkable change over the past decade in our society's understanding of what too many people of color endure. It has led to convictions in cases that, before the video era, would've been washed away.

The young people out protesting peacefully this week are showing tremendous courage. By practicing their constitutional right to assemble and protest, they are risking physical harm, arrest and, in some cases, repercussions from parents, teachers and employers.

But they must also learn the law if they plan to publicly demonstrate. And they must recognize that with protest comes responsibility - and consequences. If they believe strongly enough in their message, it will be worth it.

If they push back against the cameras, though, they risk undermining not only their own cause but the First Amendment rights that allow us to see all the images that are bringing about change.

It takes great courage to be named, to be in the spotlight, to step in front of that camera in the fight for justice.

Without those cameras, though, how would we know?

Lara Weber: Protesters who try to ban cameras miss the point of the First Amendment

Lara Weber is a member of the Chicago Tribune Editorial Board.

Charles Blow: Allies, don't fail us again Doyle McManus: Trump finds an unexpected center of resistance: the Pentagon Dellawar, El-Tayyab: There can be no getting along without reform Greg Moore: It's clear we live in different worlds John Kass: Will anyone take a knee for retired police Capt. David Dorn?

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Southern Minnesota teen allegedly smothered brother, 5, while trying to stop temper tantrum

ARTICLE CCCIV. SOUTHERN MINNESOTA TEEN ALLEGEDLY SMOTHERED BROTHER, 5, WHILE TRYING TO STOP TEMPER TANTRUM

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 475 words

Byline: Emily Cutts

Highlight: ROCHESTER, Minn. - Kaleb Wolfe Smith wanted his 5-year-old brother to stop throwing a fit, so he pinched the boy's nose shut and placed his hand over his mouth until the boy stopped shrieking. Smith, 17, told an Olmsted County sheriff's detective that he held his hand on the boy's mouth for "one to two [...]"

Body

ROCHESTER, Minn. - Kaleb Wolfe Smith wanted his 5-year-old brother to stop throwing a fit, so he pinched the boy's nose shut and placed his hand over his mouth until the boy stopped shrieking.

Smith, 17, told an Olmsted County sheriff's detective that he held his hand on the boy's mouth for "one to two minutes." It was enough to kill him.

Deputies and medics in the southern Minnesota community of Eyota were called about 4:35 p.m. Monday to the 300 block of Second Street Southwest for a report of a 5-year-old boy who was not breathing.

When deputies arrived, they found Alex James Smith in an upstairs bedroom, said Olmsted County Sheriff's Capt. Scott Behrns. First responders attempted lifesaving measures, and the boy was taken to a Rochester hospital, where he was pronounced dead at about 6 p.m.

An initial investigation determined the death was caused by asphyxiation, Behrns said Tuesday morning.

The brother, Kaleb Wolfe Smith, is charged in Olmsted County District Court with second-degree murder and domestic assault by strangulation.

Smith described the events leading up to the incident to an Olmsted County sheriff's detective. According to court documents, Smith said he and his siblings had been attempting to nurse an injured bird, and that Alex had killed the bird. Smith told his mother, and Alex was sent upstairs to bed.

Smith went up to the boy's room a few minutes later because the boy was crying and throwing a fit. Smith said he pinned the boy's hands to his body to get him to stop flopping and then draped a blanket over the boy's body and head before leaving the room. The boy continued shrieking, and Smith went back into the room and pinched the 5-year-old's nose shut and covered his mouth.

Southern Minnesota teen allegedly smothered brother, 5, while trying to stop temper tantrum

Preliminary results of an autopsy conducted by the Southern Minnesota Regional Medical Examiner's Office indicated that the boy's brain exhibited swelling consistent with hypoxia, or oxygen deprivation, by smothering.

Most juvenile criminal records in Minnesota are not public information, but there are exceptions. If an offender is at least 14 years old and commits a felony-level crime, the juvenile may be certified to stand trial as an adult in criminal court, and would render all of the records relating to that crime as public.

Additionally, if a juvenile is 16 years old or older and is accused of a felony-level offense, all proceedings conducted by the juvenile court relating to that offense, as well as the records relating to it, are open to the public.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCV. ST. PAUL SCHOOLS' COPS CONTRACT REASSESSED

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3BLength: 286 wordsByline: RYAN FAIRCLOTH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

The St. Paul school board will meet next week to discuss the future of its contract with the city's Police Department, following the recent death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

"After George Floyd's murder, many are questioning the role of the police in our city. We hear the voices of our students, families, staff and community members. We want to take those voices into consideration and make decisions that are in the very best interest of those we serve," said Jeanelle Foster, the board's vice chair.

The announcement follows a Tuesday vote by the Minneapolis school board to end its relationship with Minneapolis police because of Floyd's death.

Any potential action on the contract would happen at the St. Paul school board's June 23 meeting, according to the district. The district's contract with the department for seven school resource officers is worth up to $775,000 and expires June 30.

The Minneapolis and St. Paul districts have long faced criticism over the use of school resource officers, with both seeking to transform the role from enforcer to mentor. In 2018-19, a Minneapolis Public Schools survey gave mostly positive marks to the officers, but the data also showed that school cops had more interactions with black students than their peers.

In December, the St. Paul school board unanimously approved a new contract for the seven school resource officers to work in high schools.

St. Paul Public Schools has taken steps to soften the role of resource officers by having them find ways to avoid arresting students. Past surveys of St. Paul students have found an overwhelming majority in support of police officers in their schools.

Ryan Faircloth · 612-673-4234

Twitter: @ryanfaircloth

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

1.9 million seek jobless aid even as reopenings slow layoffs

ARTICLE CCCVI. 1.9 MILLION SEEK JOBLESS AID EVEN AS REOPENINGS SLOW LAYOFFS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1080 words

Byline: Christopher S Rugaber

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Nearly 1.9 million people applied for U.S. unemployment benefits last week, evidence that many employers are still cutting jobs even as the gradual reopening of businesses has slowed the pace of layoffs.

Body

WASHINGTON - Nearly 1.9 million people applied for U.S. unemployment benefits last week, evidence that many employers are still cutting jobs even as the gradual reopening of businesses has slowed the pace of layoffs.

The total number of people who are receiving jobless aid rose slightly to 21.5 million, down from a peak of nearly 25 million two weeks ago but still at a historically high level. It shows that scattered rehiring is offsetting only some of the ongoing layoffs with the economy mired in a recession. Thursday's latest weekly number from the Labor Department is still more than double the record high that prevailed before the viral outbreak.

Still, the number of people who applied for benefits last week marked the ninth straight decline since applications spiked in mid-March. The job market meltdown that was triggered by the coronavirus may have bottomed out as more companies call at least some of their former employees back to work.

Economists said they were disappointed, though, that the number of first-time applications for jobless aid and the total number of people receiving benefits remain so high.

"While the drop in new claims is welcome news and more evidence that the worst of the job losses are behind us, the recovery in the labor market is expected to be painfully slow," said Gregory Daco, chief U.S. economist at Oxford Economics. "We look for a two-phase recovery, with an initial burst in rehiring followed by a much slower retracement of job losses.

Fewer people sought jobless aid last week in 47 states and in Washington, D.C., while the number rose in just California, Florida and Mississippi. The total number of people receiving aid fell in 37 states and in D.C. and increased in 13 states.

1.9 million seek jobless aid even as reopenings slow layoffs

Applications for jobless benefits are falling in states that had reopened their businesses early, such as Georgia and Texas, and are also declining in those that are still early in the reopening process, such as New York and Massachusetts.

Some businesses that have reopened have seen only a limited number of customers so far.

In Chattanooga, Tennessee, Nneka Ijeoma lost her job as a bartender at a whiskey bar when it closed in March. Though the bar has reopened, it has rehired only two of its 17 employees. Meanwhile, Ijeoma is receiving $275 in state unemployment benefits each week, plus $600 a week in federal benefits

"We were honestly so blessed by that," she said of the federal aid, which will expire at the end of July. "I wouldn't have been able to get by on $275."

Still, she is eager to return to work and to go back to school in the fall to finish her college degree. Yet she always regarded bartending as a long-term opportunity.

"I always thought I could work in hospitality forever," she said. "I thought it was recession-proof."

In addition to the laid-off employees who applied for benefits last week, 623,000 others sought jobless aid under a new program for self-employed and gig workers, who now qualify for unemployment benefits for the first time. These figures aren't adjusted for seasonal variations, so the government doesn't include them in the overall data. And 15 states still aren't reporting the number of applicants under this program, meaning that the data is incomplete.

The figures come one day before the government's jobs report for May is expected to show that employers slashed 8 million jobs last month and that the unemployment rate jumped from 14.7% to 19.8%. If those forecasts prove accurate, it would mean that nearly 30 million people have lost jobs since the viral outbreak intensified in March and that joblessness has reached its highest point since the Great Depression.

Since mid-March, 42.7 million people have applied for unemployment benefits. Not all of them are still unemployed, though. Some have since been rehired. And some laid-off people likely filed duplicate applications for benefits as they struggled with unresponsive state unemployment systems. Others were unable to file their applications at all until recently.

"The big question is whether millions are still filing for unemployment due to separations that happened awhile ago or because of separations still happening today," said Adam Ozimek, chief economist at Upwork. "The latter is far more problematic" because it would point to ongoing business closures and cutbacks.

Thursday's report wasn't affected by the protests over the killing of George Floyd, which in recent days forced some major retailers and small businesses to close, because it covers claims filed only through May 30. But some economists warn that applications for unemployment aid could rise in next week's report, reflecting business closures amid the protests and scattered vandalism.

"That's going to kick up the claims again," said Jane Oates, a former Labor Department official.

The depth of the job cuts since the virus forced the widespread shutdown of businesses reflects an economy gripped by the worst downturn since the Great Depression. The economy is thought to be shrinking in the April-June quarter at an annual rate approaching 40%. That would be, by far, the worst quarterly contraction on record.

1.9 million seek jobless aid even as reopenings slow layoffs

Still, real-time private data on consumer behavior is showing signs that the economy is gradually reviving. Credit and debit card spending tracked by Chase Bank shows that consumer spending, though roughly flat last week, rebounded from its low point in mid-April, when it was 40% below year-ago levels. Now, it is down 20% from a year ago.

Economists caution that most Americans will need to feel more confident about returning to their former habits of shopping, traveling and eating out before the economy can sustain any meaningful recovery. That will likely require the availability of a vaccine or a significant increase in testing.

"What's really going to move the needle economically is when consumers and businesses feel comfortable re-engaging with the economy the way they did before COVID-19," said Adam Kamins, a senior regional economist at Moody's Analytics.

AP Writer Travis Loller in Nashville contributed to this report. Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCVII. ACLU SAYS COPS TARGETED MEDIA DURING PROTESTS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3BLength: 518 wordsByline: RANDY FURST; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Claiming that "the press is under assault in our city," the American Civil Liberties Union of Minnesota filed a class-action lawsuit Wednesday in federal court seeking a temporary restraining order to prevent law enforcement misconduct directed at the news media.

The 45-page lawsuit catalogs a long list of alleged encounters between journalists and photojournalists and law enforcement officers during demonstrations to protest the May 25 death of George Floyd while in custody of the Minneapolis police.

The suit says officers threatened, assaulted and, in several cases, arrested members of the media, even after they identified themselves as journalists.

Minneapolis City Attorney Erik Nilsson said in a statement, "We will review the allegations and take them seriously. We continue to support the First Amendment rights of everyone in Minneapolis."

The suit was filed on behalf of all journalists by plaintiff Jared Goyette of Minneapolis, a freelance journalist who in recent days has written articles for several newspapers, including the Washington Post and the Guardian.

The lawsuit said that Goyette was "shot in the face with less-lethal ballistic ammunition" by Minneapolis police on May 27 while documenting demonstrations near the Third Precinct police station.

The suit cites several instances in which Star Tribune reporters also were the target of misconduct by law enforcement, although none are plaintiffs.

Teresa Nelson, legal director of the ACLU of Minnesota, said the organization has filed a motion seeking a temporary injunction to prohibit law enforcement agencies from attacking journalists and interfering in news coverage. The ACLU said it would seek a permanent injunction later.

Among those named as defendants in the lawsuit are the city of Minneapolis, Chief of Police Medaria Arradondo, state Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington, Col. Matthew Langer who leads the Minnesota State Patrol, and "John Does" described as identified officers of the Minneapolis police and State Patrol.

Also named in the suit was Lt. Robert Kroll, president of the Minneapolis Police Officers Federation, who is cited as having made statements that inflamed the situation by attacking the "liberal media."

Kroll did not respond for comment. Bruce Gordon, a spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety, issued this statement in response to the suit: "The Minnesota State Patrol recognizes the importance of the media in covering the civil unrest that is occurring in our communities. When conducting law enforcement operations to restore order and keep people safe, it can be difficult for officers to distinguish journalists from those who are violating a curfew order or not complying with commands to leave an area.

"During the past week, the State Patrol has worked hard to ensure journalists who have been arrested have been released promptly upon identification. While not all of the incidents involve the Minnesota State Patrol, we are reviewing the incidents involving our troopers in an effort to prevent similar incidents in the future."

Randy Furst · 612-201-5522

Twitter: @randyfurst

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Aid sought for Mpls. starts at $55M

ARTICLE CCCVIII. AID SOUGHT FOR MPLS. STARTS AT \$55M

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 9ALength: 875 wordsByline: JESSIE VAN BERKEL; LIZ NAVRATIL; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

With at least $55 million in estimated damage and far more to come, Minneapolis will need state and federal aid as it attempts to rebuild hundreds of structures after the riots following George Floyd's death, Mayor Jacob Frey said.

City officials are still putting together a complete tally of the destruction and cautioned that estimates are likely to rise significantly. Gov. Tim Walz and members of Minnesota's congressional delegation are trying to get government assistance to offset that cost. But in the past, neither the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) nor Congress has consistently sent federal funding to cities ravaged by riots.

Minneapolis City Council members on Tuesday received an update from the city's Community Planning & Economic Development department that estimated at least 220 buildings had been damaged, resulting in a minimum of $55 million in costs, though the city was "not yet ready to produce a credible estimate" of the losses.

Frey said in an interview that he expects the full cost of the damage to be "tens, if not hundreds of millions" of dollars, across both Twin Cities.

"We will do everything we can as we shift to recovery mode," Frey said. "We're recovering from crises sandwiched on top of each other, from COVID-19 to the police killing and then the looting which took place afterward."

Walz said Tuesday that he is pushing for funding to rebuild damaged communities. His administration has been talking to U.S. Sens. Amy Klobuchar and Tina Smith, as well as U.S. Reps. Ilhan Omar and Betty McCollum, who represent the Twin Cities. Walz said they have had conversations about seeking federal assistance to rebuild communities and "we have expressed some of our desires to explore what we can do there."

Aid sought for Mpls. starts at $55M

After the 2015 riots in Baltimore following the death of Freddie Gray in police custody, Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan repeatedly sought about $19 million in aid from FEMA for public agencies that responded to the unrest. At the time, Hogan pointed to federal assistance provided to Los Angeles following the 1992 unrest over the beating of Rodney King. FEMA denied Hogan's request.

McCollum expressed doubt about Minneapolis and St. Paul's chances of getting federal disaster funding, a decision that is up to President Donald Trump. Alternatively, the state could seek funding through Congress' annual appropriations, but that would require the Democratic-led House, Republican-led Senate and Trump to sign on.

"To be realistic, the odds of that happening are, at best, very difficult," McCollum said in an e-mail.

Trump was harshly critical in a conference call with governors earlier in the week, calling them "weak" for not tamping down violent protests soon enough. Trump praised Minnesota's use of the National Guard after several nights of escalating violence and looting.

McCollum urged Walz to seek a disaster declaration, particularly given law enforcement investigations into organized arson and looting.

"If it is demonstrated outside provocateurs committed acts of destruction then there is a clear rationale for an emergency declaration by President Trump," she said.

Omar also said in a statement Wednesday that Minnesota cannot rely on Trump to dedicate FEMA resources.

"So Congress must step in," she said. "I am working with my colleagues to create an Emergency Relief Fund specifically for communities trying to rebuild after social and civil rights crises."

Walz also said he wants support for damaged areas along Lake Street in the state's bonding bill to fund infrastructure. Minnesota legislators are scheduled to return to the State Capitol for a special session June 12. The session has been expected to focus on the bonding bill, as well as tax relief and COVID-19 spending.

"Whether you live in Mankato or whether you live in Roseau or you're down in Winona, it's in our best interest as a state that shares things together to make sure that community is rebuilt," Walz said.

Minnesota House Speaker Melissa Hortman, DFL-Brooklyn Park, and the Legislature's People of Color and Indigenous Caucus made similar calls for state aid.

The bonding bill can't be used to repair private businesses, but it could assist with fixing and rebuilding public buildings, such as libraries and police stations. Sen. David Senjem, chair of the committee that focuses on bonding in the Republican-led Senate, said he is open to acting quickly to include some of those needs in a borrowing bill.

The decisions about whether to provide aid could have a major impact on the city's finances, which had already been strained by the coronavirus pandemic.

On Memorial Day, before Floyd died, city officials were discussing ways to cut $165 million from the budget as they tried to account for plummeting revenue and the increased costs of responding to the public health crisis. Frey and the City Council are expected to work together in the coming weeks to amend the 2020 budget.

Aid sought for Mpls. starts at $55M

"This will be a budget crunch. To say otherwise would be dishonest, but we are committed to the city," Frey said. "We have a committed team, and I know between our city enterprise and the strength of our communities, we're going to get through this."

liz.navratil@startribune.com 612-673-4994

jessie.vanberkel@startribune.com 651-925-5044

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCIX. ANALYSIS: TRUMP EMULATES STRONGMAN TACTICS, TESTS HIS LIMITS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1079 wordsByline: Julie PaceHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - A phalanx of law enforcement officers and soldiers is positioned on the streets of the nation's capital to keep protesters at bay. Helicopters circle overhead, sometimes dipping low to buzz the crowd. The country's leader warns that he's willing to go further to "dominate" the streets.Body

WASHINGTON - A phalanx of law enforcement officers and soldiers is positioned on the streets of the nation's capital to keep protesters at bay. Helicopters circle overhead, sometimes dipping low to buzz the crowd. The country's leader warns that he's willing to go further to "dominate" the streets.

In words and in actions, President Donald Trump is increasingly emulating the strongman leaders he has long admired as he seeks to tamp down protests over police brutality that are roiling the United States. In doing so, he is stretching the powers of the American presidency in ways rarely seen, and testing the willingness of the Pentagon to follow along.

His actions have forced a public reckoning among both current and former military leaders, as well as a handful of Republican politicians. Some of their concerns center not only on the actions Trump has already taken, but also on how far he may be willing to go in an election year, particularly if the political winds appear to be moving against him.

"Perhaps we're getting to the point where we can be more honest with the concerns that we might hold internally and have the courage of our own convictions to speak up," said Sen. Lisa Murkowski, a moderate Republican from Alaska. She added that she was unsure whether she could continue to support the president in November.

The president's face-off against Democrat Joe Biden will be the ultimate inflection point, a moment when the nation decides whether to shift course or press forward with Trump at the helm for four more years.

The choice between the two men has become increasingly stark as the nation confronts a confluence of public health, economic and civil rights crises, with Trump aggressively embracing the mantle of a "law and order" president in an attempt to project strength in uncertain times. Biden, for his part, has called the election a moral test and a "battle for the soul" of the nation.

Trump made a similar appeal to voters in 2016 and drew support from disaffected, largely white Americans. As commander in chief, he has the extraordinary power of the federal government and military at his disposal to back up tough talk with action.

His willingness to do so has become apparent during the protests that followed the death of George Floyd by police in Minneapolis. The demonstrations across the country have been largely peaceful but marred by outbursts of violence.

On Monday night, the president warned in a Rose Garden address that he would deploy active-duty soldiers to the states if local law enforcement and National Guard members couldn't get control of the protests. As he spoke, officers outside the White House aggressively dispersed a crowd using smoke canisters and pepper balls so the president could walk to a nearby church and pose with a Bible. He was flanked by Defense Secretary Mark Esper and Joint Chiefs Chairman Gen. Mark Milley, who was dressed in combat fatigues.

The stunning scene played out on live television and drew comparisons to crackdowns in authoritarian countries. Trump has long praised the broad powers of leaders in those countries, including Russian President Vladimir Putin and President Rodrigo Duterte of the Philippines.

Former Pentagon official Kori Schake said Trump's threats to use the military to crack down on American protesters was unsurprising given his past rhetoric and actions.

"The military is just the latest American governmental institution to have the president try and erode the democratic norms and crush the institutional independence of the organization," said Schake, now at the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank.

Still, Trump's words and actions Monday night became a breaking point for some.

"Never did I dream that troops ... would be ordered under any circumstance to violate the Constitutional rights of their fellow citizens - much less to provide a bizarre photo op for the elected commander-in-chief, with military leadership standing alongside," Gen. Jim Mattis, Trump's first defense secretary, wrote in a statement published by The Atlantic. Mattis' comments were all the more extraordinary given that he has resisted criticizing the president since announcing his resignation in 2018.

It's unclear whether the warnings this week from Mattis, Murkowski and others carry any sway with voters or signal any broader shift within the Republican Party. Trump faced a similar insurrection among members of the so-called establishment before the 2016 election and ultimately prevailed with a comfortable Electoral College victory. His grip on the GOP has tightened during his more than three years in office given the loyalty of his core backers.

Some of those supporters have publicly closed ranks around the president during the protests, applauding his administration's heavy-handed response and urging him to take more aggressive actions to quell demonstrations that get out of hand.

"These conditions can shift rapidly in any city across the country and the president needs to have the tools and the equipment and the information needed to move quickly to protect our citizens if that's what's necessary," said Sen. Tom Cotton, R-Ark.

Analysis: Trump emulates strongman tactics, tests his limits

Yet it's clear that the crises battering the nation have shifted the ground beneath Trump. His response to the COVID-19 pandemic has been uneven, and the resulting financial slowdown has upended his plans to run for reelection on the back of a strong economy.

His embrace of a strongman strategy may well be a way to rally his most ardent supporters, appeal to a sense of uncertainty many Americans are feeling and lock down a narrow path to victory in November. Yet it has also left his critics anxious about the steps he may be willing to take between now and then.

"It's hard to envision any line that Donald Trump won't cross or anything he won't do," said Peter Wehner, a veteran of three Republican administrations and an ardent critic of the president. "The question is whether the system of government, and the people who make up government and the court would be able to check him."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Julie Pace has covered the White House and politics for the AP since 2007. Follow her at <http://twitter.com/jpaceDC> Trump pushes conspiracy theory about Buffalo protester Biden formally clinches Democratic presidential nomination US moves forward with plan to end wild bird protections Following Mattis: More in the GOP frown on Trump's tone Democrats prepare police reform bills after Floyd's death

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCX. CAREI THOMAS, JAZZ PIANIST AND COMPOSER

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 4BLength: 613 wordsByline: CHRIS RIEMENSCHNEIDER; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: A Buddhist, jazz musician taught that 'everything is connected'Body

If you had to name the one thing that fueled Carei Thomas' passion for music through a six-decade career as jazz pianist, composer, educator and community arts organizer, his wife believes the answer would be: everyone else who worked with him.

"When he got out there with other musicians and artists, you could just see him light up," Joyce Thomas said. "He fed off the energy of other people like no one else."

As the Minneapolis neighborhood he and Joyce called home for three decades was engulfed by racial tensions that he long worked to alleviate, Thomas died last Thursday at 81. After a fall, complications arose at HCMC that led to heart failure, his wife said.

Despite the consuming chaos surrounding George Floyd's tragic death just blocks from the Thomases' home, many friends, fans and fellow musicians from around Minnesota sent online tributes to Thomas over the weekend.

Internationally known jazz singer José James - who performed with and learned from Thomas' many Twin Cities ensembles - called him "a brilliant pianist, composer and mentor to a generation of artists."

"He opened my mind and heart to a deeper understanding of music and black culture and showed me that everything is connected - jazz, blues, R&B, doo-wop and so-called classical music," James said.

Another singer half his age, Mankwe Ndosi said Thomas - who also preached Buddhism to many of his protégés - taught her "theory, joy, humility, persistence, resilience, transformation."

Known for crafting adventurous and genre-bending musical pieces under his own name and with such groups and collectives as Zeitgeist, the Elders and the Neighborhood Ensemble, Thomas also pioneered such musical concepts as controlled improvisation and tonal fabrics.

Carei Thomas, Jazz pianist and composer

He invented new ways of playing the piano after being diagnosed with Guillain-Barre syndrome in 1993. The nerve disorder required years of physical therapy, limited his finger movements and left him using braces to walk.

"I'm not into the 'poor thing' thing," Thomas said in a 2004 Star Tribune interview. "I think of that illness as something that threw me down another road in life."

Born in Pittsburgh in 1938, Thomas spent his teens and early 20s in Chicago, where he crossed paths with one of his heroes, Sun Ra; formed a doo-wop group, and collaborated with the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians.

After serving abroad in the U.S. Army for two years, Thomas moved to Minneapolis in 1972 to study music education and therapy at the University of Minnesota.

He was involved with many Twin Cities organizations, serving as music director for Interact Center for the Visual and Performing Arts and on the boards of West Bank School of Music and St. Paul's High School for Recording Arts; and receiving grants and fellowships from the McKnight and Bush foundations, the Minnesota State Arts Board and more.

In 2011, he published "Compositions and Concepts," with sheet music and stories behind his pieces dating to 1959. Asked in 2004 about his varied and brave output, Thomas said with a laugh, "I'm too old to be called arrogant. So I can more often get away with doing whatever the [expletive] I want."

In a 2010 episode of TPT's "MN Original," he offered up a comment that spoke to his Buddhist faith of 40 years as well as the tumult that hit his beloved Minneapolis last week.

"We're all connected as human beings," he said. "And it's not some way-out mystical thing. We really can all support and affect each other in positive ways."

Along with his wife, Thomas is survived by his three children Joi, Jaahred and Aairam, and 10 grandchildren. The family hopes to organize a public tribute to him.

Chris Riemenschneider · 612-673-4658

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXI. EX-DEFENSE CHIEF MATTIS RIPS TRUMP FOR DIVIDING AMERICANS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 578 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - In an extraordinary rebuke, former defense secretary Jim Mattis on Wednesday denounced President Donald Trump's heavy-handed use of military force to quell protests near the White House and said his former boss was setting up a "false conflict" between the military and civilian society.Body

By KEVIN FREKING

WASHINGTON (AP) - In an extraordinary rebuke, former defense secretary Jim Mattis on Wednesday denounced President Donald Trump's heavy-handed use of military force to quell protests near the White House and said his former boss was setting up a "false conflict" between the military and civilian society.

"I have watched this week's unfolding events, angry and appalled," Mattis wrote.

The criticism was all the more remarkable because Mattis has generally kept a low profile since retiring as defense secretary in December 2018 to protest Trump's Syria policy. He had declined to speak out against Trump, saying he owed the nation public silence while his former boss remained in office.

But he's speaking out after this past week's protests in response to the death of George Floyd in police custody.

Trump responded on Twitter Wednesday evening by calling Mattis "the world's most overrated General."

"I didn't like his 'leadership' style or much else about him, and many others agree," Trump tweeted. "Glad he is gone!"

Mattis had a scathing description of Trump's walk to a historic nearby church Monday to pose with a Bible after law enforcement forcibly cleared Lafayette Square of mostly peaceful protesters.

He said he never dreamed troops "would be ordered under any circumstance to violate the Constitutional rights of their fellow citizens - much less to provide a bizarre photo op for the elected commander-in-chief, with military leadership standing alongside."

Ex-defense chief Mattis rips Trump for dividing Americans

"Donald Trump is the first president in my lifetime who does not try to unite the American people -does not even pretend to try. Instead he tries to divide us," Mattis wrote in a statement published by The Atlantic. "We are witnessing the consequences of three years of this deliberate effort. We are witnessing the consequences of three years without mature leadership."

Mattis called on Americans to unite without Trump. "This will not be easy, as the past few days have shown, but we owe it to our fellow citizens; to past generations that bled to defend our promise; and to our children," he wrote.

Mattis said of the protesters that Americans should not be distracted by a small number of lawbreakers. He said they are rightly demanding that the country follow the words of "Equal Justice Under Law" that are on display at the U.S. Supreme Court.

"The protests are defined by tens of thousands of people of conscience who are insisting that we live up to our values - our values as people and our values as a nation," Mattis said.

Mattis took particular issue with the use of force to move back protesters so Trump could visit St. John's Church the day after it was damaged by fire during protests. Several different groups, including the National Guard and the U.S. Park Police, were involved.

"We know that we are better than the abuse of executive authority that we witnessed in Lafayette Square. We must reject and hold accountable those in office who would make a mockery of our Constitution," Mattis said.

One day after Trump announced he was pulling all U.S. troops out of Syria, where they were partnering with local Syrians to fight the Islamic State, Mattis tried but failed to change Trump's mind. So, he resigned. Trump soon turned on Mattis, calling him a failure. He said falsely that he had fired Mattis.

"What's he done for me?" Trump said January 2. "How had he done in Afghanistan? Not too good. I'm not happy with what he's done in Afghanistan, and I shouldn't be happy."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXII. FOLLOWING MATTIS: MORE IN THE GOP FROWN ON TRUMP'S TONE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1154 wordsByline: Laurie Kellman, Lisa MascaroHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - President Donald Trump's inability to unify the nation at a time of grave unrest is testing his uneasy alliance with mainstream Republicans, some emboldened by Gen. James Mattis' plea for a leader who lives up to the U.S. ideals of a more perfect union.Body

WASHINGTON - President Donald Trump's inability to unify the nation at a time of grave unrest is testing his uneasy alliance with mainstream Republicans, some emboldened by Gen. James Mattis' plea for a leader who lives up to the U.S. ideals of a more perfect union.

Alaska Sen. Lisa Murkowski on Thursday called the rebuke by Trump's first Pentagon chief "necessary and overdue."

"Perhaps we're getting to the point where we can be more honest with the concerns that we might hold internally, and have the courage of our own convictions to speak up," Murkowski said.

Murkowski's remarks reflected the choice Republicans are forced to make about whether, and for how long, to support Trump when his words and actions so often conflict with their values and goals. Trump has responded to violence accompanying some protests following George Floyd's killing in Minneapolis by calling for more "law and order" to "dominate" even peaceful demonstrations. He has been slower and less forceful in addressing racial injustice and questions of police brutality that lie at the heart of the unrest.

Asked whether she can still support Trump, Murkowski replied: "I am struggling with it. I have struggled with it for a long time."

The nation is on edge, and Election Day looms, with the presidency and control of the House and Senate at stake. Trump has made clear that consequences for what he considers disloyalty can be steep.

Indeed, he promised Thursday to campaign against Murkowski when she is up for reelection in 2022. "Get any candidate ready, good or bad, I don't care, I'm endorsing," Trump tweeted.

Most in the GOP aren't breaking with him. Sen. Mike Braun of Indiana said Mattis' missive was not discussed Thursday at the GOP's lunch.

Asked for this thoughts on Mattis and Murkowski, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell offered no response.

Democratic senators, meanwhile, gathered at the Capitol's Emancipation Hall to bow - some kneeling - in a 8-minute, 46-second moment of silence for Floyd. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi sent Trump a letter seeking an accounting of the "increased militarization" toward protesters "that may increase chaos."

For Republicans, the challenge peaked this week when federal forces abruptly cleared peaceful protesters from Lafayette Park near the White House so Trump could stage a photo op in front of St. John's, the "church of presidents," holding up a Bible.

Mattis, Trump's defense secretary until December 2018, watched the developments "angry and appalled" and let rip his disapproval Wednesday night in a denunciation that rippled through Republican ranks.

"Donald Trump is the first president in my lifetime who does not try to unite the American people - does not even pretend to try. Instead, he tries to divide us," Mattis wrote in The Atlantic, adding that the upheaval is the result of "three years without mature leadership."

"We can unite without him," Mattis wrote.

In some respects, the statement read like a suggestion to Republicans as much as to the nation as a whole.

Right up until Mattis released it, saying little or nothing against the loyalty-loving president remained a popular choice for Republican members of Congress.

Earlier in the week, for example, Republican Sen. Rob Portman of Ohio was one of a procession of Republicans who muttered or dodged when asked if Trump's use of the military to suppress protesters was the right thing to do.

"I'm late for lunch," Portman replied Tuesday.

But after Mattis' rebuke, Portman was more willing to discuss Trump's handling of the protests.

He pointed out that Trump in prepared remarks did condemn Floyd's killing and applauded peaceful demonstrations. But "his tone and words kind of in between those more formal presentations have not unified people," Portman said. "It's more about tone. I think he's probably getting that message from a lot of people."

Sen. John Barrasso of Wyoming, a member of the GOP leadership, did not denounce Mattis, saying Thursday he'd prefer to speak of issues that unify people.

Murkowski, who has her own complicated relationship with Trump, suggested those in the president's mostly white party are looking for the right words and tone. Statements by former President George W. Bush and now Mattis, she said, help point the way.

"I think right now ... questions about who I'm going to vote for, who I'm not going to vote for, I think, are distracting to the moment," said Murkowski, who said she'd continue to try to work with the Trump administration. "I know people might think that's a dodge," she added, "but I think there are important conversations that we need to have as an American people amongst ourselves about where we are right now."

Following Mattis: More in the GOP frown on Trump's tone

For his part, Trump dismissed Mattis, who served nearly a half-century in the military, as "the world's most overrated General."

Murkowski and Portman retracted their endorsements of Trump during the 2016 election when he could be heard on the "Access Hollywood" tape bragging about assaulting women. They also voted to acquit him of House abuse and obstruction charges earlier this year after Trump's impeachment trial.

Other Republicans this week needed no help finding the words.

Sen. Ben Sasse, R-Neb., a frequent Trump critic who is up for reelection, said, "I'm against clearing out a peaceful protest for a photo op that treats the word of God as a political prop."

Sen. Susan Collins of Maine, one of the most vulnerable Senate Republicans seeking reelection, said it was "painful to watch peaceful protesters to be subjected to tear gas in order for the president to go across the street to a church that I believe he's attended only once."

"President Trump's walk to St. John's was confrontational, at the wrong time of day, and it distracted from his important message in the Rose Garden about our national grief, racism, peaceful protests, and lawful assembly," added Sen. James Lankford, R-Okla., who is not on the ballot this year. "The President's important message was drowned out by an awkward photo op."

The president noticed, and name-checked the trio.

"You got it wrong! If the protesters were so peaceful, why did they light the Church on fire the night before? People liked my walk to this historic place of worship!" he tweeted Wednesday, suggesting that "Sen. Susan Collins, Sen. James Lankford, Sen. Ben Sasse" read a specific article.

He took no such aim at Sen. Tim Scott, R-S.C., the only black Republican in the Senate.

"If your question is, should you use tear gas to clear a path so the president can go have a photo op, the answer is no," Scott told Politico.

Follow Kellman on Twitter at <http://www.Twitter.com/APLaurieKellman> Trump pushes conspiracy theory about Buffalo protester Biden formally clinches Democratic presidential nomination US moves forward with plan to end wild bird protections Democrats prepare police reform bills after Floyd's death Analysis: Trump emulates strongman tactics, tests his limits

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXIII. FUND TRIGGERS CASH BAIL DEBATE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 622 wordsByline: PATRICK CONDON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

A Minnesota nonprofit that raised $30 million in a week's time to help pay bail for people protesting police violence in the Twin Cities has come under criticism from President Donald Trump and the Republican National Committee.

The Trump campaign and the RNC are calling attention to a media report that 13 staffers on former Vice President Joe Biden's presidential campaign donated to the Minnesota Freedom Fund.

Following the demonstrations and riots in the wake of George Floyd's May 25 death at the hands of Minneapolis police officers, the small nonprofit group found itself promoted by celebrities on social media as a way to financially support protesters.

"Joe Biden's campaign staff joined Hollywood celebrities to donate money to the Minnesota Freedom Fund - a donation pool dedicated to posting bail for the very people arrested and responsible for the destruction of the city," RNC spokeswoman Preya Samsundar wrote in a news release Tuesday.

Reuters reported on Saturday that 13 Biden staffers advertised donations to the Minnesota Freedom Fund on Twitter on Friday and Saturday. A Biden spokesman told Reuters that the former vice president and Democratic nominee opposes cash bail.

The Freedom Fund is dedicated to eliminating the system of cash bail, which critics say disadvantages the poor and minorities in the criminal justice system.

Biden spokesman Andrew Bates called cash bail "a modern day debtor's prison." The Biden campaign did not immediately respond to a request for additional comment.

"Getting this group out of pretrial incarceration is part of our process," Steve Boland, the group's treasurer, said of demonstrators who face charges. "But so is working on helping people understand that the racist cash bail system is part of what got us into this problem in the first place."

Fund triggers cash bail debate

Boland said since charges are just starting to surface from the demonstrations and riots of recent days, the group has not yet had to cover many bails. None so far have been for individuals charged with arson, looting, vandalism or other violent acts, he said. But he added that his group would not refrain from covering those bail costs if needed.

"Let's say the police have decided to charge you with something because they don't like you, and it keeps you in jail because your family can't afford bail," Boland said. "People should not have less justice because they have less money, and we're happy to have that conversation with any political force that wants to talk it out."

Representatives of the RNC and the Trump campaign did not immediately respond to requests for comment on whether Trump and his party support the current cash bail system, or if they support bail costs being covered for nonviolent demonstrators.

As demonstrations intensified following Floyd's death and the story spread on social media, a number of public figures started to tweet that they were donating to the Minnesota Freedom Fund and encouraged others to do likewise. Some pledged matching donations. Boland said since the group is the only one of its kind in Minnesota, he thinks the early wave of new donors probably found the fund via Google searches.

"Justin Timberlake I think was one of the larger ones. Janelle Monae, Don Cheadle, Steve Carell. There were a lot. I'm a fan of Patton Oswalt and I'm reading my Twitter feed and there is Patton Oswalt saying he is matching donations to us," Boland said. "It was like, 'Oh my.' "

A typical one-year donation haul was previously about $150,000, Boland said. The Minnesota Freedom Fund has now posted a message on its website saying it doesn't need more donations and urging donations to other groups raising money to rebuild businesses in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Patrick Condon · 612-673-4413

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Lake St. vibe may be altered forever

ARTICLE CCCXIV. LAKE ST. VIBE MAY BE ALTERED FOREVER

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1D

Length: 925 words

Byline: LEE SCHAFFER; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

Uncle Hugo's and Uncle Edgar's are really one business, specialty bookstores serving science-fiction and mystery fans. They are - or were - on Chicago Avenue South just off Lake Street in Minneapolis.

There was not much left on Monday afternoon. There was no visible smoke, yet the unmistakable smell lingered in the air from the recent fire.

"I don't know yet," said Don Blyly, the owner who founded Uncle Hugo's in 1974, when asked about rebuilding.

He doesn't know what kind of settlement he will get out of his insurer. He doesn't know if the city will even allow new construction of a small, one-story building like the one he had.

It will take weeks to sort all that out. Then, he said, it would take at least a year to design, build and furnish a new store.

And, at 69, Blyly doesn't know yet if he wants to start over.

The "Uncles" resided in a building built, according to Hennepin County records, in 1922. Blyly thought it was more like 1915. While still early, he said the ballpark estimate is that a new store would have twice the cost of the previous space.

Simply put, his 105-year-old, inexpensive building was not really replaceable - and that's just one aspect of the big challenge that awaits the business community spread along Lake Street south of downtown Minneapolis.

Even with donations and GoFundMe fundraising, it could take years for this commercial corridor in the state's largest city to fully come back. Even when it does, it might not look like the Lake Street of early May.

Lake St. vibe may be altered forever

In the days following the killing of George Floyd while in the custody of Minneapolis police, at least 360 businesses, most in Minneapolis, have been damaged, and not just along Lake Street. More than 60 shared the same fate as the Uncles bookstores - consumed by fire.

Lake Street isn't in just one neighborhood, by the way. It's a long commercial corridor that has existed in Minneapolis for generations, particularly for immigrants. At one end is Uptown, a vibrant mix of housing and commercial space along with a landmark cinema, and about 5 miles away it ends at a bridge into St. Paul.

In between, there is a broad mix of independently owned shops, restaurants and service businesses along with brands such as Target, Taco Bell, Arby's and Aldi. It has storefront places to get checks cashed and send money abroad as well as branches of U.S. Bank. It has African hair-braiding services, a bicycle cooperative and a Spanish AM and FM radio station.

It's one place to go for farm-to-table American meals and also to find great - and usually low-cost - food from Mexico, Ecuador, Somalia, China, Greece, Scandinavia and elsewhere.

A lot of the businesses maybe set up shop to serve lower-income customers, but there's also an aspect of the vitality of Lake Street that comes from a chance to operate in an inexpensive place to do business. Many blocks were the kind of place where bootstrapping entrepreneurs had their best shot at getting open.

Much like the concept of naturally occurring affordable housing, meaning older apartments that charge far lower rents than new buildings, there are older and more affordable buildings in commercial areas.

For owners of a building that had been destroyed, recovery depends a lot on insurance.

The best outcome for insured owners would result from a policy that funds the replacement cost of the building, rebuilding pretty much what was there and with comparable materials.

One policy variant offers what is called functional replacement. That would let a business rebuild but not necessarily with comparable materials or the same design.

A cash value policy is worse. An older building with lots of wear is not worth as much as the cost of new construction. So a business owner may conclude it would be better if what's left was cleared away and a for-sale sign went up.

Eventually a new building would rise, though it wouldn't be as cheap to occupy. Another business would have to come along that produces enough cash to cover the cost of the new building. That's just one scenario that could change the character of business along the street.

Business owners who operate on a lease also have a problem with physical damage or fire, and business owners needed insurance, too.

The owner of the El Sabor Chuchi restaurant on Lake Street told a colleague that insurance cost too much so he went without it. He arrived at his restaurant one morning last week to confirm that it had burned, later saying "17 years of work is gone," including the 10 years it took to save the money to open.

Commercial leases commonly require tenants to have liability insurance, although that's about protecting landlords from what happens inside the tenant's space. Business owners also can buy a more complete package, often rolled together in what's called BOP insurance, that protects against other risks. That can include coverage for lost income of being shut down.

Lake St. vibe may be altered forever

Since March, restaurants, stores and other businesses have had to contend with a dramatic decline in traffic due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Maybe some businesses couldn't pay their May insurance bill.

Even if business owners had paid for business interruption coverage to make up for the loss of income for a time, tough decisions are ahead if it takes longer than that to get the space ready to reopen, or if the landlord chooses not to rebuild. That could mean trying to start over somewhere else.

Is there reason for optimism? Oh yes, based just upon the activity and life evident along the street this week. Recovery is underway.

lee.schafer@startribune.com 612-673-4302

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXV. NORTH SIDE PROTECTING ITS OWN MARKETS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 729 wordsByline: LIBOR JANY; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Groups banded to guard scarce grocery stores.Body

When the Rev. Jerry McAfee saw the fires were getting closer, he knew So Low Grocery Outlet had to be protected.

And so he organized nightly patrols to keep an eye on one of the few discount food stores in north Minneapolis that hadn't closed out of fear of the COVID-19 pandemic or looting.

The idea came about when he got a worried call from So Low's owner, after several area businesses were torched under mysterious circumstances, says McAfee, the pastor at New Salem Missionary Baptist Church. He started working the phones, and eventually rounded up a group of ministers and gang members - "Bloods, GDs, Vice Lords," he says - to man the patrols.

"Those they wanted to call menaces to society are now holding the community down," he said. Their charge: protecting a market that needy residents depend on daily for food and other necessities, McAfee said.

"That's not even a black-owned business, but that's the only one that black folks can get to," he said of the market. "This one, our sole purpose was to make sure our people can eat.

"If it goes up, then our people will have to go a long ways to get groceries," he said of the market, at 3111 N. Emerson Av.

The police killing of George Floyd last week galvanized street protests nationwide and prompted officials in several states to mobilize National Guard troops and impose curfews; in Minnesota alone, hundreds of buildings were looted and torched.

While residents and shopkeepers along Lake Street in the south Minneapolis police precinct where Floyd was killed bore the brunt of the rioting, at least 17 North Side businesses were also damaged, according to a Star Tribune database. Most of the vandalized or burned businesses there were along W. Broadway, the area's main commercial artery, but McAfee still worried.

With widespread reports of roving potential bad actors, similar civilian patrols have popped up all over the city, with residents blocking off streets with makeshift barricades and erecting floodlights to protect their neighborhoods from would-be rioters. In some areas, neighbors have started private WhatsApp groups to share minute-by-minute information and photos of suspected troublemakers in the area and, hopefully, correct misinformation that often spreads in times of crisis.

K.B. Brown has also organized street patrols in the area, bringing together an unlikely ensemble of rival gang members, bikers and "white people from the community that are literally out with hockey sticks." The group of 50 or so has taken to going from block to block, on the lookout for suspicious people and vehicles.

He says he some of the young men agreed to set aside their differences and work together for the community's benefit.

"It's been a beautiful thing because I've like had the Highs and the Lows riding around in the same car," said Brown, who grew up in the city and owns a local T-shirt printing business. "And they haven't been fighting and doing all that. ... They've been riding around protecting the neighborhood."

Some community groups are arming themselves, which has led to more than a few frantic 911 calls, like the caller late Tuesday who reported seeing several men with "machine guns" getting out of a Jeep. They turned out to be private security guards.

Last week, McAfee sent several of his volunteers down to help out another security detail run by the NAACP on W. Broadway, after he says some shady-looking people kept circling the block, arousing suspicion, and his men heard gunfire ring out, he said.

For years, parts of north Minneapolis were seen as so-called "food deserts."

Big chains like Kowalski's and Supervalu have come and gone in recent years. Today, residents' options consist of a handful of convenience stores, Aldi and Cub Foods and North Market, a community wellness center and grocery store run by nonprofit Pillsbury United Communities that opened two years ago.

McAfee said that he was as upset by Floyd's death as anyone else, but at the same time he was frustrated with how "flippant" some protesters were about looting at the Cub Foods on E. Lake Street.

"I'm never against protest, but I absolutely cannot stand for you to be so enraged that you don't think about your actions," he said. "And so with one strike of one match, without one thought about it, you decimate the oppressed that you claim be trying to defend."

Libor Jany · 612-673-4064

Twitter: @StribJany

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXVI. OBAMA STEPS OUT AS NATION CONFRONTS CONFLUENCE OF CRISES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 966 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Former President Barack Obama is taking on an increasingly public role as the nation confronts a confluence of historic crises that has exposed deep racial and socioeconomic inequalities in America and reshaped the November election.Body

By JULIE PACE

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former President Barack Obama is taking on an increasingly public role as the nation confronts a confluence of historic crises that has exposed deep racial and socioeconomic inequalities in America and reshaped the November election.

In doing so, Obama is signaling a willingness to sharply critique his successor, President Donald Trump, and fill what many Democrats see as a national leadership void. On Wednesday, he held a virtual town hall event with young people to discuss policing and the civil unrest that has followed the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis.

Obama rejected a debate he said he'd seen come up in "a little bit of chatter on the internet" about "voting versus protests, politics and participation versus civil disobedience and direct action."

"This is not an either-or. This is a both and to bring about real change," he said during the town hall hosted by his foundation's My Brother's Keeper Alliance, which supports young men of color. "We both have to highlight a problem and make people in power uncomfortable, but we also have to translate that into practical solutions and laws that could be implemented and monitored and make sure we're following up on."

Obama called for turning the protests over Floyd's death into policy change to ensure safer policing and increased trust between communities and law enforcement. He urged "every mayor in the country to review your use of force policies" with their communities and "commit to report on planned reforms" before prioritizing their implementation.

"We're in a political season, but our country is also at an inflection point," said Valerie Jarrett, a longtime friend and adviser to Obama. "President Obama is not going to shy away from that dialogue simply because he's not in office anymore."

During the roundtable, Obama drew parallels between the unrest sweeping America currently and protest movements of the 1960s. But he said polls show a majority of Americans supporting today's protesters and forming a "broad coalition" in a way much of the country didn't back then - despite some of the recent protests "having been marred by the actions of a tiny minority that engaged in violence."

Still, he warned, "at some point, attention moves away" and "protests dwindle in size" so "it's important to take that moment that's been created as a society, as a country, and say let's use this to finally have an impact."

Obama was already beginning to emerge from political hibernation to endorse Joe Biden's Democratic presidential bid when the coronavirus pandemic swept across the U.S., killing more than 100,000 people, and the economy began to crater. The crises scrambled the Biden campaign's plans for how to begin deploying Obama as their chief surrogate ahead of the November election, but also gave the former president a clear opening to start publicly arguing what he has signaled to friends and associates privately for the past three years: that he does not believe Trump is up for the job.

Addressing graduates of historically black colleges and universities last month, Obama said the pandemic had "fully, finally torn back the curtain on the idea that so many of the folks in charge know what they're doing." And in a nationally televised broadcast celebrating graduating high school seniors, Obama said many "so-called grown-ups, including some with fancy titles and important jobs," do only what's convenient and feels good.

Floyd's death, however, has drawn a more visceral and personal reaction from the nation's first black president. Floyd, a black man, died after a white police officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck for several minutes even after he stopped moving and pleading for air.

In a lengthy written statement last week, Obama said that while he understood that millions of Americans were eager to "just get back to normal" when the pandemic abates, it shouldn't be forgotten that normal life for people of color in the U.S. involves being treated differently on account of their race.

"This shouldn't be 'normal' in 2020 America. It can't be 'normal,'" Obama wrote.

Tensions across the country have escalated further in the days since the former president's statement. His town hall on Wednesday will mark his first in-person comments since law enforcement officers aggressively cleared peaceful protesters from a park outside the White House so Trump could walk across for a photo opportunity at a nearby church.

Trump has cheered harsh crackdowns on the protests, some of which have turned violent, and threatened to deploy active-duty military to the states if local officials could not get the demonstrations under control. He appeared to be backing down from that position this week, and Defense Secretary Mark Esper said Wednesday that he did not believe such action was warranted.

Biden's campaign welcomed Obama stepping forward during this moment.

Obama steps out as nation confronts confluence of crises

"President Obama's voice is a reminder that we used to have a president who sought to bridge our divides, and we can have one again if we elect Joe Biden," said TJ Ducklo, a campaign spokesman.

Obama grappled with police brutality against minorities as president, including in Ferguson, Missouri, where clashes broke out after the death of Michael Brown, a black 18-year-old. After Brown's death, Obama's Justice Department moved to enact broad policing reforms, though most were halted under the Trump administration.

Biden, who served as Obama's vice president, called this week for restoring some of the previous administration's actions in the wake of Floyd's death and the killing of other black Americans. Biden also called for Congress to take immediate steps, including outlawing chokeholds.

Associated Press writers Will Weissert in Washington and Bill Barrow in Atlanta contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Pitino: 'This is a worldwide problem'

ARTICLE CCCXVII. PITINO: 'THIS IS A WORLDWIDE PROBLEM'

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: SPORTS; Pg. 1C

Length: 575 words

Byline: MARCUS FULLER; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: With racism on his mind, the coach wants to help U players make changes.

Body

The Gophers men's basketball team gathered Monday for a Zoom call.

The topic was race. And coach Richard Pitino told his black players that, as a white man, he doesn't know what they are going through.

Then he just listened.

"We acknowledge there are problems," Pitino said Wednesday. "And how can we all fix it together."

A week after George Floyd's death in south Minneapolis, a black man's death where a white police officer faces murder charges, Pitino said his players expressed anger, fear and frustration. With their emotions still simmering, the dialogue began about being part of changes together, creating a sense of unity.

Peaceful protests. Speaking out for justice and equality. Pitino is allowing his players to do that. He asked them how they have experienced racism, and what they can do to make things better.

"This isn't just a Minneapolis or Minnesota problem. This is a worldwide problem," Pitino said. "How am I as a white male and coach going to support black athletes who come into my program and who I recruit? Let them have a voice, explain and teach us, and help us learn how to make change. Making sure I'm empowering them moving forward is so important."

Many leaders around the country have made statements to support Floyd's family and are calling for change. Few statements have been specific on what that actually means.

Pitino said he would tell recruits that he doesn't know the exact answers yet. But they are working toward change.

"You have to be upfront and honest with them," he said. "You have to tell them how disgusted [I am] with what happened in Minneapolis, but also explain to them I've lived here for eight years. And one of the things I love about Minnesota is how safe and welcoming it feels. How diverse it is."

Pitino: 'This is a worldwide problem'

Gophers athletic director Mark Coyle and his 23 head coaches participated in a virtual call Wednesday. They are all white. While lacking people of color at the top, Pitino said part of the discussion was adding more diversity throughout the department.

"[Gophers coaches talked] about some of the things they want to do moving forward to make sure we're doing more," Pitino said. "I know that's always on Mark's mind and the athletic department's mind: To make sure we hire a staff who is really good but also making sure that it is very diverse as well."

Pitino conducted a FaceTime call on Tuesday while forward Isaiah Ihnen was on Lake Street helping with a cleanup and donation effort. Ihnen's teammates also have been involved in the community. The Gophers are planning a supplies drive next week as well.

Watching the video of Floyd's death was "heartbreaking and sickening as you can ever see," Pitino said. His players and staff members have been part of peaceful protests since the incident. There was concern for their safety and health with the ongoing threat of the COVID-19 pandemic.

"And in one of the protests on the 35W bridge, you see a tanker going toward the crowd," Pitino said. "There were members of our team there. We just had to check in with everybody to make sure they were safe and they were OK."

More than anything, Pitino understands by talking to his players since Floyd's death that they want to do something of substance and something of value to enact change.

"There are little things we can do for our community right now," Pitino said. "There are resources needed and money needed. Obviously, the larger problem is going to be a huge fight, and we need to be a part of it."

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

Rod Rosenstein says he wouldn't approve Russia warrant now

ARTICLE CCCXVIII.

ROD ROSENSTEIN SAYS HE WOULDN'T APPROVE RUSSIA WARRANT NOW

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1035 wordsByline: Eric TuckerHighlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Former Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein told lawmakers Wednesday that he would not have approved an FBI surveillance application for a former Trump campaign aide during the Russia investigation had he known at the time about the problems that have since been revealed.Body

By ERIC TUCKER

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein told lawmakers Wednesday that he would not have approved an FBI surveillance application for a former Trump campaign aide during the Russia investigation had he known at the time about the problems that have since been revealed.

Rosenstein's comments amounted to a striking concession that law enforcement officials made mistakes as they scrutinized ties between Russia and Donald Trump's 2016 presidential campaign. But even as he acknowledged the legitimacy of anger from Trump and his allies, he defended his appointment of special counsel Robert Mueller to lead the probe and affirmed his support for the conclusion that Russia interfered in the election but did not criminally conspire with associates of the Trump campaign.

"I do not consider the investigation to be corrupt, Senator, but I certainly understand the president's frustration given the outcome, which was in fact that there was no evidence of conspiracy between Trump campaign advisers and Russians," Rosenstein said at a hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

His appearance before the committee was the first in a series of hearings scrutinizing the FBI's Russia investigation and the law enforcement officials involved. With subpoena authority expected to be approved this week, the hearing marked the opening salvo of the GOP's election-year congressional investigation into what they say are damaging findings about the Russia probe from a Justice Department inspector general review.

The president's allies have taken fresh aim at the Russia investigation over the last year, pointing to newly declassified information to allege that Trump and his associates were unfairly pursued. They have claimed vindication from the Justice Department's decision to dismiss the case against ex-national security adviser Michael Flynn while at times advancing unsupported theories against Obama administration officials.

Rod Rosenstein says he wouldn't approve Russia warrant now

"We're going to look backward so we can move forward," committee chairman Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., said in explaining the hearings' purpose. "If you don't like Trump, fine, but this is not about liking Trump or not liking Trump. This is about us as a nation."

Graham also questioned whether Mueller should have been appointed at all. Rosenstein, who appointed Mueller in May 2017, said he believed there had been a sufficient basis for the investigation and for the naming of a special counsel. But when Graham asked if he would agree with the general statement that by August 2017, there was "no there there" when it came to a criminal conspiracy between Russia and Trump, Rosenstein said yes.

Democrats lamented the hearing's politically charged and retrospective nature, saying Republicans were attempting to refocus attention away from more urgent problems, including unrest in cities set off by the death of George Floyd and the coronavirus pandemic.

"This hearing wastes this committee's time in a blatant effort to support the president's conspiracy theories and to help the president's reelection," said Democratic Sen. Mazie Hirono of Hawaii.

The hearing delved into detail in two areas that Trump allies have recently seized on to challenge the conduct of law enforcement.

Rosenstein was pressed repeatedly about his decision to sign off on the fourth and final application for a warrant to eavesdrop on Trump campaign adviser Carter Page on suspicion that he was a Russian agent.

Page has denied wrongdoing and was never charged with a crime, and a Justice Department inspector general report identified significant errors and omissions in each of the applications submitted to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court.

The watchdog said the FBI relied in part for its applications on a dossier of information compiled by a former British spy whose research was funded by Democrats and the Hillary Clinton campaign. The FBI used the dossier even though agents were aware of the possibility that it could have been colored by Russian disinformation, and an FBI lawyer is suspected of altering an email related to the application process, according to the inspector general.

Asked by Graham if he would have signed the warrant application if he knew then what he knows now, Rosenstein replied, "No, I would not."

Rosenstein said he was unaware of the problems when he approved the final application in June 2017, echoing an inspector general finding that senior FBI officials were given incomplete information. He said he actually considered the application he approved fairly persuasive but conceded he had not read every page, noting that the warrant had already been approved multiple times before it reached him.

Although Rosenstein was a Trump appointee, he has often been regarded with suspicion by many supporters of the president, and Trump himself, for his role in the investigation. Rosenstein's fate was most dramatically in limbo in September 2018 after it was reported that he had floated the idea of wearing a wire inside the White House to record conversations with Trump.

Rosenstein denied Wednesday having ever suggested secretly recording Trump.

Rod Rosenstein says he wouldn't approve Russia warrant now

Rosenstein was also pressed about his oversight of Flynn's guilty plea with the Mueller team. Flynn admitted lying to the FBI about his conversations with the Russian ambassador during the presidential transition period regarding U.S. sanctions.

The Justice Department moved to dismiss the case last month, saying that Flynn's contacts with the diplomat were appropriate and that the FBI had insufficient basis to interview him, especially since agents had been prepared weeks earlier to close their investigation into Flynn after finding no evidence he had broken the law.

Rosenstein said he had no recollection being told the FBI had planned to close the Flynn inquiry before the interview, but said that fact would have mattered to him.

The Judiciary Committee plans to vote Thursday on whether to authorize subpoenas for dozens of current and former officials involved in investigating Russian election interference, including former FBI Director James Comey and ex-CIA Director John Brennan.

Associated Press writer Mary Clare Jalonick in Washington contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Thursday coronavirus update: 29 more deaths, 404 additional infections

ARTICLE CCCXIX. THURSDAY CORONAVIRUS UPDATE: 29 MORE DEATHS, 404
ADDITIONAL INFECTIONS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 4, 2020 Thursday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 396 words

Byline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: The death toll in Minnesota from COVID-19 reached 1,115 on Thursday, with an additional 29 deaths. Of the state's total deaths, 896 were long-term care of assisted living center residents, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health data updated Thursday morning. The state data reports another 404 confirmed infections, increasing Minnesota's total number of cases [...]

Body

The death toll in Minnesota from COVID-19 reached 1,115 on Thursday, with an additional 29 deaths.

Of the state's total deaths, 896 were long-term care of assisted living center residents, according to Minnesota Department of Public Health data updated Thursday morning.

The state data reports another 404 confirmed infections, increasing Minnesota's total number of cases to 26,273. Thursday's numbers reflect the results of an all-time high day of testing, with state and private labs processing 9,904 results.

The actual number of cases is likely much higher as the data only represents those who have been tested for the virus, state officials say. According to Forum News Service, health officials believe that 5 percent of the state population has been infected with the coronavirus, which means the projected true statewide case number is about 280,000 people.

This week marks the beginning of restaurants opening for outdoor dining, as well as the reopening of salons and barber shops.

Protests have continued over the past week over the death of George Floyd, who died in Minneapolis police custody last week. Due to the large crowds, state health officials expect there may be a spike in coronavirus cases later this month. State officials are urging everyone who attended the protests to get tested for the virus.

HOW ARE PATIENTS DOING? There were 21,490 patients Thursday that no longer need to be isolated as they have recovered enough. This is an increase from 21,169 yesterday. There were 512 patients with COVID-19 in Minnesota hospitals, a decrease from 537 the day before. Of those patients in hospitals, 244 are in intensive care, a decrease from 254 on Wednesday. WHO IS GETTING SICK? Number of health care workers with COVID-19: 2,851. The age group with the most infections remains 30- to 39-year-olds with 5,273 cases. The age group with the most deaths remains 80- to 89-year-olds with 384 deaths.

Thursday coronavirus update: 29 more deaths, 404 additional infections

Forum News Service contributed to this report.

Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXX. U TRIAL FINDS ANTI-MALARIA DRUG DOES LITTLE TO PREVENT COVID-19

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 4, 2020 Thursday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1A

Length: 1129 words

Byline: JEREMY OLSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

An anti-malaria drug that has been trumpeted as a therapy for COVID-19 was unable in a University of Minnesota clinical trial to prevent the onset of the infectious disease.

The results of the nation's first randomized trial with the drug, hydroxychloroquine, against COVID-19 will disappoint doctors who had hoped for new therapies amid the pandemic. Many prescribers had given it off-label to COVID-19 patients - in the absence of other options - and President Donald Trump had been an early champion of the drug and said in mid-May that he was taking it for the preventive benefit, a benefit that the U study could not verify.

"While we are disappointed that this did not prevent COVID-19, we are pleased that we were able to provide a conclusive answer," said Dr. David Boulware, leader of the U trial. "Our objective was to find an answer."

Results published online Wednesday by the New England Journal of Medicine showed little difference in the onset of COVID-19 in 414 people who took hydroxychloroquine and a comparison group of 407 that took only folic acid vitamins. All participants had at least moderate risk for COVID-19 after being exposed to others in their homes or workplaces who had the illness.

There was a small difference, as 11.8% of people taking the drug developed COVID-19, compared with 14.3% of those taking vitamins, the study showed. However, that difference was considered statistically insignificant.

Even if valid, the small difference means that 42 people would have to take the drug prophylactically to prevent one COVID-19 case. That would be costly and expose people to drug side effects. The study showed that 40% experienced mild side effects such as nausea, but it allayed fears that widespread use of the drug could result in cardiac and other complications.

The study provides evidence only of whether the drug is effective in preventing COVID-19 onset following exposure to someone with the infection.

U trial finds anti-malaria drug does little to prevent COVID-19

A separate U trial is examining whether it benefits patients after early onset of symptoms, but results haven't been published.

Enthusiasm for the drug has already cooled after open-label trials and case reports that found little benefit, but the U results are a significant advance.

Minnesota as of Wednesday reported 25,870 lab-confirmed cases and 1,086 deaths from COVID-19, which is caused by a novel coronavirus for which there is no vaccine.

While COVID-19 case numbers have ebbed, state health officials suspect another wave after protests over the death of George Floyd brought thousands of people together.

Chanting and shouting could hasten the spread of the virus, said Jan Malcolm, state health commissioner, along with police use of tear gas to break up protests that could cause infected people to breathe heavily.

"COVID-19 can spread easily and quickly in large groups of people who are close together for long periods of time," she said.

The state is advising protesters, first responders and community volunteers to seek diagnostic testing for COVID-19, ideally from their own doctors, five to seven days after participation in mass events.

Anxiety about COVID-19 was reflected last week in a study in the Journal of the American Medical Association, which showed a twentyfold surge in prescriptions of hydroxychloroquine and a similar drug, chloroquine, in late March after the World Health Organization declared a COVID-19 pandemic and the president tweeted March 19 in favor of the drug.

Surges based on hype threaten the supply of the drug for approved treatments of rheumatoid arthritis and lupus, said Dr. Frank Rhame, a virologist at Allina Health, which is why the U study results are so important.

"It's a great illustration of the importance of getting a well-designed study to get at the medical reality of the situation," Rhame said. "You have to be open to all possibilities until you have the data."

The U trial was the first in the world to assess whether hydroxychloroquine could prevent the onset of COVID-19 in people exposed to the novel coronavirus that causes it, and the first placebo-controlled double-blind study of the drug's effect on COVID-19. Blinding means that patients didn't know whether they took vitamins or drugs, and researchers didn't know either.

While not a primary goal, the study also found no increased protection for participants who also took zinc or vitamin C. A separate study suggested that zinc could boost the effectiveness of chloroquine, but even if that's true, the U authors noted that most Americans consume enough zinc already so supplements shouldn't be needed.

Jen Reiner of Edina figures she took the real hydroxychloroquine during the study, based on the continuous nausea she felt. She didn't get COVID-19 despite being in close contact with her infected husband, but then neither did her children and they weren't in the study.

"A bit bummed the drug didn't seem to work," Reiner said, "but it had to be one way or the other."

U trial finds anti-malaria drug does little to prevent COVID-19

Boulware said the results were validated and held up to extensive peer review but may face challenges and criticisms from skeptics hoping for better results. The researchers acknowledged limitations of the study, which recruited participants in North America online and mailed medication to them. A global shortage of diagnostic testing supplies at the time meant that researchers had to count some cases of COVID-19 in the study group based on symptoms alone.

"I'm sure people will come after it," Boulware said, "but the data are what the data are."

Critics on one side felt hydroxychloroquine was a wonder drug and that all study participants should receive it, while critics on the other side felt it was too dangerous to study, Boulware said. "In reality, it's neither of them."

The U also participated in a national trial of remdesivir, which has helped COVID-19 patients and received emergency use authorization by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. Supplies of the drug have been distributed by the federal government, which to date has sent 5,840 vials to Minnesota - enough to treat 500 to 1,000 people.

Jeremy Olson · 612-673-7744

TRACKING CORONAVIRUS

Minnesota cases, daily change*

25,870 -- Total cases

372 -- June 3 new cases

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

*Chart data is a net count of new confirmed cases minus previously announced cases that were removed by MDH on that date.

Minnesota deaths, new daily

1,086 -- Total deaths

14 -- June 3

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

U.S. cases, new daily

1,841,442 -- Total cases

20,784 -- June 2

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

U.S. deaths, new daily

106,195 -- Total deaths

1,076 -- June 2

U trial finds anti-malaria drug does little to prevent COVID-19

(See the page PDF or microfilm for the complete chart.)

Sources: New York Times, Minnesota Dept. of Health

Note: U.S. data lags a day behind Minnesota

Load-Date: June 4, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXXI. READERS WRITE HEAL THE COMMUNITY, TOO

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 8ALength: 1191 wordsBody

REBUILDING

It is heartening to read that local leaders are pursuing funding to help rebuild our communities after the civil unrest resulting from the killing of George Floyd.

However, it is essential to remember that simple funding for rebuilding efforts may be inadequate for many small-business owners and that funding is not the only lever that can be pulled. An adequate financial response supports small-business owners themselves through lengthy periods of unemployment during rebuilding. An adequate response offers tax breaks to businesses that are locally owned vs. corporate and chain locations. An adequate response targets a functional rebuild rather than just a cash-value replacement. Vendors, from construction to underwriting, should be community-sourced.

The goal of funding a rebuild should not be to turn damaged neighborhoods into a corporate corridor of chain restaurants and condos, pricing out the hard-hit citizens who have lived there and owned businesses for generations. The goal must be the restoration of the people, not just the buildings.

David Martin, Lakeville

...

It's encouraging to see so many Minnesota companies step up and offer support to underserved communities in the wake of George Floyd's death. Many have pledged donations of money, food, support services and more. Thank you. But if you are part of a large company where the people at the top make a lifetime income each year and yet not every single person in the company is making a living wage, you may be hurting this cause more than helping. We know what a living wage is in every American city. We know health care costs. If you are scheduling someone just under full time and paying minimum wage with no benefits, that hurts people and communities.

Please think about the "least of these" in your company - the new person, the part-time employee, the maintenance worker. If you are serious about helping underserved communities, pledge to pay everyone a living wage. Your shareholders may complain, but your workers will have more to spend. You'll be able to transparently say that you did the right thing for all of us.

Scott Barsuhn, Minneapolis

SYSTEMIC RACISM

Who's really to blame for this?

There has been systemic racism here for some time, as is asserted by most of our elected politicians in the Twin Cities. One political party has been in control of the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul for years. If politicians are going to point fingers, they should be pointing at themselves along with the governor and others. My guess is that they are going to blame Republicans, who are not well-represented at any level of government in either city.

People should be asking those officials what they have been doing to correct racism in the past, before voting for them in the future.

Bill Filler, South St. Paul

. . .

The initial call regarding George Floyd about passing a counterfeit $20 bill triggered a nearly forgotten memory in my own home.

We were residents of Golden Valley, and one morning, we received a phone call from the Golden Valley police. The officer refused to speak with me and insisted on talking to my husband. After the call, my husband told me he had been accused of passing a counterfeit $20 bill to someone doing yard work at our home. He told the officer we get all of our cash at our bank ATM. This was the end of the whole episode as we never heard anything else about it.

Being a white suburbanite led to a nonissue shrug and led Floyd to four officers, a gun in his face and the loss of his life.

Christine Olson, Eden Prairie

CHARGING

Junior officers must speak up

I believe the upped charges in the assault on George Floyd are appropriately placed against former officers Tou Thao, J Alexander Kueng and Thomas Lane ("Charges for all 4," front page, June 4). I believe the training program of the Minneapolis Police Department must be overhauled to emphasize that multi-officer situations must reflect a higher degree of participant coordination.

I understand that in any hierarchical organization there is an inherent tendency for "junior" individuals to yield leadership to the apparent "senior" participant. During the 1960s and '70s, the aviation industry suffered through multiple fatal accidents in which post-accident analysis revealed that the co-pilot or flight engineer was fully aware of a deteriorating situation but was afraid to call out the situation to the pilot in command before conditions became unrecoverable.

I believe the analogy is absolutely appropriate to the Floyd encounter. The supporting officers did not exert enough presence to avert a bad situation from becoming a fatal encounter, leading directly to a massive social and cultural explosion. The "captain" is not always right ... and it is the duty of his or her subordinates to assert their judgment to avoid a catastrophe.

Brad Shinkle, Minnetonka

...

I strongly disagree with the decision to upgrade the charges against Derek Chauvin to second-degree murder, and to arrest Lane and Kueng for their involvement. Chauvin, although a bad cop who had multiple complaints regarding excessive use of force, did not intend to kill. Third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter with culpable negligence are the appropriate charges.

Lane and Kueng were new cops with hardly any time on the force. To expect them to go up against more experienced officers like Chauvin and Thao, both aggressive, totally deaf to onlookers, and clueless regarding what can happen when using extreme force, is ludicrous.

This seems like a political decision to placate the crowd and the public but has little to do with real justice. Also, it will serve as a provocation to every police officer in the country and alienate them from wanting to make the serious systemic, cultural and structural problems in our justice system.

I totally agree that using excessive force on routine traffic stops and petty crimes that result in a death is murder and should be prosecuted as such. But anybody who thinks we can get by without a police force that has to deal with violent, hardened, ruthless gang members, sex traffickers and drug lords is truly ignorant of the ugliest that is out there.

Gwen Vilen, Rochester, Minn.

DIVERSITY IN SPORTS

Gee, some commitment

In Thursday's article, Gophers men's basketball coach Richard Pitino says the University of Minnesota's athletic department is committed "to make sure we hire a staff who is really good but also making sure that it is very diverse as well" ("Pitino: 'This is a worldwide problem' " June 4). That's a nice thought, because right now all 23 head coaches are white. Should we believe him? Well, here's an online Star Tribune headline from July 24, 2017: "University of Minnesota, where sports leaders and coaches all are white, looks to revive diversity after 'tense year.' "

That was three years ago. They're still all white.

So, two questions: Is there any reason why we should keep reading the U's disingenuous claims about fairness and equality in the athletic department? Is there any reason why the Star Tribune should keep publishing them?

Daniel Kelliher, Minneapolis

We want to hear from you. Send us your thoughts here.

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

PERSONNEL FILES SHOW COMPLAINTS, SERVICE

ARTICLE CCCXXII. PERSONNEL FILES SHOW COMPLAINTS, SERVICE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 5ALength: 993 wordsByline: JENNIFER BJORHUS; LIZ SAWYER; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Derek Chauvin, the now-fired Minneapolis Police officer charged with second-degree murder in the death of George Floyd, worked in military police in the U.S. Army during his two years of active service, including a stint in Germany.

Chauvin's military background is among the details in a cache of personnel records released by the Minneapolis Police Department late Wednesday.

The heavily redacted files shed light on the four fired officers' varied work lives. The records were released just hours after Attorney General Keith Ellison's office upgraded Chauvin's charge to second-degree murder and formally charged the other three officers who failed to intervene with aiding and abetting murder. All four men remain jailed.

Chauvin, 44, who was caught on camera with his knee on Floyd's neck, grew up in the St. Paul area. He attended Park High School in Cottage Grove but did not graduate. After getting his GED he attended Dakota County Technical College, Inver Hills Community College and Metropolitan State University. Previous jobs include working security, and food service including at a McDonald's.

Chauvin's work record includes two periods of active service in the U.S. Army. From September 1996 to February 1997 he was stationed in Rochester with a job in military police. He served again from September 1999 to May 2000 in military police, at Hohenfels, Germany. He described his job duties as including criminal investigations, traffic enforcement and proactive patrol.

Chauvin's 19-year career with the Minneapolis Police Department, where he was involved with several police shootings, includes both commendations and more than 15 conduct complaints. Almost all the complaints were closed without discipline, records show, suggesting the allegations weren't sustained. The nature of the complaints wasn't made public. The file includes a 2008 letter of reprimand Chauvin received for the two violations involving "discretion" and a squad car camera. "This case will remain a B violation and can be used as progressive discipline for three years," the letter notes.

PERSONNEL FILES SHOW COMPLAINTS, SERVICE

The letter doesn't give any details of the incident. However, there is a complaint in the file from August 2007 from a woman who accused Chauvin and another officer of pulling her from her car, frisking her and putting her in the squad car for going 10 mph over the speed limit. "Further investigation showed (redacted) did not have the audio on and the squad MVR tape had been turned off during course of stop."

The file also includes two letters from women commending him on his handling of domestic violence calls in 2008 and 2013.

Chauvin received a Medal of Commendation in 2008 for disarming a man outside the El Nuevo Rodeo club on E. Lake Street while working security off-duty in his uniform.

He was also recommended for a Medal of Valor in 2006. That recognition was related to the shooting death of Wayne Reyes, a stabbing suspect who fled in his truck with officers in pursuit. When Reyes stopped and climbed out of the truck, police said he swung his sawed-off shotgun toward the six officers. All fired.

Tou Thao, 34, was videotaped watching as Chauvin pressed his knee on Floyd's neck for more than eight minutes.

The 11-year veteran and native Hmong speaker from Coon Rapids first applied to the department as a community service officer following stints in food service and as a security guard.

He was among those laid off three days before Christmas in 2009 as the police department faced a $13 million budget shortfall. In a termination letter, a supervisor assured him the action was not related to his job performance, records show. Officials called him back to work almost exactly two years later.

Thao's work history includes six unspecified police conduct complaints. Five were closed without discipline, but one was open at the time of his firing. Thao's police training records were not included in the personnel records released.

Thao and another officer were the subjects of a 2017 police brutality lawsuit. Lamar Ferguson alleged that in 2014 the two officers told him they were serving a warrant for his arrest, then beat him, breaking his teeth, while he was handcuffed. The city of Minneapolis paid $25,000 to settle the civil rights case.

The two rookie officers were first on the scene outside Cup Foods to arrest Floyd on Memorial Day. Neither has been the subject of any police conduct complaints, according to public records. Thomas Lane, 37, of St. Paul, is detailed in charges as pointing a gun at Floyd before handcuffing him. Later, charges said he questioned Chauvin's restraint tactics twice during the encounter.

Despite his concerns, he did not act to forcibly remove Chauvin from Floyd's neck.

According to his work file, Lane is a University of Minnesota graduate who worked with at-risk youth as a juvenile detention guard and probation officer in the Twin Cities before applying as a police recruit at age 35.

Application forms also list a litany of volunteer work mentoring Somali youth and school kids.

The youngest of the four officers is J Alexander Kueng, a 26-year-old who, like Lane, received his law enforcement license last August. Kueng is of mixed race and identifies as African-American, according to someone close to him who asked not to be named.

PERSONNEL FILES SHOW COMPLAINTS, SERVICE

Kueng was captain of the varsity soccer team at Patrick Henry High School in Minneapolis, where he graduated in 2012. He also played for the Cruz Azul Minnesota soccer club, according to a soccer recruiting website.

His file shows he attended the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis Community & Technical College and Monroe College, and is conversational in Russian.

Kueng's work history includes a job as security monitor at the University of Minnesota and working in loss prevention at Macy's. He also worked at Target, and he coached youth baseball and soccer at the Brooklyn Center Community Center.

jennifer.bjorhus@startribune.com · 612-673-4683

liz.sawyer@startribune.com · 612-673-4648

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

'You changed the world'

ARTICLE CCCXXIII. 'YOU CHANGED THE WORLD'

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1A

Length: 1421 words

Byline: PAM LOUWAGIE; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: Vowing never again, Minnesota bids farewell to George Floyd // HOPE NOT LAID TO REST

Body

George Floyd's body lay in a carefully polished gold casket reflecting a struggle and a beauty bigger than any one man.

In the surrounding sanctuary, hundreds of politicians, civic leaders and celebrities gathered Thursday to support a grieving family and pay respects to the 46-year-old black security guard who gasped for air in the final minutes of his life beneath the knee of a white Minneapolis police officer. It was a scene that sparked global anger like few police brutality cases before it, challenging a nation to confront its racial disparities and injustices at the hands of law enforcement.

"When I looked this time and saw marches where, in some cases, young whites outnumbered the blacks marching, I know that it's a different time and a different season," said national civil rights leader the Rev. Al Sharpton, referencing a Bible verse in a eulogy that roused several standing ovations. "Go on home, George. Get your rest, George. You changed the world, George."

The private service at North Central University, about 3 miles from the site of Floyd's Memorial Day arrest, followed more than a week of escalating tensions in cities across the nation, his death spurring widespread arson, looting and destruction as well as massive but peaceful protests. It came amid economic hardship and national unrest spurred by a COVID-19 pandemic that's claimed more than 100,000 lives.

A few of Floyd's family members spoke with reverence for the man they said they looked up to growing up in Houston.

As he stood behind his brother's casket, amid displays with Floyd's image and sprays of white and purple flowers, Philonise Floyd said the family was poor and didn't have much.

'You changed the world'

They washed their socks in a sink and dried them on a water heater because they didn't have machines, he said - but he and "Perry," as they called George, were happy playing video games and football and cooking and dancing with their mother.

"Everywhere you'd go and see people how they cling to him," the brother said. "They wanted to be around him. ... George, he was like a general. Every day, he walks outside, there'd be a line of people ... wanted to greet him and wanted to have fun with him. Guys that was doing drugs, smokers and homeless people, you couldn't tell, because when you spoke to George, they felt like they was the president. Because that's how he made you feel."

"It's crazy, man," he said. "All these people came to see my brother. That's amazing to me that he touched so many people's hearts. You know, because he been touching our hearts."

Cousin Shareeduh Tate said they were raised in a family that welcomed everyone.

"George was somebody who was always welcoming, always making people feel like that they were special. Nobody felt left out," she said, adding that she will miss his hugs the most.

"He was this great big giant, and when he would wrap his arms around you, you would just feel like ... everything would just go away. Any problems you had, any concerns you had would go away."

All four fired officers charged

As of Wednesday, all four officers involved in the case had been arrested: Officer Derek Chauvin, who was seen kneeling on Floyd's neck in a bystander video that went viral, was charged with second-degree murder, third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

The other three officers on the scene face charges of aiding and abetting second-degree murder while committing a felony and aiding and abetting second-degree manslaughter with culpable negligence.

Floyd family attorney Ben Crump said a team of lawyers is working together for the family because it will take "a united effort in the courtroom and outside the courtroom to get justice for George Floyd."

'Pandemic of racism'

Floyd wasn't killed by the coronavirus, Crump told the mask-wearing crowd inside the sanctuary, but by the "other pandemic that we're far too familiar with in America - that pandemic of racism and discrimination."

Sharpton's speech drew both quiet reflection and loud applause from the crowd in the sanctuary, including Gov. Tim Walz, U.S. Sens. Amy Klobuchar and Tina Smith, U.S. Rep. Ilhan Omar, St. Paul Mayor Melvin Carter, Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey and Police Chief Medaria Arradondo, who fired the four officers involved in Floyd's arrest.

Also sitting among them were civil rights leaders Martin Luther King III and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Celebrities attending the two-hour service included actor Kevin Hart and rappers Master P and Ludacris, along with several members of the Minnesota Vikings and retired NBA standout Stephen Jackson, one of Floyd's closest friends.

Before the ceremony, Frey appeared to sob as he knelt before Floyd's casket.

'You changed the world'

Thursday's service was the first of three this week to memorialize Floyd. Another memorial is scheduled for Saturday in Raeford, N.C., where Floyd was born. On Tuesday, a funeral will be held in Houston, where he lived much of his life until moving to the Twin Cities about five years ago.

Knee of racism

In his eulogy Thursday, Sharpton drew parallels between the police officer's knee on Floyd's neck and a knee of racism on the necks of people of color.

"George Floyd's story has been the story of black folks," he said. "The reason we could never be who we wanted and dreamed of being, is you kept your knee on our neck.

"We were smarter than the underfunded schools you put us in, but you had your knee on our neck. We could run corporations and not hustle in the street, but you had your knee on our neck. We had creative skills. We could do whatever anybody else could do, but we couldn't get your knee off our neck.

"What happened to Floyd happens every day in this country in education and health services and in every area of American life. It's time for us to stand up in George's name and say, 'Get your knee off our necks.'

"We don't want no favors," Sharpton continued. "Just get up off of us."

Sharpton referenced President Donald Trump, who held a Bible this week in front of a house of worship in the nation's capital.

"First of all, we cannot use Bibles as a prop," he said. "For those that have agendas that are not about justice, this family will not let you use George as a prop."

Solidarity outside

Outside the worship hall near Elliot Park, as the service broadcast on loudspeakers, a reverent crowd of hundreds did not chant or shout, but listened with solidarity.

A local chef had secured donations to grill free food. Other groups set up tables offering free groceries and dry goods.

Many spoke of the need to focus on a problem on which the nation cannot turn its back.

"This memorial service is a way to say goodbye and honor a life, but it also stands as a public marking point to say 'never again,' " said Matt Allen, 29, of St. Paul, a volunteer offering first aid and hand sanitizer. "It was important to me to be here and engage in that collective voice."

Maudeline St.-Jean and her sons Luke, 13, and Zachary, 15, came from Burnsville to show support for Floyd's family and the struggle.

Things can change. There's hope that change can come," said St.-Jean, who is black. Though she wonders, "Will it be slow or fast?"

Though the boys were wary of attending because of the violence surrounding many of the protests, St.-Jean reassured them. "You don't have to be scared or worried. This is about showing support," she said.

'You changed the world'

Still, some in the crowd wondered if, in the coming weeks and months, the attention would fade, as it has with so many cases before.

"White people coming here, feeling sad - what happens when all those white people go back to their jobs in the suburbs?" said Jennifer Schnarr of Burnsville, who is white and was outside the memorial venue. "People need to get out there every day."

Minutes of silence

Near the end of the ceremony inside, the sanctuary grew quiet as Sharpton urged the crowd to stand for 8 minutes and 46 seconds - the amount of time Chauvin knelt on a handcuffed Floyd's neck as Floyd repeated "I can't breathe" before falling motionless.

As soft keyboard music filled the sanctuary, tears streamed down the mourners' faces. A man blurted out, "I can't breathe." Another man fell to his knees in grief. Family members hugged each other gently.

"That's a long time. There's no excuse," Sharpton said as the time expired, referencing the officers who helped restrain Floyd or stood nearby.

"They had enough time. They had enough time. Now what will we do with the time we have?"

Star Tribune staff writers John Reinan, Mara Klecker, Rochelle Olson and Paul Walsh contributed to this report.

Pam Louwagie · 612-209-4831

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Plan would extend AG's powers to police cases

ARTICLE CCCXXIV.

PLAN WOULD EXTEND AG'S POWERS TO POLICE CASES

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 658 wordsByline: STEPHEN MONTEMAYOR; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Minnesota's county prosecutors on Thursday voted to recommend giving the Attorney General's Office authority to take on all cases of police-involved killings in a move that would need signoff from state lawmakers during this month's special session.

The Minnesota County Attorneys Association (MCAA) will also call on the Legislature for extra funding for the Attorney General's Office and the creation of an independent unit at the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension (BCA) to investigate police killings of civilians.

"Our entire association extends our heartfelt sympathy to George Floyd's family and to the collective community that mourns his loss and advocates for honest dialogue and real and immediate change in his name," said Aaron Jordan, Stevens County Attorney and MCAA president.

The group of county attorneys reached its conclusion after an emergency meeting organized Thursday that included Attorney General Keith Ellison, who is now leading the state's case against the four former Minneapolis police officers involved in George Floyd's May 25 death. Lawmakers would need to pass legislation during this month's special session to give the Attorney General's Office the ongoing authority.

"If this is the path the Legislature and governor choose to take, my office will accept the responsibility," Ellison said. "But it must come with resources sufficient to do the job thoroughly and to do justice in the way Minnesotans have a right to expect."

Ellison is one of 18 Democratic attorneys general who on Thursday signed a letter asking Congress to grant their offices "clear statutory authority under federal law to investigate and resolve patterns or practices ... of unconstitutional policing by local police departments" in their respective states.

Ellison became the first state attorney general to prosecute Minnesota law enforcement officers who have allegedly killed civilians. Gov. Tim Walz asked Ellison to take over the case Sunday from Hennepin County Attorney Mike Freeman, who first charged fired officer Derek Chauvin with third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter after a video showed him kneeling on Floyd's neck for more than 8 minutes as he begged for air and eventually became unresponsive.

Plan would extend AG's powers to police cases

Two days after Ellison formally took over the case, Chauvin's charges were increased to second-degree unintentional murder, and the three other officers at the scene - Tou Thao, J Alexander Kueng and Thomas Lane - were arrested and charged with aiding and abetting murder and manslaughter.

For Ellison to take the case, state law required that Walz ask him to do so and that Freeman consent. Under the proposed legislation, Ellison's office would have sole authority to prosecute alleged police killings. The office also could request help from a county attorney's office that is not located where the death occurred.

That change - plus the additional independent BCA unit - are among a sweeping package of police reform proposals that DFL lawmakers unveiled this week ahead of a special session expected this month. Many of the requests mirror recommendations put forward by a task force assembled by Ellison and Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington aimed at curbing deadly police encounters.

This week, Walz and DFL leaders said they envisioned the topic to be a "centerpiece" of the special session, and some lawmakers have threatened to hold up the passing of a bonding bill if the proposals go unheard.

Freeman and Ramsey County Attorney John Choi - who prosecuted former St. Anthony police officer Jeronimo Yanez in the death of Philando Castile during a 2016 traffic stop before Yanez was acquitted - are both in favor of letting the attorney general take the lead on prosecuting police-involved killings.

"I think it reflects something that is really important, which is that recognition that we have to listen and act upon the call for change," Choi said.

Stephen Montemayor · 612-673-1755

Twitter: @smontemayor

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXXV. BLAME CAST ON CHAUVIN IN COURT

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 5ALength: 1108 wordsByline: CHAO XIONG; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Attorneys for two former rookie Minneapolis police officers on Thursday rejected accusations that their clients aided and abetted the killing of George Floyd, casting blame instead on a senior officer who allegedly ignored his younger counterparts.

Early signs of a legal defense strategy began to emerge when former officers J Alexander Kueng, Thomas K. Lane and Tou Thao made their first court appearances in the Memorial Day killing of Floyd, a 46-year-old black man who died in police custody.

Each officer is charged with one count of aiding and abetting second-degree murder and aiding and abetting second-degree manslaughter. The charges allege that they did not intervene when their former colleague and 19-year police veteran Derek Chauvin knelt on Floyd's neck for 8 minutes and 46 seconds, all while Floyd pleaded with them and told them him he couldn't breathe. All four were fired after Floyd's death.

Chauvin, 44, of Oakdale, was charged last week and is being held in lieu of $1 million bail. He faces second-degree murder, third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter charges and is scheduled to make his first appearance Monday.

On Thursday, Hennepin County District Judge Paul Scoggin set bail for each of the other three at $1 million without conditions, or $750,000 with conditions. But their initial appearance, normally routine, turned contentious.

"What is my client supposed to do but follow what the [senior] officer says?" Lane's attorney, Earl Gray, argued in court. "The strength of this case, your honor, in my opinion is extremely weak."

Assistant Attorney General Matthew Frank, who is prosecuting the case with assistance from the Hennepin County Attorney's Office, argued for high bail amounts, noting that the charges were "very serious" and had drawn such intense public interest that the former officers were a flight risk. Each defense attorney rejected the claim, and asked for between $50,000 and $250,000 in bail.

Blame cast on Chauvin in court

Defense attorneys said Kueng, 26, of Plymouth was working his third shift ever as a full-time officer and Lane, 37, of St. Paul was working his fourth day as a full-time officer on the day they encountered Floyd.

Video of his arrest showed bystanders pleading with the officers to stop as Lane restrained Floyd's legs and Kueng held onto his back while Floyd, cuffed, lay stomach-down in the street.

A bystander's video also recorded Thao, 34, of Coon Rapids standing watch nearby and brushing aside witnesses' concerns.

"What was [Lane] supposed to do ... go up to Mr. Chauvin and grab him and throw him off?" said Gray, arguing that there was no evidence to charge his client.

Kueng's attorney, Thomas Plunkett, also attempted to distance his client from Chauvin's actions.

"At all times Mr. Kueng and Mr. Lane turned their attention to that 19-year veteran," Plunkett said. "[Kueng] was trying - they were trying to communicate that this situation needs to change direction."

Charging documents show that Lane asked twice if they should roll Floyd onto his side and was rebuffed by Chauvin. Kueng took Floyd's pulse and told his colleagues, "I couldn't find one," according to the criminal complaint.

Chauvin kept his knee on Floyd's neck for about two minutes after Kueng's remarks, the charges state.

Chauvin's attorney, Eric Nelson, declined to comment on the statements of the other officers' attorneys.

Thao's attorney, Robert Paule, did not shift blame onto his client's partner. Thao arrived at the scene with Chauvin.

Paule told the court Thao had given a statement to investigators from the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension (BCA) on Tuesday and that he is not a flight risk because he has deep roots in the community.

Thao is a lifelong resident of the metro area, is married and has children, Paule said in arguing for a lower bail.

Several of the attorneys sought to humanize the officers, with Plunkett beginning his remarks by offering condolences to Floyd's family,

Kueng is a black man who grew up in north Minneapolis with a single mom who adopted four at-risk children from the community, Plunkett said.

"He turned to law enforcement because he wanted to make that community a better place," he said.

Kueng has always lived within 10 miles of his childhood home, was captain of the soccer team at Patrick Henry High School, where he graduated, coached youth soccer and baseball, and volunteered to build a school in Haiti, Plunkett said.

Lane previously worked as a juvenile counselor at a few "juvenile places" in the Twin Cities and once received a community service award from Mayor Jacob Frey and Minneapolis Police Chief Medaria Arradondo for volunteering with children, Gray told the court.

Lane also provided a statement about Floyd's killing to two sergeants, gave a "lengthy" statement to investigators from the BCA and jumped into the ambulance that arrived at the scene and performed CPR on Floyd, Gray added.

Floyd was pronounced dead at 9:25 p.m. at HCMC after first responders and ER staff worked on him for about an hour.

Frank was unmoved by Gray's arguments.

"We recognize the statements that this defendant made, but beyond that [he] did nothing but hold the victim down [and] started CPR too late," Frank said.

Lane and Kueng had responded about 8:08 p.m. to a call that a man used a counterfeit $20 bill at the Cup Foods on the corner of Chicago Avenue and E. 38th Street. They found Floyd sitting in a car nearby, handcuffed him and attempted to put him in their squad car. Chauvin and Thao arrived to assist.

While charging documents said Chauvin pulled Floyd out of the squad, Gray said Thursday that Floyd resisted arrest, "asserted himself" and later "flew out" of the squad through his own actions.

Gray said he would file a motion to argue that there's not enough evidence to prosecute his client. Oral arguments will likely be presented at a hearing on June 29, the next time Lane, Kueng and Thao are scheduled to appear in court.

"I'm not claiming [Lane] was following orders," Gray said after Thursday's hearings. "I'm claiming he thought what he was doing was right because he asked the training officer [Chauvin], 'Should we roll [Floyd] over?' Twice."

Asked whether Lane had a responsibility to get Chauvin off Floyd's neck, Gray said, "I guess the jury will decide that. In my opinion, no. It would be unreasonable for my client to go up and drag Chauvin off the deceased. ... You've got a 20-year [sic] cop in the front and my guy's back there with four days and he says, 'Should we roll him over?' and [Chauvin] says, 'No, we'll wait for the ambulance' twice. ... I don't know what you're supposed to do as a cop."

Chao Xiong · 612-270-4708 Twitter: @ChaoStrib

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

8:46: A number becomes a potent symbol of police brutality

ARTICLE CCCXXVI.

8:46: A NUMBER BECOMES A POTENT SYMBOL OF POLICE BRUTALITY

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 856 words

Byline: Kathleen Hennessey, Steve LeBlanc

Highlight: MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - All protest movements have slogans. George Floyd's has a number: 8:46

Body

All protest movements have slogans. George Floyd's has a number: 8:46

Eight minutes, 46 seconds is the length of time prosecutors say Floyd, a 46-year-old black man, was pinned to the ground under a white Minneapolis police officer's knee before he died last week.

In the days since, outraged protesters, politicians and mourners have seized on the detail as a quiet way to honor Floyd at a time of angry and sometimes violent clashes with police. Even as prosecutors have said little about how they arrived at the precise number, it has fast grown into a potent symbol of the suffering Floyd - and many other black men - have experienced at the hands of police.

In Boston and Tacoma, Washington, demonstrators this week lay down on streets staging "die-ins" for precisely 8 minutes, 46 seconds. Companies, including ViacomCBS and Google, used the time span in their shows of solidarity.

In Washington, Democratic senators on Thursday gathered in the U.S. Capitol's Emancipation Hall, some standing, some kneeling on the marbled floor for the nearly nine minutes of silence.

Mourners at a memorial service for Floyd in Minneapolis on Thursday stood in silence for 8 minutes, 46 seconds, asked by the Rev. Al Sharpton to "think about what George was going through, laying there for those eight minutes, begging for his life."

"We can't let this go," he said. "We can't keep living like this."

Pausing for a full 8 minutes, 46 seconds helps turn the abstract into a reality, said Monica Cannon-Grant, the founder of Violence in Boston Inc., which organized a Tuesday protest that included the minutes of silence.

"You find that that's an extremely long time to have someone have their knee in the side of your neck," Cannon-Grant said.

8:46: A number becomes a potent symbol of police brutality

As she observed the silence, she said found herself thinking about the safety of her family.

"All kinds of things were going through my head," she said. "Mainly that I was the mom of four black sons and I'm married to a black man."

Some of the power in the number comes from its striking specificity. In a criminal complaint charging Officer Derek Chauvin in Floyd's murder, prosecutors say they know precisely how long Floyd was pinned to the ground.

"The defendant had his knee on Mr. Floyd's neck for 8 minutes and 46 seconds in total. Two minutes and 53 seconds of this was after Mr. Floyd was non-responsive," the complaint concludes. "Police are trained that this type of restraint with a subject in a prone position is inherently dangerous."

But the timestamps cited in the document's description of the incident, much of which is caught on video, indicate a different tally. Using those, Chauvin had his knee on Floyd for 7 minutes, 46 seconds, including 1 minute, 53 seconds after Floyd appeared to stop breathing.

Prosecutors involved in the case have not responded to questions about the discrepancy.

On Thursday, John Stiles, a spokesman for the attorney general's office - which is leading the prosecution in the case - said the office has reviewed additional video footage "since the original complaint was filed."

"There is more evidence to review and the attorney general's office is continuing to review it," he said.

Prosecutors repeated their timeline and the 8 minutes, 46 seconds detail in charges filed Wednesday against other officers involved.

In this case, one minute is unlikely to have a major legal significance.

"Seven minutes is a long time to have a knee on someone's neck regardless," said Jared Fishman, a former federal civil rights prosecutor. That said, Fishman said it's a detail defense lawyers will scrutinize in court.

For those who hold up the number as part of a peaceful call for change, the precise length of time is beside the point: "It should never have happened to begin with," Cannon-Grant said.

It would not be the first time that a detail takes on a life of its own.

After the 2014 death of Michael Brown, word spread in the community that the black 18-year-old had his hands up in surrender when he was shot by a white police officer. The chant "Hands up. Don't shoot!" quickly became a rallying cry for protesters both in the St. Louis suburb and across the country.

But it never was clear whether Brown actually raised his hands. There were no videos or photos of the shooting. Some witnesses swore to a grand jury that his hands were raised while others swore they were not. Officer Darren Wilson testified to grand jurors that Brown was charging at him, with one hand clenched at his side and the other under his shirt, when Wilson fired the fatal shots.

Several protesters said it didn't matter if Brown's hands literally were raised, because his death remained symbolic of wider racial injustices at the hands of police.

8:46: A number becomes a potent symbol of police brutality

Associated Press writer Lisa Mascaro contributed from Washington. LeBlanc reported from Boston. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

'What happened to George changed people's hearts,' Floyd's aunt says

ARTICLE CCCXXVII.

'WHAT HAPPENED TO GEORGE CHANGED PEOPLE'S HEARTS,' FLOYD'S AUNT SAYS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1281 words

Byline: Molly Hennessy-Fiske

Highlight: EAGAN, Minn. - Growing up in a shack surrounded by piney woods and tobacco fields in eastern North Carolina, George Floyd's aunt Angela Harrelson was taught by her sharecropper parents how to get along in a slowly desegregating America: Sit at the back of the bus, do what white folks tell you, "stay strong and [...]"

Body

EAGAN, Minn. - Growing up in a shack surrounded by piney woods and tobacco fields in eastern North Carolina, George Floyd's aunt Angela Harrelson was taught by her sharecropper parents how to get along in a slowly desegregating America: Sit at the back of the bus, do what white folks tell you, "stay strong and hold on."

That's what she did when she boarded the local school bus in the 1970s and white students blocked the seats with their feet, making her stand in the aisle. The bus driver, also white, would swerve and threaten to slap black students if they fell. Some days, he wouldn't pick her up at all.

"But we held on," Harrelson said as she sat at her kitchen table in Eagan this week.

The abuse only stopped, she said, when a white girl boarded the bus one day and declared, "My Mama said this is wrong. Stop picking on them."

"She was brave because she stood up against her own," recalled Harrelson, 58. "It takes one person to make a change, speaking up."

That's what she sees happening now across the nation and the world as protests spread in the wake of her nephew's death at the hands of police. The tragedy stirred memories for Harrelson of the legacy of segregation, slights and stinging prejudice her family has endured.

She hopes the four police officers charged in the case, including former officer Derek Chauvin, 44, who is accused of murder, will face justice from a government that has allowed white people to discriminate against African-Americans for generations.

Floyd - who the family called by his middle name, Perry - moved to Minneapolis three years ago to be closer to Harrelson and to build a new life. An unmarried father of three, Floyd, 46, wanted to escape the low-income Houston neighborhood where he grew up. Harrelson promised his mother that she would look after him.

'What happened to George changed people's hearts,' Floyd's aunt says

"They lived in a tough environment, so he said he was coming to make a fresh start and she was happy," Harrelson recalled. He took a job as a bouncer and a retail clerk; he got engaged and, although he was 6 feet, 7 inches tall, he still had maturing to do.

A year after he arrived, Floyd's mother died, and Harrelson felt even more responsible for him. They met a couple of times and Facetimed often. As her parents had done with her, she warned her nephew about dealing with the white establishment, specifically police. She drew her advice from experience.

Her great-grandfather, Hillary Thomas Stewart, was a slave. He got his freedom at age 8, and settled near Goldsboro, N.C. By age 21, Stewart had accumulated 500 acres of land and married a woman named Larcenia, who would bear him 22 children.

In black-and-white family photos, Stewart poses with his wife in front of a china cabinet full of crockery, wearing a dress shirt and suspenders.

"He did the best he could to build a legacy for us," Harrelson said.

But the couple couldn't read or write. White farmers settled their land; they were powerless to fight back.

"It was stolen from them," Harrelson said.

Her grandmother Sophell Suggs cleaned white families' homes during segregation. She told Harrelson stories about how she had to enter through the back door; how the women wouldn't give her gloves even to wash their soiled menstrual rags. One of Harrelson's earliest memories is passing a water fountain labeled "Whites Only." Her mother, Laura Stewart Jones, worked the tobacco fields for $2.50 a day. Sometimes the white farmers refused to pay. Her father, who served in the U.S. Army in Korea and worked at a barbecue on the side, would get upset at being cheated, and they would have to move to another shack without indoor plumbing. Jones had become pregnant with the first of 14 children at age 13, but taught herself to read, write and play piano. Harrelson was the youngest of her 10 daughters, all of whom graduated from high school.

But Harrelson had grander plans. She worked the tobacco fields during high school, became head cheerleader and won a local beauty pageant. After graduation, she left to attend community college in Iowa where she hoped to become a lawyer. She enlisted in the Army reserves, then the Navy reserves to pay for school.

One day, a professor called her into his office. She couldn't become a lawyer, he said, she couldn't even take law classes. He wouldn't teach her because she was black. Harrelson decided to study psychology instead, then become a registered nurse and Air Force Reserve officer. Officials told her she couldn't. She ignored them.

By 1998, she had received her commission as a captain in the reserves, married a flight attendant and was looking for jobs when a potential employer urged her to move to Minneapolis. There was plenty of work for nurses, and as tall and pretty as she was, she modeled in her spare time.

'What happened to George changed people's hearts,' Floyd's aunt says

Soon after settling in Eagan, an inner suburb, where racism was often hidden in "Minnesota nice," Harrelson went to get her hair done at the J.C. Penney salon in a local mall. She saw they had products to wash and condition black hair, but their sole black stylist was off, and the white stylist refused.

Harrelson sat down in the salon chair.

"I was like Rosa Parks," she said, laughing. "I said, 'I'm not getting out of this chair. I'm not trying to make a statement, I just don't want to drive to North Minneapolis.' "

The white stylist phoned her black co-worker who explained the procedures. Afterward, the white woman said she had been nervous because she'd never styled black hair.

"You weren't comfortable because I'm black," Harrelson said. "Let's call it what it is."

The woman agreed.

Harrelson has learned to avoid getting into the elevator at her apartment complex late at night if a white woman is already on, because she'll inevitably jump or clench her purse in fear. If she's stopped by police, she responds to their commands in ultra-slow motion, narrating her every move.

After the police stopped her nephew last week, she watched the bystander's video of police restraining him and wished she had been there to rush in and turn him on his side to clear his airway so he would never have had to utter what were among his last words: "I can't breathe."

"He could only fight with his words. He was fighting for his life with his words, and nobody would listen," she said.

She chafed at prosecutors' delays, at the release of an autopsy that initially failed to label his death a homicide - until after the family's lawyer released results of their independent autopsy this week.

"If we didn't have an attorney, if we didn't have a second autopsy, what do you think would have happened?" she said.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Harrelson has considered leaving Minneapolis, but she plans to stay until the cases against the officers charged with killing him are resolved. "I want to see this through," she said.

Before her nephew's death, she felt people didn't want to talk about racism even in progressive cities like Minneapolis. Now, she's encouraged that there's a conversation about it across the country.

"What happened to George changed people's hearts," she said; got them talking about the history of not just police brutality, but also the very inequities in education, employment and housing her family has faced.

"That's a huge start, because you can't do something if you don't acknowledge it," Harrelson said. "They just say you're playing the race card; that happened 400 years ago. But it's systematic racism."

'What happened to George changed people's hearts,' Floyd's aunt says

Graphic

Angela Harrelson of Eagan, Minn., aunt of George Floyd, holds a photo of Floyd as a baby being held by his late mother and Harrelson's sister, Larcenia Jones Floyd, on June 3, 2020. (Jason Armond/Los Angeles Times/TNS)

Undated courtesy photo of George Floyd, 46, who died in custody of the Minneapolis Police Department on May 25, 2020. (Courtesy of Facebook)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXXVIII.

CITY COUNCIL TO VOTE ON FIRST CHANGES TO POLICE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 615 wordsByline: LIZ NAVRATIL; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Minneapolis and state officials work to negotiate "immediate" reforms.Body

Minneapolis City Council members plan to vote Friday on some of the first changes to be made to the Police Department in response to the death of George Floyd.

Representatives for the Minnesota Department of Human Rights and city elected officials were working Thursday to negotiate a stipulated temporary restraining order that will mandate some immediate changes and also set a timeline for the state's investigation into whether the Minneapolis Police Department engaged in racial discrimination over the past 10 years.

City Council President Lisa Bender said the city was still working Thursday evening on details of the document, which the council planned to vote on during a public meeting Friday afternoon.

If the council gives its blessing, as is expected, the order will also require approval from a judge at a hearing that is likely to be scheduled next week, according to a presentation given to the city's Commission on Civil Rights earlier this week.

"The timeline for the impact of the [temporary restraining order] is for this weekend," Bender said. "It's for immediate accountability measures for the Police Department. It's not meant to be anywhere near starting this bigger conversation."

State Human Rights Commissioner Rebecca Lucero said, without providing specifics of the negotiated agreement: "We are really committed to working very quickly to making sure we can implement some changes immediately. We continue to have that commitment and continue to move forward with that."

The state Department of Human Rights on Tuesday filed a civil rights charge against the police department, citing Floyd's death. It was the first time the human rights department has launched a systemic investigation into the largest police department in the state.

City Council to vote on first changes to police

In the days since Floyd died, several elected officials have publicly floated various reform proposals, ranging from defunding the department immediately to taking a slower approach and sending social workers or mental health professionals to some calls that are now handled by police.

Mayor Jacob Frey has committed to "working with the community towards deep, structural reforms that address systemic racism in our laws and in policing." Spokesman Mychal Vlatkovich said the mayor "does not support abolishing the police department."

Council Member Jeremiah Ellison, one of the most vocal critics of the city's response to the protests and riots that followed Floyd's death, tweeted Thursday: "We are going to dismantle the Minneapolis Police Department."

Bender, a few hours later, issued her own tweet repeating that message and adding that they will "replace it with a transformative new model of public safety."

In an interview, she said she could imagine a scenario where the state's investigation results in Minneapolis police eventually entering a receivership that restructures the department.

Speaking only for herself and not for the council as whole, Bender said she would support shifting from a traditional police department to a wider public safety department oriented toward violence prevention and community-based services.

In that kind of scenario, it's possible that social workers or medics could respond to some calls now being handled by police.

Major reforms of that kind would not happen immediately, she said, but are more likely to be discussed later this year or next. And, she said, they would involve opportunities for community input.

"To do this kind of big work, we need a deeper, broader conversation than we've ever had before," Bender said. "We need white people like me and my neighbors to show up in a different way."

Staff writer Briana Bierschbach contributed to this report. Liz Navratil · 612-673-4994

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Experts: George Floyd's medical issues don't affect homicide ruling

ARTICLE CCCXXIX. EXPERTS: GEORGE FLOYD'S MEDICAL ISSUES DON'T AFFECT HOMICIDE RULING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 959 words

Byline: Marilyn Marchione

Highlight: George Floyd had drugs in his system and severe heart disease when a Minneapolis police officer put a knee to his neck, but independent experts said the medical problems revealed in the full autopsy report don't change the conclusion that the handcuffed man's death was a homicide. "He has some underlying conditions" that made it [...]

Body

George Floyd had drugs in his system and severe heart disease when a Minneapolis police officer put a knee to his neck, but independent experts said the medical problems revealed in the full autopsy report don't change the conclusion that the handcuffed man's death was a homicide.

"He has some underlying conditions" that made it more likely he would not fare well under stress, said Dr. Gregory Davis, medical examiner for Jefferson County, Ala., and a pathology professor at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. But the circumstances of Floyd's May 25 death are not ignored in Wednesday's report, which said "restraint and neck compression are part of why he died," Davis said.

Dr. Stephen Nelson, chairman of Florida's medical examiners commission, agreed. Even if someone with severe heart disease died of a heart attack during a purse-snatching, "we'd still call it a homicide," he said.

"Is this stress associated with his interaction with law enforcement enough to put him over the edge? Yes, it is," Nelson said.

Floyd's death has sparked international protests about mistreatment of black people by police. Bystander video showed officer Derek Chauvin pressing his knee on Floyd's neck, ignoring Floyd's "I can't breathe" cries and staying on him even after he stopped moving.

Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison on Wednesday upgraded charges against Chauvin to second-degree murder, and also charged the three other officers on the scene with aiding and abetting. All four have since been fired.

A lawyer for Floyd's family earlier decried the official autopsy - as described in the original complaint against Chauvin - for ruling out asphyxia. An autopsy commissioned by the Floyd family concluded that he died of asphyxiation due to neck and back compression.

Experts: George Floyd's medical issues don't affect homicide ruling

The experts who spoke with the Associated Press read the full government autopsy report but had no involvement with Floyd's case.

Here are some of the key findings.

The report by Hennepin County Chief Medical Examiner Andrew Baker says Floyd, 46, died of "cardiopulmonary arrest, complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint, and neck compression."

A previous statement by the examiner's office says Floyd had "a cardiopulmonary arrest while being restrained" by police.

Cardiopulmonary arrest simply means his heart and breathing stopped, which happens when anyone dies.

"It's really a meaningless term," Nelson said. In Florida, directions printed on death certificates tell doctors not to use it and to be more precise and descriptive.

"I would use the word 'traumatic asphyxia' due to neck compression and restraint due to law enforcement subdual," Nelson said. "I don't think you can discount the video."

"No life-threatening injuries identified," the report says, although trauma to the face, elbows and hands, consistent with being handcuffed, are noted.

Finding no major bruising or damage to the muscles, cartilage or bones in the neck "doesn't in any way mean that asphyxia didn't occur," just that there are no signs of that on the body, Davis said.

Several of Floyd's key heart arteries were severely narrowed - evidence of serious heart disease. Several were 75 percent blocked and one was 90 percent blocked, and that was made worse by where the clogs occurred in terms of crimping the supply of blood to his heart, Nelson said. Blockages of 70 percent or more usually cause chest pain, he added.

"That degree of narrowing is sufficient to cause death," Davis said.

Floyd also had an enlarged heart - "48 percent bigger than it ought to be" - likely from his high blood pressure and heart disease, Nelson said.

"A heart that's enlarged like this is more likely to develop an abnormal heart rhythm," Davis added.

The autopsy also found signs of tobacco use. Smoking is a big risk factor for heart disease and many other health problems.

The autopsy notes signs of fentanyl, methamphetamine and THC - the ingredient that produces marijuana's high - in Floyd's body.

Fentanyl is a potent synthetic opioid with heroin-like effects, said Bruce Goldberger, forensic medicine chief at the University of Florida College of Medicine.

"People who use it regularly or chronically develop tolerance to it," and the amount reported in the autopsy could kill someone who has not used the drug in the past, Goldberger said.

However, "we don't know what Mr. Floyd's use of fentanyl was," he stressed.

Methamphetamine, a stimulant often called "speed," was found at a low level, Goldberger said.

Experts: George Floyd's medical issues don't affect homicide ruling

"I believe that the presence of these substances is not relevant," Goldberger said. "We know his death is not due to toxicological means" because of the video of the circumstances, he said.

"I don't believe that these drugs played a significant role in causing Mr. Floyd to become unresponsive while being restrained by law enforcement officers."

The autopsy says Floyd tested positive for the new coronavirus on April 3 and that a nose swab during the autopsy found signs of the virus. Tests like these look for bits of genetic material and do not mean someone still has whole or viable virus.

It's a concern for anyone who handled Floyd's body, Nelson said.

"Potentially that body's infectious," although the autopsy found no signs of disease in Floyd's lungs.

"He certainly doesn't have pneumonia or any of the other typical signs that go along with COVID-19," Nelson said. "The coronavirus had nothing to do with his death, that's the important thing," Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

George Floyd mourned and celebrated, his death a call to action

ARTICLE CCCXXX. GEORGE FLOYD MOURNED AND CELEBRATED, HIS DEATH A CALL TO ACTION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1010 words

Byline: Aaron Morrison

Highlight: MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - A mural honoring George Floyd was projected above his golden coffin, where mourners knelt and cried, paused and prayed Thursday at his memorial service. Its simple message: "I can breathe now."

Body

A mural honoring George Floyd was projected above his golden coffin, where mourners knelt and cried, paused and prayed Thursday at his memorial service. Its simple message: "I can breathe now."

But for far too many black Americans, dreams have been dashed and goals not achieved because they still cannot breathe, said the Rev. Al Sharpton, who eulogized Floyd in Minneapolis on Thursday.

"The reason we could never be who we wanted and dreamed to be is you kept your knee on our neck," Sharpton said in reference to Floyd's May 25 arrest, during which a white Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into the handcuffed black man's neck for several minutes even after Floyd stopped moving and pleading for air.

"What happened to Floyd happens every day in this country," Sharpton said. "It's time for us to stand up in George's name and say, 'Get your knee off our neck!'"

Floyd's memorial service was a send-off that his family felt he deserved - they paid heartfelt tribute to a man they affectionately called "Perry." With many of Minnesota's top elected leaders in the room, along with members of Congress, the service included strong calls for meaningful changes in policing and the criminal justice system.

During eulogy remarks, Sharpton revealed plans to hold a commemorative march on Washington in August as part of a push for federal policing reforms.

"When we fight for the George Floyds of the world - and more importantly, the unknown George Floyds of the world - we are helping America be America for all Americans," said Floyd family attorney Ben Crump, who listed off the names of other African American men and women killed by police.

Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee, who represents Floyd's native Houston and attended the service, said she and other lawmakers on Thursday introduced police accountability legislation named after Floyd. The measure calls for improved training for police departments and standards for how the use of deadly force and misconduct are investigated, among other aims.

George Floyd mourned and celebrated, his death a call to action

"We have put a stop sign in front of America - there will be no more" unchecked killing by police, Jackson Lee told The Associated Press. "I will never forget the words 'I can't breathe.' America cannot allow people to die in the 21st century."

She was among dozens of other politicians, celebrities, civil rights activists and family members of Floyd who sang "Amazing Grace," prayed and joined together in a rousing memorial that was a celebration for a man whose death at the hands of police has sparked protests nationwide and calls for an end to racial injustice.

Inside the service, held in the Frank J. Lindquist sanctuary at North Central University, mourners wore masks, some with the words "I can't breathe" on them. Organizers issued several reminders for attendees to keep some social distance. Many attendees bumped elbows rather than hug or shake hands at the memorial taking place in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic.

It was not the coronavirus that killed Floyd, Crump said in his service remarks, but the "pandemic of racism and discrimination."

Floyd's brother and other family members told personal stories about dancing, playing football, cooking and enjoying life together. They said he was also known by other endearing nicknames such as "Georgie Porgie."

"George, he was like a general," brother Philonise Floyd said. "Every day he would walk outside, there would be a line of people wanting to greet him. ... He was powerful, man. He had a way with words. ... Everybody loved George."

Projected above the pulpit inside the sanctuary was the blue and orange mural that was painted at the site of a makeshift memorial in the neighborhood where Floyd pleaded for air. A small band and choir sang "Goin' Up Yonder" and other classic gospel songs as mourners gathered. Grammy Award-winning gospel singer Bishop Hezekiah Walker closed the service with the song "Every Praise."

Others in attendance included Martin Luther King III; Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar; Reps. Ilhan Omar, Ayanna Pressley and Joyce Beatty; rapper T.I. and his wife Tameka "Tiny" Harris; rapper Ludacris; singer Tyrese Gibson; comedians Kevin Hart and Tiffany Haddish; and actress Marsai Martin.

Floyd's body will go from the first service to Raeford, North Carolina, the state where he was born 46 years ago, for a two-hour public viewing and private service for the family on Saturday.

Finally, a public viewing will be held Monday in Houston, where he was raised and lived most of his life. A 500-person service on Tuesday will take place at The Fountain of Praise church and will include addresses from Sharpton, Crump, and the Rev. Remus E. Wright, the family pastor. Former Vice President Joe Biden, the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee, may attend, and other political figures and celebrities are expected as well. A private burial will follow.

Floyd's final journey was designed with intention, Sharpton said ahead of Thursday's service. Having left Houston for Minneapolis in 2014 in search of a job and a new life, Floyd will retrace that path in death.

George Floyd mourned and celebrated, his death a call to action

Many mourners have noted that among the wrenching cries that Floyd made in his final moments, one was for his mother, Larcenia Floyd, who had died two years earlier.

Sharpton said George Floyd was calling for his mother because, as he neared death, she had her hands outstretched to him calling him back home.

"Come on, George," Sharpton said. "I'll welcome you where the wicked will cease from troubling you, where the weary will get rest. It's a place where police don't put knees on you, George."

Associated Press writers Amy Forliti in Minneapolis, Scott Bauer in Madison, Wisconsin; and Nomaan Merchant in Houston contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXXI. BLACKDUCK MN MAYOR RESIGNS AFTER FACEBOOK POST ABOUT GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTERS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 440 wordsByline: Forum News ServiceHighlight: BLACKDUCK, Minn. - Rudy Patch resigned as mayor of Blackduck this week, prior to a scheduled emergency meeting of the City Council. The council had originally planned an emergency meeting for 6 p.m. Monday, June 1, to address a meme that Patch posted on his Facebook page over the weekend. That meeting was to be [...]Body

BLACKDUCK, Minn. - Rudy Patch resigned as mayor of Blackduck this week, prior to a scheduled emergency meeting of the City Council.

The council had originally planned an emergency meeting for 6 p.m. Monday, June 1, to address a meme that Patch posted on his Facebook page over the weekend. That meeting was to be held at City Hall with a limit of 10 attendees because of the COVID-19 pandemic. Later it was rescheduled for Blackduck Wayside Park so that more people could attend.

But the meeting was canceled late in the afternoon when Patch submitted his letter of resignation.

Patch shared a meme on his Facebook page over the weekend that showed a blood-covered vehicle with the caption: "I don't know what you mean by protesters on the freeway. I came through no problem."

For the past week, the Twin Cities had seen nightly protests after the death of George Floyd, a black man who died while in the custody of Minneapolis police May 25. The protests spread to regional cities as well as major metropolitan cities across the nation.

The post was later taken down, but captured screen shots of it were shared on other pages.

In his letter, Patch wrote that he regretfully resigned and hoped that the City Council would put in place "some good racism training policies."

Here is the text of Patch's letter:

"I have been a city official for the past 8 years and try to look out for the best interest of the city. I have made a mistake by sharing a post without the correct context behind it. The post was in reference to a conversation I had the night before. I ran across this post the next day and wanted to share it with that person. I did not like the post. I did not see humor in the post. It was meant for the individual to recognize how bad it could be to drive through protesters. And also, if you are going to protest, to do so safely because this could happen."

Blackduck MN mayor resigns after Facebook post about George Floyd protesters

Patch also explained that he is a first responder himself, "I try to save lives, not take them. . . . Protests can, and do, send a strong message. I would like for everyone to work together as a team. I believe ALL lives matter. I would like to get training available to myself and anyone that has interest in learning more about racism, to make things better for our community and world." 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin Tropical downpours in the Twin Cities? Thanks, Cristobal What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus St. Paul police officer one of six area leaders to land 2020 Bush Foundation fellowships Four MN nursing homes have more than 100 coronavirus cases as state looks to control outbreak

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

At site of killing, a 'coming together' With grief, vows to act at Floyd's death site

ARTICLE CCCXXXII.

AT SITE OF KILLING, A 'COMING TOGETHER' WITH GRIEF, VOWS TO ACT AT FLOYD'S DEATH SITE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1A

Length: 739 words

Byline: MARY LYNN SMITH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

Amid the heat of a June afternoon, church came to the street where George Floyd died.

His memorial service, broadcast live from the sanctuary at North Central University in downtown Minneapolis, was private. But 3 miles away, at the site on Chicago Avenue where Floyd slipped from consciousness, hundreds listened, prayed and sang along. They bowed their heads, clapped along to a gospel song, shouted, "Amen!" and raised their fists as they called out Floyd's name.

As smoke from a barbecue wafted, they paid their respects to a man most didn't know but who has become a symbol of repression and the crying need for change. Just as important, they came to be part of a movement.

"The opportunities we have were born from activism like this," said Desmond Brown, who traveled from Rochester with his wife, four children and mother-in-law. It's a moment his children needed to witness, he said.

"They will have a personal responsibility to be part of the struggle to further the goals of justice," he said as he held his 14-month-old son.

As a black man, he said he has benefited from the sacrifices of those who came before him. Now, he said, a new generation will continue to push for change that will bring justice and equality, Brown said.

"I teach my children to strive for an education, but it may not matter, because their lives simply don't have the same value," he said. "So, yeah, I'm hoping for change."

Despite the coronavirus pandemic, the Brown family, with face masks on, stood amid a crowd that wrapped around the corner where memorials to George Floyd continue to grow.

Nearby, Glen Ross was paying his second visit to the memorial.

"I wanted to show my respect to the family," he said. "I want to show my support for change."

At site of killing, a 'coming together' With grief, vows to act at Floyd's death site

It's unfortunate that yet another black man has died at the hand of police, Ross said. But he said Floyd's death may well be the catalyst for justice and reform.

"Look around," he said. "There are more people involved - more white people. This may be the moment."

Standing in the crowd during the service was Tyler Wagner, a white guy from Lakeville who used a black marker to write "Black Lives Matter" on his white T-shirt. Like millions of people who have protested across the country and around the globe, he said he was compelled to take a stand "for what's going wrong in the criminal justice system."

A voice boomed over the speakers: "Say his name!"

"George Floyd!" the crowd responded.

Many listened intently, respectfully, to the memorial service being broadcast. A mother wrapped her arms around her daughter.

A couple stood hand in hand. Others wandered around the memorials, adding more bouquets, more poster-sized messages.

And then for eight minutes and 46 seconds - the amount of time a Minneapolis officer ignored Floyd's pleas that he couldn't breathe - the crowd stood still, mostly silent, some raising their hands in the air.

The time ticked down, and down the street, Shannel Ashford of Minneapolis looked around the crowd.

"This is humanity," she said. "It's an uplifting experience because it's encouraging to see some kind of hope and that unity is possible."

Yes, she said, she wants the four officers responsible for Floyd's death held accountable. "But this just isn't a Minneapolis problem," she said. This is about seeking accountability and justice across the country, she added.

As the memorial service broadcast ended, a street celebration began. As performers took to the stage, the crowd was reminded to be respectful.

The Rev. John C.L. Howard arrived in a three-piece suit to join the throng. "I just came from the services," he said. "It was so moving, inspiring and healing. I've come here to continue to heal."

But even more so, he said, he wanted to help mark the beginning of a new movement.

"All people are coming together," he said. "This is about humanity."

It was a moment many cherished being part of, especially after the violence of last week, when protests spun off into fires and looting that ravaged the city before the National Guard was sent out to quiet the streets and allow peaceful protesters to dominate.

Darnay Benner of Minneapolis, his wife and three children said they needed the solace of Thursday's street celebration.

"It was important for us to bring our kids here to combat the images of people being destructive," he said.

Looking down the street, he saw something totally different.

At site of killing, a 'coming together' With grief, vows to act at Floyd's death site

"This," he said, "is the power of love."

Mary Lynn Smith · 612-673-4788

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

Minnesota county attorneys want state to handle all police-involved deaths

ARTICLE CCCXXXIII.

MINNESOTA COUNTY ATTORNEYS WANT STATE TO HANDLE ALL POLICE-INVOLVED DEATHS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 357 words

Byline: The Associated Press

Highlight: Minnesota's county attorneys want to give the state attorney general the authority to handle all cases of police-involved deaths, as is the case against the four former Minneapolis police officers involved George Floyd's death. The Minnesota County Attorneys Association voted in transferring that power during an emergency meeting Thursday that included Attorney General Keith Ellison. [...]

Body

Minnesota's county attorneys want to give the state attorney general the authority to handle all cases of police-involved deaths, as is the case against the four former Minneapolis police officers involved George Floyd's death.

The Minnesota County Attorneys Association voted in transferring that power during an emergency meeting Thursday that included Attorney General Keith Ellison. The attorney general is now leading the state's case against the officers instead of the Hennepin County Attorney's Office.

State lawmakers would need to pass legislation during this month's special session to give the attorney general the ongoing authority.

The county attorneys are also calling on the Legislature to provide additional funding to the state Attorney General's Office and create a unit within Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension to investigate police killings of civilians.

"If this is the path the Legislature and governor choose to take, my office will accept the responsibility," Ellison said. "But it must come with resources sufficient to do the job thoroughly and to do justice in the way Minnesotans have a right to expect."

Ellison is one of 18 Democratic attorneys general who are asking Congress to grant their offices "clear statutory authority under federal law to investigate and resolve patterns or practices ... of unconstitutional policing by local police departments" in their respective states, the Star Tribune reported.

Two days after Ellison formally took over the case, charges against Derek Chauvin, the white officer who held his knee to Floyd's neck as he cried out for air May 25 until becoming motionless, were increased to second-degree murder, and the three other officers at the scene were arrested and charged with aiding and abetting second-degree murder.

Minnesota county attorneys want state to handle all police-involved deaths

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXXXIV.

FROM SHERATON TO SHELTER

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 1056 wordsByline: MIGUEL OTAROLA; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: After Lake Street devastation, volunteers turn hotel into refuge for homelessBody

While Lake Street burned last Friday, its stores gutted and streets filled with fear and confusion, one building stood tall as a beacon of hope for Minneapolis.

It was the former Sheraton Minneapolis Midtown Hotel, tucked just north of Lake and Chicago Avenue, a mile from where George Floyd took his final breaths. Evacuated of its conventional guests, the hotel has become a refuge for more than 200 homeless residents seeking shelter from the destruction that shook the city in the following days.

For the volunteers working around the clock to keep it running, the hotel-turned-shelter is one of a kind, an example of what can happen when people put their minds and bodies together to provide housing for those who need it most.

"People in the community have come together and created this amazing space of peace and sanctuary for these unhoused people, and brought together all these resources to be able to feed them, keep them safe, give them a place to exist," said Maggie Mills, 31, one of the volunteers.

There is no hierarchy among the collective of volunteers, who span the fields of medicine, mental health, social work, housing and public health. Most of the decisions are made on the spot. Donated goods have come in by the hundreds - so have the people looking for a way to help keep the hotel running.

Several volunteers were already looking for hotel rooms in recent months to house homeless people staying in encampments during the coronavirus pandemic.

When chaos ensued last week, those volunteers approached the owner of the former Sheraton, a functioning hotel with 136 rooms, and arranged to house homeless residents. They then began shepherding people sleeping in tents by the Midtown Greenway to the hotel.

From Sheraton to shelter

The hotel owner, Jay Patel, bought it earlier this year and was in the process of rebranding it, according to the Minneapolis/St. Paul Business Journal. While volunteers are looking to keep the shelter running permanently, Patel told the Business Journal this week he does not plan to keep it as a shelter for long.

Abu Bakr, 29, was living in his car last week as the protests against Floyd's death and the Minneapolis Police Department took over the streets. His car was set on fire while he was out demonstrating by the ruins of the Third Precinct, and he needed a place to stay before the curfew went into effect.

On Saturday, he walked inside and got a room inside the hotel.

"I've stayed in shelters plenty of times," Bakr said outside the hotel Wednesday. "It's a bit of an upgrade. A shelter facility ... you feel like you're being controlled. It doesn't feel homely and welcoming. But this place makes you feel welcome, and it feels like a place where you actually want to go home, if you have to live in a shelter."

On Wednesday, the lobby of the hotel was a mix of hotel guests and volunteers, some with face masks on, others not. Some caught a nap on the couches and seats, sleeping under hotel sheets.

Instead of a hotel clerk, volunteers stood behind the main desk. Instead of a bartender, two volunteers stood behind the bar handing out non-alcoholic drinks and snacks. On the patio, volunteers and guests prepared to cook trays of chicken fajitas. Signs encouraging social distancing and sanitation - and honoring Floyd - were posted along the walls.

The rooms are regular hotel rooms, Bakr said. There is a bed, television and shower, and guests get fresh sheets each day, he said. Until Tuesday, there was no hot water because the gas line to the building was turned off.

A room next to the main lobby was turned into a first-aid station. There, volunteers have stockpiled needle containers and naloxone, the overdose-reversing drug, donated by local organizations such as Southside Harm Reduction Services and Hope Network. There is also an herbal medicine station, and volunteers are building room dividers and receiving cots to better treat guests.

Sarah Stackley, who has worked with the homeless population for the last nine years, began volunteering at the shelter Sunday. She described it as a "revolutionary model," one not governed by restrictive rules that come with grants.

"This is something I have never seen before," she said. "It's a space that we've needed for decades. It's to have a space where there really is no restrictions and you can have people come in and stay until they're ready to leave."

She continued: "We have a very long waitlist already; we could use another hotel."

The collective has also organized volunteers to provide security. Mills, a graduate student at the University of Minnesota, and her partner have served overnight shifts outside the hotel, with police confronting them and even shooting rubber bullets in their direction, she said.

"The police have been very unclear about how they're going to interact with us when we are there peacefully just trying to keep these residents safe," she said. "That's of the utmost concern to everyone volunteering."

Sheila Delaney, 49, who helped assist residents displaced in the Drake Hotel fire late last year, was brought in to act as a liaison between volunteers, the building owner and other partners.

"This is operationally as smooth, and in terms of cultural competence, it far surpasses anything the Red Cross could've done with the Drake," she said. "The people who are serving the people here are reflective."

She said the collective will need funding from the state and philanthropy partners to make it sustainable, and that at some point the city of Minneapolis will need to get involved for safety inspections.

The Minnesota Interagency Council on Homelessness, a cabinet-level body led by Lt. Gov. Peggy Flanagan, has taken notice and is looking to help. The state was separately working to relocate people living in encampments across the Twin Cities - including a large one in south Minneapolis near the Third Precinct - to hotels during the pandemic and unrest last week.

The council's executive director, Cathy ten Broeke, said the challenge now is figuring out how the state can support a hotel shelter that has so far operated entirely with volunteers.

"I've been working on homelessness for 27 years and I've never seen anything like that before," she said. "Finally, homelessness is being seen as the emergency and the public health issue that it is and that it has always been."

Miguel Otárola · 612-673-4753

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

How WCCO sports director Mike Max became a go-to source for Minnesota protest coverage

ARTICLE CCCXXXV.

HOW WCCO SPORTS DIRECTOR MIKE MAX BECAME A GO-TO SOURCE FOR MINNESOTA PROTEST COVERAGE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1132 words

Byline: Jace Frederick

Highlight: Mike Max looked on as what appeared to be smoke came his way, unfamiliar with what he was about to endure. Until someone shouted. "Get down! It's tear gas!" the WCCO-TV Channel 4 sports director heard late last Friday night. "Well, it was too late. We bit it, and we bit it big, myself and [...]"

Body

Mike Max looked on as what appeared to be smoke came his way, unfamiliar with what he was about to endure.

Until someone shouted.

"Get down! It's tear gas!" the WCCO-TV Channel 4 sports director heard late last Friday night. "Well, it was too late. We bit it, and we bit it big, myself and the crew. That knocked us out."

But only for a brief period. Soon after, Max and his crew were back in action, repositioning themselves back in the street to get a better view of the White Castle and Wells Fargo buildings burning near the Minneapolis Police Department's 5th Precinct.

A day earlier, Max was a sports reporter. Now, he was a go-to source for information on one of the biggest events in recent state history.

Max left the office after completing the 10 p.m. newscast Thursday and went home. There, he viewed the rest of WCCO's coverage that night, watching from afar as the MPD's 3rd Precinct went up in flames.

He had offered his services to WCCO-TV news director Kari Patey earlier in the week, but hadn't yet been asked to hit the streets.

RELATED: Twitter users hail protest coverage from an unlikely source, WCCO sports director Mike Max

Max had kept close tabs on the case of George Floyd's death - which has been classified a homicide by Hennepin County's medical examiner - and the aftermath of it in the city. He provided ample coverage of both on his nightly radio show on WCCO radio, talking to the FBI and local athletes involved in the protests, such as former NBA player Royce White.

How WCCO sports director Mike Max became a go-to source for Minnesota protest coverage

Max is a lifelong Minnesotan, a Hamline grad who hails from Gaylord, in the southern part of the state. He has covered many of the state's biggest sporting moments over the past two decades, and was anchoring WCCO radio when the I-35W bridge collapsed in 2007.

The day after the 3rd Precinct burned, Max covered an athletes-driven rally and protest in downtown Minneapolis during the day. That night, he went back downtown with his crew to do a live shot for the newscast to set up his story. While there, the newsroom learned 35W had just been shut down, and WCCO needed someone on the scene.

Max asked Patey to go, she obliged, and away he went.

"And, of course, that's kind of when everything changed," Max said.

Max was on site when law enforcement dissolved the protest and everyone came running.

"What's going on?" he asked.

"We're going to the 5th Precinct," protesters told him.

"And you go, 'Uh-oh,' " Max said. "Logically, what do you do? You go where they're going."

By the time Max and his crew arrived at the 5th Precinct, he still hadn't seen any law enforcement. All of a sudden, that changed.

"I can't believe I couldn't hear them," Max said. "But I turned around ... and I saw this group of law enforcement walking in step right towards the precinct."

They arrived in waves, armed and sporting gas masks and bulletproof vests. There were Humvees, and another wave of law enforcement behind those.

"It was like the cavalry just showed up. It was chilling. And you looked at that and you just said, 'They are not giving this up,' " Max said.

Max takes some offense when people write him off as a "sports guy," as if that's all he or other sports reporters are capable of covering.

"You don't need a PhD to do news," he said. "We cover what we cover."

And, ideally, you go about it the same way. Max's approach was simple: "Show them what we can see." That is what he did. Max simply tried to lay out what was in front of him.

"Nobody has any answers on this. You can't be wrong, as long as you're just describing what you see," Max said. "Here are these people, here is the fire, here is the truck."

Max's reporting, whether in sports or news, has always centered on the people involved and their stories, from the youth level to the pros. He loves having a front-row seat to human behavior, calling it "a wonderful gift" to cover such a thing.

"I always find it fascinating how people think and what motivates them and why are they there," Max said. "That's why I've always been in sports, because I think sports is like life on steroids."

How WCCO sports director Mike Max became a go-to source for Minnesota protest coverage

So while it might not have looked like much to you when Max was set up at a gas station when a crowd of protesters who had been arrested and were simply waiting for transport, Max was fascinated. He noted the interactions between the protesters and law enforcement officials, seeing that "in a lot of respects, there's not that much difference between the people protesting and the people arresting the protesters. Some ideology, but there's not nearly as profound a difference as I would've thought going in."

'Cops,' on air for 33 seasons, dropped by Paramount Network Anchor Pat Evans leaves KARE-TV after more than 25 years Meet Kamryn Johnson, the 9-year-old who has raised more than \$50,000 for Minneapolis Fox News: Black deaths, stock market graphic was insensitive Second City CEO steps down amid claims of racism at theater

He interviewed protesters who had their hands tied behind their backs and asked them about their cause, their feelings in that moment and if they had any regrets about being arrested. Their responses provided some of the most important commentary of the night.

"I've learned that every person deserves love from other people," one protester said. "It's really opened my eyes. I don't have no hate towards these police officers, I really don't. I just want everyone to come together and treat each other equally."

If Max was criticized for one piece of his protest reporting, it was that he rarely wore a mask during his time on the streets - a no-no to most during the coronavirus pandemic.

There was a reason for that. Amid the mayhem, he wanted sports fans, or even people he covered when they were in high school, to spot him and potentially start a conversation, which could lead to on-air interviews with the people at the heart of the issues. That's how he found a woman who came under fire from law enforcement as she worked in a medical tent, plus a man shot by a tear gas bullet.

Max witnessed so many things during his week on the ground level, from showings of humanity to the law enforcement's tactical precision to the willingness of local business owners to personally defend their own American dreams.

"I didn't realize the resolve they had until I spent time with them," he said. "When push came to shove, they were not going to let them burn their city down anymore."

With each passing night, the appreciation for Max's reporting seemed to grow. At one point, he was the No. 1 trending local topic on Twitter.

But Max has never once looked at Twitter, and has no idea how to log onto the platform. The only feedback he received was from friends and acquaintances who would send an occasional text, including one from Vikings coach Mike Zimmer, who was watching the protests from his offseason home in Kentucky.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

THE DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

ARTICLE CCCXXXVI. THE DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 9ALength: 816 wordsByline: PETER BELL; MITCH PEARLSTEIN, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Change must be sought from within as well // African-American people can't move forward until the issues within the community are addressed.Body

Lest there be any doubt, we view George Floyd's death as the most hideous example of police brutality we've ever seen. Former officer Derek Chauvin and the other three former officers involved must be held to strict account.

Yet if discussions and subsequent actions regarding the most explosive American crisis in generations are to be productive, we can't continue focusing near-exclusively on claims of institutional and systemic discrimination.

Do such unacceptable handicaps persist at various levels? As an African-American and a Jewish-American, we know, of course they do. But it's essential that we also focus on cultural and behavioral issues in the African-American community itself - as difficult as they may be to talk about, much less seriously address.

It simply is not true that we have not made determined and prodigiously expensive efforts to "reform" racial attitudes in every sector of American society for more than a half-century. Yet despite such efforts, not only has overall progress been limited, but hardly anyone is happy with the results.

In large measure this has been the case because political and social remedies have emphasized countering constraints imposed by the larger society, be they real or simply assumed, while de-emphasizing what the black community - or any community - must do to improve its own fate.

Achievement gaps, for instance, generally are not the result of racist teachers, or insensitive curricula, or biased disciplinary practices, but that is exactly the default charge leveled in many academic, media and political circles. A much larger cause, as many educators acknowledge (albeit quietly and privately) is that too many black young people are watching too much television, playing too many video games, and not taking school seriously enough.

THE DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

Regarding jobs, despite claims to the contrary, implicit or explicit hiring barriers are not the major cause of employment problems in the black community.

When it comes to matters of criminal justice, an allegedly racist system is not the reason so many blacks are caught up in it. The fact that African-Americans commit far too many crimes is the reason.

We must ask, will police relations with the black community ever be "normalized" so long as hugely disproportionate amounts of crime are regularly committed in those communities? Will lawbreaking in those neighborhoods really decrease if police "back off" as many activists and others urge? Common sense as well as academic research strongly suggest otherwise.

Harvard economist Roland Fryer, for example, reports that when major investigations of police departments are preceded by the kind of "viral event" that has surrounded George Floyd's death, homicides and total crimes in those cities have gone up "considerably" as police effectively pull back. Homicides have increased the most in cities where police-civilian contact, and thereby enforcement, has decreased the most.

This dynamic has been known as the "Ferguson Effect," which a journalist speculated earlier this week may come to be known as the "Minneapolis Effect."

Will economic development in black communities ever take off if entrepreneurs don't believe they and their property, their livelihoods, will remain safe? Without in any way suggesting that only African-Americans burned businesses to the ground on Lake Street and beyond in last week's riots, how much harder will it be for job creators to invest with adequate confidence in those places?

Most critically of all, will any of these and other social disparities get sufficiently better - sufficiently equitable - so long as so many African-American children come into this world outside of marriage and grow up with only one parent to provide consistent guidance?

Likewise, how can "household" incomes - the most frequent metric used when measuring inequality in Minnesota - ever become more equal so long as fewer working-age adults, on average, reside in African-American households than in other households?

We need to focus more on issues like these, rather than forcing virtually every question through prisms of race, as critical as racial justice and fairness are. Debates over climate change, school district configurations, Park Board land management - whatever the controversy may be - all center these days on questions of race to the point where attention is diverted and divisions deepen.

Gruesomely obvious over the last week is how too many people feel they have too little stake in this state and country. We must do a better job of rebuilding essential bonds of civil society - or in many instances, building such bonds for the first time. But in doing so we must be honest and open in expecting the black community to do the hard things only it can do.

Peter Bell is a former chair of the Metropolitan Council. Mitch Pearlstein is president emeritus and senior fellow at Center of the American Experiment.

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

THE DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXXXVII. TACKLING RACISM'S HISTORY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: SPORTS; Pg. 1CLength: 777 wordsByline: MEGAN RYAN; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Gophers football players are determined to do their part to bring change.Body

History repeating.

When Rashod Bateman heard of George Floyd's killing on a south Minneapolis street last week, another black person's death in police custody, the Gophers receiver's first thought: "Here we go again." For tight end Brevyn Spann-Ford: "Not really shocking."

Seeing a white officer kneel on Floyd's neck for nearly 9 minutes brought back what receiver Seth Green understood at 19 years old, cuffed and held at gunpoint outside the Dinkytown McDonald's for fitting a description from a recent burglary: "It wasn't a matter of if. It was a matter of when."

Gophers radio broadcaster and former star running back Darrell Thompson had the same tearful conversation with his sons, including Gophers receiver True Thompson, as his father had with him: "When I was a kid, I asked my dad, 'Why do people hate me because I'm black?' He said, 'I don't know.' And I had to say the same thing to my kids."

History repeating.

Many former and current Gophers football players have grown up accepting racism as commonplace. But in the wake of Floyd's death, they've decided now is the time to say: enough.

"There's a lot of times in my life where I kind of ignored racism and didn't stand up for it because it was normal for me," Bateman said, referencing how he used to alter the way he dressed, cover up his tattoos, not take his white high school girlfriend out in public because of her disapproving family. "... When I first said that I wanted to be proactive and spread awareness, I just sat down, I came in my room by myself, and I just started taking notes on what I can do."

A day after Floyd's killing, Bateman posted a tweet about how "no matter the color, we are all one." He's since encouraged people to purchase a sweatshirt that will benefit Floyd's family. He attended a small protest on campus, admittedly scared to join the larger marches in the city because as a black man, he's nervous how the police would react.

Spann-Ford and Green marched through downtown Minneapolis on Sunday, kneeling for nine minutes on the Hennepin Avenue bridge, with Green's knee throbbing on the concrete as he reflected on how long Floyd suffered. Green, who also participated in last Friday's protest, has been to 38th and Chicago where Floyd died four times. He's donated food and household supplies, helped clean up south Minneapolis after riots and looting destroyed parts of the neighborhood.

The Gophers took several days off from football activities, instead having team conversations about what had happened. Coach P.J. Fleck, after first talking with his players, posted a statement on social media and spoke to ESPN and local radio, calling Floyd's death "indefensible" and calling for "accountability."

Bateman said of all the tragedy that has ensued in the past weeks, one of the positives was how this brought his team even closer together. Spann-Ford said everyone from the training staff to athletic director Mark Coyle has checked in and shown support. Green said his nonblack teammates and friends have been willing to "sit and listen."

"That way, they can have a better understanding of not only the system that is oppressing the black community," Green said, "but also the personal experiences that black people that you may be close to go through every single day, that you don't have to think about because of the white privilege that you have."

Spann-Ford found a moment of beauty in the darkness as well, when he was one of thousands, including other former and current Gophers athletes, at a standstill on the 35W bridge this past Sunday.

"It was really powerful to me, seeing a highway that I'm just used to coming to school on, seeing it filled with people," Spann-Ford said. "... That we could all gather in a peaceful protest and show our voices to everyone."

Thompson, Spann-Ford and Green are all Minnesota natives, and Floyd's death felt personal because it happened in their home state. Bateman is from Georgia but has found in Minnesota a place he feels welcome, a place he feels "free."

"It feels so good," Bateman said. "But now my job is to help others who want the same thing for their life."

The Gophers players are already discussing what more they can do with their platforms as Division I athletes. They don't want the dialogue to stop after a social media post, with empty promises never fulfilled.

"No matter what we do, no matter how many white people support blacks, no matter how many blacks stand up for what's going to happen, there's still no guarantees that anything is going to change," Bateman said. "... But actions will always speak louder than words, in my opinion. And I guess we will see what's going to happen moving forward."

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXXXVIII.

MIDTOWN GLOBAL MARKET EVICTS HOLY LAND OVER EMPLOYEE'S PAST SOCIAL MEDIA POSTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 761 wordsByline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: The Holy Land grocery, butcher shop and deli has been kicked out of the Midtown Global Market in Minneapolis after past racist social media posts by the CEO's daughter, an employee, surfaced. The Lake Street market posted on Facebook Thursday afternoon that it was "deeply offended and saddened" by the posts that denigrated black people made [...]

Body

The Holy Land grocery, butcher shop and deli has been kicked out of the Midtown Global Market in Minneapolis after past racist social media posts by the CEO's daughter, an employee, surfaced.

The Lake Street market posted on Facebook Thursday afternoon that it was "deeply offended and saddened" by the posts that denigrated black people made "a number of years ago" by a family member of the owners of Holy Land.

"These words in no way reflect the beliefs and ideas of the staff, management, and business owners of Midtown Global Market," the post said. "We are home to 45 businesses representing 16 cultures, ethnicities, and countries of origin. We do not tolerate discrimination of any kind."

Two hours later, the market, which is housed in the former Sears building at Chicago Avenue, posted that it was "exercising its rights as landlord" by immediately closing the deli and terminating its lease.

Holy Land had commented about the social media posts Thursday morning on its Facebook page, saying they had found out a "team member" had "posted racial slurs" onto social media before beginning work with the company, which is based on Central Avenue in Northeast Minneapolis.

"As a business that was formed by immigrants, we do not tolerate this type of behavior because it is completely against our beliefs and faith," Holy Land CEO Majdi Wadi wrote in the Facebook post.

Wadi went on to say that the "team member" was his daughter, who made the slurs when she was a teenager.

Midtown Global Market evicts Holy Land over employee's past social media posts

Wadi's daughter was "terminated effective immediately" to demonstrate how seriously Holy Land takes the matter. Employees will also receive additional training and education to make sure they understand "what is and is not insensitive, offensive, and appropriate for all races, cultures, and religions."

The daughter posted her own apology on Instagram saying she was "deeply mortified" and "disgusted" by her previous comments, saying she was shocked that she had posted something that offensive.

She said she is working to educate herself and promises to be an advocate and ally of "every minority and person of color."

"I am so deeply embarrassed and hope that you know that this is not who I am as a person," she wrote.

I would like to thank the individuals who have brought a previous post from my past to my attention. I am deeply mortified and disgusted by my prior statements. I would like to start by saying it is unacceptable and I deeply and sincerely apologize. This social media posts were brought to my attention and I deleted it right away. First, I was so shocked that I even posted something so offensive. Second, I recognize the gravity of my words and how hurtful they can be and how hurtful they were. I wasn't thinking. I was a teenager at the time (although my youth is not an excuse) and wasn't educated on how the words I chose would affect and offend others, including myself. Over the years, I have grown and I have took it upon myself to learn and understand how my words and actions can affect other people. I have challenged myself to unlearn the behavior that society led me to believe was okay. To demonstrate my growth. I now advocate for others to do the same because I understand how one can be so blinded with what they think is acceptable. I am so deeply embarrassed and hope you know that this is not who I am as a person. Every day, I continue to better myself by educating myself, my friends, family, peers, and community. I strongly believe in and wholeheartedly support the Black Lives Matter movement. I have recognized my privilege and use my privilege to better my community and those around me, specifically, on the social and racial injustices our black community members face on a daily basis. I promise to continue to advocate, and commit my time to listening, learning, and being an ally of every minority and person of color. I kindly invite anyone to reach out to me if you would like to further discuss what I can do to help better myself and my community. I take complete responsibility for my actions.

A post shared by @liiaannee1 on Jun 4, 2020 at 1:05am PDT

Wadi said it was "duty and responsibility" as both a father and CEO to make sure employees have a positive impact on the community, noting that the posts by his daughter don't "accurately reflect who my daughter is as a person now."

He also apologized for the posts, saying, "To all our brothers and sisters who have been affected, we deeply and sincerely apologize for the senseless slurs that were posted to social media. We hope that you can find it in your hearts to forgive us."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

US unemployment drops unexpectedly to 13.3% amid outbreak

ARTICLE CCCXXXIX.

US UNEMPLOYMENT DROPS UNEXPECTEDLY TO 13.3% AMID OUTBREAK

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1095 words

Byline: Christopher S Rugaber

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. unemployment dropped unexpectedly in May to 13.3% as reopened businesses began recalling millions of workers faster than economists had predicted, triggering a big rally Friday on Wall Street and giving President Donald Trump something to boast about in his reelection bid.

Body

WASHINGTON - U.S. unemployment dropped unexpectedly in May to 13.3% as reopened businesses began recalling millions of workers faster than economists had predicted, triggering a big rally Friday on Wall Street and giving President Donald Trump something to boast about in his reelection bid.

The jobless rate is still on par with what the nation witnessed during the Great Depression. And for the second straight month, the Labor Department acknowledged making errors in counting the unemployed during the coronavirus outbreak, saying the real figure is worse than the numbers indicate.

Still, after weeks of dire predictions by economists that unemployment in May could hit 20% or more, the news that the economy added a surprising 2.5 million jobs last month is evidence that the employment collapse most likely bottomed out in April, when the rate reached 14.7%.

Most economists had expected rehiring to kick in this summer as lockdowns were increasingly lifted and people gradually resumed shopping and eating out.

"The surprising thing here is the timing and that it happened as quickly as it did," said Adam Kamins, senior regional economist at Moody's Analytics.

At the same time, economists warn that after an initial burst of hiring as businesses reopen, the recovery could slow in the fall or early next year unless most Americans are confident they can shop, travel, eat out and fully return to their other spending habits without fear of contracting the virus.

"We are witnessing the easiest phase of growth as people come off temporary layoffs and come back to their employers," said Jason Furman, a Harvard economist and former top adviser in the Obama White House. "And once employers are done recalling people, the much harder, longer work of recovery will have to proceed."

US unemployment drops unexpectedly to 13.3% amid outbreak

On Wall Street, the Dow Jones industrial average gained nearly 830 points, or more than 3%, and the broader S&P 500 closed 2.6% higher on the news. The S&P is now just 5.7% below its pre-pandemic peak, after plummeting 34%.

An exultant Trump seized on the report as evidence that the economy is going to come back from the coronavirus crisis like a "rocket ship."

"This shows that what we've been doing is right," said the president, who has pushed governors aggressively to reopen their economies amid warnings from public health officials that the country is risking a second wave of infections on top of the one that has killed over 100,000 Americans.

Kamins and other economists credited the government's small-business lending effort, the Paycheck Protection Program, with encouraging employers to rehire. Overall, Washington has provided about $3 trillion in emergency relief funds during the crisis.

Nearly all industries added jobs last month, a sharp reversal from April, when almost all cut them. Hotels and restaurants added 1.2 million jobs in May, after shedding 7.5 million. Retailers gained 368,000, after losing nearly 2.3 million in the previous month. Construction companies added 464,000 after cutting 995,000.

The crisis has also exposed wide disparities that may have contributed to the unrest set off in many U.S. cities by the death last week of George Floyd: While the unemployment rate for white Americans was 12.4% in May, it was 17.6% for Hispanics and 16.8% for African-Americans.

Solid employment gains will probably continue through the end of the year, economists said, but the job market is in such a deep hole that it could take years to dig out. The U.S. economy still has 20 million fewer jobs than it did in February. Oxford Economics, a consulting firm, forecasts that 60% of jobs could be regained by the end of this year, leaving unemployment in the 8%-to-10% range.

So far, some reopened companies are seeing only a limited number of customers.

Jacob Liou, 26, is back at work as a kitchen manager and sous chef at a Chattanooga, Tennessee, restaurant. It is allowed to seat up to 50% of its former capacity but rarely reaches that.

"Our store normally pulls around $35,000 a week," he said. "Now we're lucky to hit $10,000."

Scott Grondin and Jorge Sanchez, owners of a gym in Miami, are preparing to reopen Monday after closing down three months ago. Making money in the coming months could be tough.

About 25% of members have canceled their memberships. Classes will be smaller to accommodate social distancing. The gym has dropped prices. And not everyone is ready to return.

"Some will say, 'I want to wait one week,' some will want to wait a month," Grondin said. "They want to make sure we have the proper plans."

Gwyneth Duesbery, 22, returned this week to her job as a restaurant hostess in Grand Rapids, Michigan, as Bowdie's Chop House prepares to reopen with tables 6 feet apart and seating capacity reduced to about one-quarter.

US unemployment drops unexpectedly to 13.3% amid outbreak

"I am concerned that it will expose me to potential diseases, and expose others, no matter the precautions that we take," she said. "It's kind of uncharted waters."

There are other signs the economy is steadily recovering, even in hard-hit industries. American Airlines said it will fly 55% of its U.S. routes in July, up from 20% in May. And the Cheesecake Factory said one-quarter of its nearly 300 restaurants have reopened, though with limited capacity.

Some economists say, however, that the longer the economy struggles, the more permanent damage may occur. Movie theater chain AMC, for example, said Wednesday it may not survive.

The United States has suffered far worse job losses than other countries. European and some Asian nations have set up programs to subsidize employees' wages and keep them employed.

A study released this week found that while the U.S. shed about 15% of its jobs from January to April, the loss in countries such as Germany, South Korea, Australia and Israel was roughly 4% or lower.

Friday's report showed that the government continues to struggle with how it classifies millions of out-of-work Americans. The Labor Department admitted that government household survey-takers mistakenly counted about 4.9 million temporarily laid-off people as employed.

The government doesn't correct its survey results for fear that will look like political manipulation.

Had the mistake been corrected, the unemployment rate would have risen to 16.1% in May, while the corrected April figure would have been 19.5%, rather than 14.7%. Taken together, the two corrected numbers show that the overall trend still holds: Unemployment is going down.

AP Writers Travis Loller in Nashville and Kelli Kennedy in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and Economics Writer Josh Boak in Baltimore contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Feds, police seek help locating 'persons of interest' in arsons during local protests

ARTICLE CCCXL. FEDS, POLICE SEEK HELP LOCATING 'PERSONS OF INTEREST' IN ARSONS DURING LOCAL PROTESTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 359 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: Federal and local investigators are asking for help identifying "persons of interest" who might help solve arson fires set at St. Paul businesses amid George Floyd protests last week. "The individuals we are seeking to identify may have important information that could significantly aid in solving some of these arson cases," said Assistant Special Agent [...]

Body

Federal and local investigators are asking for help identifying "persons of interest" who might help solve arson fires set at St. Paul businesses amid George Floyd protests last week.

"The individuals we are seeking to identify may have important information that could significantly aid in solving some of these arson cases," said Assistant Special Agent in Charge Jon Ortiz of the St. Paul division of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

"Members of our communities have been a critical part of this investigation through their information sharing, and we appreciate their continued support in helping us locate these individuals," Ortiz said.

In addition to identifying persons of interest, authorities are also asking people to share photos or videos that might show people starting or stoking fires in St. Paul or Minneapolis.

The ATF, the FBI, the St. Paul Fire Department, the St. Paul Police Department and the Minnesota State Fire Marshal Division are cooperating in the investigations.

Tips are requested at 1-888-ATF-TIPS (1-888-283-8477), via email at ATFTips@atf.gov, or online via or the Report It mobile app for Apple iOS or . When using Report It, select "ATF - St Paul Field Division" as the reporting agency.

Tipsters also can call 1-800-CALLFBI (800-225-5342) or share photos or videos via fbi.gov/violence ReportIt.com Google Android.

Because the ATF is working closely with the FBI, if the information has already been given to the FBI, it's not necessary to submit to the ATF.

Feds, police seek help locating 'persons of interest' in arsons during local protests

The FBI is asking people for help in gathering information about those who violated federal law last week, not only in setting fires, but those who "may have incited or promoted violence of any kind."

Several dozen photos of the persons of interest can be viewed via the PDF document below.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXLI. NIGHTLY CURFEWS IN MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL TO END

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 239 wordsByline: Katrina Pross

Highlight: There will be no mandatory curfews beginning Friday night in the Twin Cities. Gov. Tim Walz and state officials made the announcement after a week of nightly curfews imposed to stem the violence that erupted in the days after the death of George Floyd while being arrested by Minneapolis police. Hundreds of businesses were looted [...]

Body

There will be no mandatory curfews beginning Friday night in the Twin Cities.

Gov. Tim Walz and state officials made the announcement after a week of nightly curfews imposed to stem the violence that erupted in the days after the death of George Floyd while being arrested by Minneapolis police. Hundreds of businesses were looted and damaged and dozens more were set on fire in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Curfews were started last Friday, lasting from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m., as the National Guard joined law enforcement to quell the violence.

On Monday as nights grew calmer, the curfews were shortened to 10 p.m. to 4 a.m. and extended through Thursday night. Under the curfew, only those going and returning from work, emergency workers, those fleeing a dangerous situation, the homeless and the media were allowed to be out in public. Others were subject to arrest.

While the nightly curfews have ended, Department of Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington said at a Friday afternoon press briefing that residents are still encouraged to be safe and stay at home if they are able to.

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books *'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Nightly curfews in Minneapolis, St. Paul to end

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXLII. NYPD BOSS WANTS CALM AFTER STABBING, OTHER ATTACKS ON COPS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 884 wordsByline: Michael R. Sisak, Jim MustianHighlight: NEW YORK (AP) - New York City police are trying to determine if Wednesday's ambush stabbing of an officer in Brooklyn was inspired by anti-police sentiments expressed during days of protests and unrest over the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis, Commissioner Dermot Shea said Thursday.Body

NEW YORK - New York City police are trying to determine if Wednesday's ambush stabbing of an officer in Brooklyn was inspired by anti-police sentiments expressed during days of protests and unrest over the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis, Commissioner Dermot Shea said Thursday.

Officer Yasyonfrant Jean Pierre was stabbed in the neck while on an anti-looting patrol, spurring a struggle that saw the suspect shot and two other officers sustaining gunshot injuries to their hands. Jean Pierre and the other officers, Randy Ramnarine and Dexter Chiu, were expected to recover, police said.

The suspect, 20-year-old Dzenan Camovic, was hospitalized in critical condition with multiple gunshot wounds, Shea said. He has yet to be charged and the case could end up in the hands of federal prosecutors, with the FBI saying it would use "every federal statute available to hold the perpetrator accountable." Information on Camovic's lawyer was not immediately available.

The bloodshed happened just before midnight Wednesday, in the hours after an 8 p.m. curfew that was intended to quell days of at-times violent protests in the wake of Floyd's death. Along with peaceful demonstrations, there have been smash-and-grab sprees and a string of assaults on police officers.

Shea called for calm Thursday at a news conference that opened with a broadside against elected officials and others whom he blamed for stirring up animosity by speaking against police and sharing videos on social media that, presented without context, are seen as evidence of officer misconduct.

"How do we move forward?" Shea said. "I do not know how we will get there. I wish I had all the answers, but I know this much. We cannot reach that place until we end the hateful speech and the law breaking and the unprovoked attacks against police officers and the rhetoric that fuels."

NYPD boss wants calm after stabbing, other attacks on cops

Shea said it was too early in the investigation to say what motivated Wednesday night's attack, but police union head Patrick Lynch said he saw a connection to the protests.

"Did we doubt? Because of the rhetoric we're hearing, the anti-police rhetoric that's storming our streets, are we surprised?" said Lynch, president of the Police Benevolent Association. "I'm not. We said it's going to happen."

Wednesday's stabbing happened a block from a spot where demonstrators and police engaged days earlier in an hourslong standoff, during which a police car was burned and protesters were beaten with batons.

Shea said the attacker casually approached two officers stationed in the area to prevent pilfering around 11:45 p.m. and stabbed one - Jean Pierre, according to Mayor Bill de Blasio.

Officers a short distance away heard gunshots, rushed to the scene and saw the man with a gun in his hand, believed to have been taken from one of the officers, Shea said. The responding officers then opened fire.

"It appears to be a completely, cowardly, despicable, unprovoked attack," Shea said.

The commissioner said 22 shell casings were recovered. He didn't say whether the officers' hand wounds came from fellow officers' guns.

Jean Pierre is a Haitian immigrant, and Ramnarine and Chiu are children of immigrants, de Blasio said.

They represent "all that is great about New York City," de Blasio said. "They represented the fact that people come from all over this country, all over this world, to find a better life ... and then some choose to serve all of us."

The stabbing was one of multiple assaults on police officers in recent days, including a driver plowing into a sergeant in the Bronx, a lieutenant struck in the helmet by a brick during a brawl in Manhattan, a Molotov cocktail thrown into a van full of officers in Brooklyn, and gunshots fired at an occupied police cruiser in Queens.

Hours after the Brooklyn ambush, police in Queens shot a man they said followed two officers into a store, menaced them with a knife and refused commands to drop the weapon. He is hospitalized in stable condition, police said.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo called the attacks on police officers "unconscionable."

"People attack police officers? They run up to police officers, they stab a police officer? They've treated police officers with such disrespect in New York City that I am stunned," Cuomo, a Democrat, said at a news briefing in Albany.

At the same time, police have been criticized for harsh tactics to corral protesters and enforce the curfew. More than 350 current and former members of de Blasio's administration published an open letter Thursday denouncing brutality, such as officers swatting protesters with batons, a police vehicle driven into a crowd and an officer seen throwing a woman to the ground.

Shea apologized for "our part in the damage to stability" and said some of those officers would face discipline.

NYPD boss wants calm after stabbing, other attacks on cops

This story has been corrected to show that the stabbing happened at 11:45 p.m., not 11:45 a.m.

Associated Press writers Jennifer Peltz in New York and Marina Villeneuve in Albany contributed. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

St. Paul mayor joins campaign to reduce police violence, plans use-of-force changes

ARTICLE CCCXLIII. ST. PAUL MAYOR JOINS CAMPAIGN TO REDUCE POLICE VIOLENCE, PLANS USE-OF-FORCE CHANGES

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 635 words

Byline: Frederick Melo, Mara H. Gottfried

Highlight: St. Paul will revise its use-of-force guidelines as part of a nationwide push to reform policing after George Floyd was killed in Minneapolis police custody. Mayor Melvin Carter announced Friday he has signed on to the "8 Can't Wait" campaign, which has eight recommendations for reducing police violence. The campaign says St. Paul already follows [...]

Body

St. Paul will revise its use-of-force guidelines as part of a nationwide push to reform policing after George Floyd was killed in Minneapolis police custody.

Mayor Melvin Carter announced Friday he has signed on to the "8 Can't Wait" campaign, which has eight recommendations for reducing police violence.

The campaign says St. Paul already follows six of those recommendations but has yet to explicitly ban chokeholds or state that deadly force can be used only as a last resort.

By Carter's reading of city policies, St. Paul already achieves all eight goals in practice. Soon after he took office in 2018, the city made changes that emphasize de-escalation and the sanctity of human life.

"Functionally, I'm confident that the policy we rolled out two years ago does address all of those priorities," he said in an interview Friday.

"Our policy goes beyond what is 'justifiable' to apply the minimal amount of force that 'is both reasonable and necessary,' which I think is an important addition. That's something I think our chief has been a strong leader on."

But Carter said he and Police Chief Todd Axtell "agree there's no time for ambiguity."

Axtell now has a group working on additional revisions to the police department's policy, spokesman Steve Linders said Friday.

"We're going to change language in our policy to make it absolutely clear to the people that we serve what they can expect from their officers," Linders said.

St. Paul mayor joins campaign to reduce police violence, plans use-of-force changes

The city's current guidelines say officers can use deadly force only when "objectively reasonable under a totality of the circumstances," according to the 8 Can't Wait campaign.

The department says it already trains officers to exhaust alternatives, when reasonable, before using deadly force.

Linders said St. Paul officers haven't been allowed to use chokeholds in decades, but they intend to change the policy's wording so it's "completely understandable to anyone who reads it."

POLICE REFORMS

St. Paul revised its use-of-force standards in March 2018 following two months of public engagement that drew dozens of suggestions from residents.

At the time, more than a dozen organizations wrote a letter to Carter calling the changes a promising start but insufficient to address their concerns about police oversight and misconduct.

In recent days, advocates have called on St. Paul and other police departments to abandon the use of tear gas to clear crowds.

As mayor, Carter also has limited but not completely abandoned the use of the department's canine unit, and he's resisted calls to expand the department's ranks by dozens of officers. In April 2019, he joined a National League of Cities effort to review how the city's fines and fees impact low-income residents.

MINNEAPOLIS BANS CHOKEHOLDS Minnesota lawmakers pressed to make changes after Floyd Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest

President Barack Obama this week called on mayors across the nation to commit to revising police use of force policies, a pledge Carter signed on Thursday.

Minneapolis on Friday reached a deal with the governor's office to ban the police use of chokeholds, among other changes, after an officer knelt on Floyd's neck for more than eight minutes on May 25, killing him and setting off widespread protests.

While the most fervent calls to reform or even dismantle the police have focused on Minneapolis, St. Paul hasn't been immune to controversy.

In November, a federal jury found officer Brett Palkowitsch used excessive force in 2016 when he kicked and broke the ribs of Frank Baker, an unarmed black man, while Baker was being attacked by a police dog.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXLIV. BRAINERD TEACHER ACCUSED OF RACIST COMMENTS OVER GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS RESIGNS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1005 wordsByline: Theresa BourkeHighlight: BRAINERD, Minn. - Forestview Middle School teacher Kara Hall resigned Wednesday after widespread concern over social media statements many deemed racist. The comments came on a Facebook post shared by a former lakes area resident detailing her experience among protesters in Minneapolis, following the death of George Floyd in police custody May 25. Comments included: [...]Body

BRAINERD, Minn. - Forestview Middle School teacher Kara Hall resigned Wednesday after widespread concern over social media statements many deemed racist.

The comments came on a Facebook post shared by a former lakes area resident detailing her experience among protesters in Minneapolis, following the death of George Floyd in police custody May 25.

Comments included: "I know all I see are scary awful blacks people robbing businesses that don't deserve this."

Another comment from Hall criticizing Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey and calling for law and order to be restored included: "The creepy, destructive, violent blacks we are all across America watching raid and ruin businesses across America need to be put in jail!"

An online petition garnering thousands of signatures sought her firing, and an open letter signed by 14 Brainerd High School graduates implored the district to take action as well.

On Thursday, Hall issued the following statement addressed to the Brainerd community and Brainerd School District:

"I am sincerely apologetic for the outrage and pain I have caused this great community by my inappropriate comments to Kali Erin Wolhart on Facebook. I have respectfully resigned from my position after teaching middle school visual arts for the past 18 years. We tell our students to think before they speak, that words matter, and what we say will have consequences. I did not practice what I preached. Ms. Wolhart is a former student with whom I have maintained a positive relationship over the years, and I am deeply saddened by the impact of this situation on that relationship.

Brainerd teacher accused of racist comments over George Floyd protests resigns

"Like most people in America, I was horrified by the murder of George Floyd. I included that statement in her post; an important piece she neglected to share. I believe in justice and equality, and recognize this terrible act is reflective of how far we have to go to achieve that goal. The posts that were widely shared regarding the aftermath of this unjust act did not reflect my care and concern for those most impacted. My words were terribly wrong. They were typed in a heated moment that I regret. Not because I lost a career I valued, but because it hurt community members and students for whom I have great respect and truly care about. I hope they will forgive me and give me a chance to move forward in a positive way. I want all of my students to know they mattered, and will always matter."

While Hall's comments originated on a post made by Wolhart, the Facebook post sparking the outcry and calls for Hall's firing was made by someone else, who witnessed the exchange on Wolhart's post.

"The views she expressed on social media earlier this week are contrary to our District's mission to 'ensure all students achieve their individual potential by providing the highest-quality programs and resources to prepare learners for an ever-changing global society,'" Brainerd Public Schools Superintendent Laine Larson said in a statement.

A group of community members who planned a rally Thursday evening to advocate for Hall's firing still rallied, but instead it was a rally of support for the school district.

Families gathered at Sixth and Washington streets to thank the district for its swift action on the issue. Freedom and Shannon Porter were among them.

"We had people ready to show up to terminate the teacher, but we also wanted the spotlight the positive from the district - they took action and they listened to the parents," Freedom Porter said. "People are quick to show the negative stuff. We just wanted to say we appreciate it, publicly, not just on Facebook. I'm sure they don't hear it a lot."

"It was a tough position (for the district)," Shannon Porter said. "They investigated, they took swift action, and because of that all the parties involved made the right decision. So we just want to say thank you to the district and the community, everybody who spoke out, wrote letters, sent Facebook messages."

Both Porters said they weren't aware of other instances of discrimination in the district - instead, they said the district proactively honored their Ojibwe heritage - but they noted their perspective is limited and they can only speak for what they've learned from Baxter Elementary School.

Kaari Weyaus, a Brainerd mother of seven, said her children could vouch for multiple occasions of outright discrimination in their schools. Two of them joined her on Washington Street, while another two stayed home for fear they might draw attention to themselves from teachers.

"Hopefully we can get that on the agenda with friends and neighbors who have seen racism or experienced that racism themselves, so we can compile that data on the local level," Weyaus said. "I applaud their swift action. We thought about canceling today, but I think if we're going to be against the district, we need to applaud them when they did what they needed to do."

1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin Tropical downpours in the Twin Cities? Thanks, Cristobal What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus St. Paul police officer one of six area leaders to land 2020 Bush Foundation fellowships Four MN nursing homes have more than 100 coronavirus cases as state looks to control

Brainerd teacher accused of racist comments over George Floyd protests resigns

outbreak The situation illuminated some surprising perspectives, Freedom Porter said, who pointed to interactions with a fellow parent who said they couldn't support Hall's resignation - not because they agreed with her statements, he said, but because Hall enjoyed a special and nurturing relationship with their autistic child. It highlighted just how sad the incident was all around, he said.

"I'm sure this teacher, like all teachers, has touched hundreds of lives, but it's just an unfortunate situation," Freedom Porter said. "After serving for 20 years in education, I can't help but feel bad it ended this way, despite what she said. Racism is tough. People just don't think about it. To have an educator, somebody who influences kids' minds, that's something we can't have."

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Did George Floyd memorial service violate Minnesota's coronavirus order?

ARTICLE CCCXLV. DID GEORGE FLOYD MEMORIAL SERVICE VIOLATE MINNESOTA'S CORONAVIRUS ORDER?

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 853 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: Thursday's memorial service for George Floyd appears to have violated Gov. Tim Walz's coronavirus restrictions regarding funeral services and religious gatherings. There were too many people seated too closely to comply with the order; and the order has "strong" recommendations to not have congregational singing, which Thursday's service did. The order also calls for no [...]

Body

Thursday's memorial service for George Floyd appears to have violated Gov. Tim Walz's coronavirus restrictions regarding funeral services and religious gatherings.

There were too many people seated too closely to comply with the order; and the order has "strong" recommendations to not have congregational singing, which Thursday's service did. The order also calls for no more than 250 people to attend such an event; some 500 were in attendance Thursday, the Associated Press reported.

The memorial and celebration of life to Floyd, an unarmed black man who died at the hands of Minneapolis police officers, was a key moment for a community and nation reeling from its second week of mass protests. Nonetheless, state and federal health officials - and Walz himself, who attended Thursday's event - have consistently and steadfastly pointed to precisely such services as risky events that could endanger public health in a pandemic.

In response to a Pioneer Press request for comment Thursday, a Walz spokesman said: "George Floyd's family personally invited the governor and First Lady (Gwen Walz) to his funeral, and they were humbled to accept."

On Friday, however, after this story was first published, Walz was asked about it at a news conference and added some additional thoughts.

He acknowledged the violations of the order, but sought to cast the event as having its own benefits.

"Denying that to happen as a healing on a broader, societal well-being, I don't think would have been a good decision, but we probably could have done a little better as far as social distancing," he said.

Did George Floyd memorial service violate Minnesota's coronavirus order?

Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey also attended the service at North Central University, located in Minneapolis. Frey is ultimately charged with enforcing the order. His office had not responded to a Thursday request for comment as of Friday evening.

SOME PRECAUTIONS TAKEN

To be clear, a number of precautions were taken, and organizers worked with the city and state to attempt to minimize risks.

Social distancing was maintained in many areas; all in attendance were required to wear masks or face coverings; and everyone who entered the building was subject to a health screening that included having their temperature checked and being questioned about symptoms.

One insidious aspect of the virus is that people with no symptoms can be infected and spread it unknowingly. In fact, Floyd himself was an asymptomatic carrier of the coronavirus, according to an autopsy report released Wednesday.

Under Walz's order and state guidelines, indoor services are supposed to follow a number of protocols to reduce chances of spreading the virus.

WHAT RULES MAY HAVE BEEN BROKEN?

Crowd size: "In indoor settings, occupancy must not exceed 25% of total capacity, with a maximum of 250 people in a single self-contained space." The space had a capacity of 1,000 and some 500 attended. Walz himself has said he felt 250 was too large a number. "To be candid, that 250 number terrifies me," Walz said May 27, when he announced the current restrictions. At the time, the guidelines were loosening from a strict limit of 10 people for any religious gathering, indoors or out, under pressure from President Donald Trump.

Social distancing: "Occupancy must be reduced to accommodate for the required social distancing of at least six feet between people who do not live in the same household." While organizers urged those attending to sit "in every other seat," that's not six feet, and several rows featured people seated in every seat.

Singing: "Congregations should refrain from singing. Congregations are strongly encouraged to offer pre-recorded music or only one cantor singing at a distance of at least 12 feet from anyone else during the service, while wearing a face mask." Thursday's memorial featured congregational singing led by a handful of maskless singers standing next to each other. Singing has been singled out by the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention as a possible way for infected droplets to be expelled far away from the singer's mouth.

On Friday, Walz loosened a host of coronavirus rules, but the absolute limit of 250 people in any one space, indoors or out, did not change. Nor did any guidance on social distancing or singing.

On Thursday evening, the governor's nightly public safety communication - a regular notice since Floyd's death prompted widespread protests, some of which have featured rioting - included the following statement: "The Department of Health continues to recommend that any Minnesotan who has attended a protest, vigil, or community clean-up get tested for COVID-19."

Did George Floyd memorial service violate Minnesota's coronavirus order?

A separate request for comment from the Minnesota Department of Health was not answered Thursday evening.

Coronavirus Wednesday update: 19 more Minnesota deaths and 352 new cases Crowded St. Croix River beach raises social-distancing concern; Washington County beaches reopen Ramsey County sheriff's office helps organize food drive for Somali community 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen What you need to know as Minnesota opens more businesses amid coronavirus

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Testimony: Shooter used racist slur as Arbery lay dying

ARTICLE CCCXLVI. TESTIMONY: SHOOTER USED RACIST SLUR AS ARBERY LAY DYING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1015 wordsByline: Russ BynumHighlight: BRUNSWICK, Ga. (AP) - A state investigator testified Thursday that a white man was heard saying a racist slur as he stood over Ahmaud Arbery's body, moments after fatally shooting the black man with a pump-action shotgun.Body

BRUNSWICK, Ga. - A state investigator testified Thursday that a white man was heard saying a racist slur as he stood over Ahmaud Arbery's body, moments after fatally shooting the black man with a pump-action shotgun.

The inflammatory revelation came amid a week of angry nationwide protests over law enforcement biases against black victims that erupted after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis.

In a hearing to determine whether there was enough evidence to proceed with a murder trial, the lead Georgia Bureau of Investigation agent in the case testified that Travis and Greg McMichael and a third man in another pickup, William "Roddie" Bryan, used their trucks to chase down and box in Arbery, who repeatedly reversed directions and ran into a ditch while trying to escape.

Travis McMichael then got out of his truck and confronted Arbery, later telling police he shot him in self-defense after Arbery refused his order to get on the ground, GBI agent Richard Dial said. He said a close examination of the video of the shooting shows the first shot was to Arbery's chest, the second was to his hand, and the third hit his chest again before he collapsed in the road in a subdivision in the port town of Brunswick.

"Mr. Bryan said that after the shooting took place before police arrival, while Mr. Arbery was on the ground, that he heard Travis McMichael make the statement, 'f - - - ing n - - - er,'" Dial said.

Bryan gave investigators the information roughly a week after the McMichaels' arrest, but there's no indication he told Glynn County investigators before that, Dial added.

Lee Merritt, an attorney for Arbery's family, told reporters outside the courthouse that prosecutors had warned the family before the hearing of the coming testimony about the slur.

Testimony: Shooter used racist slur as Arbery lay dying

"It was still very difficult to hear in the context of a prolonged chase, that after he murdered Ahmaud Arbery and stood over his body, he used that racial epithet," Merritt said. The lawyer said Thursday's testimony revealed that "racism was at the heart" of Arbery's slaying.

Arbery's mother, Wanda Cooper-Jones called the release of new details in court "very, very heartbreaking."

"He was afraid," Cooper-Jones said of her slain son. "Life had placed him in a position where I couldn't protect him, and he wasn't able to protect himself."

At the conclusion of the probable cause hearing Thursday, Magistrate Court Judge Wallace Harrell found that there was enough evidence for the cases against all three defendants to proceed.

"Ahmaud Arbery was chased, hunted down and ultimately executed at the hands of these men," prosecutor Jesse Evans told the judge. "He was on a run on a public road in a public subdivision. He was defenseless and unarmed."

Under questioning by Jason Sheffield, an attorney for Travis McMichael, Dial said Travis told police he raised his shotgun at Arbery from roughly 90 feet (27 meters) away and told him to stop and get on the ground.

That's when Arbery ran around the passenger side of Travis' truck, and the two men met in front of it.

Dial said Travis told police Arbery "squared up" like he was going to attack.

"There's a statement that he might have had his hand on his shirt," Dial said. "Travis McMichael said his adrenaline was pumping and it all happened very quickly."

He said Travis then fired the first shot into Arbery's chest.

Sheffield argued that the pursuit began with a legitimate concern about past crimes in the neighborhood that escalated right before the shooting.

"Travis McMichael used self-defense when he was attacked by Mr. Arbery," Sheffield said.

"I don't think it was self-defense by Mr. McMichael," Dial said. "I believe it was self-defense by Mr. Arbery."

The testimony presented Thursday raises questions about the idea that the McMichaels and Bryan were legitimately carrying out a citizens' arrest of a suspected burglar. It also could factor into a federal investigation into whether hate crime charges are warranted.

Dial testified that Greg McMichael told police that "he didn't know if Mr. Arbery had stolen anything or not, but he had a gut feeling" that Arbery had committed prior break-ins in the neighborhood.

The investigator testified that police body camera footage showed a Confederate flag sticker on a toolbox in Travis' truck and that investigators discovered at least two more racial slurs in messages on his phone.

In response to questioning from Bryan's attorney Kevin Gough, Dial testified that he believes Bryan joined the chase because he saw a black man running down the street with a truck following and drew conclusions based on racial bias. There's evidence of Bryan's "racist attitudes in his communications," Dial said, referring to comments found on his cellphone.

Testimony: Shooter used racist slur as Arbery lay dying

The investigator added that several residents of the subdivision where Arbery was killed told investigators they had seen him running in the neighborhood previously.

Dial said the three defendants are the only known witnesses to the shooting and investigators have found no other video of Arbery's final moments other than what Bryan recorded.

Arbery was killed Feb. 23 after Travis McMichael, 34, and his father, Greg McMichael, 64, gave chase when they spotted the 25-year-old black man running in their neighborhood. Bryan said he saw them driving by and joined the chase, Dial said. It wasn't until May 7 - two days after Bryan's cellphone video leaked online and stirred a national outcry - that the defendants were charged.

The McMichaels both wore masks as they sat side-by-side watching the hearing onscreen at the Glynn County jail. The judge rejected defense motions to have them brought to the courtroom, citing emergency precautions because of the coronavirus pandemic. Bryan waived his presence at the hearing. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXLVII. ARTCENTERA

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: VARIETY; Pg. 2ELength: 809 wordsByline: CHRIS HEWITT; CHRIS RIEMENSCHNEIDER; JON BREAM; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: The Fringe will go on, virtually

Body

The show will go on for Minnesota Fringe Festival, which is digital this year but will take place when it was originally scheduled, July 30-Aug. 9. There will be two ways for audiences to participate. Each night will feature one or two live performances online, hosted by artists on their streaming platforms of choice. Those performances are free. The Fringe also is raising $100,000 for the 2021 festival and has set up a digital hub that will require the $5 purchase of a Fringe Button, plus ticket charges as determined by artists. Digital hub patrons can access an unlimited number of shows, both live and recorded. Through June 15, the festival also is accepting applications from shows and performers. For those who can't wait, the Fringe is connecting audiences to online programming from the sort of artists they might expect to see at the festival. "Which Middle Name of Philip Seymour Hoffman Are You," an award winner at last year's event, will be presented free, June 5 and 12. You can register for that live, Zoomed performance by Jake Mierva and Danylo Loutchko at allegedtheatre.com. Performances by Sheep Theater, Sam Landman and other artists are currently available at their sites, as well.

CHRIS HEWITT

A song for our moment

One of the Twin Cities' most buzzed-about young hip-hop artists, Dua Saleh, has issued one of the first singles in reaction to the George Floyd tragedy. Titled "body cast," the haunting new track addresses police brutality. Downloads of the song via Bandcamp and streaming revenue will benefit the Minneapolis-based justice organization Black Visions Collective. Recorded with omnipresent Minnesota producer Psymun, the track was posted Monday along with a lyric video featuring the names of unarmed African-Americans killed by police. In a statement, Saleh said the song was recorded last year and is now being released to "demand justice for the family of George Floyd and countless others who have had their lives stolen by the police. [I] intended to save it for a project in the future, but I can't wait that long with what is happening in my city." Several national media outlets have picked up on the song, including Rolling Stone, which interviewed Saleh last week among other black musicians in Minnesota. "The last few days have been full of emotional anguish, triggers, and mobilization efforts," Saleh told Rolling Stone. "The community is grieving." Saleh is readying a new EP, "Rosetta," for release in the coming weeks.

ARTCENTERA

CHRIS RIEMENSCHNEIDER

Floyd's own hip-hop history

Floyd was a familiar face on the Twin Cities' hip-hop and Latinx music scene as a security staffer at Conga Latin Bistro. "He was family. His co-workers and friends loved him," said the restaurant/dance club's owner, Jovanni Thunstrom. "Thanks for treating us like royalty," said rapper Maria Isa, calling him "a gentle precious funny giant." Less well known was his history as an early member of legendary Houston hip-hop innovator DJ Screw's crew. A recording of him freestyling over a typically sludgy Screw groove - under the MC name Big Floyd - has circulated on social media, titled "Sittin' on Top of the World." DJ Screw, who died in 2000, pioneered the so-called chopped-and-screwed technique and is widely considered one of the most influential producers and mixmasters in hip-hop.C.R.

Nick Cannon at 38th and Chicago

Some big names have come to Minneapolis in the aftermath of Floyd's death. You might have seen Jamie Foxx, Jesse Jackson, the Rev. Al Sharpton or ex-NBA player Stephen Jackson at rallies. But Nick Cannon, best known as the host of Fox's "The Masked Singer," showed up in Minneapolis last Friday not to speak but to educate himself, he said in a first-person account for the trade publication Variety.com. "I needed to be right there on 38th Street and Chicago where George Floyd's life was tragically stolen from him. I needed to see the people in that community - how much love they had for their community and their people and how much pain this has caused."

JON BREAM

Carlile's birthday celebration

Twin Cities fans have seen Brandi Carlile perform four times in the past eight months, but they got another chance last week when she celebrated her 39th birthday with a livestreamed concert, playing her Grammy-winning album "By the Way, I Forgive" in its entirety. This promises to be the first in a series of full-album concerts, done in reverse chronological order. Next up: 2015's "The Firewatcher's Daughter," June 14 at 8 p.m. Twin Cities time, at brandicarlile.veeps.com. It's a ticketed event - $10 minimum - with all proceeds going to the singer's band and crew. "We're continuing to pay salaries and to pay everybody," said Carlile, "so I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your support."J.B.

Find more coverage of the arts at startribune.com/artcetera and follow us on Twitter @entertain_mn.

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Minnesota athletes and coaches combine to help the community, and perhaps spark change

ARTICLE CCCXLVIII. MINNESOTA ATHLETES AND COACHES COMBINE TO HELP THE COMMUNITY, AND PERHAPS SPARK CHANGE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 771 words

Byline: Jace Frederick

Highlight: Kyle Rudolph was looking for something, anything, to do to help the community that has embraced him during his nine-year career with the Vikings. The tight end wanted to clean up buildings, pick up pieces, spread positivity, whatever possible to provide support where needed. "We weren't fast enough," he said. "Everything was already done, (already) [...]"

Body

Kyle Rudolph was looking for something, anything, to do to help the community that has embraced him during his nine-year career with the Vikings.

The tight end wanted to clean up buildings, pick up pieces, spread positivity, whatever possible to provide support where needed.

"We weren't fast enough," he said. "Everything was already done, (already) in the process of being put back together."

So he had to come up with something on his own. That's how Friday's athlete-driven charity event was born. Athletes from across the city - from the Vikings to the Timberwolves to the Gophers - flocked to south Minneapolis to distribute supplies at the #United4ChangeMN event in a Cub Foods parking lot.

"A lot of us are out here in the middle of the day, having fun and putting a smile on people's faces," Timberwolves guard Malik Beasley said. "That's just important, that's what it takes to make a change."

The location was purposeful. The Cub Foods, along with the adjacent Target, were looted and destroyed last week in the aftermath of George Floyd's death at the hands of Minneapolis Police officers. Both businesses are currently closed. That takes away two primary resources for food and essentials for members of the community.

"Obviously they can't go in there and get what they need," Rudolph said.

So the grassroots effort, headed by Rudolph, Justin Hall and others, brought the supplies to the people. Donations for the drive poured in during the week. Cub was mentioned as a donor, as well. Timberwolves guard Josh Okogie had his chef grill out to supply lunch for volunteers and anyone picking up supplies. There were toys on hand for kids to take home.

Minnesota athletes and coaches combine to help the community, and perhaps spark change

"We came out here today to support the community," Vikings defensive end Danielle Hunter said. "It's a hard time right now, because of everything they need in this neighborhood ... so we came together, donated some things and gave it to the people that needed it the most."

Hall said it took about 48 hours to aggregate supplies, but the rest of the event was put together in a day. No one needed to be asked twice to contribute. Okogie had been looking for ways to help to the community when Rudolph reached out.

"And I was like, 'Man, I'm 10 toes down, thanks for incorporating me,' " Okogie said. "We were able to pull this off."

Throughout the day, Rudolph said there was a steady line of 50 to 100 people in line to get supplies, and he still estimated there would be supplies left over. Athletes were running around to tend to different needs, or handing out goods to those in attendance. Gophers football coach P.J. Fleck never stopped for more than a few seconds at a time as he ran bags to and from people's cars. A number of volunteers were sporting shirts that stated "Change starts with me."

"This is a fair representation of what Minnesota is like - people helping out those in need," Okogie said.

The entire event provided a ray of hope, as people were getting what they needed, and also enjoying themselves. Kids were dancing to the music playing through speakers and enjoying themselves. An area that was a source of devastation a week ago was now providing positivity. Hall was more than happy to have the event turn into a block party of sorts.

"This is like a great thing," Okogie said. "If you look around it, it's destruction. But if you start here, and we begin to grow out, hopefully everywhere outside (starts to) look like the love that's going on right here."

Hall made a point to note this would not be a one-and-done event. He has bigger outreach efforts in the works. Timberwolves coach Ryan Saunders noted change in society not only needs to start but be sustained. Hunter said athletes need to play a big part in that, inspiring change through actions off the field or court, just as they do on them.

"The events that happened in the past week, it's very unfortunate, and it's unacceptable, but we have to start making a change one neighborhood at a time," Okogie said. "We have to celebrate the life of George Floyd; we can't let him die in vain. Stuff like this has to continue."

Rudolph was one of many Vikings players to attend George Floyd's Memorial on Thursday. He recalled something Rev. Al Sharpton said during the service - that Sharpton thinks this moment in history may be different.

"I think this event is a perfect example of how times are different," Rudolph said. "You see people out here from all walks of life that want things to change."

Rudolph stopped to look around at the kids dancing and playing.

"I hope these kids will live in a world where we're not dealing with this," he said, "and that starts with us changing things now."

Minnesota athletes and coaches combine to help the community, and perhaps spark change

Graphic

Gophers football senior receiver Seth Green hands out diapers to a community member in need during a #United4ChangeMN distribution event in the Cub Foods parking lot in Minneapolis on Friday, June 5, 2020. (Jace Frederick / Pioneer Press)

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCXLIX. ZONE COVERAGE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: VARIETY; Pg. 1ELength: 910 wordsByline: NEAL JUSTIN; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Reporting on the George Floyd crisis, WCCO sports director Mike Max shows he's ready for the big leagues.Body

When WCCO's Mike Max crawled into bed at 3 a.m. the other night, after hours of covering the George Floyd protests, his wife tried to lighten the mood.

"I hope you don't have tear gas in your hair," she said. "I don't want to wake up coughing."

Not that the station's sports anchor is getting much sleep these days.

"Your adrenaline just spikes," Max said Tuesday while heading to report on a silent protest in St. Paul. "It takes a long time to come down from that."

Dozens of local and national journalists can relate. But Max has found himself getting more attention than his peers, proving that a guy known almost exclusively for covering athletes can handle a major league crisis as well as any hard-news reporter. Maybe even better.

At one point last weekend, he was the No. 1 topic on local Twitter feeds. Almost every post sang his praises.

"We've now elevated @WCCO's Mike Max to Legendary War Correspondent in our household," wrote one fan. "He needs a scooter and a 'CCO cape."

Even competitors have been impressed.

"Mike Max needs to win an Emmy for his protest reporting!" tweeted Cathy Wurzer, who hosts MPR's "Morning Edition" and TPT's "Almanac."

One colleague who isn't surprised by the seamless transition is Frank Vascellaro.

"He knows how to deal with people under a lot of emotional stress," said the WCCO news anchor, who hosts a high school sports show with Max most Fridays. "It's not easy to talk to people who have just lost the biggest game of their lives and do it with grace, charm and humor. He can talk to anybody about anything. That's a great personality to have out on the streets."

Zone coverage

Vascellaro also believes his friend's experience working on deadline has benefited him in covering a story that's constantly in motion.

"The timeline pressure of turning sports stories is much greater than when you're turning a news story," he said. "You're often interviewing a guy when the game ends at 9:50 and have to get the story on the air at 10:05."

Max is quick to dispel notions that there is a big gap between covering a playoff game and unrest in the streets.

"In an emergency, what's the difference between me or any other reporter?" said Max, struggling to figure out the volume control on the new phone he purchased during a rare hour off. "None of us know what's happening. We're all in the same boat. It's not that much different from sports. You think you know the story in the first quarter. It changes in the second quarter, and then in the third. The way you process is similar."

Almost immediately after George Floyd's death on May 25, Max started discussing law enforcement and race relations as part of his WCCO radio show, "Sports to the Max," but strictly through the lens of athletes participating in rallies.

Last Friday, word got to the WCCO-TV newsroom that protesters were starting to shut down the Hennepin Avenue Bridge. Max stood up and volunteered his services.

News director Kari Patey quickly accepted the offer.

"We sent him out because good reporters are good reporters," said Patey, who also notes that sports reporter Norman Seawright has been a valuable asset this past week. "This was an all-hands-on-deck situation, and Mike has an innate ability to tell stories through people's experiences."

That's especially true when it comes to covering Minnesotans.

Max, who was born in Gaylord, Minn., played baseball and basketball while attending Hamline University. He has spent his entire professional career working in the Twin Cities.

His knowledge of the area has come in handy, whether he's explaining how protesters were getting surrounded by police near Bobby & Steve's Auto World or offering detailed commentary while driving down Lake Street as locals protected storefronts.

He learned from Star Tribune sports columnist Sid Hartman how to build a vast network of contacts that he could trust and would trust him in return. From former WCCO anchor Don Shelby, he learned the importance of taking people aside and developing a rapport that would put them at ease before going on camera. Both of those lessons have come in handy.

"I can't begin to tell you how many people I've run into in the midst of all this that I have some background with, like covering them when they were in high school," said Max, who was promoted to sports director early last year following Mark Rosen's retirement. "I've taken some criticism for not wearing a mask, but that's strategic. If they recognize me, it's almost like comfort food. Everyone wants to talk sports. It's easy to strike up a conversation."

Zone coverage

Max's folksy approach is just one reason WCCO has been the breaking-news leader in local ratings this past week.

"Mike's got incredible heart and sees people for who they are, just like all of my news reporters," Patey said. "It's no surprise he was able to capture humanity on some of our darkest nights."

Max's secret weapon? A constant consumption of coffee, preferably half-caff. His only complaint this past week is that with so many businesses closed at night, it's been hard to fill his cup.

"He should be a spokesperson for Caribou Coffee," Vascellaro said. "This dude has more energy than the Energizer Bunny. I've never, ever seen him fatigued."

As much as Max has enjoyed working on the news side, he's not thinking about a career change.

"I want to go back to sports," he said. "But I love the fact that the newsroom now knows that if they need me for anything else, they can call on me."

Neal Justin · 612-673-7431

@nealjustin

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCL. 38TH AND CHICAGO REMAINS CLOSED FOR FLOYD MEMORIAL

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3BLength: 487 wordsByline: TIM HARLOW; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Some south Minneapolis buses will be on detour.Body

The intersection of E. 38th Street and S. Chicago Avenue in Minneapolis remains closed to allow mourners to continue to gather at the memorial for George Floyd, the black man who died while being restrained by white police officers on May 25.

The Pan African Rally for George Floyd will take place from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday at the intersection. Drivers should know that related memorial events may temporarily take over streets in other parts of the city and across the metro area.

Transit service is back and continues to operate on reduced schedules because of COVID-19 precautions. A number of Metro Transit routes operating in south Minneapolis are being detoured as the cleanup from last weekend's riots continues.

Here is a roundup of this weekend's larger road construction projects:

Minneapolis

1. Interstate 35W: Ramps from northbound I-35W to 5th Avenue S., and from 4th Avenue S. to southbound I-35W, closed until July 31.
2. Hennepin Avenue: Lane reductions and full closure on some blocks between 12th Street and Washington Avenue.
3. 10th Avenue Bridge: Closed through midsummer 2021 between 10th Avenue on the east side of the Mississippi River and 19th Avenue S. on the west side.
4. 3rd Avenue Bridge: Reduced to one traffic lane in each direction over the Mississippi River.

East metro

38th and Chicago remains closed for Floyd memorial

5. Interstates 694/494, Woodbury: Ramps from eastbound Interstate 94 to northbound I-694 and northbound I-494 to westbound I-94 closed until July 24.

6. Hwy. 95, Denmark Township: Closed between 70th Street and Hwys. 61 and 10 until Aug. 28.

North metro

7. I-694 at Rice Street, Shoreview: Both directions reduced to one lane, 9 p.m. Friday to 5 a.m. Saturday.

8. County Road 81/Bottineau Boulevard, Brooklyn Park: Closed between 79th Avenue and W. Broadway.

South metro

9. Hwy. 5, Bloomington and St. Paul: Eastbound lanes closed between I-494 and Davern Street; ramps from both directions of Hwys. 62 and 55 to eastbound Hwy. 5 closed through mid-July.

10. I-494, Bloomington: Both directions will have overnight lane closures between Cedar Avenue and Hwy. 100 through Aug. 31.

11. I-35W, Richfield: Reduced to two lanes between 76th and 86th streets until Aug. 31; ramp from southbound I-35W to westbound I-494 closed until Sept. 1.

12. I-35W, Bloomington and Burnsville: Lane closures between 106th Street and Cliff Road from 7 p.m. to 6 a.m. daily. For southbound drivers, the right lane provides access to Cliff Road, while the left lanes are reserved for drivers continuing through the construction zone into Burnsville.

13. Hwy. 13, Prior Lake: Intersection of Hwy. 13 and County Road 21 closed through July 22.

West metro

14. Hwy. 169, Jackson Township: Reduced to one lane between 133rd Street and Old Brick Yard Road through mid-August.

15. Hwy. 41, Chaska and Chanhassen: Closed between Peavey Road and W. 82nd Street until July 13.

16. Hwy. 101, Chanhassen: Closed between Flying Cloud Drive and Lakota Lane.

Tim Harlow · 612-673-7768

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Maplewood police: Theft suspect dies after telling officers he took drugs

ARTICLE CCCLI. MAPLEWOOD POLICE: THEFT SUSPECT DIES AFTER TELLING OFFICERS HE TOOK DRUGS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 255 words

Byline: Kristi Belcamino

Highlight: The Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension is investigating the death of a man arrested on suspicion of theft who began having medical problems while in in the back of a Maplewood squad car and later died. A press release on Twitter said that no "physical struggle" ensued between the suspect and the police and that [...]

Body

The Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension is investigating the death of a man arrested on suspicion of theft who began having medical problems while in in the back of a Maplewood squad car and later died.

A press release on Twitter said that no "physical struggle" ensued between the suspect and the police and that body cameras were on during the incident.

According to the release, about 5:35 a.m. Maplewood police officers stopped and arrested a man near White Bear Avenue and Lydia Avenue on suspicion of stealing propane tanks from a gas station.

They handcuffed him and put him in the back of a squad car. He began having "medical issues" and told officers he had "ingested some drugs."

Paramedics arrived and began treating the man but his condition worsened. He was taken to St. John's Hospital in Maplewood where he was pronounced dead a short while later, according to the BCA release.

The BCA is investigating the death because it occurred while the man was in police custody.

No further information about the man was available Friday night.

The Ramsey County medical examiner's office will release more information about the man's identity and cause of death. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest 19-year-olds charged with arson of St. Paul store during George Floyd unrest Aerial views of St. Paul, Minneapolis show the extent of destruction from riots 23-year-old arrested in fatal shooting of man, 65, in Shakopee

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Maplewood police: Theft suspect dies after telling officers he took drugs

End of Document

New March on Washington announced as George Floyd is eulogized in Mpls.

ARTICLE CCCLII. NEW MARCH ON WASHINGTON ANNOUNCED AS GEORGE FLOYD IS EULOGIZED IN MPLS.

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 4B

Length: 212 words

Byline: PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

A new March on Washington was announced Thursday from the Minneapolis sanctuary where George Floyd was eulogized.

The Rev. Al Sharpton said the date for the mass gathering will be Aug. 28, the 57th anniversary of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream Speech" that further energized the civil rights movement of the 1960s.

Sharpton made the announcement before King's eldest son, Martin Luther King III, and others assembled at the downtown campus of North Central University for the first of three services memorializing Floyd, the black man who was pinned under the knee of a white police officer on May 25 and died that night.

"We're going back to Washington, Martin," Sharpton said during his eulogy for Floyd. "That's where your father stood in the shadows of the Lincoln Memorial and said 'I have a dream.'"

The civil rights leader from New York said it's time "to restore and recommit that dream to stand up, because just like at one era we had to fight slavery, another era we had to fight Jim Crow, another era we dealt with voting rights. This is the era to deal with policing and criminal justice.

"We need to go back to Washington and stand up - black, white, Latino, Arab - in the shadows of Lincoln and tell them this is the time to stop this."

PAUL WALSH

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLIII. ROUNDTABLE ON RACE, POLICING ENVISIONS ROADMAP FOR REFORM

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 597 wordsByline: PATRICK CONDON; RYAN FAIRCLOTH; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

It wasn't long after George Floyd was honored in a stirring service beamed around the country that work resumed for both politicians and community members geared toward a goal of racial justice.

Reforms were the topic at a closed roundtable on police brutality just a few blocks west of 38th and Chicago late Thursday afternoon. Gov. Tim Walz, U.S. Rep. Ilhan Omar, Mayor Jacob Frey and others listened to citizen concerns.

Walz said the meeting, which was closed to the press, was full of "raw emotion" and an overwhelming desire to seize the moment for changes to policing methods and oversight.

Minnesota lawmakers are set to convene a previously scheduled special session at the end of next week.

"To think that all this momentum is going to stop in a legislative session, that is absolutely ludicrous," Walz said.

Walz cited bail reform as one area where he sees the potential for bipartisan collaboration.

Omar also joined in the roundtable at Sabathani Community Center. The Minneapolis Democrat, joined by fellow U.S. Rep. Ayanna Pressley of Massachusetts, enumerated federal legislation they will push: an independent agency to investigate police-involved killings and excessive use of force, and emergency funds to help rebuild neighborhoods where properties were set ablaze or looted.

Frey said a road map for reform is taking shape but that the Minneapolis police union's contract is likely to be the stumbling block. City Council Member Jeremiah Ellison said the city needs to "dramatically reimagine" how it keeps residents safe and consider "if policing is needed at all."

While Minneapolis streets have largely been calm in recent nights, protests around the country in response to Floyd's death have continued to roil some cities. That includes in Fargo, N.D., where there has been violence amid protesting that prompted a National Guard deployment in that state.

Roundtable on race, policing envisions roadmap for reform

Walz ordered Minnesota National Guard troops to Moorhead and surrounding communities late Wednesday out of concern for potential unrest in the Fargo-Moorhead area. There is a demonstration planned for Friday afternoon in Fargo's Island Park, which organizers have pledged will be nonviolent.

Neighbors grilled food, vendors handed out canned goods and fruit, and a mood of calm prevailed at the south Minneapolis memorial for George Floyd into Thursday evening.

Many in the crowd were pleased that all four officers involved in Floyd's May 25 death outside the Cup Foods at East 38th Street and Chicago Avenue are now all arrested and charged. After harrowing days of demonstrations and outbreaks of violence, there was pride in a community that banded together.

"All I can do at this moment is hope and pray and have faith that all this is going to work out," said Latoya Showers, who'd set up a stand nearby to hand out hygiene products.

"This is so beautiful," Showers said of the scene unfolding at the memorial for Floyd, which saw a visit by some of his family members and prominent mourners including the Rev. Jesse Jackson, following his afternoon memorial service in downtown Minneapolis.

Showers she said she would be holding her breath as the prosecution of the officers gets underway.

Janice Douglas said for her, true justice would go far beyond the potential conviction of the officers. She wants to see deep reforms to American policing and immediate policy changes, she said.

"I've been angry. I've been hurt," said Douglas, 59. "But I feel like we're going forward with making things better."

Staff writer Kim Hyatt contributed to this report.

Patrick Condon · 612-673-4413

Ryan Faircloth · 612-673-4234

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

'We couldn't breathe'

ARTICLE CCCLIV. 'WE COULDN'T BREATHE'

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 8ALength: 374 wordsBody

In an emotional and historically significant memorial service in Minneapolis on Thursday, George Floyd was remembered as a loving person who took care of others and generously dispensed caring hugs.

Civil rights icons, elected officials, pro athletes and other celebrities were among those who joined family members to celebrate Floyd's life and grieve for him. The private memorial was held on the campus of North Central University, located about 3 miles from the intersection where the unarmed, handcuffed Floyd died in police custody on Memorial Day.

The soft background music belied the intensity of the feelings expressed. Mourners closed the service by standing in silence and prayer for eight minutes and 46 seconds - the same amount of time that Floyd, 46, was pinned to the ground by police. The death of the African-American man ignited demonstrations around the nation and the world.

The Rev. Al Sharpton, longtime civil rights activist and MSNBC host, delivered a powerful eulogy that used what happened to Floyd as a metaphor for conditions faced by African-Americans: "What happened to Floyd happened every day. ... We were like George, we couldn't breathe." Sharpton said that neither he nor the Floyd family condone looting or violence. But he added that there is a difference between those "calling for peace and those calling for quiet. You just want us to shut up and suffer in silence."

"We have to stand up in George's name and say, 'Get your knee off our necks,' " Sharpton said. "This is the time for dealing with accountability in the criminal justice system."

Floyd family attorney Benjamin Crump said the "pandemic of racism and discrimination killed George Floyd" and that his death is the moment that gives the "best opportunity in a long time" to reach the ideals on which America was founded.

In that spirit, early in the service North Central President Scott Hagan announced that the Christian school would start a scholarship in Floyd's name dedicated to inspiring young black leaders. He challenged other colleges to do the same.

Thursday's memorial can serve as a healing moment for Minnesota and the rest of a shocked and angry nation, but only if justice and systemic change come next. There's no more time to waste.

'We couldn't breathe'

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

CRITIC'S PICKS

ARTICLE CCCLV. CRITIC'S PICKS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: VARIETY; Pg. 3ELength: 367 wordsByline: CHRIS RIEMENSCHNEIDER; JON BREAM; STAFF WRITERS; SHEILA REGAN, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

critics' picks

The Steeles

Now: On Thursday last week, Jearlyn Steele called Dakota proprietor Lowell Pickett, saying the Steeles needed to sing. So in response to what was happening in the Twin Cities in the wake of George Floyd's death, the Steeles gave an impromptu, livestreamed two-hour concert for healing on Saturday in Jevetta Steele's front yard. Captured by three cameras with good-quality audio, the Steele siblings purged pain, soothed souls and raised spirits with soul classics, pop prayers, Steele originals, solace-seeking sermons and a liberating, exhilarating "Wang Dang Doodle." Included were guest appearances by Patty Peterson, Sara Groves, Amondo Dickerson and others as well as a first-rate band. The unrehearsed, overwhelmingly emotional performance is exactly what Minnesota needs right now. It is archived on the Dakota's Facebook page.

JON BREAM

ComedySportz Twin Cities vs. ComedySportz Seattle

Saturday: Minnesota has shown dramatic signs of opening up recently, but for the entertainment world, including music, theater and comedy, things are still very much happening virtually only. ComedySportz Twin Cities brings its competitive brand of laughs, with opposing teams wearing red and blue, to the comfort of your living room as they face off against ComedySportz Seattle. Audience members can join the chat to offer suggestions in this streaming, pay-what-you-can show for all ages. (7:30 p.m. Sat., sliding scale, csztwincities.com.)

SHEILA REGAN

Blues Fest Live

Mondays: Since their big, groovy get-together in July was canceled, organizers of the Lowertown Blues & Funk Fest are livestreaming virtual performances via Crowdcast each week with some of the acts that were due to play. This week features Joyann Parker and her guitarist Mark Lamoine, who showed off their classic, soulful and semi-twangy blues power last week at the Crooners drive-in concert series and have been playing their own requests gig at home every Wednesday. This month's other players in the Lowertown series are Hamilton Loomis on June 15, Mark Cameron on June 22 and Big George Jackson on June 29. (7 p.m. Mon., crowdcast.io/lowertownfest; and 7 p.m. Wed., Facebook and Instagram.)

CRITIC'S PICKS

CHRIS RIEMENSCHNEIDER

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

Her community reeling, a young Minneapolis entrepreneur presses on

ARTICLE CCCLVI. HER COMMUNITY REELING, A YOUNG MINNEAPOLIS ENTREPRENEUR PRESSES ON

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 350 words

Byline: Dylan Thomas

Body

With her neighborhood still reeling from the police killing of George Floyd and the unrest that followed, one young, black South Minneapolis entrepreneur continues to work toward her goal of opening a brick-and-mortar shop for her cold-pressed juice business.

Catiesha Pierson, 30, is attempting to raise $70,000 to open The Dripping Root, a business that got its start as a delivery service run out of her home about two-and-a-half years ago and gained a following through social media. Pierson signed a lease in March for a storefront on the 4000 block of Minnehaha Avenue, a space that's about three blocks south of her home and about a mile-and-a-half south of the Lake Street and Minnehaha Avenue intersection that became a focal point for protests in the days following Floyd's death.

"It just makes me want to build it even more. It's tragic what happened," said Pierson, who as of midday Thursday had raised over $10,000 toward her goal through an online Go Fund Me campaign. "... My business, as a black woman, needs to be there."

Her community reeling, a young Minneapolis entrepreneur presses on

She aims to open the store in July on a block that's already home to Dumpling, a 4-year-old pan-Asian restaurant now temporarily closed by the pandemic. In addition to cold-pressed juices and ginger shots, Pierson will serve smoothie bowls and plans to expand the menu with tea and tap kombucha and other items in the future.

Pierson said she intended to open the store without even taking out a loan, relying instead on financial support from family members. When that plan fell through, she decided to ask for help.

However, it's not an easy time to put out that call, Pierson acknowledged. Established businesses were already seeking support to keep the lights on during the Covid-19 pandemic. Then the furious response to Floyd's killing damaged or destroyed dozens of independent businesses on and near Lake Street.

"For my business to be in that same community, blocks away, for it to still be standing, I'm so blessed, so thankful," Pierson said.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Indoor dining returns next week for Minnesota's bars and restaurants. Not everyone is ready.

ARTICLE CCCLVII. INDOOR DINING RETURNS NEXT WEEK FOR MINNESOTA'S BARS AND RESTAURANTS. NOT EVERYONE IS READY.

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 915 words

Byline: Dylan Thomas

Body

Minnesota's bars and restaurants can reopen their dining rooms next Wednesday for the first time since a pandemic shutdown took hold March 17.

Gov. Tim Walz announced today that dining rooms will be allowed to reopen at 50% capacity, up to 250 people. The state will also allow patios to open for up to 250 people, when they'd previously been limited to 50.

Restaurants have to maintain 6 feet between parties, per social distancing guidelines, and employees must wear masks. Anyone heading out to eat must still have a reservation.

It's the latest loosening of the restrictions imposed almost 12 weeks ago to slow the spread of Covid-19, following the limited reopening of patios on June 1.

Indoor dining returns next week for Minnesota's bars and restaurants. Not everyone is ready.

After the turbulence of the past few months, some operators plan to take a wait-and-see approach, sticking for now with the takeout programs they've honed this spring. Others are poised to welcome back guests, even though their businesses will be hampered by the revenue-limiting capacity restrictions.

"I would get catatonic if we got a 2% drop in sales. Now we're going to get 50%," said Phil Roberts, CEO of Edina-based Parasole Restaurant Holdings, Inc., who added that the company nevertheless plans to open its restaurants for both patio and indoor dining Wednesday. The pandemic struck at an especially inopportune time for Parasole, cancelling the company's sale to a private equity partnership just two weeks after the deal was announced.

While a welcome change, it's not great news, either, for the team that runs Lord Fletcher's in Spring Park on Lake Minnetonka, which does the majority of its business for the year in just June, July and August. Lord Fletcher's lakeside patio is among the Twin Cities' largest and would be far from full even at the 250-guest maximum.

"It's pretty much roughly 25% capacity for us," said Tom Emer, one of three partners in the restaurant. "It's better than what we have. Right now, I have 46 people out there and reservations are full all day. I've got 50 people coming in every hour-and-a-half."

Brent Frederick of Minneapolis-based Jester Concepts said his team spent the pandemic shutdown crafting a business plan to operate the company at just 50% revenue. With dining rooms open at half capacity and even fewer restrictions on patio dining, Frederick said he potentially could beat that figure.

"I think it's enough to get back open, get the majority of our staff hired back and get break-even while we maneuver to get our sales to 100," he said of the governor's announcement on the new guidelines.

Frederick is opening three of his restaurants for patio service today and said he thinks all four will be open for indoor dining within two weeks. Timing will depend largely on staffing, and not all of his employees are comfortable returning to work, he said.

"I have employees on the sidelines now, saying, 'We don't feel safe,'" he said. And not without good reason; as Frederick pointed out, several restaurants, including Revival and the trio of Broders restaurants in Minneapolis are among those temporarily closed after one or more staffers tested positive Covid-19

When Jester Concepts employees do return to work, they'll need to undergo training on the company's updated health and safety plan - another factor that could slow the reopening of dining rooms.

Frederick said it's essential now for restaurateurs to rebuild trust with both employees and guests. To that end, Jester Concepts plans to publish its new 22-page Covid-19 plan on its restaurants' websites.

For some restaurants, though, the governor's announcement doesn't change anything - or at least not right away.

"We aren't prepared to open," said Tracy Singleton, owner of Minneapolis' Birchwood Café. Instead, the restaurant will continue to operate the curbside carryout and delivery program it started after the pandemic shuttered dining rooms.

"We have what works for us in the capacity that we're operating right now, which is not letting any customers in," she said.

Indoor dining returns next week for Minnesota's bars and restaurants. Not everyone is ready.

On top of the operational and financial turmoil of the last few months - Singleton and her crew are still figuring out what the latest adjustments to the Small Business Administration's Paycheck Protection Program mean for their restaurant - she said the Birchwood team is still coming to grips with police killing of George Floyd and the community uprising that followed.

"There are bigger things happening in our country. We don't want to go back to business as usual, because there's no such thing right now," Singleton said.

The Birchwood is just over a mile from the Third Precinct building that burned May 28 and five blocks north of Lake Street, where there was widespread looting and damage to businesses over several days. Staffers have been trading off two-hour overnight watch shifts ever since someone threw a brick through the glass front door and ransacked the restaurant, making off with two empty cash drawers.

"They just threw stuff around. They just made a mess. They broke some coffee cups," she said.

Given the predictions that the protest gatherings could lead to a wave of Covid-19 infections, Singleton said she's not even sure her neighbors would be ready to enter the dining room next week.

"We're taking stock of how we are going to be in the world. Some of that's at an individual level, and some of that is at an organizational level. And we're part of a larger community," she said.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Marchers who attacked trucker on I-35W won't be charged

ARTICLE CCCLVIII. MARCHERS WHO ATTACKED TRUCKER ON I-35W WON'T BE CHARGED

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 3B

Length: 591 words

Byline: PAUL WALSH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: Investigation of driver and his actions continues.

Body

State authorities are declining to charge any of the many protesters on the Interstate 35W Bridge in Minneapolis who attacked and injured a truck driver who barreled through marchers demonstrating in reaction to George Floyd's death.

The decision comes as authorities press ahead with their criminal investigation of the driver, 35-year-old Bogdan Vechirko, and also try to figure out why his route to the bridge hadn't been impeded miles earlier.

In explaining why the enraged people on the bridge will not be prosecuted, state Bureau of Criminal Apprehension (BCA) spokeswoman Jill Oliveira said Wednesday that "the scope of the BCA investigation was to determine the intent of the truck driver."

And when investigators questioned Vechirko, they learned the trucker from Otsego was not interested in helping authorities build cases against those who went after him.

"The truck driver indicated to the BCA that he does not wish for charges to be filed against anyone for his injuries or damage sustained during the incident," Oliveira said.

Vechirko suffered cuts to his face, and his wife said this week that his cellphone, wallet and other items in the truck's cab were stolen. The assault stopped only after others on the bridge and police intervened.

In the meantime, investigators continue to look into the potentially deadly actions of Vechirko, who was released from jail Tuesday as the probe continues amid anger from people on the bridge and others that he has not been charged with what authorities initially alleged was assault.

"Even once he got into the crowd, instead of going down the middle, where the crowd had already cleared out, he veered left, stopped, then kept pushing through the crowd despite the people in front of him," said Rachael Wright, who, along with all the others, avoided being hit. "So maybe the first plow through wasn't enough to show intent, but the second was."

Marchers who attacked trucker on I-35W won't be charged

State Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington at first seemed to exonerate Vechirko on Monday and said he "panicked" and wasn't aiming for the protesters. But he reversed course a day later, saying, "we are certainly getting to the right charge that holds him accountable."

State officials also are trying to piece together why barricades meant to protect the thousands of marchers weren't in place in time to prevent the speeding truck and several other vehicles from coming upon the crowd massed on the bridge over the Mississippi River.

Harrington said the BCA directed the Minnesota Department of Transportation (MnDOT) to seal off the necessary interstate ramps by 5 p.m. to protect the marchers as they made their way from U.S. Bank Stadium to the bridge.

Vechirko was returning from a fuel delivery to a south Minneapolis gas station when he got on Interstate 94 via the Hennepin/Lyndale ramp at 5:44 p.m., that MnDOT spokesman Jeremy Loesch said was not barricaded in time to protect protesters a few miles away congregating Sunday on the I-35W Bridge. The truck would end up nearly hitting many of the marchers.

Harrington said his agency should not bear any blame for what could have been tragic circumstances.

"I don't see us as being culpable," he said. "When you suddenly have a group of people run out into traffic, how fast can you ... get the traffic stopped becomes problematic.

"We had a very quick response. Under different circumstances, I would have preferred to have had that highway shut down hours before. Then there would have been little to no chance that [truck being on the bridge] would have happened."

Paul Walsh · 612-673-4482

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Moore says roots of injustice show in policing

ARTICLE CCCLIX. MOORE SAYS ROOTS OF INJUSTICE SHOW IN POLICING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: SPORTS; Pg. 4C

Length: 388 words

Byline: KENT YOUNGBLOOD; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: The Lynx star also said minorities know a different America than Drew Brees does.

Body

Maya Moore has put her WNBA career with the Lynx on hold for two seasons. Her mission, in large part, was working to overturn the conviction of Jonathan Irons, whom she and others feel was wrongly convicted - and given a 50-year sentence - for burglary and assault decades ago.

In an interview with ESPN on Thursday, Moore spoke out about events around the nation since the Memorial Day death of George Floyd while in the custody of the Minneapolis police. She also was asked about the recent comments by New Orleans Saints quarterback Drew Brees, who said he disagreed with NFL players kneeling in protest during the national anthem before later apologizing for his remarks.

"It's been overwhelming, just like any human being, watching what's going on," Moore said.

But having battled for Irons for so long - a fight that helped lead to his conviction being overturned in March - Moore has some insight into the history going back to slavery that connects to recent protests.

"These roots, and that culture, is still in our modern day," Moore said, adding it "shows itself through policing, through prosecutorial misconduct, through numerous things that are systematically in place. Right now we're having our eyes opened to the bad news of what's going on. But also I think now people are able to have their eyes on the good news of where we can go, who we can become, now that we've actually started to acknowledge where we are."

Back in 2016, Moore - along with teammates Rebekkah Brunson, Seimone Augustus and Lindsay Whalen - had the Lynx wear T-shirts in warm-ups for a game that urged change in the wake of Philando Castile being shot during a traffic stop in Falcon Heights and, earlier, Alton Sterling having been shot by police outside a store in Baton Rouge, La., not far from where Augustus grew up.

On ESPN, Moore was asked about Brees, who in an interview Wednesday with Yahoo Finance reiterated his stance that he would never agree with anybody disrespecting the American flag.

Moore says roots of injustice show in policing

"The other half of what Drew, I think, was starting to see - and other people can see - is that this symbol of freedom and bravery in America means that for a portion of the population," Moore said. "There are so many - namely black and brown bodies - who have experienced a different America than what the mainstream American flag symbolizes."

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCLX. RESOLVE FOR CHANGE DOMINATES MEMORIAL

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 795 wordsByline: ZOE JACKSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

They came bearing flowers to consecrate the ground where George Floyd died last week under the knee of a police officer. But the crowd gathered around Cup Foods in south Minneapolis on Thursday wasn't looking back.

Their gaze was on an uncertain future that holds no guarantee of change.

For Jayce Morgan-Pettiford of Minneapolis, what happened to Floyd could happen to anyone. She works in mental health services and thought of her clients, who are also at risk because of a lack of understanding between law enforcement and marginalized people.

She said what's needed "is getting the government or the police department to realize that we're not going to back down. More community outreach, us being open with one another, is what is getting us and the world to see that we're not going to be silent anymore."

Morgan-Pettiford and others talked about wanting better-educated, better-trained Minneapolis police.

"Once they get more information, we'll have less deaths in our community," she said. "Ask questions first before you just draw a gun. Ask questions before you just decide you want to put your knee on someone's neck even though that's not what you're supposed to do. Know what's going on around you before you decide you're just going to end a life without any remorse."

Rashaad Dinkins attended most of the protests over the past week. He said that after the four officers in custody are prosecuted, there should be reforms inside the department. "I would personally like to see the police just start over. Get new people and new training and new ideas of diversity and inclusion and what that means, and understanding your own biases," he said. "That's really important, for the people who are supposed to protect us to understand the difference between your mind and what's actually happening."

Many people committed themselves to doing whatever they could to help with the memorial, and for the days ahead. With wholesaler support, Lexington Floral in Shoreview donated $10,000 worth of flowers to the memorial outside of Cup Foods.

"There's nowhere around here that's open to buy flowers. It's such an important part of grief," said owner Allie Tempelis.

St. Paul Central High School baseball coach Kevin Pitman has mostly been helping folks in the Midway community by contributing food, cleaning and passing out masks. On Thursday, he came to Floyd's memorial.

"I felt the need to come down here and see the beautiful things that are occurring, because I see them all over the place," Pitman said.

Artist Annabel Huspeni was on the scene in the hope of creating something for the Floyd family.

"I got the idea from a friend to come out here and paint live. I thought it was a good idea for healing, supporting and trying to add some positivity for the community," Huspeni said. She hoped to give the portrait of Floyd that she was working on to his family, or to Cup Foods to display.

There were tents with water and food to feed thirsty protesters and those unable to get fresh food as a result of the week's store closures. They were organized by Ira Weatherspoon and his St. Paul martial arts studio Capoeira Minnesota.

"When it comes down to it, it was necessary," Weatherspoon said. "People are in need, supply lines have been pretty cut off, so it's hard to get things over to people, especially those who are older ... or have been out of work because of the pandemic. It's our duty as a community to take care of each other. It's what we should do, always."

Eli Davis was compelled to drive from Milwaukee. When he heard about what was happening in Minneapolis, he said it just seemed unreal. Seeing the memorial in person, he was touched.

"I hope that people start to become aware of the little pieces of racism that grow into seeds from which people grow trees and hang bodies from," Davis said.

Zoey Sazama had jumped into her car too, feeling useless in Duluth. She hopes that momentum for reform will continue and grow.

"The amount of love and community in this area is amazing, and it's brought me to tears a couple of times today. I hope that this continues and spreads throughout the city and the state and the country," Sazama said.

In the coming weeks, Weatherspoon wants people to continue to look out for one another, to make sure neighbors are fed, to check on their mental health. But he also wants accountability.

"[I want] complete accountability for those who are sworn to protect and serve us. And when they fail to do their job, they should be held accountable and if necessary punished to the fullest extent of the law," Weatherspoon said. "We can't tolerate any more injustice."

Zoë Jackson covers young and new voters at the Star Tribune through the Report For America program, supported by the Minneapolis Foundation. 612-673-7112 · @zoemjack

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Resolve for change dominates memorial

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCLXI. RESPOND STRONGLY TO CHINA ON HONG KONG

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 8ALength: 557 wordsHighlight: Beijing's regional and domestic aggression is best met through ideals, revitalized alliances.Body

"Hide our strength, bide our time," said Deng Xiaoping, China's former leader. Xi Jinping, China's current president, seems to believe the opposite.

Shaking off his failures that let an outbreak in Wuhan become a global coronavirus pandemic, Xi is quickening the crackdown on Hong Kong by championing a new national-security law that would allow China to severely limit the freedoms of speech, press and assembly, as well as judicial independence, that were guaranteed when the United Kingdom handed Hong Kong over in 1997. The rules were part of the Basic Law, which was supposed to allow Hong Kong to retain rights under a promised "one country, two systems" rubric. But like so much under the repressive regime, that was a lie.

On May 27, the U.S. State Department informed Congress that it no longer believed that Hong Kong had significant autonomy, a designation that was reflected in President Donald Trump's decision to "begin the process" of ending portions of Hong Kong's favorable economic status with the United States.

There is justifiable bipartisan anger over China's increasingly aggressive and repressive regime. Chinese citizens aren't just threatened in Hong Kong. More than 1 million Muslims have been imprisoned in gulags - or worse - in Western China. Abroad, China's territorial claims have led to maritime provocations; it is currently skirmishing with India over a long-festering border dispute; and it continues to menace Taiwan. Meanwhile, China maintains its predatory business and trade practices.

The bellicosity abroad reflects domestic weakness, including an export economy that's ailing in the pandemic. Here in the U.S., China has become an increasingly important issue in the 2020 campaign, with both Trump and de facto Democratic nominee Joe Biden exchanging accusations about the other being "soft" on China.

The current climate is reminiscent of the run-up of the Cold War. But it would be unfortunate for the world to devolve back to that kind of conflict, especially when international cooperation is needed to tackle transnational challenges like climate change and, yes, the coronavirus.

Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi said on May 24, "It's time for the United States to give up its wishful thinking on changing China."

Respond strongly to China on Hong Kong

No, it's not. The U.S. and its allies never gave up wishful thinking on the Soviet Union. But it's important to remember what carried the West in the Cold War: ideals, international institutions and allies. All three have been eroded under Trump, including his announcement on Friday that the U.S. was withdrawing from the World Health Organization, ostensibly because of China's influence on it, which would only solidify with this decision. And through a nationalist newspaper, China called out the U.S. for its "double standards" on Hong Kong and the growing protests over George Floyd's killing. "Hong Kong's rioters and police should carefully watch how the 'democratic U.S.' deals with the chaos in Minnesota," the Global Times wrote.

Trump should continue America's historic support for human rights and democracy abroad and better reflect them at home. And more than ever, the U.S. needs allies; alienating them through moves like the WHO defunding only strengthens China's hand. Such hard issues, and not who is "soft" on China, should be the real debate this election season.

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

STORES BEGIN REOPENING FOLLOWING RIOTS

ARTICLE CCCLXII. STORES BEGIN REOPENING FOLLOWING RIOTS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1DLength: 478 wordsByline: NICOLE NORFLEET; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Groceries and other retailers were back in business this week, though their hours vary.Body

Retail outlets throughout the Twin Cities have begun to slowly reopen this week after many temporarily shut their doors in the wake of violence that followed the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

Many stores in Minneapolis and St. Paul were damaged as rioters looted, smashed windows or painted graffiti on buildings. Others closed as a precaution.

Over recent days, customers have had to guess which stores have reopened, with many retailers choosing to limit their hours or close completely out of an abundance of caution after hundreds of businesses in Minneapolis and St. Paul were vandalized, looted or had doors and windows smashed in the chaos following Floyd's death.

Minneapolis-based Target, which has had a handful of its local stores damaged or looted in recent days, has reopened most of its stores in the Twin Cities area, including the St. Paul Midway store, and it anticipates most other stores will open in the next couple of days, a company spokesman said Thursday.

The retailer announced earlier that it had altered hours or temporarily closed more than 200 of its Target stores across the country because of the unrest. Target CEO Brian Cornell has said the retailer hopes to reopen its Lake Street store - one of the first to be looted and damaged - before the end of the year.

Most Cub Foods also are open, although hours have been altered to meet curfews. The stores on S. 26th Avenue and W. Broadway will be closed for the foreseeable future because of heavy damage from the riots, the supermarket said.

On Thursday afternoon, many other major retail stores, grocers and pharmacies the Star Tribune called or visited in the metro area also were open - some still with windows and doors boarded up. Hours of operation varied widely and often were incorrect on company websites or Google searches.

STORES BEGIN REOPENING FOLLOWING RIOTS

The Walmart in West St. Paul was busy with shoppers buying garden supplies, groceries and essentials though some of the windows were still boarded up.

At the reopened Maplewood Mall, customers waited patiently to get their eyebrows shaped in one shop, but several clothing stores and eateries remained closed.

On St. Paul's East Side, a CVS Pharmacy parking lot bustled with cars, while across Arcade Street a sign on the front door of the Walgreens said "We are CLOSED."

About 400 CVS locations across the country have been damaged over the past several days. Most have since reopened.

In the Twin Cities area, six stores remained closed as of Thursday morning, but plans were to reopen them as quickly as possible, a company spokeswoman said.

The Mall of America, which postponed its Monday opening, has yet to announce its reopening date.

Several stores in the suburbs were returning to normal hours as curfews outside Minneapolis and St. Paul were lifted. Rosedale Center reopened Tuesday.

Nicole Norfleet · 612-673-4495

Twitter: @nicolenorfleet

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

Strong quarter for mower sales takes edge off Toro's numbers slide

ARTICLE CCCLXIII. STRONG QUARTER FOR MOWER SALES TAKES EDGE OFF TORO'S NUMBERS SLIDE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 1D

Length: 366 words

Byline: PATRICK KENNEDY; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Highlight: Overall sales dipped 3.4%, driven by a decline in the professional segment.

Body

Forced to stay at home because of the coronavirus pandemic, many people turned their attention to home-and-garden projects.

That helped Toro make up some of the lost revenue in the second quarter from its larger professional segment, down nearly 9% because of COVID-19.

Overall sales for the quarter were $929.4 million, down 3.4%, the Bloomington-based company said on Thursday. Earnings for the second quarter were $98.4 million, or 92 cents a share, down 14.8% from the same period a year ago. Both missed analysts' estimates.

Residential sales in the second quarter increased 12.9% to $262 million with strengths in zero-turn riding and walk-power mowers. The segment also benefited from an expanded retail network, including the recent addition of Tractor Supply Stores. The unit made $37.1 million in the quarter, up 68.5%.

The professional segment, which produces 78% of overall sales, saw quarterly sales drop 8.6% to $723.5 million. The segment's earnings declined nearly 30% to $106.3 million.

Like many companies, Toro pulled its guidance for the remainder of the year, citing the uncertainties of the economy.

The company did say it expects the most pronounced declines in the third quarter and negative year-over-year comparisons in the fourth.

"In May, the residential segment momentum continued - driven by the same factors, while the professional segment saw a significant step down in some markets as customers reduced capital budgets and deferred new purchases," said Toro's chairman and chief executive, Rick Olson, in a news release.

The net-sales decrease in the second quarter was partly offset by the recent acquisitions of Charles Machine Works in 2019 and the addition of Ventrac earlier this year.

Strong quarter for mower sales takes edge off Toro's numbers slide

Toro bought the Oklahoma-based Charles Machine Works a little over a year ago in its largest-ever acquisition. Olson told analysts on the company's earnings call that Toro was on track to meet or exceed its integration and synergy goals.

Olson opened the earnings call by acknowledging the death of George Floyd and the larger social and system issues surrounding his death.

Shares of Toro closed down 2% at $69.90. Toro's shares year-to-date are down 14%.

Patrick Kennedy · 612-673-7926

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

Target commits $10 million to support social justice, rebuilding

ARTICLE CCCLXIV. TARGET COMMITS $10 MILLION TO SUPPORT SOCIAL JUSTICE, REBUILDING

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 269 words

Byline: Carter Jones

Body

Target Corp. said Friday the company is committing $10 million to support a group of long-standing partners, including the National Urban League and the African American Leadership Forum.

Target (NYSE: TGT) and the Target Foundation is planning on adding additional partners in the Twin Cities and beyond to invest in minority owned businesses and entrepreneurs, along with efforts to promote equity in the areas of housing, asset-building and workforce development.

By mid-June, grant applications will open to help small businesses rebuild.

"Target stands with Black families, communities and team members. As we face an inflection point in Minneapolis and across the country, we're listening to our team, guests and communities, committed to using our size, scale and resources to help heal and create lasting change," said CEO Brian Cornell.

Target commits $10 million to support social justice, rebuilding

The Minneapolis-based retailer is providing 10,000 hours of pro-bono consulting services for minority owned small businesses in the Twin Cities that are working to rebuild, following widespread rioting sparked by the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis Police custody.

Target Circle, the company's loyalty program, will offer guests the option to direct Target funds to local nonprofits and include organizations supporting social justice.

"In the weeks and months ahead, our teams are committed to listening and learning from our communities and nonprofit partners to better understand how Target can support their longer-term needs," the announcement states.

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

THE DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

ARTICLE CCCLXV. THE DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 5, 2020 Friday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 4ALength: 198 wordsBody

"Go home. Get your rest, George. You changed the world, George."

The Rev. Al Sharpton

"Everywhere you go and see people, how they cling to him. ... They wanted to be around him."

Floyd's brother Philonise

"We didn't have much, but we had a house full of love."

Floyd's brother Rodney

"There was a shared sense of community in [the sanctuary] and in the street about using this moment to finally commit to taking action to address these systemic injustices."

U.S. Sen. Tina Smith, D-Minnesota

This memorial service "stands as a public marking point to say 'never again.' "

Matt Allen of St. Paul

"There's a lot that I hope comes out of this - a lot. But what I want are equal opportunities."

Tyrone Burton of Wyoming, Minn.

"It's sacred. It feels like we're all one."

Rachel Rohling of Prior Lake, at 38th and Chicago Avenue

"Things can change. There's hope that change can come."

Maudeline St.-Jean of Burnsville

"I felt like it was important. ... This is our community. This is our home."

THE DEATH OF GEORGE FLOYD

Kyle Rudolph, Vikings tight end

"It's time for us to stand up in George's name and say get your knee off our necks."

The Rev. Al Sharpton

"My hope is for equality and justice for all mankind."

Lester Royal of Minneapolis

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

End of Document

Twin Cities nonprofits raise $1.3M for minority-owned businesses damaged in protests

ARTICLE CCCLXVI. TWIN CITIES NONPROFITS RAISE \$1.3M FOR MINORITY-OWNED BUSINESSES DAMAGED IN PROTESTS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 187 words

Byline: Bob Shaw

Highlight: Three big nonprofits are teaming up to spend $1.3 million to help businesses damaged by arson and looting. The Greater Twin Cities United Way announced Friday it was collaborating with the Minneapolis Foundation and the St. Paul and Minnesota Foundation to create the Twin Cities Rebuild for the Future Fund. Hundreds of businesses were damaged [...]

Body

Three big nonprofits are teaming up to spend $1.3 million to help businesses damaged by arson and looting.

The Greater Twin Cities United Way announced Friday it was collaborating with the Minneapolis Foundation and the St. Paul and Minnesota Foundation to create the Twin Cities Rebuild for the Future Fund.

Hundreds of businesses were damaged in the metro area when the May 25 killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody sparked protests around the world.

The fund is intended to support small businesses owned by people of color. It will pay for repairs, equipment, technology, building materials and relocation expenses.

The $1.3 million was raised separately, and is not part of the United Way's budget for 2020. Dozens of homeless people evicted from Minneapolis hotel 1,000 face layoffs as owner idles paper mills in Duluth, Wisconsin 'Like the first day of school': Fitness centers across Minnesota prepare to reopen Fever checks at the door, no facials or blow drying: Hair salons 'reinventing' under coronavirus St. Paul police officer one of six area leaders to land 2020 Bush Foundation fellowships

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Watch: Walz announces opening of indoor dining, gyms, movie theaters, bowling alleys

ARTICLE CCCLXVII.

WATCH: WALZ ANNOUNCES OPENING OF INDOOR DINING, GYMS, MOVIE THEATERS, BOWLING ALLEYS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 562 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz announced Friday that restaurants and bars can return to limited indoor service and that health clubs, movie theaters and other entertainment venues can reopen with limited operations as well. Also: swimming pools can open, more sports are allowed, and religious and social gatherings can be bigger. It will all start Wednesday. [...]

Body

Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz announced Friday that restaurants and bars can return to limited indoor service and that health clubs, movie theaters and other entertainment venues can reopen with limited operations as well.

Also: swimming pools can open, more sports are allowed, and religious and social gatherings can be bigger.

It will all start Wednesday.

Here's some of what Walz announced:

Restaurants and bars: Indoor service allowed at 50 percent capacity; reservations only; no more than 250 people. Restaurant owners say they're ready and eager. Gyms and health clubs: Can open at 25 percent capacity; classes allowed only with social distancing; outdoor classes can have up to 25 people. Movie theaters, arcades and bowling alleys: Can reopen at 25 percent capacity, no more than 250 people. Pools: Can reopen at 50 percent capacity. Gatherings and events: For people not of the same household, gatherings of up to 10 people indoors and 25 outdoors will be allowed. Sports: "Low-risk" sports like tennis can resume competitions, while "high-risk" activities like basketball cannot.

RELATED: Here is a more complete list of everything that's new.

More guidance is available on the state's reopening website at mn.gov/deed/covid.

PARADOXES

As every change of rules has, the latest changes immediately raised questions.

For example, what about baseball? (It's considered high-risk; practice only.)

Watch: Walz announces opening of indoor dining, gyms, movie theaters, bowling alleys

And what about graduation ceremonies? (If you can follow all the rules of the venue, total size and social distancing, then yes, Walz said.)

The outdoor limit of 250, of course, has been smashed day after day by mass demonstrations and protests following the killing of George Floyd. While expressing some reservations about disease spread, Walz, by and large, has encouraged peaceful protests when social distancing has been observed, even though they're still in direct violation of his orders.

Walz has justified this by speaking of Floyd's death as a "singular moment in history," arguing that the catharsis of communal grieving and outcry can be a salve to a wounded society. However, he conceded that Health Commissioner Jan Malcolm has expressed "deep concern" over the sights of throngs gathering in marches and demonstrations in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

WHY OPEN MORE UP?

Malcolm said coronavirus cases appeared to have reached a plateau - for the time being at least.

Walz noted that under White House guidance, the state would remain more closed, but a new normal needs to be established.

"COVID is still with us, but we gotta live with it," he said.

These "turns of the dial" toward less restrictions signify that, he said.

WHAT'S NOT CHANGED?

Social distance, social distance, social distance, state leaders repeated Friday.

The strongest tools against the respiratory virus remain the following, they said, and everyone should continue to practice them:

Stay six feet apart from others not in your household. Wear a mask when that might be difficult.

Additionally:

Stay home if you have any symptoms or think you've been exposed, call your doctor and get tested. Practice good hygiene, including washing your hands and cleaning high-use surfaces.

TELECOMMUTERS KEEP TELECOMMUTING

If you've been working from home, nothing changes, said Steve Grove, commissioner of the Department of Employment and Economic Development.

"If you can work from home, you must work from home," he said.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Zeus Jones hosting free legal clinic for impacted people and businesses

ARTICLE CCCLXVIII.

ZEUS JONES HOSTING FREE LEGAL CLINIC FOR IMPACTED PEOPLE AND BUSINESSES

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 5, 2020 Friday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 296 words

Byline: Patrick Rehkamp

Body

Zeus Jones is hosting a pro bono professional services clinic at its South Minneapolis office.

The consulting firm is bringing in law firms to offer guidance and advice for those impacted by the death of George Floyd, the recent protests and riots, and issues related to Covid-19. The firm was trying to line up some clinics since so many nearby businesses were harmed by the coronavirus, but the recent turbulence in the Twin Cities sprung the firm into action, according to Zeus Jones' Partner Jen Shadowens. Zeus' office space has been vacant for weeks, so it was easy to use the building.

"There are so many struggling around us," Shadowens said. "We had been thinking during Covid-19, before the unrest, that the building has been sitting empty" so we should use it for free events.

English- and Spanish-speaking attorneys will be available to answer questions and guidance on issues like bankruptcy, immigration and criminal defense for those arrested from protest-related events. The event will be walk-in on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Zeus Jones hosting free legal clinic for impacted people and businesses

Shadowens said the next two Saturdays are already scheduled for additional pro bono events and other potential future dates could move to other locations in the metro area.

The law firms offering pro bono legal services at the event include:

- Abuelhassan Law
- Bullock Law
- El Abogado Mexicano/Square 1 Legal
- Iris Ramos Law
- Schorbahn Family Law

Aside from Zeus Jones, Community Legal Collective and the Whittier Alliance are partners in the clinic.

Details:

- Pro bono clinic at Zeus Jones this Saturday (June 6, plus June 12 and June 19)
- Address: 2429 Nicollet Ave
- Time: 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.
- Walk-in only, first-come, first-served

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 5, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLXIX. BAN SET ON CHOKEHOLDS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1261 wordsByline: LIZ NAVRATIL; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Mpls. puts new limit on police use of forceBody

The Minneapolis Police Department will ban officers from using chokeholds and neck restraints and strengthen the requirements for officers to intervene if a colleague is using excessive force under a new deal negotiated between the city and the state.

The tentative agreement - which still requires a judge's approval - also seeks to give the public more access to officers' disciplinary decisions and to limit the number of supervisors who can authorize the use of tear gas, rubber projectiles and other similar tactics to disperse demonstrators.

The deal came 11 days after 46-year-old George Floyd died after being pinned on the pavement by Minneapolis police, an act captured in a video that went viral and prompted protests against racism and police brutality around the world.

The council's decision follows the Minnesota Department of Human Rights announcement Tuesday that it was filing a civil rights charge against Minneapolis police and investigating whether it had engaged in racial discrimination over the past 10 years.

"This is just a start," state Human Rights Commissioner Rebecca Lucero said during a public meeting Friday. "There is a lot more work to do here, and that work must and will be done with deep community engagement."

City leaders around the nation have come under intense pressure to make radical changes to policing following Floyd's death. Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti said he would slash a planned budget increase for his department. In Minneapolis, a "Defund MPD" rally is planned for Saturday, and some council members are vowing to "dismantle" the department.

The new agreement instructs the department to update its policies and procedures "to prohibit the use of all neck restraints or chokeholds for any reason."

Ban set on chokeholds

A policy posted on the city's website shows that officers are allowed to use neck restraints that keep people conscious if the person is "actively resisting." They are authorized to use a neck restraint that renders someone unconscious if they are "exhibiting active aggression," "for life saving purposes," or if the person is "exhibiting active resistance" and "lesser attempts at control have been or would likely be ineffective."

A Star Tribune review of Minneapolis police data found that the use of neck restraints has declined, compared with other types of force that officers use. Still, police used neck restraints about 430 times since 2012, with people losing consciousness in 68 of those cases.

More than half of the people involved in neck restraint incidents were black. According to the latest census data, about 19% of people living in Minneapolis are black.

Gov. Tim Walz, in a news conference Friday afternoon, described the decision to ban chokeholds as "a pretty damn low bar, in terms of things we hadn't had."

"Those who think now is not the right time, and those who think that we need to think about this a little longer have certainly not been paying attention," Walz said. "If you needed the wake-up call, it happened last Monday and continues to right now."

In addition, the negotiated agreement also seeks to strengthen the requirement for officers to intervene if their colleagues are using too much force. It requires them to "immediately report the incident while still on scene by phone or radio to their Commander or their Commander's superiors."

It also notes that "regardless of tenure or rank," officers must "attempt to safely intervene by verbal and physical means," and notes that if they don't, they "shall be subject to discipline to the same severity as if they themselves engaged in the prohibited use of force."

The most recent publicly posted policy indicates that officers are required "to protect the public and other employees."

It states: "It shall be the duty of every sworn employee present at any scene where physical force is being applied to either stop or attempt to stop another sworn employee when force is being inappropriately applied or is no longer required."

Four Minneapolis police officers were fired and later charged in Floyd's death. According to the latest court documents, former officer Derek Chauvin held his knee on Floyd's neck for 8 minutes and 46 seconds. Prosecutors have said officer J Alexander Kueng held Floyd's back and Thomas Lane held his legs. A fourth officer, Tou Thao, was seen on video watching nearby.

The city's agreement with the state also requires the chief or a deputy chief designated by the chief to sign off on the use of nonlethal projectiles, tear gas and other similar tactics to break up crowds. Police projectiles have caused serious injuries among demonstrators in the Twin Cities and nationwide.

The agreement also instructs the city to work through a backlog of disciplinary cases, respond to them faster in the future and post decisions publicly, when allowed by state law. It also allows the Office of Police Conduct Review to "proactively and strategically audit body-worn camera ... footage ... and file or amend complaints on behalf of the Minneapolis Civil Rights Department."

Ban set on chokeholds

Many of those changes will go into effect within days of a judge's approval. The deal also gives the city until July 30 to compile a list of state laws that impede public transparency or officer discipline.

A copy of the negotiated agreement was filed in court Friday, officials said, and a judge will set a date for a hearing, which could occur as early as next week.

Police Chief Medaria Arradondo said in a statement Friday afternoon that he "will continue to work on efforts to improve public trust, public safety and transformational culture change of the MPD."

"I will be bringing forth substantive policy changes," he said.

As the state's unprecedented investigation moves forward, many will be watching to see if it can accomplish what prior investigations have been unable to.

The police department entered into a federal mediation agreement with the U.S. Justice Department in 2003 aimed at addressing a host of police issues such as use of force, diversity and race relations. A Department of Justice review released in 2015 determined that some aspects of the department's internal discipline process fell short, and it recommended changes.

To arrive at the details of the latest agreement, Lucero spoke privately with Minneapolis City Council members. They approved it unanimously during a public meeting Friday, and Mayor Jacob Frey signed off on it moments later.

"I think there were times where the commissioner pushed us, and there were times where I felt like we were saying, 'No, bring the hammer a little harder down on us,' " Council Member Jeremiah Ellison said during Friday's public council meeting.

Minneapolis Director of Civil Rights Velma Korbek cautioned council members that while the initial stages of the state's investigation have gone smoothly, other parts could be uncomfortable.

"It will be intense, and intentional, and it will feel and be invasive," she said, "and it should be, if we are serious about making the changes this time."

Council Member Cam Gordon said he hopes the state Department of Human Rights "will be a strong and independent voice, and they won't defer to the council or the mayor or anyone else."

Gordon, like some other council members, lamented that they hadn't pushed harder for more drastic reforms in the past.

"We have failed in this capacity," he said. "If there was an opportunity to plead guilty, I think we should plead guilty, and I think that is what we are doing with this."

Staff writers Briana Bierschbach and Jeff Hargarten contributed to this report.

Liz Navratil · 612-673-4994

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLXX. PROSECUTORS SEEK RIGHT MIX OF CHARGES IN GEORGE FLOYD CASE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1008 wordsByline: Michael TarmHighlight: CHICAGO (AP) - As damning as video evidence in the George Floyd case appears to be, prosecutors know they must bring the right charges underpinned by sound legal logic if they hope to convict a Minnesota officer in Floyd's May 25 death.Body

CHICAGO - As damning as video evidence in the George Floyd case appears to be, prosecutors know they must bring the right charges underpinned by sound legal logic if they hope to convict a Minneapolis officer in Floyd's May 25 death.

Exhibit No. 1 at trial is likely to be bystander video showing officer Derek Chauvin pressing his knee into the back of Floyd's neck as the handcuffed Floyd says he can't breathe. Chauvin held his knee there even after the 46-year-old black man stopped moving.

But strong video evidence doesn't mean a conviction will be easy. When it comes to police officers charged with crimes in the line of duty, it never is.

"This is not a shoo-in," said Mike Brandt, a Twin Cities defense attorney. "There are lots of lines prosecutors have to connect. If you raise questions about even one, you could raise reasonable doubts."

Here's a look at some questions and answers about the charges against Chauvin and three other officers, who were all fired:

Q: WHAT ARE THE CHARGES?

A: Prosecutors this week added a new charge against the 44-year-old Chauvin: unintentional second-degree murder. Initial charges of third-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter remain.

Thomas Lane, J. Alexander Kueng and Tou Thao are charged with aiding and abetting both second-degree murder and second-degree manslaughter.

A conviction of second-degree murder carries a maximum penalty of 40 years in prison; third-degree murder carries up to 25 years; and manslaughter up to 10.

Prosecutors seek right mix of charges in George Floyd case

Potential sentences for the other officers depend on a conviction of Chauvin. If he's convicted of second-degree murder, they could face the same 40-year maximum.

Q: WHAT ARE THE ELEMENTS OF SECOND-DEGREE MURDER?

A: Under Minnesota law, unintentional second-degree murder involves causing "the death of a human being, without intent ... while committing or attempting to commit a felony offense."

The second part of that clause is crucial. Prosecutors say Chauvin killed Floyd while committing felony assault on Floyd.

For third-degree murder, prosecutors must demonstrate Chauvin caused Floyd's death by actions "eminently dangerous to others and evincing a depraved mind, without regard for human life."

The complex and some argue poorly defined concept of "evincing a depraved mind" has been the subject of courtroom debate, so it's potentially harder to prove.

"The second-degree murder charge is far more appropriate," Brandt said. "It's spot-on."

Q: COULD FIRST-DEGREE MURDER CHARGES BE ADDED?

A: It's possible, and it's something Floyd's family wants. Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison, who is leading the prosecution team, said he's leaving open the possibility of new charges.

But first-degree murder would require a whole new level of evidence. Prosecutors would have to prove premeditation and intent. It would also require a motive.

Brandt said it would be a stretch, adding, "I think it is out of the question."

Q: ARE THERE RISKS OF OVERCHARGING?

A: Yes, especially in cases in which prosecutors face intense public pressure. Jurors may be more likely to acquit or become hopelessly deadlocked in cases where prosecutors bring charges they can't prove.

Q: SO WHAT'S THE CHARGING STRATEGY?

A: Bringing multiple charges against the officers is a way to give jurors a choice. It boosts the chances of a conviction on at least one charge.

Prosecutors know jurors are often torn. They often want to satisfy relatives' desire for justice with a conviction, while also showing some leniency to defendants.

If jurors struggle for a consensus, multiple charges allow for a compromise verdict, with convictions on some charges and acquittals on others.

Q: DID FLOYD POSE A THREAT?

A: A central issue in cases alleging excessive force by police is whether a suspect posed a threat.

The Supreme Court offered guidance in a 1989 ruling, saying an officer's fear is relevant to guilt and that officers "are often forced to make split-second judgments." The reasonableness of an officer's use of force, it said, should be judged "from the perspective of a reasonable officer on the scene, rather than with the 20/20 vision of hindsight."

Prosecutors seek right mix of charges in George Floyd case

It will be hard for Chauvin's lawyers to argue their client felt threatened or was forced to make a split-second decision with Floyd handcuffed behind his back, his face pressed into the pavement. In the video, Chauvin appears almost nonchalant, calmly slipping his hand in his pocket at times.

Q: WHAT MIGHT DEFENSE LAWYERS ARGUE?

A: Chauvin's attorneys could try to zero in on the cause of Floyd's death, blaming existing health problems, said Brandt.

They may point to the Hennepin County autopsy, which said Floyd died of "cardiopulmonary arrest, complicating law enforcement subdual, restraint, and neck compression." It also noted fentanyl intoxication and recent methamphetamine use, as well as signs of heart disease and hypertension, without listing any of those factors as a cause of death.

A separate autopsy commissioned by Floyd's family concluded he died of asphyxiation due to neck and back compression.

Either way, prosecutors will argue the ultimate cause was Chauvin's actions.

Lawyers for Chauvin and the other officers also are likely to argue that nationwide outrage and protests triggered a rush to judgment.

Q: WHAT ABOUT THE OTHER OFFICERS?

A: Proving charges against them could pose the greater challenge, especially with Thao.

Lane and Kueng allegedly held Floyd's legs as Chauvin pushed on his neck. That could convince jurors they actively contributed to Floyd's death.

Thao, though, was standing several feet away, sometimes with his back turned to his colleagues.

"The mere presence at the scene does not constitute aiding and abetting," said Brandt.

Attorneys for Kueng and Lane have highlighted their clients' status as far junior to Chauvin.

Defense attorney Earl Gray said Lane asked Chauvin, a training officer, if they should turn Floyd over. According to the criminal complaints, Chauvin said no.

Gray said at an initial hearing Wednesday: "What is my client supposed to do other than follow what the training officer said?"

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLXXI. TWIN PROTESTS PRESS MESSAGES

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 6ALength: 750 wordsByline: SHANNON PRATHER; MATT MCKINNEY; STAFF WRITERS, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

More than 1,000 protesters crowded downtown St. Paul on Friday afternoon below the offices of Attorney General Keith Ellison to hear speakers call for a review of recent police shootings and community control of police, in the wake of the police-involved death of George Floyd.

"Change is coming!" shouted Marques Armstrong of the Racial Justice Network. "I feel it in my spirit. I feel it in my bones."

The crowd heard from several people who had lost loved ones in police shootings, including the grandfather of Brian Quinones-Rosario, who was killed in September by officers from the Richfield and Edina police departments. Authorities said he had threatened the officers with a knife, but relatives said police didn't need to kill him to arrest him.

Don Williams, Quinones-Rosario's grandfather, told the crowd that "it is not the time to get complacent."

Ellison on Wednesday upgraded charges against former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin, who knelt on Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes while arresting him. Ellison also charged three other officers at the scene with aiding and abetting murder.

Those moves followed more than a week of protests, sometimes violent, calling for tougher action against the former police officers.

D'Andre Tolson of St. Paul said he joined the protest because he "wanted to help out and do what I can and share my voice in the protest and be another body in the crowd."

Rachel Carpentier, also of St. Paul, said she came to listen. "For me, being a white person, I know that the black community cannot do it alone," she said. "We need the white people out here to stand up with them."

Twin protests press messages

Maurice Perkins, a U.S. Army veteran and Iraqi war veteran, went to the rally at U.S. Bank Stadium Friday afternoon because "it's about George Floyd, but it's also about the fight to end systematic injustice in the country."

Perkins said he grew up in the same Houston neighborhood as Floyd and graduated from the same high school, and moved to Minnesota last year. "To see all of these people united together for the same cause, for me, I take it personally. I feel like they're speaking up for me," he said.

The U.S. Bank Stadium rally drew hundreds of peaceful protesters who expressed outrage over Floyd's death.

Hip-hop music blared over portable loud speakers as the crowd milled, with organizers handing out water and snacks and leading the now-familiar call-and-response, "Say his name! George Floyd!"

College students Teshawn Kelly and Chris Similhomme were part of the crowd of mostly teens and young adults outside the stadium. Kelly said staying home this week was not an option. Both men expressed frustration at "opportunists" who used protest as a cover to loot and burn.

"I don't want to see the change, I want to be part of the change happening," said Kelly, 22, who attends Minnesota State University, Mankato.

Similhomme, also 22 and a student at MSU Mankato, said he was heartbroken by Floyd's killing. The criminal charges filed against the four officers involved was "step one, honestly. The whole system needs to change," he said.

Margaret Engel, 18, of Minneapolis, was attending her seventh protest. She and two friends have been attending events all over the Twin Cities, and said that the speakers have made them excited about the Black Lives Matter movement. "We have a voice that we need to use, especially with our white privilege," she said.

Nicole Strom said the video of Floyd's death provided strong motivation to protest. "It was absolutely disgusting. No human being should be treated that way, especially based on their skin color," said Strom, 18, of Minneapolis.

Anika Bowie, vice president of the Twin Cities chapter of the NAACP, addressed the crowd and demanded the resignation of Bob Kroll, head of the Minneapolis police union whom many accuse of setting a belligerent tone for the rank and file.

Tamara McLemore, 22, of Eagan, came to the Minneapolis protest with a group of friends to "fight for justice." She said the widespread protests have forced public officials to act. "Protesting made them charge the officers," she said.

McLemore added that Floyd's death was shocking. "I cried and I was disgusted," she said. "Why do they keep killing black people? It's so easy for them."

Eventually protesters began marching from downtown Minneapolis to Cup Foods, the site of Floyd's death. As they chanted and waved signs, neighbors waved and cheered in support.

Twin protests press messages

matt.mckinney@startribune.com

612-673-7329

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCLXXII.

MINNEAPOLIS BANS POLICE CHOKEHOLDS IN WAKE OF FLOYD'S DEATH

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 878 wordsByline: Steve KarnowskiHighlight: MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Minneapolis agreed Friday to ban chokeholds and neck restraints by police and to require officers to try to stop any other officers they see using improper force, in the first concrete steps to remake the city's police force since George Floyd's death.Body

Minneapolis agreed Friday to ban chokeholds and neck restraints by police and to require officers to try to stop any other officers they see using improper force, in the first concrete steps to remake the city's police force since George Floyd's death.

The changes are part of a stipulation between the city and the Minnesota Department of Human Rights, which launched a civil rights investigation this week in response to the death of Floyd. The City Council approved the agreement 12-0.

Human Rights Commissioner Rebecca Lucero said the changes are necessary to stop ongoing harm to people of color "who have suffered generational pain and trauma as a result of systemic and institutional racism."

"This is just a start," Lucero said. "There is a lot more work to do here, and that work must and will be done with speed and community engagement."

Floyd's death is prompting reexamination of police techniques elsewhere. California Gov. Gavin Newsom on Friday ordered the state's police training program to stop teaching officers how to use a neck hold that blocks the flow of blood to the brain.

The decision on whether to use the hold is up to each law enforcement agency, and Newsom said he will support legislation to outlaw the method. The San Diego Police Department and San Diego County Sheriff's Department are among the agencies that announced this week that they would stop using the hold, known as a carotid hold or sleeper hold.

"We train techniques on strangleholds that put people's lives at risk," Newsom said. "That has no place any longer in 21st-century practices and policing."

Minneapolis bans police chokeholds in wake of Floyd's death

The Minneapolis agreement requires court approval and would become enforceable in court, unlike the department's current policies, which already cite the duty of sworn employees to stop or try to stop inappropriate force or force no longer needed. The agreement would also require officers to immediately report to their superiors when they see use of any neck restraint or chokehold.

Floyd died after Officer Derek Chauvin pressed his knee on the handcuffed black man's neck, ignoring his "I can't breathe" cries and bystander shouts even after Floyd stopped moving. His death has set off protests around the world.

Chauvin is charged with second-degree murder. Three other officers are charged with aiding and abetting. All have been fired.

Lucero said the changes go further than the department's current policies. Any officer who doesn't try to stop the improper use of force would face the same discipline as if they had used improper force.

The agreement also would require authorization from the police chief or a deputy chief to use crowd control weapons such as tear gas, rubber bullets and flash-bang grenades. Such tactics have been used in Minneapolis and other cities in the past week to disperse protesters.

The stipulation also sets a process for the city and state to negotiate longer-term changes, such as changing state laws that make it difficult to fire problem officers.

Minneapolis police Chief Medaria Arradondo said in a statement that he "will continue to work on efforts to improve public trust, public safety and transformational culture change" of the police force.

"I will be bringing forth substantive policy changes," said Arradondo, whose statement did not provide details.

Meanwhile, a man who was with Floyd on the night he died told The New York Times that his longtime friend didn't resist arrest and instead tried to defuse the situation before he ended up handcuffed on the ground.

Maurice Lester Hall was a passenger in Floyd's car when police approached him May 25 as they responded to a call about someone using a forged bill at a shop. Hall told the newspaper that Floyd was trying to show he was not resisting.

"I could hear him pleading, 'Please, officer, what's all this for?'" Hall told the Times.

Authorities say Hall, whose name is spelled Morris Lester Hall in court records, is a key witness in the state's investigation into the four officers who apprehended Floyd. Hall's identity wasn't made public until the Times' report. Bruce Gordon, spokesman for the Department of Public Safety, said Hall initially gave a false name to officers at the scene.

Hall told ABC's "Good Morning America" that the situation escalated quickly and police grabbed Floyd, put him in a squad car, dragged him back out and then "jumped on the back of the neck." He said Floyd was put in an ambulance and that he didn't know his friend had died until the next day, when he saw bystander video on Facebook.

"I'm going to always remember seeing the fear in Floyd's face because he's such a king," Hall told the Times. "That's what sticks with me, seeing a grown man cry, before seeing a grown man die."

Minneapolis bans police chokeholds in wake of Floyd's death

Hall's attorney, Ashlee McFarlane, told The Associated Press that Hall would not be doing any more interviews. She declined further comment.

Associated Press writer Amy Forliti contributed to this report. Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

DC paints huge Black Lives Matter mural near White House

ARTICLE CCCLXXIII.

DC PAINTS HUGE BLACK LIVES MATTER MURAL NEAR WHITE HOUSE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 846 wordsByline: Ben Fox

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - The city of Washington capped nearly a week of demonstrations against police brutality Friday by painting the words Black Lives Matter in enormous bright yellow letters on the street leading to the White House, a highly visible display of the local government's embrace of protests that has put it further at odds with President Donald Trump.

Body

By BEN FOX

WASHINGTON (AP) - The city of Washington capped nearly a week of demonstrations against police brutality Friday by painting the words Black Lives Matter in enormous bright yellow letters on the street leading to the White House, a highly visible display of the local government's embrace of protests that has put it further at odds with President Donald Trump.

Mayor Muriel Bowser said the painting by city workers and local artists that spans two blocks is intended to send a message of support and solidarity to Americans outraged over the killing of George Floyd by police in Minneapolis.

It comes as the mayor has sparred with Trump over the response to the protests and as D.C. prepared for a demonstration on Saturday that was expected to bring tens of thousands of people into a city still under coronavirus restrictions.

"We know what's going on in our country. There is a lot of anger. There is a lot of distrust of police and the government," the mayor said at a news conference. "There are people who are craving to be heard and to be seen and to have their humanity recognized. We had the opportunity to send that message loud and clear on a very important street in our city."

The letters and an image of the city's flag stretch across the entire width of 16th Street to the north of Lafayette Square. The mural ends near St. John's Episcopal Church, where Trump staged a photo op on Monday after officers in riot gear fired tear gas and charged demonstrators to make way for the president and his entourage.

A sign now identifies that section of 16th Street near the White House as "Black Lives Matter Plaza."

DC paints huge Black Lives Matter mural near White House

Bowser has complained about the heavy-handed federal response to the protests and called for the removal of out-of-state National Guard troops.

She says the differences with the Trump administration highlight the need for the District of Columbia to be a state and have more control over its affairs. They may also reflect the fact that Trump is deeply unpopular in the district, where Democrat Hillary Clinton won about 90% of the vote in the 2016 presidential election.

While not addressing the painted mural, Trump continued his attacks on Bowser in tweets Friday.

"The incompetent Mayor of Washington, D.C., @MayorBowser, who's budget is totally out of control and is constantly coming back to us for 'handouts,' is now fighting with the National Guard, who saved her from great embarrassment over the last number of nights," he tweeted. "If she doesn't treat these men and women well, then we'll bring in a different group of men and women!"

She shrugged off his criticism. "You know that thing about the pot and the kettle," the mayor said.

The local chapter of Black Lives Matter said it did not support painting the street and took a swipe at Bowser, whom they see as insufficiently supportive of their efforts to combat abuses by the police.

"This is performative and a distraction from her active counter organizing to our demands to decrease the police budget and invest in the community," it said on Twitter.

D.C. officials have long-standing grievances against the federal government.

Bowser and the D.C. Council have long resented Congress, which retains the right to alter and even reverse any city law. It was Congress, not Trump, that cost the District of Columbia more than $700 million in federal funding earlier this year by classifying it as a territory rather than a state in the first big coronavirus relief package.

But with Trump in office, Bowser's relations with the White House seem to have eroded steadily, finally developing into open public antipathy over the handling of the current protests.

Trump criticized Bowser and Washington's Metropolitan Police Department for taking a soft touch with the protesters. He warned after the first night of protests that the Secret Service was ready to unleash "the most vicious dogs and the most ominous weapons I have ever seen" if protesters managed to breach the security fence around the White House.

Bowser called Trump's remarks "gross" and said the reference to attack dogs conjures up the worst memories of the nation's fight against segregation.

The public feud escalated from there, with Trump essentially usurping Bowser's authority by ordering multiple federal agencies and the entire 1,700-member D.C. National Guard contingent into the streets.

On Thursday, as the protests remained peaceful, Bowser ended a curfew imposed after people damaged buildings and broke into businesses over the weekend and Monday.

In recent days, thousands of demonstrators have marched peacefully between the White House, Capitol and Lincoln Memorial. Volunteers make their way through the mostly masked crowds offering spritzes of hand sanitizer, free water and snacks.

DC paints huge Black Lives Matter mural near White House

Metropolitan Police Department Chief Peter Newsham said there had been no arrests on Thursday and Friday related to the demonstrations. Bowser said she would decide Saturday morning if they would reinstate the curfew for the weekend demonstrations.

Associated Press writer Ashraf Khalil in Washington contributed to this report.

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Roger Goodell says NFL was wrong for not listening to players

ARTICLE CCCLXXIV.

ROGER GOODELL SAYS NFL WAS WRONG FOR NOT LISTENING TO PLAYERS

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 385 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: NEW YORK (AP) - NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said the league was wrong for not listening to players fighting for racial equality and encouraged them to peacefully protest.

Body

NEW YORK - NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said the league was wrong for not listening to players fighting for racial equality and encouraged them to peacefully protest.

One day after 2018 NFL MVP Patrick Mahomes and several of his peers released a video demanding the league condemn racism, Goodell made his strongest statement on the issues many players passionately support.

George Floyd's death has ignited nationwide protests over racial injustice and police brutality, issues former San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick began speaking out against in 2016 when he started taking a knee during the national anthem.

We, the NFL, condemn racism and the systematic oppression of Black People. We, the NFL, admit we were wrong for not listening to NFL players earlier and encourage all to speak out and peacefully protest. We, the NFL, believe Black Lives Matter. #InspireChange

- NFL (@NFL)

"It has been a difficult time for our country. In particular, black people in our country," Goodell said in a video released Friday. "First, my condolences to the families of George Floyd, Breonna Taylor, Ahmaud Arbery and all the families who have endured police brutality. We, the National Football League, condemn racism and the systematic oppression of black people. We, the National Football League, admit we were wrong for not listening to NFL players earlier and encourage all to speak out and peacefully protest. We, the National Football League, believe Black Lives Matter. I personally protest with you and want to be part of the much needed change in this country.

"Without black players, there would be no National Football League. And the protests around the country are emblematic of the centuries of silence, inequality and oppression of black players, coaches, fans and staff. We are listening. I am listening, and I will be reaching out to players who have raised their voices and others on how we can improve and go forward for a better and more united NFL family."

Roger Goodell says NFL was wrong for not listening to players

MLS announces plan to return with summer tournament pic.twitter.com/ENWQP8A0sv June 5, 2020 In a normal year, Gophers would have several MLB draft picks Wild star Matt Dumba teams up with fellow hockey players to eradicate racism The Athletic lays off 8 percent of staff Twins are prepared for an MLB draft like no other

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCLXXV.

SECOND CITY CEO STEPS DOWN AMID CLAIMS OF RACISM AT THEATER

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 363 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: LOS ANGELES (AP) - Andrew Alexander, the CEO and co-owner of famed The Second City improv theater, said he is stepping down after a former performer leveled accusations of racism against the comedy institution.

Body

LOS ANGELES - Andrew Alexander, the CEO and co-owner of famed The Second City improv theater, said he is stepping down after a former performer leveled accusations of racism against the comedy institution.

In a lengthy letter posted on the company's website, Alexander said he "failed to create an anti-racist environment wherein artists of color might thrive. I am so deeply and inexpressibly sorry,"

He vowed Friday that he will be replaced by a person of color.

The originally Chicago- and Toronto-based Second City was an early training ground for "Saturday Night Live" players including John Belushi, Dan Aykroyd, Gilda Radner and Chris Redd, among other comedy stars such as Keegan Michael-Key and the company produced "SCTV" TV series in the 1970s and '80s.

Alexander's announcement Friday followed online criticism from Second City alumnus Dewayne Perkins, an actor, comedian and writer ("Brooklyn Nine-Nine"). Perkins said the company had refused to hold a benefit show for Black Lives Matter unless half of the proceeds also went to the Chicago Police Department, and it also created obstacles for performers of color.

His tweets were in reply to a Second City tweet posted last week in support of Black Lives Matter amid protests around the country over the death of George Floyd, a black man who died at the hands of police in Minneapolis.

In a tweet noting Alexander's resignation, Perkins had a one-word comment: "Oop."

The London-born Alexander said he is "fully removing myself from overseeing The Second City's operations and policies and will divest myself from the company as it stands."

Second City CEO steps down amid claims of racism at theater

A Second City statement Friday laid out steps the company planned to take regarding the hiring and training of artists of color, along with diversifying its theater audiences and making donations to fight oppression and support black-owned businesses and schools. Coronavirus: 8 things we got wrong - at first - about the deadly pandemic 'Cops,' on air for 33 seasons, dropped by Paramount Network Trump pushes conspiracy theory about Buffalo protester Tropical downpours in the Twin Cities? Thanks, Cristobal When protesters cry 'defund the police,' what does it mean?

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

Agency faces big test as it takes over probe

ARTICLE CCCLXXVI.

AGENCY FACES BIG TEST AS IT TAKES OVER PROBE

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1ALength: 1116 wordsByline: BRIANA BIERSCHBACH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

Leading a massive investigation into the Minneapolis Police Department is a small state agency with a contentious history: threatened budget cuts, backlogs of complaints and a growing portfolio that has left investigators stretched thin.

Now, the Minnesota Department of Human Rights is embarking on its biggest task yet, digging into a decade's worth of the city's police procedures, policies and practices to determine if the department has engaged in systemic practices that discriminate against communities of color.

With fewer than 50 employees and a budget of $5 million a year, the agency will be a focal point of the state's response to George Floyd's death in police custody on Memorial Day, which sparked protests across the country and abroad.

"We have a small and mighty team," said Human Rights Commissioner Rebecca Lucero, who Gov. Tim Walz appointed to the job last year. "This is a big deal. Not only is it the first time the state is launching a civil rights investigation into the largest police department in the state, but also this feels like a real moment in time where there's political will and alignment from community to leadership at every level."

Investigating complaints is part of the core function of the agency, created 53 years ago to enforce civil rights laws. But the scale of the task ahead is unusual for a state-level agency to take on, especially one with limited resources. In the aftermath of Michael Brown's shooting by Ferguson, Mo., police in 2014, the U.S. Justice Department launched civil rights investigations into the department that resulted in years of mandated changes under court supervision.

"I have never, never heard of a state agency taking on a local municipality for human rights or civil rights violations. It's practically unheard of," said DeWitt Lacy, an attorney in the Los Angeles John Burris Law Offices, which won Rodney King v. LAPD in 1993. "It's really a herculean endeavor. The state knows they can't fumble this, they know this is serious and the eyes of the world are upon them."

The state has changed dramatically in the five decades since the department was created.

Agency faces big test as it takes over probe

In 1980, 1% of Minnesota's total population was black or African-American, compared to 7% in 2018. And over the years, lawmakers have expanded the responsibilities of the department.

The Minnesota Legislature passed the state's human rights act in 1973, making it illegal to discriminate against people on the grounds of race, religion and sex. They tasked the Human Rights Department to enforce it. Since then the number of protected classes has grown to include things such as sexual orientation and familial status. The state now has 13 protected classes in all.

The department also now enforces minority hiring standards for any contract with the state, as well as a 2013 law that prevents private employers from asking about criminal history in job applications and interviews, known as "ban the box."

The growing mandates have sometimes left investigators struggling to keep up with demands. A February report from the Office of the Legislative Auditor found the agency received an average of 675 complaints in each of the last three years and closed an average of 575 cases. At the end of the 2019 fiscal year, some 800 cases were awaiting determination, according to the report. That was the largest number since 2013.

Investigators in the department, which totaled 13 in 2019, reported having roughly 60 cases per person. The auditor's office recommended the department try to triage complaints to act on the most urgent matters as quickly as possible.

"It takes them a long time to conduct their investigations, longer than it should," said Judy Randall, deputy legislative auditor. "They are overwhelmed with the number of complaints, and because they treat each one equally, it's this huge backlog."

Kevin Lindsey, who served as commissioner of the department under Gov. Mark Dayton's administration, said one of his missions when he started was to address the department's history of "docket and dismiss" - only addressing or replying to a small fraction of complaints.

But within months of starting the job in 2011, during a budget deficit, he was sitting in front of state legislators pleading against proposed cuts to the department that ranged from 50 to 65% of its overall budget. Similar cuts were proposed again in 2018, despite a budget surplus. Those cuts ultimately weren't enacted, and the department's budget has increased in recent years, but staffing is still down from a historic high mark of roughly 70 employees.

"There's no way you can look at the current Department of Human Rights, knowing they've added 'ban the box,' knowing that you want them to ensure that contractors are really providing equal employment opportunity, and you want them to investigate complex cases?" Lindsey said. "They're underfunded."

Lucero said the federal government could get involved in the case, but she doesn't believe they are "looking to create long-term change." She adds that the Minnesota Human Rights Act is one of the strongest civil rights laws in the country.

"There are still 26 states where you can be fired for being gay," she said. "Not in Minnesota."

Since coming to the department, Lucero has settled a rape case against Ramsey County and a sexual harassment case against West Lutheran High School in Plymouth, among others. She's sued a plasma collection company for banning donations by transgender persons.

Agency faces big test as it takes over probe

Even as her department takes on the Minneapolis Police Department inquiry, she said she does not plan to drop any ongoing cases.

But Lucero is not dismissive of the challenge ahead, which will take two tracks: more immediate changes to the department, and potentially long-term changes backed by a court-imposed consent decree.

On the shorter timeline, Lucero negotiated an agreement that Minneapolis City Council members passed Friday to ban officers from using neck restraints and choke holds. Officers also would be required to intervene when they determine that inappropriate force is used. Any short-term agreement will require approval from a judge.

The larger investigation could take a year or longer, depending on what investigators find and the level of city and police cooperation.

"The community already knows what the solutions are, we just need to put some teeth behind them," Lucero said. But she's optimistic. "This is a unique moment in history, where you've heard the mayor, city leadership and certainly from the community for a very long time that this kind of big change needs to happen. There's such alignment that simply did not exist in Ferguson and Baltimore."

Briana Bierschbach · 651-925-5042

Twitter: @bbierschbach

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLXXVII.

GAZELKA URGES CAUTION ON POLICE REFORMS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 6ALength: 795 wordsByline: JESSIE VAN BERKEL; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Body

The top Republican in the Minnesota Legislature said Friday that lawmakers meeting in a special session next week should not act too quickly on reforms in the aftermath of George Floyd's death in police custody.

"I do believe more work can be done. But to actually expect that to be done in the next week is not how the legislative bodies work," said Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake. "We meet in committees and we fully vet issues to make sure we get it right. Because it's not just for now, this is for a generation to come."

Gazelka's comments follow calls by Gov. Tim Walz and DFL leaders pressing for swift action on measures to curb police abuses. Floyd died on Memorial Day after a Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck for nearly nine minutes during an arrest.

Gazelka's suggestion of a drawn-out legislative response is "completely dismissive of the urgency to protect the black community" and shows why large-scale criminal justice legislation hasn't happened in the past, Senate Minority Leader Susan Kent, DFL-Woodbury, said in a statement Friday.

Walz said Wednesday that legislators' commitment to police reforms will be on display next week when they convene in St. Paul for a special session triggered by an extension of Walz's emergency powers to combat the COVID-19 pandemic. "I will guarantee you, there will be bills put on the floor and put to a vote. Yes or no. Put your money where your mouth is and send it forward," Walz said.

Lawmakers also are expected to take up a bonding bill to fund major infrastructure projects around the state. Minneapolis and St. Paul are seeking state money to help rebuild from the destruction of the violent protests that followed Floyd's death.

House Republicans blocked a $2 billion bonding bill at the end of the regular session last month in an effort to end Walz's emergency powers. Now a group of DFL legislators has threatened to withhold their votes as well unless they gain significant changes to law enforcement practices.

Gazelka urges caution on police reforms

Earlier this week, members of the Legislature's People of Color and Indigenous Caucus and DFL House Speaker Melissa Hortman suggested about two dozen policy changes, including increasing oversight of officer licensure and training, expanding de-escalation training, creating incentives for officers to live in the communities where they work, and moving prosecution of officer-involved deaths to the Attorney General's Office - as has been done in Floyd's case.

Many of the DFL proposals align with recommendations released in February by a state working group led by state Public Safety Commissioner John Harrington and Attorney General Keith Ellison focused on reducing police-involved deadly force encounters.

The governor said Friday that the police reform measures he wants are already in place elsewhere in the country. He encouraged protesters to keep the pressure on politicians as they return to St. Paul next Friday. "You build Capitols with big front yards not to admire them but to fill them with citizens," he said.

Some city officials and activists have called for dismantling the current Minneapolis Police Department and starting over with a newly constituted law enforcement service. Gazelka said abolishing the police would be "a huge mistake."

Gazelka has not outlined any reform proposals of his own but said "Minnesota needs to lead the nation in race reconciliation."

One idea that has gained attention from police critics is a proposal by state Rep. Patrick Garofalo, R-Farmington, that would eliminate the state law that mandates binding arbitration for terminated public employees, including police officers. Garofalo argues that arbitration makes it harder to fire "bad apples," but the measure is likely to be opposed by public employee unions that support DFLers.

Gazelka said he wants to focus on the unfinished business of the regular session that ended last month, including the bonding bill, tax relief and grants to small businesses. DFL leaders are expected to press again for more aid for people struggling from the economic toll of the pandemic.

Those debates will play out against the continuing partisan tensions over Walz's emergency powers, which Republicans say are no longer needed. But it would take votes in both chambers to reject another 30-day extension, and the DFL controls the lower house.

It's up to the Legislature, not the governor, to decide when the special session adjourns. But with police reform proposals and spending debates on the table, Walz said legislators' work will continue for a while.

"I think that potential is there [for this to become a long special session]," Walz said. "In this moment - what we know needs to get done - I can't imagine going before we get work done."

Jessie Van Berkel · 651-925-5044

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLXXVIII.

READERS WRITE WHITE AMERICA HAS WORK TO DO

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 8ALength: 1228 wordsBody

SYSTEMIC RACISM

The most insightful concept I've heard to explain systemic racism is that there can be racism without racists. It is with that in mind that I was surprised to read Peter Bell and Mitch Pearlstein's piece ("Change must be sought from within as well," Opinion Exchange, June 5) about how "cultural and behavioral issues in the African-American community" are to blame for the unequal condition and opportunities for African-Americans in our country (and thus presumably even the death of George Floyd).

Their piece is just another example of problematizing African-American culture, while ignoring the dominant white American culture that we all live in. Emerging research into what is coming to be known as "racially concentrated areas of affluence" reveals the damage to the social fabric, to empathy and to political will to pursue communitywide investments when whites and affluent people segregate themselves.

If Pearlstein and Bell - indeed, any of us - are serious about wanting to rebuild "essential bonds of civil society," the white community also needs to "do the hard things only it can do" to recognize its role in creating the outcomes we see today.

Cara Letofsky, Minneapolis

. . .

While I agree with the vast majority of what Bell and Pearlstein had to say in their article and certainly do not refute their statistics, I found the underlying tenor a bit disconcerting. They do I what I call "blaming dismissal" - pointing your finger at a problem and then walking away from any real solution. There were some statements that had me shaking my head. That young black people watch too much TV or play too many video games seems quite beside the point; kids of all races spend a great deal of time on their gizmos. We do want them to take school seriously, we prefer that children come from two-parent families, but these are not things that can be legislated. Pointing at them and walking away from the problem is no answer.

READERS WRITE White America has work to do

I much prefer the direction pointed out by Thomas Friedman in a recent New York Times article. Friedman cited the Northside Achievement Zone, an organization that wants the same things as Bell and Pearlstein but is actually taking constructive action. He states that NAZ is working with parents, students and local partners to drive a culture shift in predominantly black north Minneapolis to end multigenerational poverty through education and building family stability. NAZ has worked to improve access to early childhood education, focusing on skill-building attributes for success in life. The leaders recognize the problems but do not point them out and walk away.

"Blaming dismissal" is not the helpful narrative. It will not lead to any real improvement.

Cheri Rolnick, Minneapolis

. . .

The commentary by Bell and Pearlstein does nothing but promote the selfish idea that everyone must do a better job of fitting into the authors' comfortable world. No data, no facts, no solutions provided, just a shoulder shrug of "determined and prodigiously expensive efforts" that produced limited overall progress with no one happy. It is like an optometrist giving someone a too weak an eyeglass prescription and then saying, "Sorry, I tried. This is now your problem. Squint more."

I am tired of reading this simplistic, blame-shifting, selfish racism on the Star Tribune's Opinion Exchange page. The work for Minnesotans right now is to acknowledge that our attitudes, institutions and assumptions are not working for our whole state. Get to it.

Stephanie Braman, Edina

OUR COMMUNITY

Don't forget value of volunteer aid

While Minneapolis bean-counts property damage ("Aid sought for Mpls. starts at $55M," June 4), what should also be considered is the value of community service in response efforts. It is the people who are mobilizing to call for an end to systemic racism and doing the work that elected officials and paid leaders should have been doing all along.

Thousands have taken to the streets for hours every night since May 25 in peaceful protest and to voice narratives that we don't hear enough of. Then there are neighbors who keep watch over streets and businesses. How about people who organized to buy, collect and distribute food and supplies to communities because businesses were closed and mass transit shut down? And the broom brigades out cleaning up alongside those repairing damage and fortifying against further defacement - what about them? Cheers to artists and thank goodness for the beauty and promise they and painted! How many people, for how many hours, gave their time to keep people safe, fed and hopeful?

This is community aid and assistance. The dollar value for volunteering in Minnesota, cited in the analysis by independentsector.org in 2018, was $28.15 per hour. Do the math and do a better job of reporting the contributions of community service right next to the property damage estimate by the city, for it is the root cause and any damage falls squarely on its shoulders.

Kelley Skumautz, Minneapolis

POLITICS

Set blame aside, and fix this

Regarding the letter "Who's really to blame for this?" (June 5): Don't worry, there is plenty of political blame to go around. Rather, I would challenge our Republican friends to propose real, workable solutions. Clearly the Democratic leadership here has blown some real opportunities for change. Clearly we, the voters, have not held their feet to the fire enough to force political courage. But where are the Republican voices with solutions that do not involve blaming the black community for their oppression? We need a robust debate that includes many points of view, but the Republican Party has abandoned credibility. Separate yourselves from the toxic leader of your party and propose compassionate solutions. We are waiting and listening.

And about the charges ("Junior officers must speak up," Readers Write, June 5), this was the equivalent of a traffic stop. There was no violence except from the police. It was about $20, less than a parking ticket.

Alice Johnson, Minneapolis

COVID-19

We're in a pandemic, remember?

Shame on the Star Tribune. Throughout the pandemic the paper has consistently reported on the need for social distancing and mask use. So, you can imagine my frustration and, yes, anger over the paper's June 4 photo of students gathering at the lake to "celebrate the end of the school year." The photo shows kids shoulder-to-shoulder - no social distancing, no masks. The photo was headlined, "Fun in the summery sun," but the fun will soon end if or when several students bring home COVID-19 to their parents or grandparents.

Joe Silbert, Minnetonka

2020 ELECTION

One person can't save us

Tapping Michelle Obama's tremendous proven competency is tempting ("A democracy in crisis needs Michelle Obama," June 3). Yes to grace, kindness, awareness, please - but she's already giving, endlessly!

Do we still want to be saved by a hero to do the hard work of repairing and strengthening our democracy? We just tried that with a no-holds-barred, my-way-or-the-highway CEO.

Apparently capitalism and growth need the understanding of creating common good - for all. COVID-19 and George Floyd are our lessons in world community. It is up to all of us, from the grassroots, to create a world we all want to live in. We are the very saviors we've been waiting for.

Barbara Vaile, Minneapolis

We want to hear from you. Send us your thoughts here.

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCLXXIX.

SUPERIOR JOINS PROTEST OVER FLOYD KILLING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 2BLength: 291 wordsByline: BROOKS JOHNSON; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: A peaceful day of support for social justice attracted more than 200 people.Body

SUPERIOR, WIS. - Two of Kim Young's grandchildren sat at her feet as she made an impassioned plea for justice from the middle of a sunlit crowd.

"I refuse to fail them," said the community activist. "I refuse to let them grow up and become objects of scorn and fear."

In a now-familiar scene playing out around the country for more than a week in the wake of George Floyd's death, some 200 peaceful protesters gathered at the Douglas County Courthouse in Superior on Thursday afternoon to demand police accountability and an end to racial violence.

"No more," Stephan Witherspoon, president of the Duluth chapter of the NAACP, said as the crowd repeated.

Superior, a city of 26,000 that, like Duluth, is 90% white, has a Commission on Communities of Color that is drafting the city's official response to Floyd's death on May 25 while being restrained by police in Minneapolis. That board will meet next week.

"No violence, no tearing down our community - we are going to help build them up," Young said.

Mayor Jim Paine, who led off his remarks with an unequivocal "Black lives matter," said the city's police force is "one of the most progressive in Wisconsin" and urged protesters to continue putting pressure on the government by writing to representatives, showing up at meetings and voting.

Energized by calls to challenge white supremacy activities, the crowd later spread out around the courthouse and commanded a chorus of supportive honks at the corner of Belknap and Hammond, one of the city's busiest intersections.

Before the crowd thinned out, Young told those gathered to continue the work that the protests represent.

"We are no longer asking you to dismantle racism," she told the crowd. "You're going to do it."

Superior joins protest over Floyd killing

Brooks Johnson · 218-491-6496

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

End of Document

John Kass: Will anyone take a knee for retired police Capt. David Dorn?

ARTICLE CCCLXXX.

JOHN KASS: WILL ANYONE TAKE A KNEE FOR RETIRED POLICE CAPT. DAVID DORN?

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 839 words

Byline: John Kass

Highlight: CHICAGO - America is all about taking the knee again, after the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police. Taking the knee has become a political act in protests that have sometimes turned violent. Whether this is being done out of solidarity with a cause or out of fear, who can say? [...]

Body

CHICAGO - America is all about taking the knee again, after the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minneapolis police.

Taking the knee has become a political act in protests that have sometimes turned violent. Whether this is being done out of solidarity with a cause or out of fear, who can say? Protesters who insist they hate oppression publicly compel police and politicians to kneel. I've heard it said that the kneeling is about healing the nation, even as the violent bear the nation away.

We're all collateral damage to our politics now.

But with all the kneeling going on, as we're told all the chaos is still only about what happened to George Floyd, a question: Is anyone taking a knee for David Dorn?

Dorn was African American. He was unjustly killed. His life mattered too, didn't it?

But there aren't any protests for Dorn, no public kneeling in his memory.

David Dorn, 77, was a retired St. Louis police captain. The other night, as violence raged in St. Louis, Dorn was alerted to an alarm at a friend's pawnshop.

He did what law enforcement officers are expected to do. Dorn answered the call. He tried to stop a gang of looters. The details are incomplete, but we do know he was shot to death.

And there is video.

He's stretched out on the sidewalk. The looters rolled in and out, taking what they could grab. Someone recorded a video as he lay there. It was broadcast on Facebook.

John Kass: Will anyone take a knee for retired police Capt. David Dorn?

The video is 13 minutes long. It is a horrible thing to see. A younger man speaks encouraging words to the older man as he lay dying.

"Oh cuz, come on, OG ... Come on, OG. Oh my God, cuz," says the younger man. "For a TV? They killed this old man for some TVs? ... c'mon, man, that's somebody's granddaddy."

It's a scene as terrible as the one caught on video showing George Floyd killed by Minneapolis police.

Dorn's eyelids flutter. He has a phone in his hand. The looters keep rolling in and out of the pawnshop, holding their treasures. And then he was gone. News reports said police had no suspects.

Does anyone take a knee for him?

Dave Patrick Underwood, a federal security officer, was killed as protests raged when he was standing guard outside the federal courthouse in Oakland, Calif. An officer with him was also shot but survived. And the FBI said the officers were targeted because they wore uniforms.

Underwood is African American. But nobody takes a knee for him, either. Like Dorn, most Americans don't know his name.

Many cops believe their badges have been shamed by what happened to Floyd in Minneapolis. Others just want to get through their shifts and get home safe, without getting shot, as is happening all too often lately, and some cops have been lucky, barely escaping with their lives.

Those New York officers were lucky in that squad car the other night, when two New York lawyers allegedly handed a Molotov cocktail to another person who threw the firebomb at the cops' window.

It didn't ignite. If it had, there would be a social media orgy of sharing the video, with officers burning inside.

But there is that video of Capt. Dorn dying on the sidewalk.

Please don't make the mistake of thinking that I'm trying to take something away from Floyd's life or his death here. His life mattered. His death matters.

When I saw the horrific video of that white Minneapolis cop, Derek Chauvin, kneeling on Floyd's neck, killing him, I called it murder. A day or so later, the crime was in fact charged as murder by authorities. Charges were upgraded Wednesday. Chauvin now has been charged with second-degree murder. Three other officers have been charged with the crime of aiding and abetting murder.

Most Americans were disgusted with what happened to Floyd. Most of us are united in wanting change. We know about the history of police and minorities. We know about police brutality over the decades, that some cops go out of their way to humiliate black men and make them kneel to the ground.

Culture has changed. We were united by our disgust and we wanted something done. But then the violent hijacked the protests, the looting and rage began, and unity was gone.

Some of you will be angry with me for writing this about David Dorn, about wondering where is the respect due to him. And some will accuse me of the Thought Crime of false equivalence.

But I'm thinking of an iconic protest photo from the front page of the Chicago Sun-Times.

John Kass: Will anyone take a knee for retired police Capt. David Dorn?

It was of the Floyd protests in downtown Chicago, before the windows were broken and the looting began.

It was of an angry white female protester screaming at two black Chicago police officers. She put her face up close to theirs. She gave them the finger. She was full of rage.

I'm taking a wild guess, but I just don't think she'd take a knee for David Dorn. He was a cop. Charles Blow: Allies, don't fail us again Doyle McManus: Trump finds an unexpected center of resistance: the Pentagon Dellawar, El-Tayyab: There can be no getting along without reform Greg Moore: It's clear we live in different worlds Cass R. Sunstein: 'Union' is crucial word in Mattis' denunciation of Trump

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCLXXXI.

DAMOND RELIVING THE PAIN AFTER FLOYD DEATH

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1BLength: 827 wordsByline: REID FORGRAVE; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: Fiancé of police-shooting victim feels solidarity.Body

Don Damond sat under a hulking white maple tree in his backyard, 4 miles from where less than two weeks ago a Minneapolis police officer kept his knee on George Floyd's neck for nearly nine minutes.

A cardinal trilled cheerfully. Dusk began to fall, and the mosquitoes descended in force.

The days since Floyd's death have been disorienting for Damond. In one way, he feels a sort of spiritual connection to the Floyd family.

It was less than three years ago that Damond's fiancée, Justine Rusczyk Damond, was shot and killed by a Minneapolis police officer in southwest Minneapolis.

The past couple weeks have made his fiancée's killing fresh again: "I just find myself crying, and I haven't cried in a while."

Damond knows that Floyd's family's pain will not subside in the coming months as the judicial process runs its course.

The situation will only get worse. That's what Valerie Castile - the mother of Philando Castile, shot and killed by a Twin Cities police officer in 2016 - told Damond after his fiancée's death.

Damond plans to reach out to the Floyd family and offer his sympathies as well as his empathy of having experienced a loved one killed by a Minneapolis cop.

It's a club no one should have to be a member of.

He gets how the two deaths are different. Rusczyk Damond was a white woman; Floyd was a black man. Mohamed Noor, believed to be the only officer in Minnesota history convicted of murder for an on-duty killing, was a black Somali-American.

Derek Chauvin, the fired officer charged with murder in Floyd's death, is white.

Damond reliving the pain after Floyd death

One was a freak occurrence; the other symbolized centuries of American racial history.

Damond's fiancée's death was an in-the-moment reflex by Noor: If only the police officer had taken a breath before firing his gun, Damond thinks.

Floyd's death appeared to be about Chauvin exerting control and domination: He didn't want to let Floyd breathe, Damond thinks.

When Damond watched the video of Floyd's death, he focused on Chauvin's face.

"I just watched him," Damond said. "What's going on in his face? Is it fear? No. There's no fear. It's like a sociopathic killer. There's no remorse, no guilt, no anger. There's nothing.

"It's like he could be sitting there drinking a beer with his buddies. The look on his face was, 'I'm just going to snuff this guy and not even bat an eye.' "

There are two things at the heart of the nationwide protests after Floyd's death.

One is about police departments becoming too militarized, too "us-versus-them." That, and they often have bad hiring policies, shoddy policing and poor training.

"To me we're so united in solidarity around excessive use of force, and the reckless and inappropriate use of force, that left us losing a loved one needlessly and tragically," Damond said.

In that way, George Floyd and Justine Ruszczuk Damond are intertwined symbols of a police culture that's lost its way, and of police officers who aren't given the emotional tools to deal with a difficult job.

This part of the story is about how police departments must focus more on training, on changing use-of-force guidelines, on officers treating citizens with more humanity.

But the other thing driving nationwide protests - the reality of life as an African-American in 21st-century America - is something Damond understands he will never know.

In another way, though, Damond feels Justine has been invisible during local and national protests after Floyd's death.

Last Sunday morning, six days after Floyd's death, Damond visited the memorial outside Cup Foods. Nobody noticed him.

He was in awe of the sheer number of flowers. He looked at the mural of George Floyd on the wall, and he was overcome by loneliness.

"SAY OUR NAMES," the mural reads, above a portrait of Floyd. There was Castile's name. There were also the names of Jamar Clark, killed by a Minneapolis police officer in 2015, and Eric Garner, killed by a New York police officer in 2014, and Tamir Rice, killed by a Cleveland police officer in 2014, and more.

His fiancée's name was not on the mural.

"I've suffered the same loss - the same loss, at the hands of the same police department - tragic, reckless use of force," Damond said. "I get it. It is so complicated, and I get it.

Damond reliving the pain after Floyd death

Damond fears what is to come for the Floyd family. He knows the police officers' defense attorneys will "try and tear down the victim" to sow seeds of doubt.

"They've already started," Damond said: Reports that Floyd had COVID-19, that he had recently taken fentanyl and meth, that he had a violent felony conviction 13 years ago.

He thought of what Valerie Castile told him after his fiancée's death: "It's going to be a long haul, honey."

On Friday morning, while Damond was at work, his mother went to the memorial set up at the scene of Floyd's death. She spoke with protesters who were painting on the street the names of people killed by police officers.

The man running the project promised to paint Justine's name on the street, too.

Reid Forgrave · 612-673-4647

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

Prosecutor: 2 Buffalo police charged with assault in shoving

ARTICLE CCCLXXXII.

PROSECUTOR: 2 BUFFALO POLICE CHARGED WITH ASSAULT IN SHOVING

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 619 words

Byline: Associated Press

Highlight: BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) - Two Buffalo police officers were charged with assault Saturday, prosecutors said, after a video showed them shoving a 75-year-old protester in recent demonstrations over the death of George Floyd.

Body

BUFFALO, N.Y. - Two Buffalo police officers were charged with assault Saturday, prosecutors said, after a video showed them shoving a 75-year-old protester in recent demonstrations over the death of George Floyd.

Robert McCabe and Aaron Torgalski, who surrendered Saturday morning, pleaded not guilty to second-degree assault. They were released without bail.

McCabe, 32, and Torgalski, 39, "crossed a line" when they shoved the man down hard enough for him to fall backward and hit his head on the sidewalk, Erie County District Attorney John Flynn said at a news conference, calling the victim "a harmless 75-year-old man."

The officers had been suspended without pay Friday after a TV crew captured the confrontation the night before. If convicted of the felony assault charge, they face up to seven years in prison.

McCabe's lawyer, Tom Burton, said after the arraignment that prosecutors didn't have any grounds to bring felony charges. He said his client is a decorated military veteran with a clean record as a police officer.

"Nobody started out their day intending to hurt this fellow," Burton said. He added that if the victim had followed commands to back off, "none of this would have happened."

A phone message was left with Torgalski's lawyer.

The footage shows the man, identified as longtime activist Martin Gugino, approaching a line of helmeted officers holding batons as they cleared demonstrators from Niagara Square around the time of an 8 p.m. curfew.

Prosecutor: 2 Buffalo police charged with assault in shoving

Two officers push Gugino backward, and he hits his head on the pavement. Blood spills as officers walk past. One officer leans down to check on the injured man before another officer urges the colleague to keep walking.

The police officers "knew this was bad," Flynn said of the video. "Look at their body language."

The video of the encounter sparked outrage online as demonstrators take to cities across the country to protest racial injustice sparked by the death of George Floyd, a black man who died after a white police officer pressed a knee into his neck for several minutes.

"I think there was criminal liability from what I saw on the video," Gov. Andrew Cuomo said at a briefing Saturday. "I think what the mayor did and the district attorney did was right, and I applaud them for acting as quickly as they did."

"What we saw was horrendous and disgusting, and I believe, illegal," he added.

But dozens of Buffalo police officers who were angered over their fellow officers' suspensions stepped down from the department's crowd control unit Friday. The resigning officers did not leave their jobs altogether.

A crowd of off-duty officers, firefighters and others gathered on Saturday outside the courthouse in a show of support for the accused officers and cheered when they were released.

"It was tremendous, tremendous to see," John Evans, president of the Buffalo Police Benevolent Association, told WIVB-TV. "I just think it's a strong indication of the outrage basically over this travesty."

Flynn said he understood the concerns of officers who don't feel they are being supported and pointed out that he's also prosecuting protesters "who have turned into agitators" and "need to be dealt with as well."

"There will be some who say that I'm choosing sides here," he said. "And I say that's ridiculous. I'm not on anyone's side." Correctional officers of color who say they were segregated from Derek Chauvin: Why isn't Ramsey Co. jail superintendent on leave? America disrupted: Troubles cleave a nation, and a city White woman charged after racist Central Park confrontation It's been 4 years since Philando Castile died. His mother thinks about him 'every breathing day.' In troubled times: Independence Day in a land of confusion

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLXXXIII.

FOX NEWS: BLACK DEATHS, STOCK MARKET GRAPHIC WAS INSENSITIVE

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 420 wordsByline: Associated PressHighlight: LOS ANGELES (AP) - Fox News apologized Saturday for how it displayed a chart correlating the stock market's performance with the aftermath of the deaths of George Floyd, Martin Luther King Jr. and Michael Brown.Body

LOS ANGELES - Fox News apologized Saturday for how it displayed a chart correlating the stock market's performance with the aftermath of the deaths of George Floyd, Martin Luther King Jr. and Michael Brown.

The graphic that aired Friday to illustrate market reactions to historic periods of civil unrest "should have never aired on television without full context. We apologize for the insensitivity of the image and take this issue seriously," the cable channel said in a statement.

The chart included on "Special Report with Bret Baier" illustrated gains made by the S&P 500 index after King's assassination in 1968; the Ferguson, Missouri, police shooting of 18-year-old Michael Brown in 2014, and the May 25 death of Floyd while in Minneapolis police custody. It also measured the financial yardstick against the 1991 acquittal of Los Angeles police officers in the beating of Rodney King.

It was shown as part of a segment with Fox News and Fox Business reporter Susan Li focusing on the market rally that followed an unexpectedly lower number of jobless claims.

Other business publications and TV channels in recent days have compared the market's performance to current and historic social upheaval, but with significant background and explanation.

Rep. Bobby Rush, D-Illinois, tweeted that the graphic makes it clear that Fox News "does not care about black lives," while Michael Steele, former Republican National Committee chair and a MSNBC political analyst, posted, "This is how they mourn the loss of black men at #FoxNews - by how much the stock market goes up."

Baier retweeted Fox's apology without further comment.

Later Saturday, on Fox's "America's News HQ" telecast, anchor and senior correspondent Eric Shawn said the graphic should not have been used.

Fox News: Black deaths, stock market graphic was insensitive

"Last night, Fox News Channel aired an infographic attempting to show the stock market on occasion gained ground in the midst of turmoil, civil unrest and even tragedy," Shawn said. "In trying to make that point, the program 'Special Report' failed to explain the context of the times we are living in and should not have used that graphic." Correctional officers of color who say they were segregated from Derek Chauvin: Why isn't Ramsey Co. jail superintendent on leave? America disrupted: Troubles cleave a nation, and a city White woman charged after racist Central Park confrontation It's been 4 years since Philando Castile died. His mother thinks about him 'every breathing day.' In troubled times: Independence Day in a land of confusion

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

End of Document

ARTICLE CCCLXXXIV.

U.S. BANK PLEDGES ACTIVE ROLE IN RECOVERY

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 5BLength: 539 wordsByline: EVAN RAMSTAD; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: The company will boost loans to black-owned businesses by at least $100 million.Body

U.S. Bank will increase new lending to black-owned businesses and rebuild three Minneapolis branches damaged in riots last week, its parent U.S. Bancorp said Friday as it announced other steps to combat racial inequality.

The Minneapolis-based company, which is the nation's fifth-largest bank, said it will boost its support for small and minority-owned businesses that create jobs and build social infrastructure, including $100 million annually in higher lending to black-owned and -led businesses.

The company's foundation also put aside $15 million to award grants to groups that are addressing systemic economic and racial inequities.

U.S. Bank also said it was looking at its own record of hiring and promoting people, saying it would change its "talent management strategy to develop and promote people of color to leadership roles."

Three of its branches, two along Lake Street and another in north Minneapolis, were closed after being damaged or looted in the violence that erupted from protests about George Floyd's death in Minneapolis police custody on May 25.

"We will not turn our backs or abandon the neighborhoods where so many are hurting right now," Andy Cecere, the company's chief executive, said in a statement.

The company, which has branches in 25 states, experienced damage at a handful of other branches as protests against police violence stretched across the nation in the past week. Those locations were able to quickly reopen.

On the day after Floyd's death and before the protests grew huge, Cecere wrote to U.S. Bank employees that he expected to be held personally accountable for U.S. Bank's "core value of drawing strength from diversity."

"We talk about the importance of diversity, equity and inclusion as a society, but it is hard to say progress

U.S. Bank pledges active role in recovery is being made when these are the headlines dominating the news," Cecere wrote in the note last week. "We have to do better, and I believe we can start right here at the bank."

With Friday's announcement, he tied the new efforts to the injustice of Floyd's death.

"George Floyd's life had meaning and purpose. We need to do what we can to give the heartbreak that has followed meaning and purpose, as well," Cecere said.

Throughout the country, every U.S. Bank staffer will be given a new paid day off to do volunteer work in their communities.

On Wednesday, Greg Cunningham, the company's chief diversity officer, noted in an essay two ways that large companies can confront racism against black people: by doing more to hire and promote black employees and working more closely with black-owned businesses.

"So many organizations hire for diversity but manage to assimilation, and that is a fundamental problem," Cunningham wrote. "We need to be more intentional about creating conditions in which all of our employees can develop leadership, demonstrate creativity and advance professionally."

He also said leaders at all levels of a company "need to be active in denouncing systemic racism and acknowledging privilege."

Cunningham ended the essay, written as a letter to employees, by noting that he is frequently asked: "What can our company do?"

"To my 70,000 colleagues, you ARE the company," he wrote. "Be the change you want to see."

Evan Ramstad · 612-673-4241

Load-Date: June 6, 2020

ARTICLE CCCLXXXV.

BRAINERD TEACHER RESIGNS OVER SOCIAL MEDIA POSTS

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 2BLength: 263 wordsByline: JOHN REINAN; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: School district criticized her Facebook comments as "troubling."Body

A Brainerd public school teacher has resigned over what the school superintendent called "troubling" social media posts on events surrounding the death of George Floyd.

Kara Hall, an art teacher at Forestview Middle School in Baxter, resigned on Wednesday, according to a letter released by Laine Larson, superintendent of Brainerd Public Schools.

"The views she expressed on social media earlier this week are contrary to our district's mission," Larson wrote, calling the comments "troubling." Larson said she would recommend that the school board accept the resignation at its regular meeting Monday.

Larson's letter didn't discuss the specific comments. But according to a termination petition signed by more than 5,000 people, Hall made Facebook posts disparaging blacks in the wake of violent protests that broke out in Minneapolis and St. Paul after Floyd died during a police encounter on Memorial Day.

Four Minneapolis police officers were fired and charged with crimes in the incident, including a second-degree murder charge against Derek Chauvin, the officer who was filmed pressing his knee into Floyd's neck for more than eight minutes.

"Recent events in our community, state and country have us all on a rollercoaster ride, which I suspect no one wanted to take," Larson wrote. "Thank you to community and staff members who reached out to share their concerns about the events of this week.

"It has been heartwarming to see such a deep commitment to making sure every single learner entrusted to us has caring teachers and staff who value them."

John Reinan · 612-673-7402

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

Brainerd teacher resigns over social media posts

End of Document

MN top Republican: 'Leadership failed badly'; Sen. Paul Gazelka wants to end Walz emergency powers and 'pandemic fear'

ARTICLE CCCLXXXVI. MN TOP REPUBLICAN: 'LEADERSHIP FAILED BADLY'; SEN. PAUL GAZELKA WANTS TO END WALZ EMERGENCY POWERS AND 'PANDEMIC FEAR'

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 970 words

Byline: Dave Orrick

Highlight: Minnesota's most powerful Republican Friday leveled a series of criticisms against Gov. Tim Walz for his handling of recent riots and coronavirus response. "Leadership failed badly," Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake, said of Walz and Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey, both Democrats; together, Gazelka said, they failed to act soon enough to restore [...]

Body

Minnesota's most powerful Republican Friday leveled a series of criticisms against Gov. Tim Walz for his handling of recent riots and coronavirus response.

"Leadership failed badly," Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake, said of Walz and Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey, both Democrats; together, Gazelka said, they failed to act soon enough to restore peace once violence erupted.

In his most extensive public comments since the death of George Floyd, Gazelka touched on a host of issues, from the need for a reckoning of race relations to Walz's emergency powers to the politics of the upcoming special session of the Legislature, where his Senate majority stands as the state's only check to unfettered Democratic rule across all offices and bodies of state government in Minnesota.

Walz said Wednesday he wants to see a host of new police reforms and racially relevant bills pushed forward, so Gazelka's posture is critical as the curtain rises on the next act of what has already been an unprecedented spring of pandemic and protest and a fall election approaches where every state lawmaker's seat will be on the ballot.

Hardly a firebrand, Gazelka has generally had a cordial relationship with Walz and other leading Democrats, but their "Minnesota nice" behavior toward each other has seen its limits on numerous issues in the past.

Here were some of Gazelka's points:

MN top Republican: 'Leadership failed badly'; Sen. Paul Gazelka wants to end Walz emergency powers and 'pandemic fear'

'LEADERSHIP FAILED' IN RIOTS

Recounting a chronology of how protest turned to violence and then to looting, arson and two to three nights of widespread lawlessness last week, Gazelka laid responsibility squarely on Walz, whom he blamed for not calling up the National Guard sooner and in greater numbers.

"Leadership failed badly, and it has tarnished Minnesota's reputation," he said.

He noted that Minneapolis has been under Democratic control for a generation and said Frey must share blame as well for the shortcomings not just of the response to the unrest but of the circumstances that led to it over years as well.

"Can somebody apologize to the people of Minnesota for not protecting the people of Minnesota?" Gazelka said.

A spokesman for Frey did not return a request for comment Friday evening.

Asked about Gazelka's remarks at a news conference, Walz said they were "not helpful."

"The buck stops with me," Walz said of decisions he made. "But it seems a bit premature that a postmortem has been done and we're going to go to that place. ... I think it's easy to coach from the seats."

'END PANDEMIC FEAR'

Walz's ultimate authority over law and order in Minnesota is especially clear now, since he has for months operated with sweeping emergency powers he granted himself under state law when the coronavirus pandemic hit.

It's time to end those powers, Gazelka said, citing both the response to the unrest and Walz's desire to maintain a level of control over society reopening amid the pandemic. He said the Senate would vote to strip Walz of the powers, although he acknowledged the move was unlikely to garner enough, if any, support from Democrats to succeed.

Senate Minority Leader Susan Kent, DFL-Woodbury, called the idea "shortsighted."

The loosening of restrictions Walz announced later in the day would not be enough, said Gazelka, who had already been briefed by the Walz administration when he made his remarks.

"The governor must immediately lift all restrictions," Gazelka said. "He should not decide who gets to go to a funeral and who does not. ... Let individuals decide for themselves how to keep safe."

Stressing that the vast majority of deaths have been in long-term care settings such as nursing homes, Gazelka voiced a sentiment expressed by many Republicans: "The pandemic fear must end."

GEORGE FLOYD AND RACE

Gazelka, an evangelical Christian who has said "my faith is inseparable from who I am," spoke in spiritual and personal terms about Floyd's death and the outcry afterward.

MN top Republican: 'Leadership failed badly'; Sen. Paul Gazelka wants to end Walz emergency powers and 'pandemic fear'

He said he was haunted by the video of Floyd, a 46-year-old unarmed and handcuffed black man, under the knee of a white Minneapolis police officer. In recent days, he said, he's visited with numerous black pastors and minority business owners. He attended Floyd's memorial service Thursday, and he said he made a private, early morning visit to the site where Floyd was subdued.

He said he wrote in chalk "Liberty and justice for all."

"And I underlined the 'all,' " he said, "because it must be for all."

Gazelka said he hopes Minnesota "can lead the nation in race reconciliation" and said his recent time has been spent listening to the concerns of those involved.

"I believe we are on a journey, all of us. ... I believe this is a God-breathed dream for all mankind," he said.

POLICE REFORMS

However, Gazelka strongly suggested the long list of reforms long sought by minority lawmakers and community members, as well as other liberal Democrats, will not come to pass this summer.

"I just know how long the process takes," he said of the Legislature's deliberative methods. He pointed to education and law enforcement reforms that Republicans have favored in the past as he sought to defend his party from Walz's characterization the day before of Republicans as obstacles to change.

Those sentiments drew a response from Kent: "His suggestion at a slow and drawn-out legislative response is not only indicative of the reason we have not been able to pass transformative justice legislation in the past, but it is completely dismissive of the urgency to protect the black community."

Minneapolis police chief takes on union, promises reform 'Stop the pain,' a brother of George Floyd tells Congress Daily Distraction: U of M Press offers open access to collection of antiracist books 'He is going to change the world': Funeral held for George Floyd Authorities ask for help identifying more arson suspects in George Floyd unrest

Graphic

Senate Majority Leader Paul Gazelka, R-East Gull Lake

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

Editor's note: After George Floyd's death, pain, rage, devastation and pledges to rebuild

ARTICLE CCCLXXXVII.

EDITOR'S NOTE: AFTER GEORGE FLOYD'S DEATH, PAIN, RAGE, DEVASTATION AND PLEDGES TO REBUILD

Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 American City Business Journal, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Length: 399 words

Byline: Dirk DeYoung

Body

It's been nearly two weeks since George Floyd died with a Minneapolis police officer's knee on his neck, and the fallout has been devastating locally and across the country.

Once again, a community is saddened and enraged after witnessing, in a brutal nine-minute video, the latest in a long line of black people being killed by police.

And once again, that rage spills over into citywide protests, some evolving into the destruction of large swaths of commercial property and hundreds of small businesses in Minneapolis and St. Paul, especially along Lake Street in Minneapolis and University Avenue in St. Paul. While investigators are still examining how much of that damage was due to extremists taking advantage of legitimate protesting, those businesses and properties are devastated nevertheless.

Editor's note: After George Floyd's death, pain, rage, devastation and pledges to rebuild

As the violence eased this week, Minnesotans started cleaning up, assessing the damage - to property, livelihoods and our relationships with one another as a community - and figuring out how to move forward.

The following stories represent a portion of the Business Journal's initial examination of all of those things, covering how Lake Street is starting to rebuild, perspectives from business leaders of color, a report on the future of damaged bank branches, and more.

We have much more coverage of George Floyd's death and the aftermath at mspbj.com, but that and this weekly edition of the Business Journal are only the beginning. Recovery and healing will be a long process, and we plan to cover the business side of that in the weeks and months ahead. Please contact me or our reporters with ideas of what we should cover and who we should talk to, and please stay safe and take care of yourself and your community.

Lake Street may get rebuilt, but the south side corridor will never be 'what it was'

MEDA's work supporting minority-owned businesses set back 10 years by riots, CEO says

Tawanna Black wants to see a funeral for racism

Black business leaders respond to a week of grief and fire

Banks that lost branches to riots assess damage - and locations' future

Bridgewater Bank's Uptown branch looted three nights in a row

What businesses damaged in riots need to know about insurance claims - especially this year

Lake Street Council raises \$2M to rebuild decimated businesses

Did you find this article useful? Why not subscribe to Minneapolis / St. Paul Business Journal for more articles?

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

Key philanthropic forces join up to rebuild, reform

ARTICLE CCCLXXXVIII.

KEY PHILANTHROPIC FORCES JOIN UP TO REBUILD, REFORM

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: NEWS; Pg. 1B

Length: 456 words

Byline: KELLY SMITH; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)

Body

Three of the largest philanthropic funders in the Twin Cities are dedicating new resources to rebuilding small, minority-owned businesses damaged in last week's riots and reforming the criminal justice system.

The Greater Twin Cities United Way, Minneapolis Foundation and St. Paul & Minnesota Foundation announced Friday they've teamed up, launching a new fund that's reached $1.3 million so far to help pay for repairs, relocation expenses and other aid to those small businesses starting this month.

The three organizations are also beginning a new initiative to reform the criminal justice system through convening meetings, starting educational efforts and examining policies or testifying at the Legislature. While the initiative, led by community activist Huda Ahmed, was in the works for about a year, it was announced Friday - nearly two weeks after 46-year-old George Floyd died after a Minneapolis police officer knelt on his neck.

"We are looking for lasting systematic change," said Acooa Ellis, senior vice president of community impact at United Way. "George Floyd's death was an example of what's happening too often."

The multiyear initiative will be led by people of color affected by racial disparities, helping define the problem and coming up with solutions.

"The community is ahead of us," said Pahoua Yang Hoffman, senior vice president of community impact at the St. Paul & Minnesota Foundation.

The three organizations were also responding to the COVID-19 pandemic. Chanda Smith Baker, the Minneapolis Foundation's senior vice president of impact, said the collaboration will now be able to address immediate and long-term needs, putting the time and leadership where their money is - especially after Floyd's death, which has sparked protests around the world.

"It has activated us to a new level," she said. "That should not be nothing."

Ahmed added: "We're not just going to give grants and expect the community to make things happen."

Key philanthropic forces join up to rebuild, reform

To donate to the organizations' "Twin Cities Rebuild for the Future Fund," go to tcrebuild.org or text TCREBUILD to 51555.

Other organizations are also stepping up to help businesses that were burned down and looted in Minneapolis, many of which were owned by people of color.

The Lake Street Council has raised more than $4.7 million in its fund while the Longfellow Community Council has raised nearly $30,000 to support food assistance, boost security measures and rebuild businesses.

The Northside Funders Group has also raised more than $1.4 million to help damaged north Minneapolis businesses. And this week, Minneapolis-based Target pledged $10 million to social justice organizations such as the National Urban League and community rebuilding efforts.

Kelly Smith · 612-673-4141

Load-Date: June 8, 2020

Target vows $10M for agencies, rebuilding

ARTICLE CCCLXXXIX.

TARGET VOWS $10M FOR AGENCIES, REBUILDING

Star Tribune (Minneapolis, MN)

June 6, 2020 Saturday, METRO EDITION

Copyright 2020 Star Tribune All Rights Reserved

Section: BUSINESS; Pg. 5BLength: 461 wordsByline: NICOLE NORFLEET; STAFF WRITER, STAR TRIBUNE (Mpls.-St. Paul)Highlight: The money will go toward nonprofits, other organizations.Body

Minneapolis mega-retailer Target has pledged $10 million to social justice organizations such as the National Urban League and the African American Leadership Forum, as well as community rebuilding efforts, after the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis police custody.

Across the country, cities including Minneapolis and St. Paul have seen both peaceful protests and looting and violence in response to Floyd's death, as well as calls for reform from around the world.

"Target stands with black families, communities and team members," said Target CEO Brian Cornell in a Friday statement. "As we face an inflection point in Minneapolis and across the country, we're listening to our team, guests and communities, committed to using our size, scale and resources to help heal and create lasting change."

In addition to the monetary donations, which will come from both the retailer and its foundation, Target has committed to provide 10,000 hours of pro bono consulting services for businesses owned by people of color within the Twin Cities as they rebuild after recent riots left some damaged.

By mid-June, nonprofits that support businesses owned by black and other entrepreneurs of color also will be able to apply for grants from the Target Foundation to help rebuild business storefronts that were damaged in the riots.

The company's loyalty program Target Circle will offer customers the option to direct Target funds to local nonprofits and organizations supporting social justice.

And Target has created an internal task force of senior company leaders to help analyze the company's "path forward."

"At this critical moment in our Twin Cities communities and across the country, we appreciate the solidarity Target has shown to help rebuild as well as be part of the necessary systems changes ahead of us," said Marcus Owens, executive director of the African American Leadership Forum in the Twin Cities.

Target vows $10M for agencies, rebuilding

Target employees have volunteered hundreds of hours toward cleanup efforts in heavily affected neighborhoods of the Twin Cities, and Target has partnered with local nonprofits such as Second Harvest Heartland to provide truckloads of donated essentials like baby formula, medicine and more in recent weeks.

Target - which has had a handful of its local stores damaged or looted in recent days - has reopened most of its stores in the Twin Cities area, including the St. Paul Midway store.

Its Lake Street store in Minneapolis, which was one of the first to be looted and damaged, is anticipated to reopen before the end of the year.

Before the George Floyd protests, Target and the Target Foundation announced $10 million in donations to support organizations helping with the effects of the coronavirus pandemic.

Nicole Norfleet · 612-673-4495

Twitter: @nicolenorfleet

Load-Date: June 6, 2020

Biden formally clinches Democratic presidential nomination

ARTICLE CCCXC. BIDEN FORMALLY CLINCHES DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 1141 words

Byline: Stephen Ohlemacher, Will Weissert

Highlight: WASHINGTON (AP) - Joe Biden formally clinched the Democratic presidential nomination Friday, setting him up for a bruising challenge to President Donald Trump that will play out against the unprecedented backdrop of a pandemic, economic collapse and civil unrest.

Body

WASHINGTON - Joe Biden formally clinched the Democratic presidential nomination Friday, setting him up for a bruising challenge to President Donald Trump that will play out against the unprecedented backdrop of a pandemic, economic collapse and civil unrest.

"It was an honor to compete alongside one of the most talented groups of candidates the Democratic party has ever fielded," Biden said in a statement Friday night, "and I am proud to say that we are going into this general election a united party."

The former vice president has effectively been his party's leader since his last challenger in the Democratic primary, Bernie Sanders, ended his campaign in April. But Biden pulled together the 1,991 delegates needed to become the nominee after seven states and the District of Columbia held presidential primaries Tuesday.

Biden reached the threshold three days after the primaries because several states, overwhelmed by huge increases in mail ballots, took days to tabulate results. A team of analysts at The Associated Press then parsed the votes into individual congressional districts. Democrats award most delegates to the party's national convention based on results in individual congressional districts.

Biden now has 1,995 delegates, with contests still to come in eight states and three U.S. territories.

The moment was met with little of the traditional fanfare as the nation confronts overlapping crises. While Biden has started to venture out more this week, the coronavirus pandemic has largely confined him to his Wilmington, Delaware, home for much of the past three months.

The country faces the worst rate of unemployment since the Great Depression. And civil unrest that harkens back to the 1960s has erupted in dozens of cities following the death of George Floyd, a black man who died when a white Minneapolis police officer pressed his knee into Floyd's neck for several minutes even after he stopped moving and pleading for air.

Biden formally clinches Democratic presidential nomination

It's a confluence of events that no U.S. leader has faced in modern times, made all the more complicated by a president who has at times antagonized the protesters and is eager to take the fight to Biden.

"This is a difficult time in America's history," Biden said Friday night. "And Donald Trump's angry, divisive politics is no answer. The country is crying out for leadership. Leadership that can unite us. Leadership that can bring us together."

Biden spent 36 years in the Senate before becoming Barack Obama's vice president. This is 77-year-old Biden's third bid for the presidency and his success in capturing the Democratic nomination was driven by strong support from black voters.

He finished an embarrassing fourth place in the overwhelmingly white Iowa caucuses that kicked off the nomination process in February. Biden fared little better in the New Hampshire primary, where his standing was so low that he left the state before polls closed on election night to instead rally black voters in South Carolina.

His rebound began in the more diverse caucuses in Nevada but solidified in South Carolina, where Biden stomped Sanders, his nearest rival, by nearly 29 points. He followed that with a dominant showing three days later during the Super Tuesday contests, taking 10 of the 14 states.

Biden's strong showing in states such as North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Texas reinforced his status as the preferred Democratic candidate of African American voters - but the relationship has not been without its strained moments. After a tense exchange with an influential black radio host, Biden took sharp criticism for suggesting that African American voters still deciding between him and Trump "ain't black."

That comment, and protests that have spread nationwide, have increased pressure on Biden to pick an African American running mate. He has already committed to picking a woman as a vice presidential candidate.

Black voters are unlikely to back Trump over Biden by a wide margin. A recent Fox News poll shows just 14% of African Americans who are registered to vote have a favorable opinion of the president compared with 75% who favorably view Biden.

But Biden must ensure that black voters are motivated to show up to the polls in November, especially in critical swing states that narrowly went for Trump in 2016.

At one point, the Democratic primary included dozens of candidates of different races, genders and generations and an openly gay man. The contest was dominated by debate over unapologetically progressive ideas, including fully government-funded health care under "Medicare for All" and a sweeping proposal to combat climate change known as the "Green New Deal."

Biden prevailed by mostly offering more moderate approaches that he argued would make him more electable against Trump.

He refused to budge on his rejection of universal health care and some of the Green New Deal's most ambitious provisions to combat climate change.

Since clinching the nomination, however, Biden has worked to build his appeal among progressives, forming joint task forces with Sanders' campaign to find common ground on key issues like health care,

Biden formally clinches Democratic presidential nomination

the economy and the environment. Biden has also embraced a plan to forgive millions of Americans' student debt, meaning that he clinches the nomination as easily the most liberal standard bearer the Democratic Party has ever had.

Biden's embrace of his party's left flank could help him consolidate a Democratic base that remained deeply divided after the 2016 primary and ultimately hurt Hillary Clinton in her defeat to Trump. But it could also undermine Biden's attempts to rebuild the Obama coalition, which is often loosely defined as minorities and young people, as well as educated Americans and some working-class voters.

The former vice president has sought, since announcing his candidacy, to cast the election as a battle "for the soul of the nation," and promised to restore order and dignity to the White House while rehabilitating the U.S. image on the world stage. Such an approach, though, necessarily focuses on being more of an alternative to Trump than offering radically new political ideas. And that further underscores Biden's difficult task of trying to unite his party's base while appealing to voters from far beyond it.

"I am going to spend every day between now and November 3rd fighting to earn the votes of Americans all across this great country," Biden promised Friday, "so that, together, we can win the battle for the soul of this nation, and make sure that as we rebuild our economy, everyone comes along." Trump pushes conspiracy theory about Buffalo protester US moves forward with plan to end wild bird protections Following Mattis: More in the GOP frown on Trump's tone Democrats prepare police reform bills after Floyd's death Analysis: Trump emulates strongman tactics, tests his limits

Load-Date: July 8, 2020

ARTICLE CCCXCI. BUFFALO OFFICERS SUSPENDED IN SHOIVING OF 75-YEAR-OLD MAN

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Minnesota)

June 6, 2020 Saturday

Copyright 2020 St. Paul Pioneer Press All Rights Reserved

Length: 792 wordsByline: John WawrowHighlight: BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) - Dozens of Buffalo police officers stepped down from the department's crowd control unit Friday, objecting to the suspensions of two fellow officers in the shoving of a 75-year-old protester who fell and cracked his head.Body

By JOHN WAWROW

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) - Dozens of Buffalo police officers stepped down from the department's crowd control unit Friday, objecting to the suspensions of two fellow officers in the shoving of a 75-year-old protester who fell and cracked his head.

